33,716. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you ever heard that Mr. Patton bitterly complained of the bribery at the election?—Yes. Mr. Bealy Smith told me that Mr. Patton was extremely pained and annoyed, and they had the greatest difficulty in getting the money from him to pay the expenses.

33,717. When did he tell you that?—Between the first and second contests of Mr. Patton.

33,718. Then Mr. Patton before the second contest must have been aware that bribery had been carried on at the first election?—Before the second contest he must have been aware that bribery had been carried on at the first election, because I have no doubt he had to pay.

33,719. After the second contest did Mr. Bealy Smith again tell you that Mr. Patton had complained of bribery?—Yes. He told me he did not like the cost of it; but he said he had got his office, and surely one year's salary would pay it all off.

33,720. Mr. Bealy Smith said?—Yes.

33,721. Mr. Bealy Smith told you that he said that to Mr. Patton?—No. I did not know what Mr. Bealy Smith said to Mr. Patton. I always understood Mr. Bealy Smith to say that he had never spoken to Mr. Patton about bribery at all. I always understood that the whole thing had been paid for through Mr. Bealy Smith.

33,722. You heard that he had expressed disgust and pain at bribery having taken place after the first election?—I think it was after the first.

33,723. Was it also after the second?—No. I think the conversation was before the first.

33,724. And before the second?—Yes.

33,725. And after the second election?—I cannot say afterwards.

33,726. Did you learn anything from Mr. Bealy Smith which led you to suppose that Mr. Patton was annoyed, not at the largeness of the sum spent, but that any sum had been spent in bribery?—Yes, that he was most sensitive. I understood from Mr. Bealy Smith, that if Mr. Patton had known that bribery was so bad in Bridgwater, nothing would have induced him to come here.

33,727. Did he pay both bribery bills?—I do not know that.

33,728. Somebody paid them?—Somebody paid them.

33,729. Have you any idea whether Mr. Patton did pay them?—No, I have not. I know what money I distributed came from Mr. Bealy Smith, except the 2,000*l.* which I got from Mr. Lilly. I never had any communication from anybody else about it.

33,730. (Mr. Price.) I think that is all, unless you have anything else to add?—I cannot remember anything else. If anything should occur to me I will mention it.

33,731. (Mr. Coleridge.) Perhaps you will let the secretary have the addresses of those two persons you mentioned?—I will.

33,732. And certainly the address of that person Jones?—I will try and find out where Jones is. He was a draper's assistant at the time.

33,733. Because, having been a spy on the other party, he is a material witness to us?—No. He was a stranger to all connected with the election. I merely posted him at the "Bull and Butcher," and all he was to do was to give 10*l.* to any person who came for it.

33,734. Mr. Tumner is the man?—Yes.

33,735. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you say what the two ladies said to each other when they spoke?—They did not speak at all. The interview did not last two minutes. I went into the room, took the money, and placed it in the bag, and said, "Good morning." They merely said, "Do you think we can see the nomination?" I said, "I do not think you can." I told them they had better not go; and they said they should like to see it, and asked, "Where can we see the nomination best?" I advised them to go to the "Clarence." I do not know whether they did go; I think they did.

33,736. (Mr. Anstey.) You said your wife was with you. Was she with you at both elections?—Yes, and for this reason only. I am awfully sorry that she came, but she had but little idea of what she came for in the first instance; but the fact was. I was obliged to go out; I never took off my clothes for the two nights I was here; I was obliged to be out all night arranging matters, and I was obliged to leave somebody to arrange this money, and I left with her this money, and told her never to leave it.

33,737. That was in 1865?—Yes.

33,738. And again in 1866?—Yes.

33,739. And also again in 1866?—Yes.

33,740. Were you the person who came and looked in here for a short time one day, and who is said to have gone off by the train the same day?—No. Since I left on the day of the last election of Mr. Patton's I have never been in this town, except to pay one or two of the bills, until last night.

33,741. (Mr. Price.) You have not been here since?—No. I have not been here till last night for twelve months, or more than that.

Mr. Edward Lilly sworn. Mr. E. Lilley.

33,742. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An auctioneer and land agent.

33,743. The first thing I will ask you is, did you recognize Mr. Tromp when you saw him?—I did the moment I came into this room. I nodded, and he accepted the recognition.

33,744. I mean, when you saw him at one of these elections in Bridgwater did you recognize him?—No, never. Until yesterday I had not the remotest idea who he was.

33,745. What was the first election you were employed in?—Perhaps I may just mention that the first election at which I voted was in 1841.

33,746. Just go through them?—I voted twice, I think, for Mr. Tynte. At those elections some arrangement was made, otherwise I have always voted for the Conservative side. I took no part in any election until the year 1865; that was Mr. Westropp's first election. I voted for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Padwick in 1859. Mr. Westropp, as has already been stated in evidence, of course continued his connexion with the borough from 1859 till the year 1865.

33,747. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you mean by continuing his connexion?—He came frequently, and subscribed to the various institutions of the town. You have it in evidence that Mr. Westropp was a considerable subscriber to the institutions of the town, and must have spent some 200*l.* or 300*l.* a year, I should think, from the year 1859, when he came first with Mr. Padwick, until 1865.

33,748. Not all in subscriptions?—I do not know of any other way.

33,749. We have had it in evidence over and over again, that he gave money right and left, to men, women, and children, not to institutions at all?—I can tell you he did subscribe to two institutions; because on two occasions I know he gave 25*l.* a year to the School of Art.

33,750. You do not deny that he gave away money indiscriminately?—No doubt he gave money away.

33,751. That he bribed people, in fact, under the name of "nourishing" them?—I have no doubt of it.

33,752. Then what is the use of mincing words; why not call things by their right names?—I have no doubt in 1865 I took a very active part, and I canvassed with Mr. Westropp, and rendered him all the assistance in my power. I may mention that I knew nothing at all with regard to any money matters, or any bribery at the elections, although, of course, it is patent to most persons that money was spent. I voted on that occasion for Mr. Westropp. You have it in evidence, I think, before the committee of the House of Commons, on the occasion of the petition being presented against him, that I did take an active part. I was examined there upon that occasion. I hired the committee rooms. I made various payments, both previously to that petition and afterwards, and I was paid the amount of all the expenses that I had disbursed out of pocket. I never had received one shilling for remuneration in respect of Mr. Westropp's election.

33,753. Is it true, then, that you never had any instructions or authority whatever from Mr. Westropp, to do any one of those things?—None whatever. The instructions were given either by Mr. Smith, sen., or by Mr. Bealy Smith.

33,754. Mr. Richard Smith, or Mr. Bealy Smith?—Mr. Richard Smith, or Mr. Bealy Smith, his son. Mr. Richard Smith, as you have it in evidence, took no part as an agent, only as a friend of Mr. Westropp's. He was a friend and adviser on that election.

33,755. I do not want to know about other people. It was either through Mr. Richard Smith, or Mr. Bealy Smith, that you received instructions to do these things?—It was either through him or Mr. Bealy Smith that I hired these committee rooms and attendants, and did other matters in connexion with them.

33,756. Then what was the nature of your activity when you were with Mr. Westropp?—In canvassing. I canvassed almost solely with him. I was out many days canvassing with Mr. Westropp.

33,757. Surely he asked you to do that?—No, never at all. I never had any conversation with him respecting the committees.

33,758. But there is no harm in canvassing, is there?—Not the slightest.

33,759. Then why was it that subject was so scrupulously avoided?—The canvassing?

33,760. Yes?—How do you mean?

33,761. You say you went about canvassing with Mr. Westropp, and you declared Mr. Westropp never asked you to do so?—Oh no; he did ask me to canvass.

33,762. Then I wish you would attend to my questions. Mr. Westropp thought fit to represent himself, in the words I used yesterday, as a poor helpless tool in the hands of the lawyers, and of yourself, who are all but a lawyer. Do you mean to say, that being the case, that he never asked you to canvass for him?—Yes, he did ask me to canvass with him.

33,763. What else did he ask you to do?—Nothing beyond canvassing, I believe.

33,764. You took the committee rooms, you say?—Yes.

33,765. And did a number of things which you mentioned just now?—Yes, previously.

33,766. We may take it for granted, that when you went about with him it was by his authority you went about?—Certainly by his authority, and at his request.

33,767. You see that Mr. Westropp not only said that, but endeavoured to make out that you deserted him to go to a jollification, which, as I understand, must have lasted for some days?—It is a mere idea of Mr. Westropp's. I may have been away, perhaps, a couple of days on business, but I am not in the habit of attending jollifications.

33,768. That is not my question; but is it true that you were absent some days, having gone to a jollification?—No, nothing of the sort.

33,769. It made him pretty savage, as he was left almost without anybody?—I was absent two days on matters of business.

33,770. And not on a jollification?—Oh, dear no; it is a mere conjecture on the part of Mr. Westropp.

33,771. Go on with your statement?—Then, sir, with respect to that election, that is all I had to do with it. I think I mentioned to you that I stated in the evidence before the committee, that I made payments.

33,772. Were you aware of Mr. Tromp being down at that election?—I had not the slightest idea his name was Tromp, not the slightest idea. I knew there was a man down here who was continually called "the man in the moon." I had no idea who he was.

33,773. That is not my question. You knew there was a man down here?—I never saw him.

33,774. But you knew he was down here?—Yes, I knew he was down here, although I did not see him.

33,775. How did you know it?—There was a general report.

33,776. You were one of the general managers of the election?—I had no doubt of it.

33,777. You have sworn before the House of Commons, and Mr. Westropp also, that you, of all others, were most active?—I was active.

33,778. But do you mean to say you knew nothing more of the "man in the moon" being down here, except what others knew, except by common report?—Nothing more.

33,779. Did you know the place where he was located?—I did not.

33,780. You did not?—I did not.

33,781. Did you know for what purpose he was down for?—Of course I conjectured that if he was down here as a mysterious stranger, that he came down here for the purpose of bribery.

33,782. Were not you at once struck with an idea as to the nature of the object which such a man was down here for, and did you not take care to avoid knowing anything about him?—There is always a state of reticence about such a man when persons talk about him.

33,783. We will not talk about "reticence." You took care to avoid knowing anything about this man and his movements?—I carefully avoided it as a matter of common precaution. Then I do not know that there is any other matter in connexion with that election which you may wish to ask me about.

33,784. Yes; I want to know this. Have you any doubt that Mr. Boys was a member of any committee in which his name appears?—I really cannot tell you. I remember that question was pressed by Mr. Powell, but I do not remember.

33,785. Mr. James Harwood, was he a member?—I cannot tell whether he was a member or not. I think, if you have the Bridge Committee Minute Book in your possession, you will find there the names of a number of persons. There was no real committee formed. The truth is, that it was rather an arrangement by which all those who felt interested in Mr. Westropp's election should come forward and give what assistance and information that they could.

33,786. No doubt, Mr. Lilly; and you might add, might you not, that that is the way in which all committees are formed at all elections?—Well, I suppose so, generally.

33,787. Will you undertake to say that those two persons were not members of the body calling itself a "committee." You had doubts, you know, in 1866?—I had.

33,788. Have you removed those doubts?—I cannot. I can only say that the doubts I had then exist at the present moment. They may have been there, but I do not recollect seeing Mr. Boys.

33,789. You made payments at that election, I think?—I made several payments.

33,790. And you looked to the members of the committee to repay you?—The truth is that they were incurred——

33,791. Just answer my question.—I did not look to anyone for payment.

33,792. But you know before the House of Commons you expressly said that the members of the committee might repay you?—I considered that they would not permit me to be out of pocket.

33,793. Very well. Do you mean to say you do not know who the members of the committee were whom you thought would not allow you to be out of pocket?—Several of the heads of the committee. There were several heads of the party who were members of the committee.

33,794. I do not understand it, I must say.—I will explain. I was ultimately paid every shilling I expended.

33,795. Who paid you?—Well, it came to me through Stuckey's Bank, in the name of Turner. As far as my recollection serves me, the manager of the bank, or one of the cashiers, informed me that there had been a payment to them for me through a man of the name of Turner.

33,796. Who told you that?—One of the clerks.

33,797. What is his name?—I do not know whether it was the cashier, or whether it was Mr. Salmon. I do not know whether it was the cashier.

33,798. What is his name?—Adams is the present cashier.

33,799. Who told you that?—I cannot say.

33,800. Either the cashier or Mr. Salmon?—Yes; somebody in the bank paid it.

33,801. It was paid in the name of Turner?—Yes.

33,802. Not Johnson?—No, Turner. Shall I show you the entries?

33,803. Yes, if you please?—It is on the 30th May 1866. That is the entry.

33,804. Read it out.—"May 30th, Turner. Credit 60*l.*" Of course I have various remittances for the bank on various matters of business, and I frequently ask to what particular account it shall go. That is the reason I asked. I did not know what 60*l.* meant; and a few days afterwards I saw Mr. Bealy Smith, and I said that a payment of 60*l.* had been paid into Stuckey's Bank, and I asked him to tell me what it meant. He simply laughed, and said I need not ask any questions. I therefore came to the conclusion that this 60*l.* was a repayment of various sums which I had paid, amounting very nearly to 60*l.*, within a few shillings.

33,805. Have you the least doubt that "Turner" meant Mr. Westropp?—I have not the least doubt.

33,806. Have you the least doubt that inclines you to think that it was not Mr. Westropp that was meant?—Oh, I certainly did consider it must have come from Mr. Westropp, or somebody on his behalf.

33,807. Therefore you are no longer of the opinion expressed in your last answer to the committee of the House of Commons when they examined you, not when you were examined by counsel on either side, but by the committee itself: "I do not expect to get "any of this money refunded by Mr. Westropp. It "is very possible that I may from some of the mem- "bers of the committee; they would scarcely allow "me to be out of pocket in the matter. I hope they "will subscribe to refund me; I do not think I should "be very well used if they did not. At present I have "no legal demand."—Nor had I.

33,808. Do you mean to say that the whole of that answer faithfully and truly represents the state of the case?—As far as at that time I knew. Of course the money was afterwards paid.

33,809. You knew perfectly well, did you not then, that the committee were not chargeable at all. I do not mean in law, because that is another thing, but that they were none of them chargeable at all in fact or in truth, but that Mr. Westropp, for whom the work was done, would have to pay it?—I had no idea Mr. Westropp was to pay it.

33,810. You knew that he was paying money year after year in Bridgwater, "nourishing the borough," as he calls it, and that the committee bribed in 1859?—Yes.

33,811. Do you believe now that such a man would leave you out of pocket for money you had paid for legal expenses, namely, printing bills and the like; do you really believe it?—At the time I made that statement I had no reason to believe it.

33,812. Did you make that statement in order to induce the committee to believe that the relation between you and Mr. Westropp did not constitute what the law calls agency, and you purposely made that statement to them with reference to legal expenses in order to make it appear that you had no claim on Mr. Westropp?—I had no claim on him.

33,813. Did you make the statement for that purpose?—There is no inference to be drawn from it of that nature.

33,814. I hope your answers will be more clear than they were before the committee; but at present I must say they are anything but satisfactory and straightforward?—I came here to speak the truth; I have no intention of doing otherwise.

33,815. (Mr. Price.) Go on with what you have to say?—That is with regard to Mr. Westropp's election. The next election of Mr. Patton's, when Mr. Patton came down, I had nothing to do with that election beyond canvassing with Mr. Patton and Mr. Westropp. Mr. Westropp accompanied him, and he accompanied him, I believe, through the whole of the canvass. I am not aware that Mr. Patton canvassed at all, except in company with Mr. Westropp. I believe I canvassed with him for many days; I should think some seven or eight days. I know nothing of any illegal practice in connexion with that first election of Mr. Patton's. I do not know that I can make any other statement. It is mere information which is already in evidence. It is really repeating what you have had before.

33,816. (Mr. Coleridge.) Never mind, let us hear your account, what you have to tell?—I do not know that I can say anything beyond.

33,817. (Mr. Anstey.) Oh yes, sir, you can?—You have heard the circumstance which was not within my knowledge at the time, but which I afterwards heard of, that there was a sum of money got together at the "Clarence Hotel" for the purpose which has been stated to you by several witnesses. I did not know at the time the names of those parties. I have since heard of them in the course of this inquiry.

33,818. Will you speak plainly? "For the pur- "pose spoken to by several witnesses;" what purpose do you mean?—That the money was subscribed for the purpose of paying voters; no question about it.

33,819. Will you have the goodness to say whether you mean for the purpose of bribery?—For bribery.

33,820. Then why not say so. If you have committed a crime, why hypocritically conceal it?—I do not consider it a crime.

33,821. You talk of a "purpose spoken to by several witnesses." Why do you not speak plainly?—With regard to that election that is all I really know about it. I was in the committee room, or rather the return room, very nearly the whole of the day, so consequently I knew very little of what was passing outside. I knew very little of the illegal practices.

33,822. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything now as to where Mr. Westropp's money came from? You knew a great deal of what was passing from time to time?—Not the slightest idea.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. E. Lilly.

33,823. (Mr. Anstey.) You knew where you got the 2,000*l.* which you gave to the "man in the moon"?—I will tell you directly. That is with reference to Mr. Patton's second election. I will now come to that, if you please. In Mr. Patton's second election, which took place on the 12th July 1866, Mr. Bealy Smith was at that time, I think, paying his addresses to a young lady who was living at Southampton. He was there frequently. He wrote to me, and requested that I would come to London on important business; this was somewhere about a week before the election. I went up, and I think I met him at the "Inns of Court" hotel; and he told me that his object in writing for me was that he might possibly wish me to be present at some interview which might take place, or to consult me on some matters in connexion with the forthcoming election. Next morning, which I believe was on the 5th of July, I went to the Carlton Club; I waited about there several hours. It appears he was in consultation with some parties there. I saw Mr. Westropp. This is on the morning of the 5th. Mr. Westropp came and asked me to accompany him into the City. I went with him in a cab, and he went to the Bank of England, and we waited about until he came out again, for some perhaps half an hour. When he came out he appeared to be very heavily loaded, and my impression was that he had gone to get gold to the Bank of England. We returned, and on arriving at the Carlton Club I missed Mr. Westropp for something perhaps like a couple of hours. Mr. Bealy Smith and myself went to a place near and had some refreshment, intending to return to Bridgwater that evening. I ought perhaps to have stated before, that on the evening previous to this Mr. Bealy Smith wished me to accompany him to the house of a person, and that person no doubt was Mr. Tromp, and it was upon that occasion that he requested me to be the bearer of a packet from London, that that packet was to be delivered to the stranger, whose name I did not then know, nor did I recognize him in the slightest degree as one that I had ever seen before. We remained but a very short time at his house. It was some relief to me to find that this man had really turned up, because I thought it might be stated that I had gone to this place without being able to give the slightest clue to it, and that it might perhaps be thought I was not making a full statement, therefore to me it was a relief that this man turned up. He came to my house in pretty much the same way as has been described.

33,824. (Mr. Price.) Had you charge of the money?—I am coming to that. I am merely telling you that I made an arrangement with the man to come to my house. About two hours after Mr. Westropp returned from the City; I may state, we started from this refreshment house or dining house, it is called the Pall Mall dining house as far as my recollection will serve me, and we took a cab from that place towards the Carlton, and a packet something like a foot square and perhaps some three or four inches thick was placed in the cab by a person whom I did not know.

33,825. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did that person come from?—I believe he must have come out of the Carlton Club.

33,826. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the cab drawn up in front of the Carlton Club?—We stopped there. It was very close to it; it was quite opposite to it.

33,827. Did he come out of the Carlton Club?—My impression is he did. It was a little distance between the dining-room and the Carlton Club; it was very near the Carlton.

33,828. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this done up in a chocolate box?—I do not know.

33,829. Was it not a box inside?—Certainly.

33,830. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see him come out of one of the doors of the Carlton Club?—I believe he came out of the Carlton Club; he was near to it when he put the packet into the cab.

33,831. Cannot you say yes or no? Did you not see him come out of one of the doors of the Carlton Club?—I cannot say; it was very near to it that this man put this parcel in the cab.

33,832. (Mr. Price.) Was it a servant in livery?—I believe it was a servant out of livery.

33,833. (Mr. Anstey.) You know the Carlton Club has a side near to the Reform Club?—Yes.

33,834. It has two sides?—Yes; it was the main entrance.

33,835. Then it was not the side at all, but the main entrance?—Certainly.

33,836. Then how could he possibly have come out of any place except the Carlton Club?—I think he must have done so.

33,837. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not he do so?—I did not see him come out of the room.

33,838. Not out of the room; you were not asked that. Did you see him come out of the door?—I did not; he was very near.

33,839. Did you see him come down the steps?—I did not.

33,840. Did you see him come down on to the kerbstones?—He was on the pavement when the cab drew up.

33,841. (Mr. Anstey.) Where was he when the cab drew up?—He was close to the club.

33,842. Was he on the pavement, or on the steps?—He was on the pavement.

33,843. He had come down?—He had come down.

33,844. And was standing with his back to the door?—And was standing with his back to the door.

33,845. And had he his hat on?—I think he had his hat on.

33,846. And had he this packet under his arm?—He had it in his hand, intending to put it in the cab. I have no doubt he did come from the Carlton, judging from the place where he was.

33,847. Did you notice the colour of his clothes?—They were plain clothes.

33,848. They were plain clothes, no doubt; but were there large buttons upon them?—No; he appeared to be a servant out of livery, as far as I could judge.

33,849. What did he say?—Nothing whatever; he simply put this box in the cab.

33,850. What did you say to him?—Nothing whatever.

33,851. What did the cabman say to him?—Well, the cabman, he did not say anything.

33,852. Did anybody say anything to him?—Nothing whatever.

33,853. Then how did this man know who it was to whom he was to give this parcel to? How came he to put the parcel into the cab?—No doubt he was directed to do it.

33,854. Did you see Mr. Westropp behind him?—I did.

33,855. You saw him standing near?—Yes, I saw him standing near.

(Mr. Price.) Why did you not tell us so before, without all this beating about the bush?

33,856. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where was Mr. Westropp?—Standing outside the "Carlton" door.

33,857. And this person in livery put the box into the cab?—Yes.

33,858. (Mr. Price.) Why did you not tell us that at once?—I was coming to that.

33,859. (Mr. Anstey.) No, you were not; you are answering these questions in a way which is not at all satisfactory?—I am very sorry you think so.

33,860. (Mr. Price.) Go on. You must have known perfectly well that we wanted to trace this bag of money, and that Mr. Westropp was the person standing there when this money was put into the cab, and you keep back that fact until you are pressed about it?—I intended to say it; I have no intention of keeping back anything.

33,861. Then why did you not say it in the proper order of time?—Well, perhaps I am a little confused.

33,862. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, what did you do when you got the money?—The money was taken charge of by me. We went to the Paddington station.

33,863. Did Mr. Westropp say a word to you when you went off?—Not a word.

33,864. Did he nod to you?—No, I do not recollect that he did.

33,865. Did he not even say "Good-bye"?—I do not recollect that he did.

33,866. Did you go straight off?—We went straight off; in fact, we were rather late for the train, and we rather hurried off. We went to the Paddington station, and I took this packet and brought it to my house. I kept it at my house for several days, until Mr. Tromp called for it. I think that was about 12 o'clock on the day previous to the election, as has been stated by the witnesses; he came pretty much in the way which has been described, and he took the packet. That was on the day previously to the election; it was the nomination day, at about 12. I have no doubt the time he states is correct.

33,867. Tell me, Mr. Lilly, how came Mr. Westropp to entrust you with this large sum of money for bribery purposes?—I think that he was under the impression that he was entrusting it to Mr. Bealy Smith. He knew nothing of any arrangement that I was to take the money to Bridgwater. It was arranged and ordered all by Mr. Smith.

33,868. (Mr. Price.) But he knew Mr. Bealy Smith by sight, I suppose?—Oh, certainly.

33,869. Then how could he take you for Mr. Bealy Smith?—We were both in the cab. This packet was put in when Mr. Bealy Smith and myself were both in the cab.

33,870. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then he gave it into your joint charge?—It looked very much like it.

33,871. (Mr. Price.) How came Mr. Bealy Smith to trust you with this large sum of money for bribery purposes if Mr. Westropp did not trust you with it?—I suppose he had confidence in me, or else he would not have done so.

33,872. On what was this confidence founded?—I had known him from childhood.

33,873. From childhood had he entrusted you with monies when wanted for bribery purposes?—Oh, never.

33,874. Then how did it enter into Mr. Bealy Smith's mind, knowing you were as corrupt as he was, that he would trust you with this money?—I consider I was being made a cat's-paw of in this matter.

33,875. (Mr. Anstey.) How did he know you were to be trusted to employ the money in bribery purposes?—I suppose it was from his acquaintance with me, and from transactions in business.

33,876. Then you had had previous transactions with him in electioneering business, which made him think that you were to be trusted?—Not in connexion with money.

33,877. I am talking of bribery. There are some people who will not stain their souls with bribery, and others who are too ready to do it. How did Mr. Smith know you were one of the latter?—I have no reason to suppose that Mr. Bealy Smith knew I had had to do with money. I had no reason to believe that.

33,878. How came he to put himself in jeopardy, and the cause in jeopardy, by confiding the secret to you about the 2,000*l.*, and entrusting you with it, if he did not know previously that you were to be trusted?—I only state the simple fact, and I do not draw any inference from it.

33,879. I will not draw any inference. Had you not previously told him that you were ready to be so employed?—No; I swear it.

33,880. You do?—Yes.

33,881. When did he first signify to you that he wanted you to take charge of this parcel containing the 2,000*l.*?—When I was at the house of Mr. Tromp, as has been stated this day. Up to that time he never intimated his intention of going there.

33,882. What did he say?—He said it was a matter of great privacy; that I had nothing more to do than to be the carrier of a parcel. He did not even discuss the contents of the parcel. It was merely a parcel I was to be the bearer of.

33,883. (Mr. Price.) Did you know Mr. Tromp's name then?—I did not.

33,884. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that you did not know that this parcel was money, but that it was merely a parcel?—Oh no.

33,885. Then what do you say?—He asked me to take charge of a parcel, and did not say its contents.

33,886. Did you know what its contents were?—I had no doubt it contained money.

33,887. Then my question returns to the shape in which I put it to you just now, and I must have an answer to it. By what argument were you influenced, or what reason induced you to be connected with this disgraceful transaction?—Because I was betrayed into a trap.

33,888. Did you not expect to get a shilling?—Not a shilling.

33,889. Did you not?—Not a farthing.

33,890. (Mr. Coleridge.) You went to Mr. Tromp's house?—Yes.

33,891. And you knew from Mr. Bealy Smith that he was a gentleman who was coming down here?—Yes.

33,892. You knew where that house was?—No; I had not the faintest notion.

33,893. But you did know at the time?—I went in a cab.

33,894. But you did know at the time?—I did know at the time.

33,895. Do you mean to say that up to the present time you did not know where it was?—No.

33,896. Do you mean to say, that if you had wanted to trace out Mr. Tromp's house you could not have gone at once and found it out for yourself?—No.

33,897. You went in a cab?—Yes.

33,898. Did you not hear Mr. Bealy Smith tell the cabman where to go?—No, I did not.

33,899. Did you not recollect where you went, in what direction?—I did not.

33,900. You knew when you were in a street or a square?—I did not.

33,901. Were you purposely blind? You thought you had better not know where you were?—Well, I most certainly did not take notice.

33,902. Is it not perfectly true that you purposely avoided knowing anything about it?—Well, I cannot say that, because I really did not take notice.

33,903. You purposely avoided looking about you? Having that 2,000*l.* in the cab, you thought it better not to take notice?—The money was not there at that time, not till the next day.

(Mr. Anstey.) I must say your answers are most unsatisfactory. You are paltering with the questions that are put to you.

33,904. (Mr. Price.) The thing which cannot help striking one is this, that you were told some days ago, not a week ago, that we were determined to find out who this gentleman was, and that there must be somebody in the town who must know something about him. Now, it seems an extraordinary thing that you should have gone to this gentleman's house, and have been in communication with him, and yet that you should have observed that reticence with regard to him, as you say you did with regard to other matters, without coming forward to help us in the faintest way?—I have said to more than one person, that it was an immense relief to my mind when I found this stranger was going to give evidence, for the reason, that I might be pressed to give information as to his whereabouts, and not be able to give it.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. E. Lilly.

2 Oct. 1869.

33,905. But you ought to have come forward when I challenged the persons to do it. You should have come forward and said, as an honest man, "I will tell you I "know all about it; I went to this man's house from "the Carlton Club, and I will try to find out where "he is"?—I may mention, that before Mr. Purcell went away I meant to give him the whole of my evidence; but he went away, and I was unable to give my statement to him in consequence.

(The witness.) May I ask permission to make a statement. I think it would be right to state that I had informed the present secretary before Mr. Tromp gave his evidence that I had been to his house, and that I did bring the packet to Bridgwater. I had intended to give the full statement to Mr. Purcell, and had made an appointment with him before he left. Unfortunately he was called away, and I had not an opportunity of giving the full explanation that I should have been pleased to have given.

(Mr. Price.) That is an explanation. You see, having challenged every person to assist us in the matter, we thought from the information we had got it would be a very extraordinary thing that nobody in Bridgwater should know anything about him. You are the only Bridgwater person, with the exception of Mr. Bealy Smith, who is proved to have been brought into actual contact with the man before he came down here.

33,906. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell our secretary that you saw Mr Tromp? Did you tell our secretary anything about it?—No, I did not tell him anything, for the simple reason that he was called away. I should mention that I had mentioned the fact to other persons weeks since.

33,907. You must not give yourself credit for too much candour. You concealed that from the secretary?—I did not wish to do that. I was going to observe to the learned Chief Commissioner that I have not been in court for some ten days before to-day.

(Mr. Price.) Well, now, Mr. Lilly, go on.

(The witness.) This brings me up to the last election. I now pass on to that of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

33,908. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not told us yet about this very money being got from your house?—I have told you the man fetched it in the way he has described to you. I believe he has given a truthful statement of what took place. Now with regard to Westropp and Gray's election, Mr. Westropp, as you have been already informed, felt that he had a very strong hold upon the people of Bridgwater, and as he considered himself to be very popular he had determined to offer himself at that general election. Mr. Gray was introduced in this way. Mr. William Toogood, a parliamentary agent, was in the habit of calling on me frequently when he came to Bridgwater. Being a native of the town he asked me as to the general topics, the general news of the town, and he was here I think somewhere about the latter part of last August, and in the course of conversation about elections, because everything turned upon these points, he said that a friend of his, a Mr. Gray, was very desirous of getting into Parliament. I had told him previously that there was no gentleman that had been selected along with Mr. Westropp, and he thought that Mr. Gray would be very glad to come forward, and he asked if I thought it was open to a second candidate. I told him that there was no gentleman, so far as I knew, who had been selected; and he was very desirous to introduce Mr. Gray to Bridgwater. It resulted in Mr. Gray coming to Bridgwater, I think, somewhere about the latter part of August or the early part of September. I cannot quite charge my recollection at present. On the 15th September Mr. Gray came to Bridgwater. Mr. James Trevor was at Stowey, not in the town. Mr. John Trevor being from home, Mr. Brice being also from home, I called on Mr. Ruddock, a gentleman who has not taken a very active part, but who has always been called in to consult on general matters connected with the elections. We met Mr. Gray and Mr. Toogood at the "Clarence Hotel" in the evening, on the 15th September. Mr. Gray was told in the presence of Mr. Toogood, the general character of the borough. He was informed that Mr. Westropp was a very popular candidate, and it was thought and believed that in the event of a pure election being fought there was a good chance of Mr. Westropp's being returned, and any gentleman that might be with him. Mr. Westropp's name having been mentioned to Mr. Gray, he said but little upon the subject, but said he should confer with Mr. Westropp in London upon it; he thought it was quite due to see Mr. Westropp before saying anything further on the subject. He returned to London, and they had, no doubt, a conference; they had conferences upon the subject, and it resulted in Mr. Gray agreeing to come forward with Mr. Westropp. I should say that I believe there was a general desire. I am sure, speaking for myself, without wishing to assume more than I am entitled to do, there was a strong desire on the part of those with whom I acted, that there should be a pure election. There was, in fact, a very great dread of anything connected with bribery, especially in connexion with the last stringent Act of Parliament, and there was some correspondence, it appears, that took place between Mr. Westropp, I think, and some of the solicitors upon the subject, and Mr. Gray wrote me a letter. I was very fearful that I had mislaid the letter, as I do not keep election papers, but after very diligent search I found it mixed in with some printed papers, and with your permission I will put this letter in. It is a letter from Mr. Gray.

(Mr. Price.) You had better read it to get it on the notes.

(The witness.) It is not very legible. Shall I read the whole letter?

(Mr. Price.) Yes, you had better read it out.

(The witness, reading.) "31, Great St. Helens, "London, E.C., 25th Septr. 1868. My dear sir,—I "enclose you Mr. Westropp's manuscript, and also a "draft address which I have partly framed thereupon, "but I am not an expert at these things, and would "rather leave you carte blanche to add, reduce, or "alter as you think will best suit the sentiments and "proclivities of your people——

33,909. (Mr. Anstey.) You know the meaning of "reticences" and "purposes," Mr. Lilly. What meaning do you attach to the word "proclivities" as applied to the people of Bridgwater?—Political sentiments here I suppose it means.

33,910. Proclivity, as you are aware, means going downhill, slipping downhill?—That is a declivity.

33,911. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are there any words about "no bribery" in the address?—Oh no.

33,912. You would have struck them out if there had been, would you not?—I should not think so; I am not quite so far gone. (Continues reading letter.) "There are other points that I should have touched "on myself, such as freedom for all religious denomi-"nations, the late Reform Bill, &c., but you will best "know. My signature will be ready at any time——

33,913. (Mr. Coleridge.) And to anything, I suppose?—Well, he does not say so. (Continues reading letter.) "In the absence of Mr. Toogood, I think it "well to make a resumé of what I understand to be "the present situation, in order that there may be no "misconception on either side. On our first inter-"view with Mr. Westropp he gave me to understand "that he had information (later than any I could "have) that was most encouraging, that a large "number of the new electors were prepared to vote "blue, that there were divisions in the opposite "camp, and that in his opinion the latter were

" demoralized. On the subject of money he was " decidedly opposed to anything beyond legal expen- " diture, giving reasons in which I entirely agreed. " Mr. Toogood's note to you after this interview stated " that I was prepared to 'stand on Mr. W.'s principle,' " which I hope was understood. Mr. Westropp esti- " mated that his legal expenditure would amount to some " 500*l.* Of course mine would be considerably above " this, as I should have to ask the active assistance of " yourself and our legal friends. But what I should " wish clearly understood is that I am not prepared " to fight the battle by 'undue influence.' If you and " the other heads of the party think that my qualifi- " cations as a merchant, together with the fact of my " having the support promised by Mr. Spofforth here, " render me a fit person to represent the constituency, " then I can promise you great zeal in the work and " liberal support to all your local interests and " institutions——

(Mr. Price.) What is that about the promised support of Mr. Spofforth?

(The witness, reading.) "If you and the other " heads of the party think that my qualifications as a " merchant, together with the fact of my having the " promised support by Mr. Spofforth here, render me " a fit person to represent the constituency, then I " can promise you great zeal in the work and liberal " support to all your local interests and institutions; " but if, on the contrary, you are of opinion that " victory will be hopeless unless by a large expen- " diture of money on outside influences, then I fear " my candidature must drop. It would not suit my " position here nor my convenience to go through the " ordeal of which Mr. Westropp has had experience " formerly. Pray give me your candid views. I should " have been glad to see Mr. Toogood before sending " you this letter, but he will not" [be] "at business " before Monday, and meanwhile you may be called " on to act.—Yours very truly, CHAS. W. GRAY."

33,914. (Mr. Anstey.) What are "the local interests and institutions" to which Mr. Gray, but only on condition that he was returned to Parliament, would subscribe liberally?—I presume he meant the local charities of the town.

33,915. The same sort of charities which Mr. Westropp had nourished since 1859?—I have only Mr. Gray's letter to arrive at a conclusion on the subject. I have no other means than the letter to find out what he means.

33,916. The real plain English of the bargain between Mr. Gray and Mr. Westropp was this, that Mr. Westropp was to spend 500*l.* only, and that all the rest (which would be considerably more than that) would be spent by Mr. Gray?—That was Mr. Gray's idea. I may say that Mr. Gray was entirely unacquainted with election matters; quite a novice.

33,917. Therefore if the "considerably more than that" amounted to as much as 5,000*l.*, Mr. Gray would bear it and not Mr. Westropp?—I am not competent to give an interpretation of that letter. I think Mr. Gray was entirely innocent in all matters of elections, and that therefore he had no idea of what elections cost, and from conversations I had with him there was a determination not to spend a shilling illegally.

33,918. (Mr. Price.) What do you understand by "the promised support of Mr. Spofforth"?—I apprehend (I understood that afterwards), that he would be acceptable to the Conservative party; that he was a member of some club of which Mr. Spofforth was also a member. That is the way I understood him.

33,919. Is Mr. Gray a young man or an old man?—He is not a young man. I should think he would be 40; possibly more.

33,920. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is not he nearer 60?—I should not think he was. I am not a very good judge of age. He may be more than 40.

33,921. (Mr. Anstey.) Where is Mr. Toogood's note, written to you after the interview between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray?—I have no note of that sort. I think it must have been a personal interview.

33,922. I will read the passage to you. Mr. Gray first of all says, "Mr. Westropp at our first interview " gave me to understand—so and so, namely, that he had some vast number of new electors, and he says that he, Mr. Gray, was decidedly opposed to anything beyond legal expenditure. Then, "Mr. " Toogood's note to you after this interview stated " that I was prepared to stand on 'Mr. W.'s principle,' " which I hope was understood." These words, "on Mr. W.'s principle," are in inverted commas; the note you see contained these words, "on Mr. W.'s principle"?—I have not the letter, nor do I recollect having received it. I think there was an interview which I had with Mr. Toogood in which he expressed the most decided opinion expressed by Mr. Westropp, that he would not spend any money in illegal practices. I have letters here of Mr. Toogood's. They are of no importance except making an appointment.

33,923. What was the promised support, "Together " with the fact of my having the support promised " by Mr. Spofforth here," meaning in London?—Meaning in London.

33,924. What support was that?—I apprehend that the support would mean that he would be acceptable to the Conservative party. It could have meant nothing else, I apprehend. In fact, I heard Mr. Gray afterwards say that he was a member of the same club.

33,925. Here is an antithesis—"there" and "here." " My qualifications as a merchant, together with the " fact of my having the support promised by Mr. " Spofforth here render me a fit person to represent " the constituency there." It must be something more, surely, than concurrence of opinion with the Conservatives?—I have no other means of interpreting; Mr. Gray himself would be the best interpreter of this letter.

33,926. Then he goes on immediately to promise you liberal support to all your interests and institutions?—Yes, that is what he stated.

33,927. Unless the victory would be hopeless otherwise than by "a large expenditure." "Large" is underlined. "A large expenditure of money," or " outside influences;" outside being also underlined?—That is outside legal expenses, I presume.

33,928. (Mr. Anstey.) No, not expenses, outside influences. Does not it appear from this that he was prepared to insure victory by an expenditure of money and by inside influences?—That he was not so prepared turns out by the plan that they decided on adopting.

33,929. I suppose nobody has altered this letter since it has been in your hands?—Oh no.

33,930. Therefore you did not underline the words " large," and "outside"?—No.

33,931. Mr. Gray must have done it?—Certainly.

33,932. Mr. Gray must have had a meaning in doing it. He must have meant that he was willing to expend money to some amount, and to use influences that were not "outside," whatever that word may mean?—I have no other means of judging what he meant than by subsequent interviews; by interviews which I had with him, in which he clearly expressed his determination not to spend any money in illegal practices.

33,933. (Mr. Price.) Did "outside influences" mean influencing by employers of labour?—I understand it to mean money influence beyond legitimate expenditure.

33,934. (Mr. Anstey.) He has already said that he is willing to spend considerably more than 500*l.*, and that he is willing to subscribe to local interests and institutions, and subscribe liberally, and willing to make an expenditure provided it is not a large one; large is underlined What could outside influences mean?—I can give you no interpretation. Mr. Gray would best interpret his own letter. I can only judge, as I have before stated, from the facts which took place.

33,935. Then he says, "Pray give me your candid view?" Did you write to him in return?—I did.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. E. Lilly.

33,936. Did you in your letter tell him that it was the general opinion here that if the other side bribed and your side did not bribe, Westropp and Gray must go to the wall?—Not in that letter, certainly. I merely intimated to him that I had laid his letter; that letter I should inform you I had shown to Mr. Trevor, and to the solicitors and others, and the reply that I gave to it, under their direction, was simply that they quite endorsed his views regarding not having anything to do with an illegal expenditure of money. That was the communication I made to Mr. Gray. It was quite accepted (the terms he stated) that they would have nothing to do with any corrupt practices.

33,937. You say you did not then. Tell me, did you tell him before he came down that if he stood, really stood, upon that principle of not expending money he must go to the wall if the other side did it?—I think he was told that at the first interview that I referred to at the "Clarence Hotel" in the presence of Mr. Ruddock.

33,938. I am asking what took place before he came down. Was he told anything to this effect, "Don't come down if you are not prepared to spend "money in the event of the other side spending "money?"—No doubt he was told so, but not by me.

33,939. By whom?—I do not know. I should mention that at the preliminary interview (he came down on the 15th September) he was told that if money was spent on the other side it would be perfectly futile to fight them; there would be no chance by pure electioneering.

33,940. Did you tell him so?—I have no doubt I did.

33,941. What did he say?—He said he would confer with Mr. Westropp on the subject. In fact we gave him a good deal of information on that and other matters connected with the borough. He said he should confer with Mr. Westropp, as it was due to him, before saying anything further about the matter.

33,942. The postscript which I do not think you read is, "Mr. Westropp's M.S. I should like to have preserved"?—That is the address.

33,943. Have you preserved it?—I think I have both the manuscripts of Mr. Westropp's address, and that of Mr. Gray. I think so.

33,944. I do not wish to compromise myself by accepting that interpretation. It may not be the address that is meant, but I mean the manuscript that is referred to in the postscript, "Mr. Westropp's M.S. I should like to have preserved"?—That is no doubt the manuscript referred to in the early part of the letter.

33,945. It may or may not be; but have you preserved the manuscript referred to in this postscript?—I have no doubt I have. I will send for it. I think I have. I did not think it was important at all; the mere addresses of the parties.

33,946. Mr. Toogood's note you have not got?—I have not. As I told you before, I do not think he wrote to me. I have two notes of his here, but they merely refer to making an appointment. I have a letter here from Mr. Westropp. There is nothing in it that I think important; it is merely dated the 29th September, in which he sends the corrected and shortened draft of the address. There is nothing referred to in that. I will put the letter in if you wish.

33,947. Then with regard to the election that took place, we have already been told that there was a feeling of disappointment by some of the parties in the town, and, in fact, a strong feeling expressed that it would be perfectly useless, as there was a general belief that money would be spent on the other side?—It was thought that we should be fighting in vain, or leading a forlorn hope, to go to the poll unless money was spent.

33,948. You concurred in that?—I did not concur in that; I had a strong opinion.

33,949. You concurred in the opinion that the feeling of disappointment was pretty general in the town?—Amongst certain parties.

33,950. Therefore, when you said a few minutes ago that there was a general (I think you said universal) desire that the election should be conducted on purity principles, that would not be strictly correct?—I did not say "universal." I beg pardon; I said merely there was a feeling on the part of those at the head of the party.

33,951. You said a "general," or "universal," which I do not know; one or the other. You said either general or universal. If it is worth while I will have it read. You volunteered a statement that you thought it due to them to say that that was a general or universal feeling of the party?—I referred merely to those who were at the head of the party; the general feeling amongst those at the head of the party. That is what I meant. If I have stated otherwise I must have made a mistake; and then there was a determination, on the part of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, to proceed to the poll under any circumstances, whatever the chances were, and Mr. Westropp had still a very sanguine expectation that from the very enthusiastic manner in which he had been received by the electors of Bridgwater he would stand a very fair chance provided the election was fought on pure principles. It was decided to go to the poll; and I may say that, as much to the astonishment of the Conservatives as to that of the Liberals, there was a large majority of, I think, something like from 200 to 240 at about 1 or half-past 1 o'clock. You have in evidence that there was a considerable motion in the opposite camp about that period, shortly before Mr. Kinglake left for London; and of course we very soon discovered the fact that as many persons who had promised to vote for Mr. Westropp, and I think members of the Working Men's Association in particular, had gone into the opposite camp, there was only one conclusion to be drawn from it; that they must have had some inducement to vote on the other side.

33,952. You have somewhat anticipated. We have in evidence—there is evidence more than enough of the iniquities committed on the other side that day. What we want to know is what took place on the Sunday and the Monday?—I can have nothing——

33,953. Will you listen to me. What took place on the Sunday and the Monday in your party when the strong dissatisfaction which I thought you were going to describe to us generally prevailing amongst electors of a certain class became known, or was made known to those of another class? What was done to mitigate or remove that dissatisfaction; you have not told us anything of that?—No, I do not know of anything beyond an expressed determination in language as strong as possible that no money would be spent by Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray. On the Sunday I was present at Mr. Brice's, and you have already had detailed to you very fully the interview that took place between Mr. Westropp, and I think Mr. Hennett, or Mr. Spink. I need scarcely refer to that, because I can give you no other light on the subject than that you have before you.

33,954. I am speaking of those who you say were voters of a certain class, and who were strongly discontented when they were told there was to be no money. How were they appeased so far as to come up zealously to the poll next morning, being as witnesses leave no doubt in my mind they were to a great extent composed of persons who had been bribed at former elections, and were bribeable at that? How came they so zealously forward if nothing had been done to remove the dissatisfaction they felt on the ground of Mr. Gray and Mr. Westropp standing on purity principles?—I really can scarcely answer that question, excepting on the supposition that they may not have been under the impression that there was money going on the other side.

33,955. How can you account for their having put them into a majority which you say astonished yourself?—The only way in which I accounted for it was that there was no money going on the other side until a later period of the day.

33,956. Would not that be the reason that they would hold back in order to see if money would be going at all?—On the contrary. I think they gave it up under the impression that no money was going. They thought they would go up and, if I may say so, make a virtue of necessity and vote early; on the supposition that there would be no money going.

33,957. Then their discontent had been removed?—I do not know the fact.

33,958. Now, Mr. Lilly, as a sensible man, and a man who can recollect from year to year the more important events of the year, do you mean to say that you do not know full well that they or many of them, or some of them, I will say, at least, were induced to think, or brought themselves to think, that if they voted zealously now for Westropp and Gray, and put them in a majority, and secure their return they would be considered amongst the "local interests and institu-"tions to which the candidates would subscribe by-"and-by?" Do you mean to deny it?—I think it possible that they may have had the idea, but I have no knowledge that anything of the sort took place. I should mention now, with regard to the Working Men's Association——

33,959. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to represent that these men voted purely from political motives?—It would be rather hard to say; I do not know; I cannot speak of my own knowledge; I remember I was very much astonished.

33,960. Everybody was astonished?—I think they were.

33,961. Therefore I think everybody must have been pretty sure that there must have been something short of political motives which took them to the poll?—If there were, I had no knowledge of it.

33,962. They must have been under the impression that eventually, if there was any money going, they would be bribed. I think it has been so stated that that must be so?—I cannot say of my own knowledge.

33,963. Did you ever know such a case before?—It seems very strange.

33,964. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you read Richard Hodges' circular; a copy of it was put in evidence the other day?—I do not recollect the circular.

33,965. It was one that they thought so unwise a thing for him to write, a man of his skill, that Mr. Batten said that he could not believe that he had written it; a circular in which Mr. Gray is called a copartner, and the perjured and bribed Mr. Hayward is told in so many words that if he votes for Westropp and Gray, "they will be found by you all that you could wish"?—I have not read the circular.

33,966. Did you hear Mr. Hodges' speech or speeches which he wished to repeat to us?—I think he spoke chiefly about the Working Men's Association.

(Mr. Price.) It is stated that he boasted that he had done it so diplomatically that it could read either way.

33,967. Did you hear him speak?—No.

33,968. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present at the meeting at eight o'clock in the morning, when Mr. Westropp, unquestionably to my mind, was present (though one of the witnesses has taken upon himself to swear positively that he was not) at the "Clarence"?—I was not present. My attention was entirely confined to what we may call the committee room, or rather the return room.

33,969. Do you know whether Mr. Hodges on one of those occasions in telling electors why money would not be spent gave the reason because it would not be prudent for Mr. Westropp or anybody else to promise money, because that would unquestionably, if proved, confine him to a prison?—I never heard him say so.

33,970. You know, I suppose, that at all events some of the names which made up that majority that astonished you so much were names notorious in Bridgwater for never having voted without being bribed, and for being bribeable on either side? Do not you know that?—There were some, doubtless.

33,971. When you heard those men had voted early, had you any doubt what had induced them to vote?—I was under the impression that they went up and voted purely.

33,972. (Mr. Price.) It is "purely" in one sense; they had no actual money. You do not mean to say that you thought they voted without an expectation, that there would be money afterwards if there was no petition and no inquiry?—I could not go so far as that.

33,973. Do you think that if there had not been money given to them after that election, and if there had been no petition and no inquiry, that one of these men would have voted at the next election without being paid for their former votes?—I would not undertake to say.

33,974. I think you can undertake to say?—I would not undertake to say one way or the other.

33,975. You must know Bridgwater well enough to know that that would be the inevitable result. In all probability before the next election these men would saw, "Now we are not going to be done again; we will have it beforehand"?—I think that would apply most strictly to the old constituency, but I have not knowledge of the new.

33,976. (Mr. Anstey.) You took an active part in the election?—I canvassed.

33,977. And you are aware that the virtuous new constituency, to whom that remark of the learned Chief Commissioner would not apply according to you—that of the virtuous new constituency not less than 34, perhaps more, being not only Conservatives, but being members of the Conservative Working Men's Association, and furthermore being actually positively pledged to vote for Westropp and Gray, actually sold themselves like pigs to the other side, and voted for the other side?—Oh, there were; no doubt there were.

33,978. Then how can that remark possibly apply chiefly to the old constituency in the face of a damning fact like that?—It is a very suspicious fact, I admit. Of course I state from my own knowledge what my belief may be.

33,979. (Mr. Price.) You having been mixed up so much in electioneering matters, you must know that that is so?—I think it is very probable. I could not undertake to swear that that was so. Of course I only express an opinion.

33,980. You are not asked to swear, but we want to get the opinion of people like yourself who have been actively engaged in politics, as to whether the enlargement of the constituency has had any real effect in purifying it?—I should not be ready to say that it had.

(Mr. Anstey.) It does not seem to have had the effect of even lowering the price of votes.

33,981. (Mr. Price.) If these 200 men were composed almost entirely of the new constituency, I think there might be something in your judgment, but unless you can show that— ?—They were largely composed, I should imagine, of the new constituency, because this constituency was more than doubled by the new franchise.

33,982. Then it is a very curious thing. The other side give us a reason for their determination to begin bribing. They say the Conservatives had an immense majority at an early hour in the day, and they felt convinced that there were men who had polled who would not have polled without money, and therefore they then screwed up their courage and made up their minds to bring out their money. That shows the different views taken by different parties. Here the other people say, You had a majority in your favour, and they say (and I think it was a reasonable opinion,) that this majority was made of men who would not vote without at least an expectation of money. You say you think they voted entirely from pure motives?—I think it would be entirely open to the suspicion which you suggest. From my own knowledge I must say I was very much surprised at the majority at the time I mentioned.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. E. Lilly.

2 Oct. 1869.

33,983. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Dr. Kinglake in the streets that day?—I did not; I do not think I was outside the "Clarence Hotel" until after the close of the poll; I did not see Dr. Kinglake for some time.

33,984. Have you anything further to say about that election?—Yes, I have some information to give you in respect to some payments. Mr. Bealy Smith, as you are aware, it seems was determined to leave Bridgwater, and he was then in a very excited state. I should like to have him described to you by medical gentlemen who attended him—I fear you may be scarcely aware of his state of mind—Dr. Bent and Dr. Farmer.

33,985. Who?—Mr. Bealy Smith I was referring to.

33,986. I am asking you about the last election. Have you anything further to say about that?—No, nothing about the last election; I was mistaking. I beg your pardon. It is in reference to Mr. Patton's election that I was going to give you some information. I was stating that Mr. Bealy Smith was then in a very excited state of mind, and I was just saying that the doctors would best give you that information, and that he asked me to settle certain bills in connexion with Mr. Patton's two elections. He urged me to do it, and I consented really from a feeling of sympathy with his state of mind, and I did make certain payments. These payments I wish to give in.

33,987. You had better read them, and the amount; the total first of all?—The sum total is 206*l.* 5*s.* and some of the details have been spoken of here by some of the witnesses. I give this in explanation as well as furnishing further payments that were made. I will give you the whole of the payments, if you please. The first payment was to William Poole. I should say, I ought to say here that I have no knowledge, and I never ordered or gave directions for any of these accounts, but I was only the medium of paying these accounts as requested by Mr. Bealy Smith and this, and this 206*l.* 5*s.* was a balance I understood he then had in hand to pay certain outstanding liabilities. "William Poole, Bristol and "Exeter Railway Inn, for refreshments, 2*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*" That was a public-house. "James Stark, travelling "expenses coming from a journey to vote, and re-"turning." I am not quite sure to which election of Mr. Patton this applies. Some of the bills apply to both. He was on his journey; he was a commercial traveller, and paid 3*l.* in expenses.

33,988–9. (Mr. Price.) I do not think we want the details. You paid 206*l.* worth of outstanding bills?—Yes.

33,990. Treating-bills and expenses?—Treating-bills and expenses.

33,991. (Mr. Anstey.) Was this during the last election?—Oh no, not a shilling. It was paid in the early part of last year, 1868, long before the election.

33,992. It was after Mr. Disraeli and the then Government had given a solemn pledge in the House of Commons that there should be a dissolution at a convenient period of that year, 1868?—Well, I don't know that I recollect when that took place.

33,993. As your memory entirely fails you upon that point, I will tell you, because it is a matter of history, that that pledge was given in 1867, and renewed in 1868?—These bills were paid in 1868, nearly a year and a half——

33,994. That has nothing to do with it. At the time the payments were made, was not it fully understood that an election was, I won't say imminent, but likely to come on before many months?—No doubt it was expected, but I do not think that these bills——

33,995. (Mr. Coleridge.) They were paid in anticipation of the coming election?—No, this money was in Mr. Smith's hands, and had been in Mr. Smith's hands for a year and a half, and in consequence of his severe illness the bills had been deferred. They had been incurred in 1866.

33,996. (Mr. Price.) Had these men become clamorous for their money?—Not in the slightest degree. I never heard of one. I never heard of a single instance.

33,997. (Mr. Anstey.) If they had been clamorous, would you have been the man to hear of it?—Well, I might or might not have heard. I think it is probable that I should have heard.

33,998. Would you have heard in other ways?—Some of them might have made a complaint to me.

33,999. You are a brother-in-law of Mr. Smith?—No.

34,000. Any relation?—No relation whatever.

34,002. But you are intimately connected with the family?—No. No connexion whatever beyond——

34,003. Is it not a fact that when the business of Smith and Son was sold to Mr. Boyle, or perhaps before that, some of the confidential papers connected with the election of 1865, and perhaps those of 1866 also, were handed over to your care?—Oh dear no, not a single paper.

34,004. Mrs. Smith has distinctly stated that that was the case?—I beg to explain. Mrs. Smith could have referred only to the bills that I paid at the request of Mr. Bealy Smith in the early part of last year.

34,005. Mr. Lilly, Mrs. Smith's evidence speaks for itself. She was not asked about the payment of bills at all. She was asked about some papers which have most mysteriously, and I think scandalously, disappeared, which we have sought to discover, and which we are entitled to have produced, and those are papers in reference to the election of 1865, and the trial which took place in 1866 in reference to that return, and she said that besides those that were destroyed by herself there were others which by advice of somebody had been handed over to you as a confidential person; papers of importance, which you would produce?—I pledge my oath that I never received a single paper, and I may say that, fortunately, Mr. Chapman is fully aware of the fact. Mr. Chapman was a clerk in the employ of Mr. Smith. He will tell you that I could by possibility have no papers handed over to me. I never had a paper of any kind whatever. To that I pledge my oath and my conscience.

34,006. Have you heard that she made that statement?—I read her evidence in the Mercury of the following day.

34,007. Now here is a short abstract of it in the Mercury which you must have read?—I have no doubt of it.

34,008. "She added that her son had written to "say that there were election papers in the hands of "Mr. Lilly, which he wished to have handed over to "her." That was not nearly all she said, but it is a pretty fair abstract of what she said. Now, is that statement true, or is it false?—It is entirely untrue. I never had a single paper, I again repeat most emphatically.

34,009. It is between you and Mrs. Smith and her son?—I can only say I believe it is a misapprehension of Mrs. Smith. I do not think she would be capable of telling an untruth. There was no possible reason, as Mr. Chapman could best tell you; there was no possible reason why the papers should be handed to me.

34,010. I will read you the full notes of her answers. She had been asked at several periods of her examination the same question, and at last she is asked this towards the end of her examination: "Do you know what conclusion we shall come to if you do not"—that means "if you do not sanction your husband coming before us?" and the answer is, "I have not all the papers"—that means all the papers relating to the election trial—"I have not all the papers; Mr. Lilly "has some of the papers. Q. You did not tell me

" that just now?—A. You did not give me time; you " went on to another subject. Q. What papers has " he?—A. My son wrote a letter to Mr. Lilly during " the time he was managing his sale." That is the sale of the business, I suppose?—The sale of the furniture.

34,011. "Mr. Lilly read that letter to me, about " one or two letters that concerned me, and he said, " 'You have some political papers which I wish " handed over to mamma.' I have asked Mr. Lilly " for them, and I have never had them. He (that is " Mr. Lilly) admitted to me that he had them. " Q. (by Mr. Coleridge.) Is that Mr. Lilly, the auc- " tioneer? — A. Yes, Mr. Lilly, the auctioneer. " Those may be very important papers." Then I asked, "Has any other person any papers?" A. "Not to my knowledge. I should not have known that, " but that my son wrote to Mr. Lilly, and he (that " is Mr. Lilly) told me so." Now did you ever tell her that?—I think it could have no reference—could by no possibility have any reference beyond the bills and receipts for what I paid—this 206*l.* I emphatically state again on my solemn oath that I never had a paper. You are under a misapprehension of my having had anything to do with the disposal of the business; it was the sale of the furniture. I never had a political paper o f Mr. Smith's in my hands, nor have I now. Mr. Chapman will give you corroborating information. He can tell you that I could by no possibility have the papers.

34,012. What do you mean by "no possibility"?—Because Mr. Chapman has told me that he knew the whole of the circumstances; that he took the papers, all the papers connected with these elections, down to Mrs. Smith.

34,013. You know, Mr. Lilly, perfectly well that papers relating to an election, in which "a man in the moon" to your knowledge was employed on your side of the question, may partly consist of papers which should not be exposed to the eye of an ordinary lawyer's clerk like Mr. Chapman?—I can only again repeat that I have never seen, nor have I ever had entrusted to my care a single paper bearing upon any of these elections to which you have referred. That, again, I emphatically pledge my oath to.

34,014. Are you aware that your friends, Mr. Smith, senior, and Mr. Smith, junior, are the only attorneys in all Bridgwater who have concealed or kept back, or whose people have concealed or kept back from this Commission the papers relating to elections into which we have inquired, and which papers we have called on them to produce?—I have heard so. I beg to assure the Commissioners that if I had the knowledge of a single paper, I should feel it my duty most unquestionably to bring it forward.

34,015. (Mr. Price.) Will you make a search and see?—I have searched, It has given me a world of trouble to find the letter which I have now handed in, which I was under a very great apprehension that I had destroyed. I am not in the habit of keeping papers connected with the elections; in fact, I have generally destroyed them, and I can only say that when that letter turned up it relieved me from some anxiety, because it might have been thought, perhaps, that I had destroyed that letter.

34,016. When were these briefs, held by Mr. Longfield and the other Conservative counsel, in the election petition trial of 1866 destroyed?—I have not the slightest idea.

34,017. When did you receive the orders for the sale?—I think it must have been some time previously; previous to August last year. The sale took place in August.

34,018. 1868?—1868.

34,019. From whom did you receive those orders?—From Mr. Bealy Smith himself.

34,020. You told us, not long ago, not many minutes ago, that Mr. Bealy Smith was quite unfit to transact business, and yet you now say that you took orders from him for a sale, and executed those orders?—I said he was in a very excited state. I did take his orders, but I consulted Mrs. Smith on the subject, and she said I had better follow his directions. He seemed determined to leave Bridgwater.

34,021. You mean to say, in other words, that Mr. Bealy Smith was fit to transact every other kind of business though excited, but not fit to make a discovery to this Commission and the public. Is that what you mean?—I do not say that.

34,022. The same, I suppose, with regard to his paralytic father. I suppose you mean to say that he, too, is not fit to be examined before this Commission? Will you swear that?—If I made any statement I should scarcely be believed, and therefore I had better not do so. I have a strong opinion on the subject.

34,023. Were you employed in a sale at Horsey Slimes?—I was the auctioneer.

34,024. And Mr. Else also; was not he engaged?—No, Mr. Else is retired.

34,025. Well, you were engaged as the auctioneer?—I was engaged as the auctioneer.

34,026. When did that sale take place?—Some two or three months since.

34,027. Was it one month or two?—I cannot recollect.

34,028. Was it just before this Commission opened?—Oh yes, some time.

34,029. Was it some days?—I should think about two or three months ago.

34,030. We have been here nearly two months, you know?—Yes, I know; not quite.

34,031. (Mr. Price.) Was it in the month of June or July?—I can tell you by getting the particulars. It was some two or three months ago. My memory is not good for that.

34,032. Was Mr. Joseph Richard Smith at that sale?—Yes.

34,033. And bidding?—No, he did not bid at all.

34,034. Did you see him on the ground?—No, I never saw him on the ground. You are speaking of Joseph Richard Smith?

34,035. I mean Richard Smith?—I never heard that he had inspected the property, or caused it to be inspected, until it came out in the course of this inquiry.

34,036. Until it came out in a question; in the shape of a question from me?—Very probably.

34,037. Is it a fact that this paralytic man who cannot be examined before us first of all entered into some negociation with somebody for the purchase of that property by private contract?—I can hardly think that was tbe case, because I must have known it. Messrs. Poole were the solicitors.

34,038. Is not it the fact that he drove out to that property, and drove over the ground and inspected it?—I do not know. It is not within my knowledge.

34,039. And having inspected it, declined it?—I do not know at all.

34,040. You are a judge of that sort of thing. being a land agent?—Oh yes, it is my business.

34,041. Would you call a man who could do all that, physically and mentally, incapable of transacting business, supposing he did all that?—Well, I should say if he did all that he would be capable of transacting business.

34,042. (Mr. Price.) Forming a judgment on the value of the land and declining to become a purchaser?—I was not aware of the fact.

34,043. (Mr. Anstey.) You say Mr. Else had nothing to do with it?—Not to my knowledge. He may have been consulting with Mr. Smith, but not to my knowledge. I never heard of Mr. Smith as intending to become a purchaser. I think I recollect, as we always do, sending him particulars. We generally send him the particulars of anything. He is perhaps desirous of knowing what is going on in the town. He has not much to employ his mind upon.

34,044. One question more upon that point, and remember you are sworn?—I shall not forget the fact.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. E. Lilly.

2 Oct. 1869.

34,045. What reason in particular have the Smiths —Richard Smith, his wife, and son that is gone away, or any of them—what special reason have they more than the other inhabitants of Bridgwater for shunning an examination which is to reveal their misdeeds?—I really think, sir, if I may be permitted to give you a candid answer, I do not think it results from any disinclination. I believe there is a serious apprehension entertained, that to examine Mr. Smith, and to place him under a severe examination, would have the effect of producing, perhaps, another attack of paralysis. If you will allow me I will tell you all I know about Mr. Smith. I have sometimes been to Mr. Smith's house to consult Mrs. Smith with regard to her step-son, Bealy Smith, and I assure you she has invariably prevented my seeing her husband, being fearful lest talking of the general matters of the town would excite him, and be very dangerous.

34,046. Why is it not the fact that Mr. Else is at this moment not only seeing Richard Smith, but is living with him at Teignmouth or Exeter, or wherever else it may be?—I do not know the fact.

34,047. But have you not heard it?—I have not heard it, but I saw Mr. Else with Mrs. Smith on the day of the examination. I do not know the fact.

34,048. Did he go away with her?—I simply saw them returning.

34,049. Then he went away with her?—I have no idea.

34,050. You saw them returning from where?—From the "Clarence Hotel," on the day of her examination. I merely met them going towards their own house. Mr. Boyle I think was present, and Mr. Else was there as well.

34,051. (Mr. Price.) What is Mr. Else?—He is a retired engineer. He was connected with the firm of Hennett and Spink, whose names you have heard.

34,052–3. Is he a great friend of Mr. Richard Smith?—On very friendly terms with him. They have been on friendly terms for years.

34,054. (Mr. Anstey.) And Dr. Farmer, I believe, takes as warm an interest in politics here as you do?—Well, he is a very zealous Conservative.

34,055. And he was very active with the Smiths and you in all these elections?—I do not think he went about canvassing at all, but he attended meetings, and was a very zealous Conservative.

34,056. Moved so-and-so to take the chair, and all that kind of thing?—Yes; and I think he moved or seconded the nomination of one of the candidates.

34,057. (Mr. Price.) It was stated here by Mrs. Smith that her husband had lately looked at some land at Horsey Slimes, about two or three miles frem Bridgwater, with the view of purchasing it. Now, if what Mrs. Smith says about that is true, he must have had his ordinary judgment about him?—I am only surprised that he should have gone to look at the land.

34058. (Mr. Price.,) We learn something more every day about it?—I am surprised. I was not aware that he had applied. The application did not come to me, although I was the auctioneer for the sale of the property.

34,059. (Mr. Anstey.) Mrs. Smith further says: "I cannot tell you how lately, I am sure, but he was "driving out and got out of the carriage to look at "some land, a field by the side of the road. He "thought of purchasing it, but did not do so. It "might be two, three, or four months ago, or it might "not be so long. I have not borne it in my mind "at all." Then Mr. Coleridge asks, "Is he any worse now than he was then?" The answer is, "No, certainly not." Then later he I asked a question, this question on the same subject: "How far is Horsey Slimes from here?" (A) "I should think a mile, or a mile and a half." (Q) "What road is it upon?" The answer is, "The Burnham Road." All these things, you see, she speaks to positively?—Yes; the piece of land in question I have no doubt is adjoining the turnpike road. It is very possible that a party might drive by it, and might really have a fair opportunity of inspecting the land without going upon it.

34,060. She says he did go upon it?—I beg your pardon.

34,061. There is a distinction, you see. It is very possible that the field has been swallowed up by the river since we began this examination, but that has nothing to do with it. As a matter of fact it has not been swallowed up?—The field is accessible from the road.

34,062. As a matter of fact he did get out of the carriage and inspect it?—It is very possible. I am not aware of the fact.

34,063. (Mr. Price.) Well, that is all, Mr. Lilly, unless you have anything further?—There is one explanation which I should like to make. Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell referred to some treating which he stated that I had done. I think it right to give you the information. He said there had been treating carried on by me at the "Albion" inn on the occasion of a Foresters' meeting. It is perfectly true.

34,064. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you going into any further matter? I wanted to complete this. There is some other matter about a cheque which Mrs. Smith stated she had forwarded to you?—Yes.

34,065. Mrs. Smith stated that, by advice of Mr. Somebody or other, I do not remember who—she did not state this on oath, she stated it after my learned colleague had retired from the room on account of illness—she stated that she had forwarded to you a cheque which she found amongst her husband's papers?—That is the cheque for 206*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.* which I referred to.

34,066. You did not refer to that?—Yes, I did, and you stopped me. I gave you all the details.

34,067. You gave us a lot of details, but not about this specific thing, the cheque for this amount?—I was not aware you were alluding to a cheque at all, given to me by Mrs. Smith.

34,068. Did she forward to you a cheque which she found amongst her husband's papers?—Never. I had the cheque in question from Mr. Bealy Smith. I never had a cheque from Mrs. Smith, and that is the cheque to which I referred with regard to the payment of various bills.

34,069. Well, her statement was not on oath. You can now go on with your statement about the treating?—Mr. Gray had been waited upon by some deputation of the Foresters' Society to ask him to become a member of that order, and on inquiry he found that it was the custom for the candidates, or the members, to identify themselves with these local institutions. Mr. Gray consented to go, and he asked me if I would accompany him. I disliked the idea of becoming a Forester; I had no intention of doing so, but, at his request, I accompanied him, and Mr. Joseph Smith and two or three others were "initiated," I suppose it may be called, at the same time. Mr. Henry Hobbs, whose name has been mentioned in this inquiry, when we were in the room, said that it was customary to drink the health of the new members; and I said, "Well, what is usual and customary, by all means let it "be done on the present occasion." Mr. Westropp was also present on that occasion. Mr. Brice was also there. Mr. Brice had been a Forester before, and Mr. Westropp was a Forester; but Mr. Gray was one of the new members who was then initiated. I said to Mr. Hobbs, "If that is the case, you had better call for glasses round." It was a mixed assemblage, all classes of politics. The discussion of politics is strictly prohibited on all these occasions, and after having conferred with one or two of those newly introduced into the order, we said we would gladly spend about a sovereign apiece, if it was customary for the honorary members to do so on being initiated. Mr. Hobbs then took upon himself to give the order for glasses of grog, and I told him expressly that it was not to exceed the 5*l.*, because there were five members who were initiated. Well, the matter went on, and I think we may have been there perhaps an hour and a half. Some days after this evening to which I have referred, a bill was sent in of about 16*l.* odd. I need not say I was very much astonished, and I use a stronger word, disgusted. at such a bill being sent to me. I sent it to Hobbs, and mentioned the matter to him. He was as much astonished as myself. Some time after this I sent for Mr. Cole, who was the landlord of the hotel, and told him at once how astonished I was at it, that I should never pay it, that it was never ordered, and that whatever Mr. Hobbs had ordered I would see that it should be paid, because those were to contribute who were there present, and I have never paid the account till this day, nor will I ever pay anything beyond the 5*l.* That is the explanation I have to give as to that. There is one other thing I ought to mention to you. I am not quite sure whether I can give you the precise date, but at some considerable time after Mr. Patton's elections Mr. Bealy Smith told me, that as I had given up a very considerable amount of time and trouble in reference to his two elections, that it was wished that I should be made a present, and he gave me a cheque for 60*l.*; 15*l.*, as near as I can recollect, of that amount were for payments which I had made out of pocket in connexion with one or other of the elections. I gave him the accounts. I can scarcely recollect what they were now; so that in point of fact I did receive 45*l.* as a present from Mr. Smith; it must be some 12 months after the election, as I conceive. That is the only money I ever received with regard to any elections in Bridgwater. I thought it right I should inform the Commissioners of that fact. I do not know anything at all beyond that which I think it is necessary to inform the Commissioners of; but if there should be anything in the course of the inquiry which should occur to me I will take an opportunity of stating it to you. I beg to assure the Commissioners that I do not wish to keep back one single fact.

34,070. (Mr. Anstey.) I must say for myself that I am not at all satisfied on the subject of that story of the papers which Mrs. Smith says she handed to you? —I have given you a plain, unvarnished statement. I am sorry you should say you are not satisfied.

34,071. You must settle that with Mrs. Smith?—I am sure Mrs. Smith never gave me a paper.

34,072. I do not say that Mrs. Smith would state anything that was untrue, but she is a person of great wit and energy, and therefore not wanting in understanding or parts?—No.

34,073. Therefore if she is a person of understanding, and a truthful person, we are bound to believe that she has told the truth; then what are we to say to your statement?—What I have stated is perfectly true.

34,074. That is for you to settle with Mrs. Smith. These papers ought to be produced, and whatever may be the odium of pressing a matter of that kind under these circumstances, I think the whole story ought to be inquired into?—I think I shall be borne out by the whole people in Bridgwater that I would not tell a story.

34,075. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is one question I want to ask you, about something that was said in an examination which took place some time ago, and that is, that this money you brought down, this 2,000*l.*, you put in a room on one side of the passage?—I put it in a room on one side of the passage.

34,076. And when the stranger came down, he saw you in the room opposite?—I think he is under a little misapprehension.

34,077. I want to have that cleared up?—Let me give you the exact facts.

34,078. Do so?—There was a little humbug and nonsense in connexion with the transaction; I will tell you precisely how it occurred.

34,079. I do not know how he was to leave the room, and go into a room the other side of the passage, and see the 2,000*l.* parcel, leaving you behind, without his being told previously where he was to go?—He was walking on the opposite side of the street. I certainly should have scarcely known him at the moment——

34,080. Never mind that; go on?—He came to the house. I was expecting him at that particular hour that he came; 12 o'clock I think was the hour. He came across to my house. He came into my breakfast room, if I may so call it, and on the table, so far as my recollection serves me, there was this brown-paper parcel. It was not a bag, but it was a brown paper parcel.

34,081. So we have heard before?—Some conversation took place between us. I have forgotten his mentioning about this property at Highbridge; he may have done so, and then I left the room, and on my return I found that he and the bag had vanished.

34,082. And was it arranged by Mr. Smith with him what he was to do, or how was he to know about it?—That was arranged by him with Mr. Smith.

34,083. I understood him to say that he left you in the room, and he went into a room the other side of the passage, and there found the package?—That is a mistake. It is not exactly true.

34,084. (Mr. Price.) When you had the sale of these effects of Mr. Smith's, what did you sell?—I sold the whole of his furniture.

34,085. His papers and documents?—No.

34,086. Furniture?—Only furniture.

34,087. Writing desks?—There were no writing desks. There were some writing desks which were retained, and some envelope cases, and there were some book cases, and that sort of thing, which were retained. Beyond that, I sold all his furniture. I should like Chapman to be asked about those papers while it is fresh in his memory.

Mr. JOHN HAYWARD sworn.

Mr J. Hayward.

34,088. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A general merchant.

34,089. (Mr Anstey.) At Wellington?—At Wellington.

34,090. Just tell us what you know about this matter. On the polling day, did you see Dr. Kinglake go into a bank?—I did.

34,091. What o'clock was that?—Between one and two.

34,092. You are quite sure of that?—I am quite sure of that.

34,093. (Mr. Price.) What makes you sure about the time?—Because the intelligence had just arrived at the "Clarence" hotel that Mr. Kinglake had left the town by the express train. I was then in company with Mr. Axford the surgeon, and after that intelligence had arrived, we waited until the state of the poll was posted against the columns at the hotel, and the announcement then was something like 143 and about 138.

34,094. (Mr. Anstey.) At 1 o'clock?—About that time.

34,095. But was the state of the poll posted at 1 o'clock?—Yes, just about that time.

34,096. I mean was it the 1 o'clock state of the poll that was posted, that you saw?—I should consider it was, or after that.

34,097. You could read you know. It said what time it was, did it not?—I have no reason to recollect the circumstance.

34,098. You do not understand the question?—I do.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. J. Hayward.

2 Oct. 1869.

34,099. Was the paper you saw posted up, headed "1 o'clock"?—I cannot say.

34,100. (Mr. Price.) Then how do you fix the time?—The only way I fix the time was by this circumstance, that it was reported that Mr. Kinglake had left the town.

34,101. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it nearer to one than two?—It must have been after one.

34,102. But nearer to one than two?—Oh yes, certainly.

34,103. Because it has been sworn here that Mr. Kinglake and his brother went away in a fly to the station, and that one went off by the up train, and the other by the down train?—It could not be so.

34,104. Why could it not be so?—Because I saw Dr. Kinglake subsequently.

34,105. Subsequently to the rumour?—Yes.

34,106. You did not see him subsequently to 1 o'clock?—I saw him about 1 o'clock.

34,107. It is sworn that they went away together in a fly, and that one went away by the up, and the other by the down train?—No; they did not go away together. I do not believe they went away together. It is stated they went in different directions. I was going on to state, that at the time I stayed just after 1 o'clock to see the state of the poll, Mr. Axford and I stood together. He saw the state of the poll. Then it had been reported that Mr. Kinglake had left the town. Mr. Axford took me by the arm, and said, "Hayward, let us walk down Eastover, I want to see a patient there." We walked down towards Eastover, and just as we got to the West of England Bank, which is this side of Mr. Allan's, Dr. Kinglake came out of Mr. Allan's, and walked straight across the road, and I saw the direction in which he was going; and Mr. Axford caught me by the arm, and nudged me, like this (describing), and I said, "Now, Doctor, there is something going on wrong."

34,108. What time was this?—That was between half-past 1 and 2 o'clock. I watched Dr. Kinglake, and drew Mr. Axford's attention to his going into Prior's bank, and I said, "Now mischief will be going on for certain." Mr. Axford and I then walked on. I should say Mr. Axford said, "Who is it? Who is it?" He did not seem to know who Dr. Kinglake was, although they were both medical men, one at Taunton and the other at Bridgwater. Mr. Axford did not seem to know Dr. Kinglake, but I did, from having had business transactions with him; and I told Mr. Axford it was Dr. Kinglake, Mr. Kinglake's brother; and then, its being the circumstance that Mr. Kinglake was reported to have left the town at that time, and that Dr. Kinglake was left behind, the impression on my mind was, that Mr. Kinglake had left the town for his brother to carry on the practices which subsequently took place. That impression was strongly on my mind, and I expressed as much to Mr. Axford.

34,109. (Mr. Anstey.) That impression fixed itself on your mind at that time?—Yes; it did.

34,110. And that makes you speak more positively to the time you referred to?—It did.

34,111. And you have no doubt it was between one and half-past one?—I have not the slightest doubt.

34,112. Is it not possible that this having been done, that Mr. Kinglake may have joined his brother, and proceeded with him to the railway at half-past 1?—I do not think he could have done so.

34,113. You do not think he could have done so?—No; I do not. Judging from the time the trains arrived at the station, I do not think he could have done so.

34,114. Did you see Dr. Kinglake come out of the bank again?—No; I walked on with Mr. Axford to Eastover, and walked up and down in front of the house of the patient where he visited, and I should think I waited half an hour.

34,115. Did you see Dr. Kinglake pass up the road while you were waiting there?—He certainly did not pass up or down the road while I was waiting.

34,116. Nor Mr. Kinglake either?—Nor Mr. Kinglake either.

34,117. (Mr. Price.) What time would that bring you up to?—Pretty nearly 2 o'clock.

34,118. (Mr. Coleridge.) If he walked up from the bank to the station, it might be, that he would not pass you where you were?—No; it was not the ordinary way to the station. Mr. Axford and I returned to the hotel again, and by the time I got back the majority was beginning to turn, and, from that time, down to the close of the poll, the minority very rapidly dwindled away until it was converted into a majority.

34,119. (Mr. Anstey.) Living at Wellington, I suppose you have had ample means of being acquainted with Dr. Kinglake's face and appearance?—I know his face well.

34,120. You have no hesitation in saying who it was?—I have not the slightest hesitation to say who it was, because I have seen him over and over again, and I am quite positive in saying it was Dr. Kinglake.

34,121. What Mr. Axford is that?—Mr. Richard Axford.

34,122. Is he the elder or the younger?—The elder.

34,123. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the latest period you can fix for having seen Dr. Kinglake in Bridgwater?—From 1 to half-past 1.

34,124. Can you fix it more certain than that?—No.

34,125. (Mr. Anstey.) He was going by the down train at 1.40?—Yes. I must tell you, I believe Mr. Kinglake must have gone by the down train too.

34,126. Why do you believe that?—For this very reason, that when I left Bridgwater to return to Wellington in the evening, I reached Taunton station, and there were one or two other passengers besides myself in the train, and they got out at the station, and two gentlemen got into the train. One of those gentlemen asked me if I had heard what was taking place at the Bridgwater election, what was going on; the election at Taunton had terminated just before, and they told me Mr. Cox was returned for Taunton, and I told them, to their astonishment, that Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake were returned for Bridgwater. I told them that it was reported that Mr. Kinglake, before the closing of the poll, had left Bridgwater by the express to go up to London. One of them said, that could not possibly be, because he said, "I had the pleasure of shaking hands with him "in Taunton at Paterson's hotel, at 5 o'clock this "afternoon;" I said, that could not possibly be true. I said "You must be mistaken, because it is reported "in Bridgwater that Mr. Kinglake left Bridgwater "and took an express ticket for London." This gentleman said, "I am quite certain that could not be true." He said "I know them both; I know Dr. "Kinglake and Mr. Kinglake the late member for "Bridgwater, and I am quite certain I am not "mistaken." The other gentleman said—they were both strangers to me—he said, "This gentleman is "perfectly right, because I saw Mr. Kinglake there "also." Now I knew neither of them at the time. I have since heard the name of one of them.

34,127. What is his name?—Mr. Rossiter. He is a working jeweller.

34,128. Does he live in Brigwater?—No; he is now residing in Henniock, near Wellington. I knew neither of those gentlemen at that time. But there is a remarkable circumstance in connexion with my discovery of him.

34,129. Which was the one who said he had met Mr. Kinglake?—It is the stranger I know nothing of.

34,130. The other confirmed his statement?—Yes; the other confirmed his statement. I mentioned this circumstance subsequently on hearing that there was going to be a petition preesented against the return of the members, that is, Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake. I mentioned it on a subsequent journey of mine to Bridgwater, to Mr. Trevor, and Mr. Trevor doubted the story altogether, and desired me to discover who those gentlemen were, and I promised him to do so. I had no means of finding out who those gentlemen were for a long time, but on a certain market day, about two or three months subsequently at Wellington; it is my custom to go into the market there, and on returning home from the market, to my astonishment and surprise one of these two gentlemen, this Mr. Rossiter, happened to be at my house, visiting a gentleman who was staying with me; in fact, he was sitting down at my table drinking tea, and he recognized me at once, and said "How d'ye do Mr. Hayward," and I said "You have "certainly the advantage of me; I don't know who "you are, and I have no knowledge of you." He said "Don't you remember meeting me in the train after the Bridgwater election?" I said, "Oh, yes I do; you were one of the gentlemen in the train," and he at once admitted he was; and I at once drew his attention to the facts I have related to you, and he afterwards affirmed the statement.

34,131. This after the trial of the petition was over?—No; this was some time afterwards, I can hardly say when the petition trial did take place. I have no connexion with Bridgwater now, and I have no reason to remember it.

34,132. When was this last conversation with Rossiter at your house?—I think it was somewhere about the month of January.

34,133. Before the trial?—I think it was.

34,134. You say it was impossible for Mr. Kinglake to have gone away if he was at Taunton at 5 o'clock the same afternoon?—Exactly.

34,135. Supposing he had gone down the line, and Dr. Kinglake to have gone with him, was there not time for Mr. Kinglake to go to Taunton, and to have come back to the station to meet the up train?—I do not think there was sufficient time.

34,136. Not even for that?—No.

34,137. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not even for that, when the train, as it is well known, is always late upon this line?—Mr. Kinglake would not calculate upon the train being late.

34,138. How long would it take to walk from Sealy's bank to the station? Not more than five minutes, would it?—A man must walk very fast to walk from Sealy's bank to the railway station in five minutes.

34,139. (Mr. Anstey.) However, there was ample time for Dr. Kinglake to walk to the station and catch the train?—That would depend on the time he was engaged at the bank.

34,140. Is Mr. Rossiter at Henniock now?—That is the last place where I heard of him.

34,141. Are you sure he gave you a correct address?—He has not given me the address at all. I have seen him at the house of another party two or three times since, and I knew from his coming backwards and forwards to my house that he was residing at Henniock. He is a working jeweller.

34,142. Did you mention this to Mr. Slocombe?—No.

34,143. You must have mentioned this to Mr. Slocombe?—Never. I have no recollection of mentioning it to Mr. Slocombe.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Slocombe here?

Mr. Slocombe answered in the affirmative, and said, "I do not know that I ever heard it from Mr. "Hayward."

(The witness.) I know Mr. Slocombe, but I have no memory of having mentioned it to Mr. Slocombe.

RICHARD SLOCOMBE sworn.

R. Slocombe.

34,144. (Mr. Price.) You are a cabinet maker and upholsterer?—Yes.

34,145. You were mentioned yesterday with reference to this story about Dr. Kinglake being seen in the town after his brother was supposed to have left. What do you know about it?—I can say I recollect seeing him in the bank, it was about 1 o'clock. I was exactly opposite. I was by Mr. Graham's.

34,146. (Mr. Anstey.) Exactly opposite the bank?—Exactly opposite the bank when he went in. I had not been to dinner. He did not stay in the bank very long, about two or three minutes. I stayed there till he came out and went down the street, and I went in to dinner, and after dinner I saw Dr. Kinglake with Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Sealy, and two or three others by the "Globe." I saw Dr. Kinglake after he came out of the bank, and Mr. Sealy, and Mr. Lovibond, and I think Mr. Paul Reed was there, and I do not know whether there was another or two, but they seemed to be holding a conversation together just at the entrance to the "Globe."

34,147. What makes you think it was 1 o'clock?—It must have been 1 o'clock, because our people went to dinner when I went in.

34,148. You had come home to dinner I understand?—Yes.

34,149. What time do you generally come home to dinner?—I was out of the town then, and I generally came home to dinner. I was out of the town, and had just come home to dinner. It must have been 1 o'clock.

34,150. You were just going home to dinner?—Yes, and it was, as near as possible, 1 o'clock, I believe.

34,151. You could not have come home to dinner some hours before dinner was ready?—No.

34,152. (Mr. Price.) Are you sure it was not just before 12?—No; I am certain it was as near 1 o'clock as it can be. I am certain it was as near 1 o'clock as it was possible to be.

34,153. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you seen Dr. Kinglake about in the town before that?—No, I do not think I had.

34,154. Did you see him after that?—Yes.

34,155. Where?—Outside the "Globe."

34,156. What time?—I did not wait there very long. I was very anxious to see how things were going on.

34,157. How long after that did you see him outside the "Globe"?—I should think it was a full quarter of an hour after that.

34,158. After you had seen him come from the bank?—Yes.

34,159. So that that would give him plenty of time to go to the station?—That I do not remember.

34,160. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you been out on business that morning?—No; only to see how the election was going on, that is all.

34,161. Might you not have come in that morning considerably before your dinner hour?—I was in and out of the house a good many times. I was in the central committee room.

34,162. Wait a moment, I want to fix your attention to this. Are you quite sure it was not one of those times that you went in and out?—I am quite sure of that.

34,163. You are sure of that?—Yes; because I said when I came into the house, that Dr. Kinglake had gone up the street, and I said, "I shan't stay very "long, because I want to go down and see the move-"ments"; and when I went down to the "Globe," they were all outside, Dr. Kinglake, and Mr. Sealey, and Mr. Lovibond, and Paul Reed, and, I think, two or three more. They were close by the "Globe."

34,164. What do you mean by "the movements"?—Well, I know very well we were in a considerable majority, the Conservatives, just about that time.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

R. Slocombe.

2 Oct. 1869.

(John Hayward.) The time would be fixed exactly, if you could get the time that the state of the poll was issued, when the state of the poll was 143, and 138. That would give the time exactly.

(Mr. Anstey.) That is, with regard to your evidence?

(John Hayward.) Yes. It could be ascertained exactly, by finding out the time when the state of the poll was issued.

34,165. (Mr. Anstey, addressing the witness Slocombe.) You say, after seeing this, you went out to look at their movements?—Yes.

34,166. Do you mean, that knowing your party were in a majority, you went out to see what was doing on the other side?—Yes.

34,167. And was it in consequence of your having seen Dr. Kinglake go in and out of the bank, that you had your suspicions?—I know perfectly well—

34,168. Will you answer my question? Was it in consequence of seeing him go in and out of the bank, that you had some suspicions as to their movements?—Yes, I had.

34,169. You went out, and saw them talking together outside the "Globe"?—Yes; and about half an hour after that I saw their runners running about in all directions.

34,170. Who do you mean were running about in all directions?—The people who look after the voters.

34,171. You mean the inferior agents?—Yes.

34,172. Did you lose sight of Dr. Kinglake after you saw him with these persons outside the "Globe"?—I never saw him after that day.

34,173. No, on that day, after the time that you saw him talking with the persons in front of the "Globe," what became of him?—Oh, I do not know.

34,174. Did you see where he went?—No, I did not. I did not stay very long there.

34,175. Did you go back to your dinner?—Oh, I had my dinner before that.

34,176. You are quite sure of that?—Oh yes. I was not very long in the house to dinner.

34,177. Do I understand that this is the order of events: you went home to your dinner?—Yes.

34,178. Whilst you were at your dinner, or about to commence it, you had seen this suspicious circumstance, that induced you then to finish your dinner hastily?—Yes.

34,179. You went out?—Yes, I did.

34,180. Therefore, you are quite sure it must have been by that time, past 1 o'clock?—Oh, I should say so.

34,181. Or you would not have had your dinner?—I should say so.

Mr. J. Hayward.

Mr. JOHN HAYWARD recalled.

34,182. (Mr. Anstey.) When you stated that you read this paper, the state of the poll, I did not know you were stating positively the numbers. Are you quite positive as to the numbers?—Yes, I believe I am.

34,183. Tell us what the numbers were, that will fix the hour?—I believe when Mr. Axford and I left the "Clarence" a paper was stuck up announcing a majority of 143 for Westropp, and Gray 138; that is my impression.

34,184. You mean the numbers who voted or the actual majority?—No, the majority; and if you can ascertain the exact time when that state of the poll was announced then you could get at the time exactly.

34,185. Yes, that is about that number?—No, I think that is the exact number. My impression is very strong.

34,186. That is the exact number you saw, it may not be exactly the number though?—No, but that would fix the time when that state of the poll was announced. Excuse me for saying it must have been 243 and 238. I think so.

S. Chapman.

SAMUEL CHAPMAN recalled.

34,187. (Mr. Price.) What are those books which you have here?—Smith and Son's ledger, and their last cash book not entered up.

34,188. Do you know anything about these papers said to have been handed over to Mr. Lilly?—Yes.

34,189. What were those papers?—When Mr. Bealy Smith decided on leaving the firm he requested me to look up every paper I could find relating to elections and petitions, everything relating to those matters, and take them down to Binford House. I did so.

34,190. Did you find any briefs there?—I believe they were briefs of the petition of 1866.

34,191. When did you take them there?—I should think that was the end of 1867 or the beginning of 1868; I should think it was.

34,192. (Mr. Anstey.) Mrs. Smith has said that there were some briefs and other things still in her possession after the election of 1868, and just before the trial of the petition, and she says she asked someone what she should do with them—her husband, I think—and the advice she got was to keep them until after the petition was tried, that is the petition tried before Mr. Justice Blackburn, and as soon as the trial was over she says she used them for her household purposes, lighting fires, and so on, purposes for which I should have thought briefs were very little applicable to. However, that is her statement?—I do not know what became of them, but I took them down altogether to Mr. Smith's.

34,193. Do you know of any being handed over to Mr. Lilly?—No; I remember some bills being handed to Mr. Lilly, and Mr. Smith paid them, because he requested me to assist Mr. Lilley in paying them. Those are the only ones I remember Mr. Lilly ever having.

34,194. When were these papers burnt?—I do not know.

34,195. Or the intention to burn them made known?—I do not know.

34,196. When did you first hear that they had been made away with?—When Mrs. Smith first gave evidence.

34,197. Not till then?—No; or Mr. Boyle, that was the first intimation.

34,198. My information then was much more timely than yours, for I was certainly told that by our secretary, as soon as we began to sit, that there was a rumour in the town of their having being burnt?—I never heard of it.

34,199. Was Mrs. Smith in the habit of going to the office?—Yes, frequently.

34,200. And sitting in the office?—No, she came and chatted on business.

34,201. Did she write there?—No, I am not aware of it.

34,202. Did she examine papers?—Yes, when her husband was ill; and after Mr. Bealy Smith's illness she came down to look over the old papers with the present Mr. Boyle's father, the London agent for the firm, to look after the state of the business, because both the principals of the firm were ill.

34,203. She is not at all incompetent, I suppose, to transact that sort of business?—No; very competent.

33,204. She is rather strong-minded?—Yes.

34,205. Not at all nervous as has been described?—No, I should think not.

34,206. Did you ever see her carry away any paper?—No; the whole of those election papers were filed, those papers relating to registrations and petitions for years, and the whole of those I took myself to Mr. Smith's house at Mr. Bealy Smith's request.

34,207. Not Mr. Richard Smith's?—No, Mr. Bealy Smith's.

34,208. Did he give a reason for your removing them there?—No, I believe he had told Mr. Boyle before our office was to be a private one, and the papers had better be taken away; we had nothing then to do with election business.

34,209. That is to say, in Mr. Boyle's hands, it was to cease to be connected with elections?—Yes.

34,210. Then these papers were taken away?—Yes.

34,211. Did you ever see them again?—No, never.

34,212. Did you ever hear her say anything about them?—I asked just before this Commission opened, when your secretary inquired where they were, and she said she did not know where they were. Mr. Bealy Smith had taken away some, and they were only useless things left with her. I suppose those she destroyed.

34,213. Did she tell you then she had destroyed them?—No.

34,214. She made no such statement?—No.

34,215. Therefore she did not tell you what I have just informed you of, that by advice she kept them until after Mr. Justice Blackburn had tried the election petition, and then used them all in household purposes?—No, she never told me anything of the kind.

34,216. Do you mean to say that you never heard she so said or pretended until the other day when she came here?—I never had the least idea where the papers were, or what she pretended about them.

34,217. When you read it in the paper, that is the first time you heard that she pretended any such thing?—Yes.

34,218. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything in those books you wish to point out to us?—Your secretary, Mr. Purcell, wished to see Mr. Westropp's account with Mr. Richard Smith; that book shows the account between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Smith during 1859.

34,219. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know any other person in the office or elsewhere to whom this Mrs. Smith made the same account of the papers she gave to you?—No.

34,220-1. Do you know who could tell us which story is true, the story she told us or the story she told you; do you know any person who can give us any light upon that?—No, I do not.

34,222. (Mr. Coleridge.) This is only as to the nursing of the borough, this account?—That is all.

34,223. Have you no book that shows the larger sums paid by Mr. Westropp?—Not in Mr. Richard Smith's time. I have in Mr. Smith's time since that.

34,224. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the name of the servant in her house at the time the papers were carried there?—Mary Goldsworthy.

34,225. Where is she now?—At Binford House.

34,226. (Mr. Coleridge.) In this place?—Yes.

34,227. (Mr. Anstey.) Who lives there now besides Mary Goldsworthy?—I think her sister.

34,228. (Mr. Price.) Does Mr. Else live with them altogether?—No, he resides in the town.

34,229. What town?—Bridgwater.

34,230. But at Teignmouth?—He may be staying near; he is a very great friend of Mr. Smith's.

34,231. Who do you say are now at Binford House?—The servants, Mary Goldsworthy——

34,232. And who else?—Only the servants.

34,233. Who else?—The sister.

34,234. Mrs. Smith's sister?—No, there are two sisters who are servants.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is just possible they may be there at this moment in specie.

34,235. (Mr. Price.) I do not think we need trouble you any longer?—There are certain payments to Mr. Lilly and Mr. Joseph Smith, through Mr. Bealy Smith's illness they were never entered up. (Handing the ledger.)

34,236. (Mr. Coleridge.) I see there is one item, "Stuckey & Co. R. B. S. & Malcolm," and entered against Mr. Patton in 1866; can you explain that?—No, I should think it was some money paid in the names of Major Malcolm and Mr. Smith to cover election expenses. He was down here.

34,237. "To Stuckey, creditor to R. B. S. & "Malcolm, 501*l.* Fee for election, 105*l.*; expenses "accruing during the election, 30*l.*; fee for the "election again, 105*l.*; extra journies, 50*l.*" That is Mr. Patton for his two elections?—Yes.

34,238. About 800*l.* altogether?—Yes. It has been mentioned that I paid 15*l.* to a man of the name of Hook. I took the proof of Roberts' father-in-law at his house at the 1865 election, and after I had taken the proof, and I had submitted it to counsel and considered it was important, Hook gave me notice that his father-in-law could not be found until a certain sum of money was found, and I had to pay Hook on account of Roberts' 15*l.* before I could subpœna him.

34,239. Here is a remarkable item, "To Markham "Spofforth, Esq., 6, Victoria Street, Westminster, "618*l.*"?—I think you will find that the expense of the petition.

34,240. Ruddock 105*l.*, what for?—He assisted Mr. Bealy Smith at the petition.

Mr. Arthur George Pain sworn.

Mr. A. G. Pain

34,241. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A solicitor and notary of this borough.

34,242. Practising on your own account?—I am.

34,243. How long have you been in practice?—About five years.

34,244. Who were you articled to, or clerk to?—My father.

34,245. Who was in business here before, was he?—Yes.

34,246. As a solicitor?—He was.

34,247. Can you tell us anything about the last election?—Yes.

34,248. You acted at the last election?—Yes.

34,249. Previous to the last election?—No.

34,250. At the last election?—Yes, but very little.

34,251. Were you one of the legal agents?—Yes.

34,252. Did you have a retainer?—I took part in the last election.

34,253. Were you retained as legal agent?—No, I have not received any money.

34,254. What part did you take?—I canvassed at the last election.

34,255. Is that all?—And I was overlooker at one of the booths in Salmon Lane.

34,256. (Mr. Anstey.) You accompanied Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray in their canvass?—I did.

34,257. Did you also canvass for them when they were not there?—Well, I do not think I did. I think I may have pressed people for their votes, but not any one in particular.

34,258. (Mr. Anstey.) It seems an extraordinary thing in Bridgwater that it is not considered canvassing unless the candidate is present?—I do not remember.

34,259. (Mr. Price.) Did you at any time have a discussion with men about money, whether you were canvassing with the candidate or not?—There may have been something passed about money.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. A. G. Pain.

2 Oct. 1869.

34,260. What did pass ?—I considered as a matter of course if they were prepared with money at the last election they would have won the election.

34,261. Did you give any money ?—I had no authority to that effect; they ought to have been prepared with money, and we could have won the election.

34,262. (Mr. Anstey.) Why do not you attend to the Chief Commissioner's question, which was, Did you give any money ?—Excuse me; I did not give any money.

34,263. (Mr. Price.) Did you give any voters whom you canvassed to understand that there would be money going or not ?—They asked as usual, "We shall see something else another day," and I daresay I may have said off hand, "No doubt there will be money," but I did not say positively there would be.

34,264. (Mr. Anstey.) When you say you might have said so, you are a gentleman of recollection, what do you mean ?—I cannot carry my recollection back to say the words I said. I might have said so.

34,265. Did you ?—I will not be positive. I do not know what I did say ; you cannot fix me.

34,266. (Mr. Price.) Have you any doubt you did ?—I have no doubt. I cannot say.

34,267. (Mr. Coleridge.) The probability is that you did tell these people generally on your canvass ?—No doubt we did the best we could.

34,268. (Mr. Anstey.) You can say whether you think you did ?—You put words into my mouth ; I cannot tell you what I did.

34,269. I do not; therefore please to answer the questions I put to you. I am taking the words you used yourself which are that you might have said ?—Undoubtedly, I might have said, "All right," or something of that kind.

34,270. Are we to understand by your saying that that you think you did say so ?—Yes, if you like.

(Mr. Anstey.) There is nothing to laugh at.

34,271. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a vote yourself ?—I had.

34,272. What did you get for this canvassing ?—I was promised 50*l.*, but I did not receive it.

34,273. Who were you promised by ?—It was promised to me at Mr. Trevor's office.

34,274. For canvassing and your vote ?—No, not for my vote.

34,275. Retainer ?—I have not received it at all.

34,276. Not received anything ; how is that ?—I asked the other day about it, I believe it has been swallowed up by the petition.

34,277. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote ?—I did.

34,278. I think you expected to have been paid. You had no business to vote ?—I know the Act of Parliament, and should not have voted, but as all the other professional gentlemen voted, I believe I voted.

34,279. But do not you know that the others came to an agreement that as their votes were of very great value they agreed to give up their retainer ?—I did not. I do not know anything of that happened, I heard it in this court.

34,280. (Mr. Coleridge.) Should you have voted if you had known it entailed the giving up of your retainer ?—No, I should have had a present, the same as at a previous election.

34,281. But the Act had not passed at a previous election ?—No.

34,282. Is that all the part you took ?—I was there at the meeting, dined with Mr. Westropp, and was repeatedly on the canvass, and was overlooking at the booth in Salmon Lane.

34,283. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Westropp present on any of those occasions when you told the voters, "All right, there will be money by-and-by" ?—Will you ask that again ?

34,284. When you told the voters, "All right, no doubt there will be money by and by," on any of those occasions was Mr. Westropp present ?—He might have been.

34,285. I ask whether you think he was ?—Yes, I think he was then. I might have ; he might not have heard it because we were coming out of the house.

34,286. (Mr. Price.) Have you any doubt that those voters you saw the last time were left by you under the impression they would have money ?—Not from me. They did not expect me. I did not promise money.

34,287. Not out of your pocket of course ?—No.

34,288. But they did expect ?—No doubt.

34,289. Attend to the question. You canvassed you say, and you were a legally retained agent, I want to know whether you having used those expressions which you say you might have used, and believe you did, have you any doubt that you left the men you canvassed under the impression that there would be money for their votes ?—No.

34,290. No doubt you did ?—I do not consider I did leave them, because they expected to see someone on a future day, they said when canvassing they should see someone on the nomination night, that was it.

34,291. You were a retained agent ?—I do not know that.

34,292. (Mr. Anstey.) You were along with Mr. Westropp and his friends ?—I was.

34,293. You know the absurd notion in the borough that is necessary to constitute a good canvasser that he should go with the candidate ?—I could not come to that conclusion.

34,294. Why you yourself have been quibbling ?—I told you I was canvassing.

34,295. I must warn you, and you must take care how you answer the questions ?—You asked me about canvassing and I told you.

34,296. I asked you if you canvassed by yourself, and you said you had not ?—People asked; I never did canvass by myself.

34,297. Then that is a quibble ?—Very well.

34,298. You asked people for their votes, that is canvassing as everyone knows ?

34,299. (Mr. Price.) What do you mean by the word "canvass" ?—Those persons who accompany the candidate.

34,300. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought so, a miserable quibble of which you ought to be ashamed ?—Ashamed ?

34,301. (Mr. Price.) Half the canvass is done in the absence of the candidate in large towns ?—Oh no, the candidate is present generally.

34,303. (Mr. Price.) A good many persons of course go round with the candidate, but not all ?—I thought there might be money, I did not say there would be. I went to London about it, and was sorry there was no money, because I was in London in search of a candidate at one time, and Mr. Westropp wished my cousin to bear the whole brunt.

34,304. Who entrusted you to go to London to look for a candidate ?—I do not know who entrusted me, but I was in London, and happened to have a cousin who wanted to contest a borough.

34,305. (Mr. Anstey.) How many days were you walking by Mr. Westropp's side canvassing ?—I think I was with him a good proportion of the canvass.

34,306. How many days ?—I forget.

34,307. How many days, a good proportion of the time he was here ?—Yes.

34,308. It began on the 6th of October, and ended when ?—Only a few days before the election I think.

34,309. Was Mr. Westropp very well satisfied by the accession he got, when he got you?—I do not know, I never asked him; you must ask Mr. Westropp yourself. He never complained of me.

34,310. He never found fault with you?—No, I do not think he did.

34,311. He never told you that you ought not to tell people that it would be all right?—I do not say that I did say it was all right. You must ask Mr. Westropp what opinion he has of me.

34,312. I shall ask you whether he blamed you for giving them to understand it would be all right?—You must know yourself when you contest boroughs——

34,313. Answer my question. I ask you again if you were ever blamed by your principal, Mr. Westropp?—I am not aware that I have been.

34,314. (Mr. Price.) For any part you took?—I have not, except there was speaking rather warmly at the "Clarence," saying that money ought to have been spent. I might have got a person who would, only he did not like to bear the whole brunt of the battle with Mr. Westropp, whose popularity was great. No doubt Mr. Westropp was very much liked in the borough.

34,315. (Mr. Anstey.) Who said that?—I told him after the last defeat at the "Clarence."

34,316. After the election?—Yes.

34,317. Were you ever found fault with at the election day by Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray for having used language such as you have described to the effect that it would be all right, that undoubtedly there would be money by-and-by?—No.

34,318. Did they ever blame you for it?—Perhaps they may not have heard it.

34,319. Did they ever blame you?—I have said that three times.

(Mr. Anstey.) You have gone on paltering with the questions in a manner disgraceful to you as a professional man.

34,320. (Mr. Price.) How long have you been in the profession?—I was articled in 1859.

34,321. How old are you now?—I am 25.

34,322. Is that all you had to do with the last election? Had you anything to do with the election before?—Yes; I was there at the first election with Mr. Westropp, when he stood alone, and I was there when Westropp and Patton came down with Mr. Pitman a good deal.

34,323. Were you entrusted to do anything?—I was canvassing then, and about with Mr. Pitman.

34,324. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were you paid?—I got 25*l.*

34,325. Each time?—I got it when Mr. Westropp sent it in an envelope after the election.

34,326. (Mr. Price.) Were you a good deal about with Mr. Pitman?—I was.

34,327. Did he say anything to the people about money?—He did not; he did not go about to canvass.

34,328. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Major Malcolm go about?—I do not remember him at all.

34,329. (Mr. Price.) You were expressing your disgust that more money was not spent the last time?—Yes, it was that the party did not.

34,330. You expressed that to Mr. Westropp?—Yes, I did.

34,331. You thought if you had had your cousin down here you would have had a better time?—Yes, we should not have had this Commission.

Mr. William Lewis sworn. Mr. W. Lewis.

34,332. (Mr. Price.) Were you a clerk formerly to the late Mr. Bate?—I was.

34,333. And are now traveller for a brewer?—I am.

34,334. What is the information you have to give us about the part Mr. Bate took in the elections?—I know nothing of it at all. I had nothing to do with any election whilst in the office.

34,335. Had you anything to do with any of these elections? When were you subpœnaed as a witness? I believe it was the 23d August. I do not know for certain.

34,336. Did you make any statement to the secretary?—No, I did not do such a thing.

34,337. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you vote at the last election?—I had none.

34,338. Did you ever vote?—No.

34,339. Have you ever done anything in the way of paying money to other people?—No, all I had to do at the last election was, I attended several Conservative meetings then.

34,340. Did you hear that last intellectual gentleman make his speech about money?—Mr. Pain?

34,341. Yes?—No.

34,342. I should like to hear something of the speech?—No, I attended one meeting.

34,343. (Mr. Price.) What part did you take in the election?—I was check clerk; at least I had the management of the rooms at Eastover, or the Eastover division—the other side of the bridge.

34,344. What meetings did you attend?—Most of the Conservative meetings.

34,345. Did you attend a meeting at which Mr. Joseph Richard Smith was present?—Yes.

34,346. Did you hear his expressions there?—Yes.

34,347. Tell us what you heard him say?—He came in rather late at the meeting. It was at the "Lamb." Mr. Robert Ford was the chairman of the meeting at the time, and Mr. Ford wanted to vacate the chair for Mr. Smith, and Mr. Smith refused to take it, and was called on to speak. I remember distinctly as to the M.D. which you are referring to.

34,348. Yes, that is just it. Give us your version?—Well, Mr. Smith after speaking a time told the parties there that they were to be careful to stick together and not turn traitors to their party, but if any were overcome at all they were to mind the American adage, M.D., referring to if any of them turned over to the Liberal party. He distinctly said, "Remember the American adage, M.D," and "of course," he says, "you know what that means," and some one in the room said "Yes, money down."

34,349. Did he say there is sure to be bribery, and always has been?—No, he said this referring to a large placard that was shown by the Liberals offering 100*l.* reward. I ought to have stated that first, that caused the word; and he said if any dirty work was done it would have been done by the Tories, and told them not to turn traitors to their party, as I told you before.

34,350. Did you understand him therefore to be referring to their going over from their own side not to be deluded with promises?—Just so.

34,351. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear him say anything about sugaring the plums well?—Not a word.

34,352. (Mr. Price.) Were you there all the time he was speaking?—Yes; from the first before he came into the room.

34,353. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you go there with anybody?—Not that I am aware of.

34,354. A man of the name of Bale?—I never saw him.

34,355. Or Nicholls?—I never saw them there.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. W. Lewis.

2 Oct. 1869.

34,356. You were going to say you were at one meeting at the beginning of your evidence?—I was at one meeting; this is the meeting. I must also state that I attended another meeting, where there was some money spent or drink ordered. There was no money. It has not been paid for since.

34,357. Where?—At the "Compass," on the Wembdon Road.

34,358. Was that one of the Conservative houses?—Yes.

34,359. Who was the landlord of the "Compass"?—James Ford kept it then.

34,360. Was this the last election?—It was.

34,361. And how many were drinking there?—I should think from 30 to 40 there.

34,362. Drinking together?—Yes.

34,363. And none of that was paid for?—It has not been paid for yet.

34,364. Who ordered it?—Mr. Hodges asked me if I would order it being a non-voter.

34,365. You ordered it for Mr. Hodges?—I did not order it for him, but I ordered it for the Conservative Working Men's Association.

34,366. You gave the order in Mr. Hodges' name for that?—No, it was put down in my name.

34,367. You gave the order?—I did.

34,368. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you been sued in the county court for it?—No, in fact the claim has not been sent in to me.

34,369. Are you going to pay it?—Of course I consider that the Conservative Working Men's Association ought.

34,370. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it wine or beer, or what?—Beer.

34,371. How much was drunk?—I cannot tell you, I never inquired.

34,372. How long were they drinking?—During the meeting; perhaps the meeting lasted an hour or more.

34,373. They were drinking the whole time?—With the exception of those who were speaking.

34,374. There was only one speaking at a time?—No, regular speechifying.

34,375. But a good many drinking at a time?—Yes. Then on another occasion at the "Lamb," Mr. Smith made a speech there for certain. I was there and of course I understood. The late Mr. Burroughs told me that he would not make any charge for the room, but should like something to be spent. I said, "Well, I "will do what I can for you, Robert," meaning the landlord, and I saw young Mr. Smith, and told him, "Well, "we must do something. You know here is Burroughs; "he lends us the room, and we have got the gas and "fire when we want it, and there is the cleaning of "the room, and I think we ought to do something for "him;" and he says, "Oh, I know nothing at all about "it, and I spoke to him again about it," and he says, "There is Mr. Heard there," referring to the chemist, "he has more to do with the conversation than I." Mr. Heard would not notice it then, but said, "You "may do as you like." Well, eventually the meeting broke up, and I said, "Well, Mr. Smith," or words to that effect, "You are not going to leave like this?" He said he did not know what to do, and eventually he asked me what I thought was reasonable to spend. I said, "Well, I do not know."

34,376. What did he tell you?—I could go to the extent of a pound.

34,377. (Mr. Price.) Did you go to a pound?—I do not know; it has not been paid.

34,378. (Mr. Anstey.) You are asked whether you did go to the extent of a pound?—I do not know; I have no doubt I did.

34,379. (Mr. Price.) Who intended to pay for all this?—The Working Men's Association.

34,380. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or the Conservative member?—Well, it may be the member. I may say this—there are funds of the association. I should think it would come out of that. I do not know whether the Conservative member.

34,381. (Mr. Price.) That seems absurd, because you are asked to treat the men. It would not be out of their own pocket?—But it is not likely I should.

34,382. You are asked what it could reasonably come out of, and you say now the working men's own pockets?—Yes, you must understand Mr. Smith was of course connected with the association, and I thought through Mr. Smith who at the time, I believe, was honorary secretary, or something like that.

34,383. Was he to treat them then?—Yes, of course I understood so.

Adjourned to Monday next at 12 o'clock.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Monday, 4th October 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

DE TRACY GOULD, Esq., Acting Secretary.

Mr. GABRIEL STONE POOLE recalled.

34,384. (Mr. Price.) I think it right that I should read this letter, which I have received from Bristol, in your presence, that you might have an opportunity of explaining the matter. This is a letter, dated 1st October 1869, signed by George Thomas and Christopher J. Thomas. "Bristol, 1st October 1869. Sir, As "Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the committee of "the Hon. F. H. F. Berkeley and Sir Morton Peto "at the election in 1865, we must ask you, in justice "to Sir Morton Peto and the city of Bristol, to "permit us to correct the evidence reported to have "been given before you on Thursday, the 23d ultimo, "by Mr. Gabriel Poole, of Bridgwater, Solicitor. "Mr. Poole, referring to Bristol, is reported to have "sworn that 'in Sir Morton Peto's balance sheet it "'was stated that he had spent 15,000*l.* there.' We "enclose an office copy extract from the balance "sheet in question, from which it appears that his "expenditure at this, the only election in which he "stood at Bristol, was returned by himself, on oath, "at 5,049*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.* In asking your public correction "of this grave mis-statement, we cannot but express "our surprise that (assuming the newspaper report to "be correct) a professional man of Mr. Poole's "standing and position should have ventured on oath "to make so unfounded an allegation. We are, Sir, "your faithful servants, George Thomas, Christopher "J. Thomas." And I find that the enclosure referred to is "In the Court of Bankruptcy, London. Balance "sheet of Sir Morton Peto, Bart. From 31st De-"cember 1863 to 3d July 1867. By expenditure, "election expenses, 5,049*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*"?—I do not think that the Commissioners misunderstood me, or supposed that I had any personal knowledge of Sir Morton Peto's balance sheet. I had seen the statement in the public papers that 15,000*l.* was entered in his balance sheet, and I had never seen a contradiction of it till in the paper this morning, therefore I assumed it to be a fact; but I used it in illustration of an argument that I was advancing, that small towns were picked out for inquiry and large ones were omitted.

34,385. Therefore the object of these gentlemen will be attained by the production of the balance sheet?—I had only seen it in the public papers, and not contradicted.

Mr. THOMAS ROGERS sworn.

34,386. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Rogers, what are you?—I am a hotel-keeper.

34,387. Where?—At Weston-super-Mare.

34,388. How long have you been there?—Near 30 years.

34,389. You have been subpœnaed to produce your books—visitors books, or any books, about the date of June and July 1866, with the names of the persons staying at your house. Do you remember at that time two ladies; we want their names?—I have no recollection of it.

34,390. Have you the books?—I have the books.

34,391. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you give the date?—I can give the date of Mr. Patton being there, but not of any ladies.

34,392. (Mr. Price.) Did they come in the name of Patton?—This gentleman did, but I have no recollection of it.

34,393. Is not it your custom to take down the names of visitors when they arrive, when they are coming to stay?—No, we book them with numbers, and frequently do not get their names. I do not remember even Mr. Patton.

34,394. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember the two ladies coming in the month of July to your hotel?—No, I do not. I have no recollection.

34,395. Do you recollect the election first of all? You recollect the election, I presume, at which Mr. Patton was elected?—No, I have no recollection of it.

34,396. Do you mean to say you do not recollect Mr. Patton being elected here for Bridgwater in June 1866?—Well, I have forgotten it.

34,397. Well, Mr. Rogers, do you really mean to swear that you have forgotten that fact, that there was an election in Bridgwater in June 1866, and that Mr. Patton, the person who you say was staying in your house, was elected at that election; do you swear you forget that?—I do, indeed.

34,398. (Mr. Coleridge.) But if we give you the exact date of the day that these ladies were staying in your house would you not be enabled then to tell us whether there were any two ladies occupying one sitting-room?—I could not do so.

34,399. You do not take down your visitors' names?—No.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Mr. T. Rogers.

4 Oct. 1869.

34,400. (Mr. Anstey.) But you had taken down Mr. Patton's name?—Yes; Mr. Patton's name was taken down.

34,401. And you do recollect that he was staying in your house?—No, I do not.

34,402. You do not recollect it?—No.

34,403. You mentioned Mr. Patton's name yourself?—The name is on the book, or I should not have known it.

34,404. How came Mr. Patton's name instead of his number to appear on your book when you say it is not the custom to put down names?—You will see by that book that is there that some of the names are put down, and some have the numbers.

34,406. (Mr. Coleridge.) Just let me look at the 1866 book, will you?—There is no record.

34,405. Just turn to the date of July 10th 1866?—I have it.

34,407. Well, now just let me have a look at it. (An account book was handed in.) Have you got a strangers' book?—No.

34,408. Not a book in which people put down their names and addresses?—Oh yes.

34,409. That is the book I want to look at?—(The book was produced and handed in.)

34,410. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you say Mr. Patton's name was in this book (referring to the arrival book)?—In this book (referring to the account book.)

34,411. Oh, not in this one?—Not in the "arrival."

34,412. It seems that Mr. Patton is down here for three rooms, No. 9, and Nos. 46 and 47?— No.a sitting-room and the other two are bedrooms.

34,413. Who occupied those two bedrooms?—I have not the slightest idea.

34,414. This is June 5th, 1866. Which of those rooms is a sitting-room?—No. 9.

34,415. And the two others?—Are bedrooms.

34,416. What are their numbers?—I do not know. I think 49 and 47.

34,417. Well now, I find here No. 49 put down as a sitting-room, "No. 49, sitting-room, July 2d." How is that?—I would not be positive about it.

34,418. There is no name given, but "No. 49, sitting-room, July 2d."—Are there no bedrooms with it; are there any other numbers with it?

34,419. No other number. For four days; you see that cannot be a bedroom?—It cannot be a bedroom.

34,420. Consequently, if 9 is a sitting-room, Mr. Patton had two sitting-rooms?—Yes, that looks very like it. 49 is a sitting-room, I recollect. It is a sitting-room, I know.

34,421. And 50 is a sitting-room also?—50 is a sitting-room. The one is opposite the other.

34,422. What is 51?—51 is a bedroom.

34,422 a. Now were there not two ladies in 50 and 51 in the first and second weeks in July 1866?—I am sure I cannot say.

34,423. Well, now do you know that there was any person in your hotel at any time in the year 1866 as to whom you learnt or understood it was desirable that their names should not be mentioned?—No.

34,424. You have not been cautioned?—No.

34,425. (Mr. Anstey.) Very well, that is all I have to ask you.

Mr. J. Murlis.

JOHN MURLIS sworn.

34,426. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now, Mr. Murlis, what are you?—A farmer.

34,427. Where do you live?—At Hodcombe in Somersetshire.

34,428. Near Yeovil?—Yes.

34,429. Where did you live at the election of 1852?—In Bridgwater.

34,430. What were you then?—An innkeeper.

34,431. What was the name of your inn?—The "Albion Hotel."

34,432. Well, now, yours was a very Conservative house, was not it?—Yes.

34,433. And you voted Conservative on that occasion?—Yes, I did.

34,434. Whom did you vote for?—Padwick and Westropp.

34,435. No, no; 1852?—Oh, 1852; I beg your pardon.

34,436. When Lord Henley stood, you know. You voted for Follett, probably; Follett and who else? Did you vote for Lord Henley?—No; Follett, Mansell, Tynte, Henley, and Kinglake were candidates, I think.

34,437. Yes?—I voted for Follett and Mansell.

34,438. Was that your first election?—Yes.

34,439. Did you distribute any money on that occasion?—No, I did not.

34,440. Who was managing the election on behalf of the Conservative party; who were the professional men?—Mr. Smith, I recollect.

34,441. Yes. Well, had you any communication with a Mr. Smith as to what you were to allow in the way of treating in your house?—No, I had no communication with him.

34,442. Whom had you communication with?—Well, there was an elder Mr. Smith.

34,443. Older than Richard Smith?—Yes; his name was Richard Smith; he was a pawnbroker.

34,444. Is he dead?—Yes.

34,445. There was treating at your house on that occasion?—Yes.

34,446. What amount did your bill run to?—17*l.* or 18*l.*, I suppose.

34,447. Whom did you send it in to?—Richard Smith, senior.

34,448. He was acting for the Conservatives, and he paid it?—Yes.

34,449. Did you distribute any money on that occasion?—I did not.

34,450. Did you receive any money yourself for your vote?—I did not.

34,450*a*. In 1857, whom did you vote for then?—A plumper for Mr. Follett I think you will find.

34,451. Was there plenty of treating at your house again, then?—Yes, there was.

34,452. Who gave you instructions to allow that?—Mr. Smith, the solicitor—Mr. Richard Smith.

34,453. The one who is said to be ill?—Yes.

34,454. Did he tell you to what extent you were to go?—No; no limit.

34,455. What was your bill?—17*l.* or 18*l.*, or perhaps 20*l.*

34,456. Did Mr. Smith pay that?—Yes.

34,457. Did you spend any money on that occasion?—No.

34,458. Did you promise any?—No.

34,459. Did you receive any money in bribery otherwise than that which you received for your bill?—No.

34,460. Was the 20*l.* you received the fair value of the liquor drunk, or was it election prices?—Oh no, it was a fair bill.

34,461. How long did the treating go on?—I should think a fortnight, quite.

34,462. Before the election?—Yes.

34,463. Anybody came in and drank as they liked?—Yes.

34,464. Did they come in by themselves, or were they brought in by the sub-agents?—They came in of their own accord.

34,465. Anybody who liked to come in?—Not anybody.

34,466. That is what I want to know?—How did you distinguish between those who might drink free, and those who were to pay?—I knew them pretty well.

34,467–8. You knew they were people who would be bribed by drink, in fact?—Well, they would have something,

34,469. There would be a substratum of bribery formed by the drink, and then the money was to come on the top of that?—No, it was not supposed to be so.

34,470. Were these people who came in there and were treated people who really voted in consequence of the drink they got, or did they come there because they expected money would be going?—Not on that occasion, they did not expect that money would be going, but they would come in and drink.

34,471. That was to keep the party together?—Yes.

34,472. I suppose on the polling day they drank a good deal?—No doubt about it.

34,473. Did many go drunk to the poll from your house?—I should say not.

34,474. They got drunk after they came back?—I cannot say that.

34,475. As soon as the polling was over you stopped the drink?—I stopped the drink.

34,476. They could not get anything free then?—No.

34,477. In 1859 do you recollect Mr. Westropp coming down here?—Yes, I do.

34,478. When did he come? How long before the election?—I should think it must be a month quite.

34,479. He canvassed about, I believe?—Yes.

34,480. And he became very popular amongst the people?—Yes, he was.

34,481. How long after he came here did you know that money would be spent?—Oh, not until after Mr. Padwick arrived.

34,482. How long after Mr. Westropp did Mr. Padwick come down?—Really, I cannot tax my memory.

34,483. Was it about a week or two?—Perhaps ten days.

34,484–6. Was Mr. Padwick's] reputation—not so great then perhaps as it is now—pretty well known at the time?—He was known as a racing attorney. I think he went by the name of Howard.

34,487. After Mr. Padwick came down did you have any conversation with anyone about Mr. Padwick taking the first place before Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

34,488. Who told you that?—Mr. Westropp came first, and as a matter of course I took it for granted that Mr. Westropp would stand first, and that it would be "Westropp and Padwick;" but I found that cards had been issued, and indeed it was made generally known, and I assumed that there was a change in things, and it turned out that it was "Padwick and Westropp." Padwick stood first.

34,489. When you found that was the state of things did you go and ask Mr. Richard Smith the reason for that?—Yes, I did.

34,490. What did he say?—I said, "I am surprised "this morning to hear that it is Padwick and West-"ropp; why has Padwick the superiority? Why is "he named first?"

34,491. What did he say?—Mr. Smith said, "Well "you know those who pay the piper will have the "first chance."

34,492. What did he tell you that Mr. Padwick was going to spend?—I did not hear then.

34,493. Did he tell you that Mr. Padwick was to find the money?—Yes.

34,494. And that money was to be going?—Yes.

34,495. What did he say about how the money was to be spent; what did he say you were to do in the matter?—Then Mr. Smith said——

34,496. First of all, how long before the election was this conversation?—I suppose it must be over a fortnight.

34,497. A fortnight before the election?—Yes.

34,498. Where was it; at his own office?—At his own office.

34,499. Was anybody else present?—No.

34,500. Tell us exactly what passed in that conversation?—Mr. Smith said, "Murlis, I want you to "take the arrangement of this election."

34,501. As to spending money I suppose?—Yes. I said, "I do not care about that. In the first place, "let me ask you who is to check me;" and he said, "Oh, there will be no occasion." I said, "There "will be an occasion for it. If I have anything to "do with this matter I shall be checked, for I know "Bridgwater too well." If you tell a Bridgwater man he has been bribed he will fight.

34,502. Do you mean they are so ashamed of it?—No, but they will take care they will not tell of their bribes.

34,503. That is the first we have heard of any reticence with regard to bribery. He asked you to take the money arrangements of the election?—Yes.

34,504. Had he had any conversation with you before this which would make him come to you?—No.

34,505. Had anybody?—No.

34,506. What made him think that you were a likely man to put yourself in this danger?—I have always been active in electioneering matters.

34,507. This was your first chance?—Yes, if it is to be called a chance.

34,508. Did you ask him to put some one to check, and that there should be a regular debtor and creditor account kept to prevent any imputations being put upon you afterwards?—Yes.

34,509. What conversation took place as to when the money should begin to be spent?—Mr. Smith suggested that he thought that we might as well begin. I think this was a fortnight quite before the election. He said "We may as well be going gently on."

34,510. Begin gently spending money amongst those whom you could trust?—Yes, amongst those we could trust.

34,511. Was that his suggestion or yours?—I think that was his suggestion; I am not quite positive about that.

34,512. At the time this conversation took place how much money of your own had you in your house in cash?—It turned out to be 325*l*.

34,513. Of your money?—Yes.

34,514. Did he ask you to go on with that for the good of the cause?—Yes.

34,515. Did you do so?—I did.

34,516. Did you take any I O U?—No.

34,517. Any promissory note?—No.

34,518. Any bond?—No.

34,519. You mean you trusted entirely to Mr. Smith to repay?—Yes.

34,520. Being perfectly well aware at the time that it was money that could not be recoverable at law?—I did not think much about that; I should have advanced it if it had been three times as much.

34,521. From your trusting Mr. Smith?—Yes.

34,522. After you had told him what you had got did he tell you what to do with it?—Yes.

34,523. What was it?—He said we were to commence with the men that we could make sure of.

34,524. What were you to pay them?—10*l.* each.

34,525. Well how long did that 325*l.* last?—About two evenings I think.

34,526. Then it was all gone?—Yes.

34,527. Then you spent it on 30 men or 32 men?—32 men I suppose.

34,528. Can you give me the names of any of those, slowly, with the christian names, because we want them for the purpose of the schedule?—I do not know that I can; I can give you some names. I have found a list that was prepared by a young friend who dropped in to assist me.

34,529. At that election?—At that election.

34,530. Well then just give them?—It is a very tattered list, but you shall have it as it is.

34,531. Read the names out for the shorthand writer to take of those men who had 10*l.* in 1859?—These had 10*l.* in 1859:—E. J. Lane, Laurence Dare, John Rogers, George Jarman, Edward Jarman, William Hughes, William Dyment, William Board, John Virgin, James Bryant, James Sanders, John Lear, Charles Lear, Thomas Herbert, Joseph Lorker, James Temblett, F. C. Temblett, W. Bell, Henry Bridges, Charles Fudge, John Humber, John Ellis, Frederick Jarman, Henry Sendell, John Bryant, Captain Squires, James Pearse, James Davey, Joseph Stoodley, James Gilchrist, James Murliss——

34,533. Is that Robert Chapman Bussell?—I do not know. The list says "Robert Bussell, jun."

34,534. What did he have?—I do not know. Here is his name, I see. I do not know whether it is the market gardener or not.—George Gwyther, Isaac Squibbs, Matthew Lintle, Captain Smart, William Hensley——

(William Hensley.) You are a liar!

(Mr. Coleridge.) Policeman, bring that man here.

[William Hensley was taken into custody and brought before the Court.]

(Mr. Price to Hensley.) For your contempt of Court, your gross and uncalled for contempt of Court, in calling out in the middle of a witness's examination that he was telling a lie, you are committed to gaol for the space of 24 hours.

(William Hensley.) Thank you, sir.

(Mr. Price.) An opportunity will be given to every man of coming forward to deny a statement on oath, but if persons are to jump up in the body of the Court because their names are mentioned, instead of offering themselves as witnesses, they disturb the proceedings of the Court; therefore you stand committed for twenty-four hours to the gaol of this borough. [William Hensley was removed in custody.]

(The witness.) Will you allow me to say I have the name of the person who paid him?

34,535. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, who?—Mr. Waddon. I think his son is in court. He will bear testimony that he was paid.

34,536. Well, go on.—Joseph Reeves, John Sutton, John Cooze, John Thomas, William Bussell, John Grunham, Edward Walford, Jeffery Denman, Abraham Exon, Captain James Sharman, John Sharman, George Dunn, James Hayward, John Rich, William Webb, William Gilbert. There is one with a query to it.

34,537. A doubtful one?—Yes.

34,538. What is the name?—Francis Manchip.

34,539. (Mr. Price.) How many do you make altogether?—I have more names: there are two or three that I wish to make a remark upon by-and-by. Christopher Browning, Isaac Trapnell, Moses Squibbs, William Dyment, John Grawley, John Ekers, Thomas Vearncombe, Andrew Haste, E. Meacock, E. Jones, W. Bailey, John Fackrell, senior, John Smith. There is a query against James Williams; James Sully, George Fryer, Joseph Cooze, Henry Maidment, John Crocker of Crowpill, John Richards, another John Richards, William Baker, William Hellard, Joseph Goslin, John Lanford, William John——

34,540–1. Did you pay all these men yourself, or did you employ sub-agents to distribute the money?—Sub-agents, in a great measure.

34,542. Who were your sub-agents?—Charles Lear paid three men, I think.

34,543. Go on. Tell us who else paid for you?—Robert Pople paid for me.

34,544. How many did he pay?—Well, a great many more than I have against him. He was constantly with me.

34,545. About how many did you intrust him with?—Three or four I see here.

34,546. Who else?—John Giles Davis.

34,547. Who is he? Is he alive?—Yes.

34,548. We have not heard of him before?—Two men.

34,549. He paid two?—Yes.

34,550. Who else?—Frederick Jarmin.

34,551. How many did Frederick Jarmin pay?—Five, I think.

34,552. Who else?—William Pimm.

34,553. Who is he?—I see he paid one man.

34,554. Who is William Pimm?—That is the "Golden Lion" man.

34,555. And did you pay all the rest yourself?—No, there is a lot more.

34,556. Let us know them? We want to know them all?—Mr. Leaker.

34,557. What Mr. Leaker?—At the "Clarence."

34,558. How many did he pay?—One.

34,459. He did not tell us about that?—Robert Ford.

34,560. How many did he pay?—Two. Two captains, Captain John Sharman, and Captain James Sherman—Edward Denner, Thomas Walkham, John Batten, Joseph Pitman.

34,561. How many did he pay?—Four or five; he returned me some of the money.—James Bussell, senior—he paid Henry Maidment. John Bryant, Eastover, grocer.

34,562. How many did he pay?—Two.

34,563. James Bussell, junior, paid one, I see?—

34,564. That is about as much as you would trust him with?—Just so.—John Waddon.

34,365. How many did he pay?—Two. Smart and Hensley, the man who spoke just now. I see William Herbert's name down for one man, but his heart failed him, and he returned the money.

34,566. There are some names on the other side of this (referring to a list). They have nothing to do with these lists. I began to write before I turned down this paper, and they will require some explanation. I had them marked as queries, and so on, which I should be glad to explain.

34,567. Then keep them for the present. Those sub-agents whom you employed, what were they to get for themselves for what they did?—As a rule, nothing.—Mr. Frederick Jarman——

34,568. Mr. James Bussell did not do anything for nothing I should think?—Well, he was employed in Mr. Smith's office at that time.

34,569. Whom of them did you pay? You say, as a rule, nothing, but whom of them did you pay?—I paid Frederick Jarman.

34,570. What did he get?—Well, he had 15*l.* altogether.

34,571. For himself?—Yes.

34,572. Who else?—Edward Denner. I did not agree to pay him anything, but he was paid for his vote.

34,573. What did he get?—10*l.*

34,574. What I want to know is, which of these men got something for themselves as well as for giving away. I mean those who got paid for their vote and who paid money to other people were paid both ways no doubt?—Yes, only on one occasion.

34,575. Who was that?—Frederick Jarman.

34,576. What did he get for his vote?—10*l.* and 5*l.*; 15*l.* altogether.

34,577. 10*l.* for his vote and 5*l.* for what he did?—Yes.

34,578. How many does that make altogether bribed by your agents in 1859?—I have some more agents.

34,579. In 1859,—we are still in 1859?—Yes. In 1859, I must tell you that in making up my account to give to Mr. Smith I handed in all the papers and everything,—vouchers, receipts, and so on; but I found this list which is in the writing of Mr. Pople.

34,580. Is he alive?—Yes, he has been before you. Then for my own satisfaction—if anything ever arose from it—I had a poll-bill and ticked this poll-bill off, and I have unfortunately lost it, but I can recognize some of the names.

34,581. Give us the rest of the names?—John Buttle——

34,582. Is that the gentleman who is going to be tried for perjury?—Yes.—Thomas Bond, Frederick Chambers, Edward Denner, Robert Denner, George Batten, William Foxwell, Samuel Hurford, William Jarman, Henry Haywood, James Long, John Mogridge, William Pimm, William Sellar, Henry Trump, Edward Lawrence, Charles White, Thomas Walkham, James Lewis.

34,583. Have you come to an end now?—That is all I can vouch for. I have other names, but I am not certain about them.

34,584. Now, as a matter of curiosity, including the people you employed as sub-agents, will you tell us how many you distributed money amongst on that occasion, including the sub-agents?—I think that is 121 names.

34,585. Are those all you bribed on that occasion?—No.

34,586. Then how many are there besides that you can recollect?—18 or 19.

34,587. And about 140 altogether?—About 140 or 150, about 140 I should think.

34,588. And how long did it take you to do all that work?—Oh, it kept me busy for some time.

34,589. I mean was that all done on the polling day?—No, it began——

34,590. Some fortnight before?—Yes, some fortnight before.

34,591. Was it all finished by the polling day?—Yes.

34,592. Was it all finished by the nomination day?—It was all finished by the nomination day, by the afternoon.

34,593. We have got as far as 300*l.* of your own which are spent in this way?—Yes.

34,594. Now tell us the modus operandi in paying these people. Did they come to your house?—They came one after the other.

34,592. They were not sent for?—No.

34,596. They came and asked if anything was going?—Yes. I had got some persons who assisted me, and who came and said, "There is so and so in "the bar," and I said, "Tell them to come to me."

34,597. Did you give them the money?—Yes.

34,598. And they knew it was you who gave it to them?—Yes.

34,599. It was done quite openly?—Yes.

34,600. Who assisted you?—Robert Pople was one. He assisted me.

34,601. And who else?—William Henry Batten was in and out.

34,602. After your 300*l.* was gone, did you go to Stuckey's Bank to get some money?—Yes.

34,603. Who told you to go?—Mr. Smith suggested that Stuckey's Banking Company would make an advance to me.

34,604. Who was the manager at that time?—Mr. John Woodland.

34,605. Who is it at present? Mr. Salmon?—Yes.

34,606. (Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Pople in court?—No, he is not. He is in Exeter.

34,607. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get an advance of 500*l.*?—Yes.

34,608. How did you get it? Did you draw a cheque for it?—No.

34,609. Had you a banking account there?—No; I had closed my banking account for some time previously.

34,610. You went to Mr. Woodland and asked him to let you have 500*l.*?—Yes.

34,611. What on? What was your security?—On my I O U.

34,612. Do you mean the manager of Stuckey's Banking Company let you have 500*l.* on your own I O U?—He did.

34,613. With no sort of security whatever?—No.

34,614. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Mr. Salmon on that occasion?—No.

34,615. Who did you see?—Mr. Woodland.

34,616. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Mr. Woodland alive?—(A Voice.) Yes.

34,617. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where is he?—(The Voice.) At Minehead.

34,618. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he know what this was for?—He seemed to know.

34,619. Did you go to the bank for it?—No, I went to his house after the bank was closed.

34,620. What day was it; how long before the election?—[The Witness referred to some papers.]

34,621. I do not care about the exact day, but was three or four days before the election?—Yes.

34,622. You went after banking hours?—Yes.

34,623. What did you say to him, because it is rather material to know what he said on that occasion?—I went to Mr. John Woodland, and said "I want you to oblige me with the loan of 500*l.* for "a few days." He hesitated a few minutes, and he said "Well, I suppose so."

34,624. Which way did Mr. Woodland vote?—He voted for Kinglake and Westropp, I suppose.

34,625. (Mr. Anstey.) There are no liberals in the bank?—Not that I am aware of.

34,626. Mr. Kinglake, who was formerly a partner, is not of their politics?—No, not that I am aware.

34,627. (Mr Coleridge.) What did Mr. Woodland say; he supposed it must be so?—He supposed it must be so.

34,628. What did he do; did he go with you to the bank?—No, he invited me to sit down while he went, and as Mr. Woodland was leaving the house, I said, "Let it be gold. I want it in that way, please."

34,629. And he brought it back to you in gold?—Yes.

34,630. In a bag?—Yes.

34,631. And he let you have it on your I O U?—Yes.

34,632. Had you ever got 500*l.* before with such facility?—No.

34,633. Nor ever since?—No.

34,634. And have you ever known any bank which would advance 500*l.* to you on your I O U, without having any further security?—No.

34,635. And he knew what it was for?—He seemed to know.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Mr. J. Murlis.

4 Oct. 1869.

34,636. You have no doubt that he knew what it was for, have you? You go to him after banking hours and ask him for 500*l.* on your I O U; have you any doubt that he knew what it was for?—I have no doubt.

34,637. (Mr. Anstey.) You have frequently seen Mr. Salmon with regard to political matters?—Yes.

34,638. You were a very active man and he was a very active man in politics?—I should not call him a very active man in politics.

34,639. Well, a strong man; a strong Conservative?—He does not interfere very much in politics.

34,640. Have you ever spoken to him about this?—I do not recollect ever having spoken to him.

34,641. Do you know that he is perfectly aware of it?—Well, he may be; but I do not recollect mentioning it to him. I may have mentioned it to him.

34,642. What was he in the bank at the time? What connexion had he in the bank at the time you got this money from Mr. Woodland?—I think he was cashier.

34,643. And he is now manager, is not he?—Yes.

34,644. Did you hear him examined the other day about money?—No, I did not.

34,645. About exclusive dealing?—No, I did not hear him.

34,646. Then you do not know, from what you have heard in court or otherwise, that he expressed great indignation at the irregular conduct of Captain Ford, or rather, not Captain Ford but Mr. Prior's conduct, in advancing money to another candidate, and said that could not happen in their bank; do you remember that?—No, I do not.

34,647. This did happen in his house or at his bank?—Not in his bank.

34,648. The money was at the bank. If the depositors and shareholders lose their money, it does not matter whether they lose it at Mr. Woodland's private house or in the bank parlour?—He might have had the bill of me if it had not been forthcoming.

34,649. You gave him an I O U?—Yes.

34,650. Was that a valuable security in such a case?—Well, it was a pretty good security I think, Sir.

34,651. Are you quite sure that you have never had any conversation since with Mr. Salmon about it?—I do not recollect any.

34,652. You may have had?—I may have had, but I do not recollect.

34,653. Why did you go there?—It was a suggestion thrown out by Mr. Smith.

34,654. Did he seem to know you were coming—as if Mr. Smith had spoken to him about it?—There was not much hesitation about it; he seemed to have been primed about it.

34,655. Do you think he would have let you have the money if Mr. Smith had not spoken to him before about it?—I think he would.

34,656. At election times, I mean?—Yes, I think he would.

34,657. (Mr Anstey.) Are you aware that Mr. Salmon has not only expressed indignation at the conduct of the people at the West of England Bank, but has stated positively as a matter of fact that nothing of the sort ever took place in his bank?—I should think he was speaking the truth, and may not have known anything of this.

34,658. Do you mean to suggest that as to this 500*l.* there was a false entry, or, which is the same thing, a deliberate omission of a truthful entry in Mr. Woodland's case, as in Mr. Prior's case in Sealey's bank?—I do not mean to say that; Mr. Woodland let me have the money as a loan to me for a few days.

34,659. Have you the least doubt that Mr. Salmon knew of it then himself?—I am sure Mr. Salmon did not know of it then.

34,660. Or afterwards?—I think not.

34,661. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was a cashier?—Yes, it was quite unknown that to Mr. Salmon.

34,662. (Mr. Anstey.) Would you have gone there with an I O U in your hand for any other purpose than the purpose of obtaining money for bribery?—No, I should not.

34,663. And if you had gone at the time when no election was in prospect do you think that Mr. Woodland, or anybody else in Stuckey's bank, would have advanced you money on your I O U?—I expect they would have wanted security.

34,664. (Mr. Price.) You were no customer of the bank?—I had been.

34,665. But not to any extent?—Yes, I had.

34,666. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had closed your account?—I had.

34,667. (Mr. Price.) You were not in that position at the time with regard to the bank to entitle you to ask them to advance you a 500*l.* loan on an I O U?—No, I was not at the time.

34,668. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was anything said about interest?—No, it was only a loan for two or three days.

34,669. How long did that money last you?—I think that lasted on until two days before the election.

34,670. Did you repay that 500*l.* yourself?—No.

34,671. Who did?—Mr. Smith.

34,672. Two days before the election you told Mr. Smith the thing was dry, and you wanted more money, did not you?—Yes.

34,673. And what did he tell you to expect?—He said you will have a parcel in all probability to-day or to-morrow.

34,674. And did you receive a parcel?—Yes.

34,675. What was it labelled?—It was labelled "Mr. Murlis, Albion Hotel, Bridgwater," and it was headed "Samples, glass, with care."

34,676. "Samples, glass, with care, this side up"?—This side up.

34,677. And when you opened this delicate sample of glass what did you find in it?—1,000*l.*

34,678. In gold?—Yes.

34,679. And then you sat to work with that again I suppose?—We sat to work paying our debts.

34,680. What do you call debts, promises?—No, paying me, and paying Mr. Woodland the 500*l.*

34,681. Paying you the 325*l.*?—Yes.

34,682. That only left 175*l.* to go on with?—That is all.

34,683. Did you spend that also?—Yes.

34,684. After you had spent that did you get another 500*l.*?—Yes, the next day.

34,685. How did that come?—It was brought to me by a porter-like looking man, and it had a ticket on it similar to the other.

34,686. "Sample, glass, with care, this side up"?—Yes.

34,687. Did you pay that away also?—Yes.

34,688. Mr. Smith I believe told you to keep 325*l.* out of the 1,000*l.* yourself?—To take 325*l.* for myself, and 500*l.* to pay Woodland back.

34,689. When you repaid Mr. Woodland the 500*l.* did you ask him for the I O U?—When I paid the money I asked him for the I O U back, but he could not find it. The next day I saw him, and I asked him if he had had it, and he said no.

34,690. And you never got it?—No.

34,691. You have never been sued by the bank upon it?—No.

34,692. You paid this away. How much did you pay away altogether?—I paid away altogether, less a few pounds which I will account to you for presently, 1,500*l.* in all. That is the money I had.

34,693. What did you have for yourself?—Nothing.

34,694. Nothing at all?—No, not on that occasion; no money.

34,695. Nothing but your bill?—Yes, I had my bill of course.

34,696. You say no money, what did you have if you did not have any money?—I had a present.

34,697. A present of what?—A time piece.

34,698. Who was that from; Mr. Padwick?—That was from Mr. Smith.

34,699. You paid away all this money before the election, and made up your accounts with Mr. Smith, did not you?— I did not make up my accounts before the election.

34,700. After the election you did?—After the election I did.

34,701. How do you account for it that, with the expenditure of all this money, Padwick and Westropp did not get in?—In the first place it was a dreadful wet day, very wet indeed; and the second reason I apply to is this, that Mr. Padwick became rather unpopular.

34,702. (Mr. Price.) Why should a wet day prevent Mr. Padwick's voters going any more than the voters on the other side?—It always does; they are a different class of men, the Conservatives.

34,703. (Mr Coleridge.) They possess a more delicate constitution?—Yes.

34,704. (Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps you mean the Liberal voters are more wet than the Conservatives?—It may be so.

34,705. (Mr. Coleridge.) After the election you made up your accounts with Mr. Smith?—Yes.

34,706. And you paid no money yourself?—No.

Thomas Rogers recalled.

Mr. T. Rogers.

34,707. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Rogers, we find we made a mistake in telling you to bring the books for 1866. The period which we want you to refer to is a short time before the election. It seems then that two ladies were at your hotel at Weston-super-Mare, a short time before the election of 1865, and not in 1866 at all.

(Mr. Anstey.) That election took place on the 18th of July 1865 I think?—I am doubtful whether I shall be able to show it on these books.

34,708. (Mr. Coleridge.) We want the strangers book of 1865.

(Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps that shows it.

34,709. (Mr. Price.) It is our fault. Perhaps you will be good enough to telegraph to Weston-super-Mare for your book, and wait here for it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) If you have not got it here, you could telegraph for it to Weston-super-Mare, and wait till it comes?—No, I think there would be some difficulty in getting at it, unless I went for it myself.

34,710. (Mr. Coleridge.) You could bring it to-morrow?—I have got 1865; they are all right here. What do you require?

34,711. (Mr. Coleridge.) Take it from 1st July to the 25th.

34,712. (Mr. Anstey.) While you are looking for it, you may as well tell me now whether you recollect two ladies coming to your hotel at any time in the month of July 1865?—No sir, I do not. My hotel is nearly full now, and I do not know half of the parties by name now. I have July first.

34,713. (Mr. Price.) It seems by the report as if Mr. Tromp had taken a room there. He says "I "went to Weston-super-Mare and took lodgings. "On a Sunday morning by appointment I met two "ladies at the hotel."

(Mr. Anstey.) I will first of all ask Mr. Harden a question.

Mr. Frederick Harden recalled.

Mr. F. Harden.

34,713*a*. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you recollect how many days before the election in July it was Mr. Tromp came here and placed himself in communication with you at the time he was lodging at Thomas Harden's?—It was on the Sunday previous to the 12th July, when the election took place.

34,714. That would be the same Sunday no doubt?—(Mr. Price.) That would be previous to the 12th.

34,715. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you recollect the day of the week that the polling day was?—Sunday was the 9th.

Mr. Thomas Rogers recalled.

Mr. T. Rogers.

34,716. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you look in your book for the 7th, 8th, and 9th of July? that will save you some trouble?—On the 9th, I see here four fees booked by the number 18, no name.

34,717. How many persons?—Four. Four dinners, four teas. 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th. Would you like to look at it?

34,718. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will you turn to the same date in the visitors book?—

(Mr. Price.) You have a visitors book at your hotel, I suppose, as there is at every hotel in all watering places?—Yes.

34,719. In which persons who stop at your hotel write their names, and let all the world know what a fashionable place Weston is?—You will find what you want, no doubt, in Dare's list published in the papers at the time.

34,720. Would not that list give it?—Yes, in both papers.

34,721. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would there not be a possibility of getting a paper filed on that date?—There is here not so far back as 1865. There is 1866 here.

34,722. Perhaps you will send us up your visitors book for 1865 to-morrow?—I do not think there is one. This is the first one I have.

34,723. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you got the lists filed?—Of the papers?

34,724. Yes.—No, but you can get them from the office.

34,725. (Mr. Price.) The "Gazette"?—Yes, the "Gazette" and the "Western Mercury."

34,726. They would not necessarily show the names; they might or might not?—They may or may not.

34,727. They would be furnished to your hotel?—Yes.

34,728. By the man who goes round?—Yes, he sends it in every Friday with all the names; we furnish all the names we know.

34,729. And if there are persons who do not wish to have their names known, you do not give them?—No.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Mr. T. Rogers.

4 Oct. 1869.

34,730. Do you ask the persons who come to your hotel for their names for the purpose of returning them?—Sometimes. We furnish them if we can. We get them if possible.

34,731. (Mr. Anstey.) Does Mr. Westropp's name appear in that book of 1865?—No; only No. 18.

34,732. Mr. Patton's name appears in 1866?—Yes.

34,733. Does Mr. Westropp's name appear in 1865?—No, I do not see it. I will go on a little further.

34,734. That same date?—Yes, I quite understand, the 15th and 17th; now I have got it.

34,735. Have you got it there?—No.

34,736. Do you remember Mr. Westropp being at the hotel?—Not at all.

34,737. (Mr. Price.) There is no reason on earth why you should not give us the information. I hope there is no impression on your mind that we think that you are implicated with the transactions that have occurred in this borough?—Not the slightest. I will give you every information I can.

34,738. Look at your books when you go home, and if there is any information you can give us I hope you will give it us?—Yes.

34,739. We may rely upon your doing so?—Yes.

34,740. You are not mixed up with the local politics of this place?—I will look through the papers and endeavour to find it for you. I do not know whether the editors will allow me to search.

34,741. Just see the editors, and communicate to us the result of your interview with them?—I will.

Mr. John Murlis recalled.

Mr. J. Murlis.

34,742. (Mr. Coleridge.) Over and above the wet weather was there any other thing that militated against Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp?—Yes, I should think so.

34,743. What was that?—There was a great display at the nomination; and there was a painted placard produced, I think, representing that Mr. Padwick was the hangman of Palmer; a most disgraceful affair.

34,744. Yes, we have seen that. I want to know why should that have affected Mr. Westropp?—It would not; but my meaning was, as I told you just now, that Mr. Padwick was given the preference, so that if we could not get them to vote for both we might get them to vote at last for Mr. Padwick and Mr. Tynte, so we kept them for Mr. Padwick. We kept them back for Mr. Padwick in that way. I suppose they would find it lucrative to vote for Mr. Padwick and Mr. Tynte.

34,745. Are you aware that Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Tynte were spending money on that occasion?—I knew the party was.

34,746. Were they paying more than you were?—They were paying wholesale. They were paying South Wales District Bank 10*l.* notes.

34,747. If you were only paying 10*l.* and they were only paying 10*l.* they could not get your men away by that, could they?—Yes; on account of the wet day there was no one out.

34,748. How many of the 140 people whom you bribed voted against you?—I have no recollection at all.

34,749. Have you any recollection that a good many did?—Yes, a good many did.

34,750. Then they must have been bribed by the other side as well?—No doubt about it.

34,751. Have you told us all you know about the election of 1859?—Yes.

34,752. There was a petition, you know that?—Yes.

34,753. Were you up on the petition?—Yes.

34,754. Were you examined?—No, the petition was withdrawn.

34,755. Was there any money paid after the petition, to you or anybody?—No.

34,756. I mean were there any further sums for outstanding bills for treating and colours, and all that?—There were outstanding bills.

34,757. Well, who paid those?—Mr. Smith; Mr. Smith paid those. I had 60*l.* left I paid to Mr. Smith.

34,758. And I suppose 60*l.* did not cover all the treating bills?—I paid a great deal of those.

34,759. What money did you pay it out of?—Out of the 1,500*l.* I had.

34,760. What did you pay in treating as apart from bribery?—Do you mean the bills at inns, &c.?

34,761. Yes.—I should think the bills at inns would amount to 100*l.*

34,762. And you took that out of the general fund, out of the 1,500*l.*?—Yes, out of the general fund.

34,763. (Mr. Anstey.) You say the petition was withdrawn; do you recollect any money being paid for the withdrawal of that petition?—I understood there was.

34,764. Who paid it, and for what, or for whom?—I was written to by Mr. Williams of Bath, and this is his letter: "6, Victoria Street, Westminster Abbey, "S.W., 30th July 1859. Dear sir, Please come up "the first thing Monday morning, and see me here; "this is special. Yours truly, J. Williams." That was to give him what information I could.

34,765. (Mr. Price.) Who is Mr. Williams of Bath?—That is Mr. Padwick's solicitor I apprehend.

34,766. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you go up?—Yes.

34,767. (Mr. Anstey.) What happened?—I must tell you that soon after the election Mr. Williams' clerk came to me here and represented himself to be a Mr. Barry, Mr. Williams' clerk. He had been asking me questions about the election. I was not very willing to answer the questions, but I went to Mr. Smith and said "There is a lawyer's clerk down here who has "called on me and asked me a lot of questions about "the election, but I gave him evasive answers; he is "Mr. Williams' clerk." He said "Well, I think "Mr. Williams of Bath is Mr. Padwick's solicitor." When I returned and had interviews with him afterwards I found his object was to get information for the petition, and then I gave him what information I could upon it.

34,768. (Mr. Coleridge.) You thought at first it was a plant?—I thought it was a plant.

34,769. (Mr. Anstey.) You gave him what information you could upon it?—Yes.

34,770. My question was what you knew or understood about the money having been paid for the withdrawal of it?—Yes. Then I must tell you I went to London in answer to this letter, and in a postscript he says "You will there see Mr. Barry, "who is very busy, but who will supply the infor-"mation you require." He had got all the information I could give him. Then he went to London to prepare for me as to what information he could give me as to getting up witnesses and so on. While I was there the chairman of the committee was appointed.

34,771. That is to say the committee of chairmen met?—In the House of Commons.

34,772. I know; not the election commission. Well go on?—I met Mr. Henry Lovibond, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, and Mr. Bate in the lobby of the House of Commons, and they seemed surprised to see me there. I said, "You cannot surely be surprised about it, "because it is somewhat my business that brought "you here." They wanted to know what evidence

I had against the sitting member. I said, "If you "go to Baxter, Rose, and Norton's office, 6, Victoria "Street, there you will get some information." My time was very short, I was gone a certain time to get the witnesses up, and I must have gone by the 5 o'clock train, and therefore I could not stay till the result, but they settled, at least they kissed and made friends again it appears. They sent me this telegram again the next day, "Mr. Williams, 16, Victoria Street, "to Mr. Murlis, Albion Hotel, Bridgwater. Its "all settled, stop further proceedings, warn any that "are notified not to come up, Mr. Lovibond's clerk "will assist you in stopping them."

34,773. What date is that?—August 2d, 1859.

34,774. I find in the 114th column of the Commons Journal, folio 223 A, 200, and 328 B to 330 B., "The "petition of Henry Clement Heard and Reuben Bond "was referred to an election committee, and before "it could be struck, on the same day withdrawn by "Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton, as agents for the "petitioners, by letter of that date set out in the "journals and in the usual form," and that will be the same day, the 2d of August, that you got that telegram?—Yes, no doubt about it.

34,775. Heard, I suppose, was the same person against whom the rule for the criminal information had been obtained by the Tynte party, the prosecution?—Yes, I recollect there was.

34,776. Will you tell me what makes you think that the payment of money was one of the inducements for withdrawing the petition in that certain way on the very day when it was referred to an election committee?—Yes; I had thought it from the commencement, that the paying back of this spilt milk——

34,777. The paying back what?—That the paying back of this spent money would in all probability have satisfied the thing, and I am very much induced to think that they had the 1,500*l.*

34,778. (Mr. Price.) That Padwick had?—Yes.

34,779. (Mr. Anstey.) You may have heard it stated by the witnesses here that Mr. Padwick impounded a large sum of money which it is said belonged to him; did you hear that?—No, I did not.

34,780. However, what did you do when you received that telegram?—I did not go to Lovibond's clerk. I asked my friends to go with me; I distributed my friends about, and sent them notes and such like to stay the thing, and stating I had the telegram from London to say that they were not to go. They were all prepared to go.

34,781. After that conversation did you have a conversation with Mr. Henry Lovibond?—No.

34,782. Or with anybody on the other side?—No.

34,783. There is no mistake, Mr. Henry Lovibond must have known all you have told us?—He was in London, but I do not know whether he knew that part of it.

34,784. He was actively engaged?—Yes, he was.

34,785. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was there on the liberal side, besides Mr. Henry Lovibond, who would be likely to know this?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond and Mr. Bate; they are both dead. Sir Frederick Slade was the counsel.

34,786. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes. Did your hear anything afterwards about the payment of money—about money having been paid back as you say?—No; this telegram shows that I was taken out of it.

34,787. Yes, it does; but I mean did you hear anything after that on the subject of the money consideration?—Mr. Smith told me on his return that they had settled the matter amicably, and that Mr. Tynte and Mr. Kinglake was to walk into the House of Commons, and to have a free toleration to say what they thought proper, and they went into the House of Commons and said that the thing had fallen through by arbitration, and that it was settled by arbitration, that the thing was frivolous and vexatious—they were allowed to say that without being contradicted.

34,788. (Mr. Price.) They condescended to say that?—Yes.

34,789. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you aware that they allowed Colonel Tynte on the night of that day, the 2d of August, to make a speech, which was entirely uncontradicted, in the House of Commons, declaring that it was well known to everybody that the petition was a mere sham from the first?—Yes.

34,790. And there was nobody there to contradict it?—That was it.

34,791. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose, considering what you had done in this matter yourself, you did not pray the seat for yourselves?—No.

34,792. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see the report of his speech on that occasion?—I think I did.

34,793. On this being mentioned by Mr. Speaker that the petition had been withdrawn that he got up and made a very generous candid speech towards his opponents, and declared it was a mere sham from beginning to end.

34,794. (Mr. Anstey.) Who made a speech?—Mr. Tynte; it was his maiden speech, I think, on that occasion.

(Mr. Price.) A very worthy beginning to a very fitting ending.

34,795. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that all you have to tell us about 1859?—Yes.

34,796. What had you to do in 1865?—I left in 1860—in the March of 1860. I have not been here in business, and I have had nothing to do with the elections since.

34,797. (Mr. Coleridge.) Finding you had been so useful to them, did not they bring you back specially in 1865?—No, I had nothing at all to do with it. I was very ill. I left on account of ill health.

34,798. Was this the only election you had anything to do with in the way of money?—No.

34,799. Did you not assist in the last election?—No.

34,800. You have never assisted parties in other places?—No.

34,801. And never brought any one here?—No.

34,802. And that is all you have to tell us?—That is all.

34,803. (Mr. Anstey.) Your father preceded you in the character of election agent, did not he?—My father was a very active agent in election matters.

34,804. There was a house which has been mentioned not only in the reports of the trial of Webb v. Smith—this Smith who is ill, or said to be ill,—but which has also been mentioned by witnesses, and also by me in cross-examination, which is called Murlis's house. If you wish I will tell you whereabouts it is said to be situated?—In Dampiet Street, I think.

34,805. Murlis's house, near the Rose and Crown?—Yes.

34,806. Was that your father's house?—Yes.

34,807. Do you remember the occurrence which was disclosed by the evidence taken against the now absent Richard Smith, when he was found guilty and had to pay 500*l.* penalty for having bribed voters in 1837?—I have heard tell of it.

34,808. Were you in Bridgwater then?—Yes, I must have been.

34,809. Do you remember anything of those remarkable occurrences,—the man Croucher coming there, and being placed in a room to play the same respectable part that Lomas for Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Tromp for Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Patton have admitted that they did?—What election was that?

34,810. The last election 1837?—Oh yes, I recollect that,—I recollect the man very well.

34,811. Was it Croucher?—I do not know whether is was Croucher they called him.—I cannot recollect his name at present.

(A voice.) William Holmes.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Mr. J. Murlis.

4 Oct. 1869.

(The witness.) No, it is not. He is a tall, stout man, and I recollect his stature very well indeed.

34,812. (Mr. Anstey.) Not to go into detail, that is what he came to do?—No doubt about it.

34,813. And Richard Smith—the now absent Richard Smith,—certainly absent,—probably ill—possibly ill—was the person who pointed out the voters to him, as he was the person who had to pay the money to the voters when pointed out in your father's office?—I cannot tell you that.

34,814. However, he was at your father's office?—This man was.

34,815. During the election?—Yes.

34,816. Do you recollect a celebrated person in his way, the whipper-in of the House of Commons on the Tory side—both when the Tories were in power, when he sat on the Tory bench, and when they were out of power when he sat on the Opposition bench—the late Mr. Holmes, an Irish member of Parliament, coming down to the borough on that election?—No, I do not. By that name I understand they nick-named this man.

34,817. Holmes?—Yes, they nick-named him Holmes.

34,818. But you do not remember the real William Holmes?—No, I do not.

34,819. You are not,—I will not give the familiar name—you do not remember his coming into the borough?—No, I do not.

34,820. Do you remember the equally notorious Mr. Coppock at the same election on the Liberal side, and who was no doubt down here for the same purpose as Mr. Holmes was?—I do not.

Mr. J. Leaker.

Mr. James Leaker recalled.

34,821. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Leaker, before Mr. Murlis goes, how came you not to tell us about this person you bribed in 1859?—Murlis bribed him, and I only held the money on the morning of the election.

34,822. What is his name?—Joseph Stoodley. I only held the money.

34,823. (Mr. Price.) I think you did mention that?—I did.

34,824. (Mr. Anstey.) The last question I put I shall be very glad to put to any gentleman of the public press who is likely to have reported the proceedings of that election. Mr. Denison, was your connexion with the "Times" newspaper so ancient as that?

(Mr. Denison.) Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) Will you have the kindness to come into the box then?

Mr. J. H. Denison.

Mr. James Hutchinson Denison sworn.

34,825. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Denison, do you know the name of the man whom I have described to the last witness?—Yes, I knew him very well.

34,826. What was his name?—Mr. William Holmes, —commonly called Billy Holmes. He was whipper-in for the Tory party.

34,827. You mean in Parliament?—In Parliament.

34,828. I mean the man described as being in the room at Murlis's,—the man in the moon at that time?—The election of 1837, Broadwood and Sheridan,—Croucher was here. He was introduced to me by Mr. Holmes as Mr. Brown; he was giving a large party—a large supper to the electors, I think.

34,829. What Mr. Brown?—Mr. Brown was Mr. Croucher. I had known him before.

34,830. Mr. Brown?—He introduced him to me as Mr. Brown. He seemed to be a person of wealth, and was giving a supper there.

34,831. At what place?—At the "Clarence."

34,832. And was Mr. Holmes taking part in the election?—Oh yes.

34,833. Did you hear what part he took?—I recollect going to Mr. Holmes about 10 o'clock in the morning of the polling-day and telling him the election was won. He asked me what I meant. I said, "If every voter now unpolled votes on the opposite "side you have a majority." He said, "What is "your authority for that?" I said, "I have the "numbers from the poll clerks, and, therefore, I can "rely upon it." He said, "I am exceedingly obliged "to you; you have done us an immense service by "telling us."

34,834. Did you see the other person I have asked about, the celebrated Mr. Coppock?—I was on the hustings on the day of the nomination, and I saw Mr. James Coppock in the crowd, and there were gentlemen—I think Mr. Trevor was one. I said, "Come down, we will have some fun," and I said, "Mr. Coppock, how are you?" He said, "Denison, "in Heaven's name, do not let any man know my "name here." I said, "The idea of so great a man "as James Coppock being here, and yet not being "known!" I said, "I am quite ashamed of it."

34,835. (Mr. Price.) What do you think he could have come down to Bridgwater for?—I wrote what I believed,—that he had come with the bags, and had gone away, because he often told me afterwards, "I "wish you had been quiet. I lost the election through "you;" and I think I may tell you from what I have heard here, I rather expect that those Bridgwater reports about what took place on the trial of Smith at Taunton, and the trial of the rioters at Wells were mine. I think so.

34,836. You would not be at quarter sessions at that time?—Yes, I was; I came purposely from Bath to report that case.

34,837. (Mr. Anstey.) You having been present at the assizes, is the account which has been given true, namely, that they were acquitted at the assizes because they were indicted, not for a riot, but for a conspiracy?—Well, I have been trying very hard to remember, but my memory is a blank.

34,838. As to the trial at the Quarter Sessions, do you recollect first of all the adjourning from one day to the other?—No, I do not. I remember perfectly well talking to Mr. Serjeant Kinglake at Wells on that occasion, but I forget the whole thing.

34,839. You do not recollect the scene in Court when one after the other was acquitted by the jury?—No, I do not. I have been trying since I have been here to recollect it, but I cannot.

34,840. Nor can you inform us with reference to anything which is said to have taken place after the trial?—No, I cannot. I can tell you one thing, I recollect going to the dining room of the "Clarence," a large room, and seeing 400 bottles of wine put on the table at one time.

34,841. (Mr. Anstey.) When was that?—At that election.

34,842. 1837 or 1832?—1837. Sheridan and Broadwood.

34,843. Do you remember the trial of Webb v. Smith?—Yes, I recollect that.

34,844. The Bribery Penalties trial?—Yes, I recollect that.

34,845. Do you recollect enough to be able to tell us whether the account stated here in the form of questions partly put by me, and partly in the form of answers by witnesses of what subsequently took place is correct?—No; my mind is a blank again.

ABRAHAM DANGER sworn.

34,846. (Mr. Anstey.) Some evidence was given by witnesses on Saturday last which goes to show that Dr. Kinglake did not leave Bridgwater between one or two o'clock (if he then left it) without first paying at that hour a visit to Sealy's Bank; and secondly, that he did not leave Bridgwater, in all probability at all, at that moment by the 1.40 train. Can you throw any light on either or both of those two statements?—I only know from my daughter that is now dead. I can only speak of what she told me. I know nothing myself.

34,847. If it is any clue, I should like to hear what it is?—She told me that Mr. Kinglake and Dr. Kinglake left somewhere, I think, about one o'clock. They went to the station in a fly. Dr. Kinglake returned about ten minutes or a quarter of an hour afterwards, got out of the fly at Mr. Sealy's Bank, and sent the fly away and went into the bank.

34,848. When did she tell you that?—She told me at the time.

34,849. On the day?—She said this, that she knew that the bribery commenced directly after that.

34,850. And she told you this on the very day?—On the very day; the evening when she came home.

34,851. When did she die?—She died in August last.

34,852. Can you give me the names of any persons who, as well as your daughter, witnessed what you have described—the getting out of the fly and dismissing it, and going into Sealy's Bank?—No; I cannot say. She did not wish to know but as little as she could help on the subject, but she told me this.

MARY GOLDSWORTHY sworn.

M. Goldsworthy.

34,853. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Cook at Mr. Smith's.

34,854. Are you still in the service of Mr. Richard Smith?—Yes.

34,855. How long have you been in his service?—Nine years.

34,856. Is your sister Jane also in the same service?—Yes.

34,857. Well now, we want to know with regard to the destruction of some papers. We want to know from you whether you remember after the judge was down here. You remember the judge being here in this year?—Yes.

34,858. Very well. Whether, after the judge had been here, your mistress gave you any papers to light fires with?—Yes, she did.

34,859. Can you give us an idea of them. Do you know the look of documents like that (exhibiting a brief)?—I did not see any of those.

34,860. You saw nothing like that?—No.

34,861. This is the sort of thing, you know, which is called a brief. It is a large thing, and you will recollect it. Did you have any such document as that handed over to you?—There was a great many large papers, but I don't know what they were.

34,862. Just take that into your hand (passing a brief), and see whether it is the sort of thing, and see whether you can recollect, because you would have to tear such a thing as that up to put it into the fire?—Oh yes; there were many such papers as that.

34,863. Which you had to tear up into strips?—I did not tear them up.

34,864. You could not put that into the bottom of a grate to light the fire?—They were broken up before I had them.

34,865. They were broken up before you had them?—Yes.

34,866. Many such as these?—Yes, there was a great quantity.

34,867. When was the last time you saw Mr. Bealy Smith?—Shortly before he left for Australia. About a fortnight before he left.

34,868. You have not seen him since?—No.

34,869. Quite sure of that?—Quite sure.

34,870. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he walk into his carriage when he went away?—Mr. Bealy Smith?

34,871. Yes, Bealy Smith. Are you sure that Mr. Bealy Smith is not at this moment at Teignmouth and goes every day to see his father?—I have not been at Teignmouth. I have not heard that he is.

34,872. Have you heard, or do you believe, that he returned to England as long ago as the 15th September, last month?—No; I received a letter on the 13th of September, which I forwarded to Mrs. Smith, from Mr. Bealy.

34,873. (Mr. Price.) You know his handwriting?—Yes.

34,874. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mrs. Smith, when she gave you the torn papers, tell you that you were to burn them as soon as you could?—No.

34,875. I presume you found papers of this kind very bad fuel, did not you?—Well, I do not know. They were used for lighting fires.

34,876. Very difficult to light a fire with, I should say—stiff hard papers?—There were other papers as well—newspapers, and a lot of papers altogether.

34,877. What did you do with the papers that were bad for lighting fires with?—I did not do anything. I threw them into the fire altogether.

34,878. Therefore you did not use them to light the fire with?—I used them as I wanted them. I did not burn them all at once. I did not burn them directly. They were in the cupboard for perhaps weeks or months.

34,879. Do you mean to tell me that papers of this texture, all welded together as it were by long use and pressure, were papers that you could conveniently light a fire with?—Yes, I threw them in. I did not know what papers they were.

34,880. And did they burn?—Yes.

34,881. And well?—Well, I do not know. They lit my fire.

34,882. Did not your mistress tell you "For God's "sake Mary Goldsworthy (or whatever your name "is) get rid of those papers as soon as possible"?—No.

34,883. Did anybody tell you?—No.

34,884. Did you see her with her own hands putting papers into the fire?—No.

34,885. Never?—Not on no occasion.

34,886. Stop a moment. Are you quite sure you never saw her destroying papers?—Not large papers like that.

34,887. You saw her tearing up the papers?—No, they were sent to me in the kitchen.

34,888. Who brought them to you?—The housemaid brought them down in the usual basket that the waste paper is always sent in.

34,889. Is she here to-day?—Yes.

34,890. What did she say when she brought them down?—Nothing. She brought them down in the morning when she cleaned her room as she always did and emptied the waste paper in the cupboard.

34,891. When was that? Be as accurate as you can?—It was early in the year. It might be February or March.

34,892. February or March this year?—This year.

34,893. Do you recollect the noise there was here about the trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn in this Court?—Yes.

34,894. Was it after that?—Yes.

34,895. It was after Mr. Justice Blackburn had gone away?—Yes.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Jane Goldsworthy sworn.

J. Goldsworthy.

4 Oct. 1869.

34,896. (Mr. Price) Jane, what are you, the housemaid?—Housemaid.

34,897. Did you receive any papers of this kind, like this (exhibiting a brief) from your mistress?—I received a lot of papers that was brought me, they was all broken up into small pieces.

34,898. Were they papers that were written with pen and ink in that way?—Yes.

34,899. In this sort of way?—Yes.

34,900. Like this?—Yes.

34,901. Large sheets?—They were broken up when I had them, I did not have any large sheets.

34,902. Broken up into small pieces?—Small pieces.

34,903. As small as that (showing a fragment of paper)?—Some of them were.

34,904. (Mr. Anstey) Were any of them large pieces?—No.

34,905. All small?—Yes.

34,906. Did you see her tear them up?—I saw her tear some of them up.

34,907. Where did you see her tearing them up?—In her sitting-room.

34,908. How long was she about it?—She did not do it all at once, she did it at different times, she broke some up at different times.

34,909. On several days?—Yes.

34,910. Did she tear up a good deal at a time?—Sometimes she tore up more than she did at another.

34,911. More than what?—She did not tear up very much at a time.

34,912. You see the quantity of paper that there is here, did you ever see her tear up of this size at any time?—I did not see her tear it up all, not so much at a time as that.

34,913. But parts?—Yes.

34,914. Did you see her cut red tape at the corners?—No.

34,915. How did she tear it up, with her hands or the help of a knife or what?—With her hands.

34,916. Did she say anything when she was doing it?—No.

34,917. Did not you think it very odd that she was tearing up paper like that so many days running?—No, it did not make any difference to me, I did not know what they were.

34,918. Did she call you into the room to see it?—No, I only saw it when I went into the room.

34,919. Did she say anything to you when she had done it?—No, she did not say anything to me, she told me I was to take them down to light the fires in the morning.

34,920. Then she did tell you something?—Yes.

34,921. To use it to light the fires?—Yes.

34,922. How long was this after Mr. Justice Blackburn went away?—Not long.

34,923. (Mr. Price.) A week after?—It might have been a week.

34,924. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Smith present?—No.

34,925. Was Mr. Else present?—I think not. I am not quite sure.

34,926. Was anybody present?—I do not know.

34,927. Are you sure Mr. Else was not present?—I am not sure whether he was present at any part of the time.

34,928. Did you ever see Mr. Else helping her to tear up papers?—No.

34,929. Did anybody help her?—I did not see anybody help her.

34,930. I must ask you generally, did you ever hear her say anything about these being papers that were used at the election trial?—No, she never said anything to me.

34,931. But in your hearing?—No.

34,932. Did she ever ask you whether you had carried the papers down?—No.

34,933-4. But I suppose, from your account of it, she had so effectually torn up the papers into such small pieces that if they had not been burnt it would have been impossible to read them?—Yes.

Ambrose Dyer recalled.

A. Dyer.

(The Witness.) I want to state about what has been said about Mr. Kinglake's not going away by the train.

34,935. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your name?—Ambrose Dyer.

34,936. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Dyer, we have not sent for you?—But I thought it just to state——

34,937. (Mr. Anstey.) But we are waiting for another witness. You had better wait till the Chief Commissioner comes?—There are several people here.

Mr. Henry Westropp sworn.

Mr. H. Westropp.

34,938. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is your christian name?—Henry.

34,939. (Mr. Price.) Henry John?—No, Henry. I have brought some papers here, and some of them I can hand in, but as there are other matters to which I shall allude in my examination I should wish to keep them and hand them in seriatim as I use them. This is the poll book of the 1865 election.

34,840. I am going to begin with you in 1859, if you please, Mr. Westropp, the first time you came here. Then you can supply anything as your evidence goes on; any paper or papers that throw light upon it.

(The Witness.) Do you wish me to give an account of it myself, or shall I answer questions?

34,941. If you prefer it, you will just give us the account yourself; of your first introduction to this borough when you came down with Mr. Padwick which we understand was in 1859. If you prefer to give it in the shape of a statement we are ready to hear it in that form?—Previously to the year 1859 for many years I had been travelling and yachting, and I had been out in the Crimea during the Crimean war.

34,942. I must ask you a few preliminary questions to show that you were an eligible candidate of Bridgwater; eligible in one particular sense. You are a gentleman of independent means?—I have been sheriff of the county of Limerick.

34,943. You are a gentleman of fortune?—To a certain amount.

34,944. You never would have been seen in Bridgwater if you had not been?—I doubt that very much, but I will tell you.

34,945. You are a gentleman of fortune, you have property in Ireland?—Yes.

34,946. Are you engaged in trade at all?—No.

34,947. Your means are derived from landed estates and personal property?—Yes.

34,948. But you are not engaged in any business?—No, I never was.

34,949. Nor in any way connected with the town of Bridgwater?—No, not in any way whatever. Previously, as I told you, to that year I had been travelling and yachting, and out in the Crimean war, and all through and in consequence of my knowledge of the Eastern language I was put on the staff as interpreter. I returned home, and I found my life rather dull, and in 1859 I happened one day in the Union Club of which I was a member to hear of three boroughs in the immediate neighbourhood of Cork, my native place, Kinsale, Bandon, and Youghal, and I thought I should like to stand for one or the other of them. I applied to Mr. Heard, who was then a member, and he told me that my politics would not suit at all the Kinsale population; "but," said he, turning round, "there is a man there, and "if you speak to him, I think, he will put you in the "way of it." This was Sir Frederick Slade. That, I think, was on a Saturday. I went home, and during the Sunday I revolved in my mind about my standing for a borough in England which I had not previously thought of, and I went on the Monday morning, I think it was, to the Union Club, where I met Sir Frederick. "Wait a moment," said he, when I told him what I wished, "and I will go down to Victoria Street and see." He returned in a short time and told me that he wished me to come and contest Bridgwater. Said he, "You are to pay 200*l.* in the event of losing, and 1,000*l.* in the event of gaining the seat." "Who am I to go with?" said I. "With Mr. Padwick," said he. We came down here, and in a very short time I discovered——

34,950. Did you know Mr. Padwick?—I had never spoken to him. In a very short time when I came down here I discovered that there were very sinister rumours afloat respecting Mr. Padwick. Whether true or false it is not for me to say, nor do I know at this moment, but, however, they annoyed me very terribly through being mixed up with such a person about whom such things were said that I wrote to Sir Frederick Slade and asked him. He told me that he knew nothing of him whatever, but that he could lay a continuous line of sovereigns from Bridgwater to Bristol. That struck me as being a most exceedingly forcible expression.

34,951. I will interrupt you for a moment; whom were you introduced to here as a person of influence in the town?—Mr. Richard Smith was the person who was at Victoria Street when I was brought there by Sir Frederick. I saw no one else, and we three came down together in the same compartment of the carriage.

34,952. Had you in Victoria Street any conversation whatever with regard to the expense of the election?—None in the world. The only person whom I spoke anything to about it was Sir Frederick Slade, who told me the conditions under which I was to come. We came down here, and during the time——

34,953. Had Sir Frederick known you before?—Well I believe he had a short time, not very long; but he and I were both members of the club for nearly 15 or 16 years, although I did not know him to speak to.

34,954. (Mr. Anstey.) Your acquaintance with him was only that of club membership? You had no other acquaintance with him than that which is derived from club membership?—None other. We came down here, and during the time that we were here I found out, nearly at the close of it, that there were clandestine things going on between Colonel Tynte and Mr. Padwick, the object of which was to throw me overboard, and also to throw Mr. Kinglake overboard; and I spoke very seriously to Mr. Padwick of the way he was using me, and his answer was that it was all the better for me that he should do so, for he was taking care of my interests. Gentlemen, we were beaten, and on the day we were beaten Mr. Padwick went away unaccompanied by anybody from this town. He left by the express, which goes, I believe, at 1.37, and I left later. I think it is 4.40 the train goes, but I know it was late in the day. Mr. Richard Smith came up to me outside the Clarence Hotel. Said he, "It is a shame! We have not brought you down "here to let you go to the train alone; I will go with "you." At that time there was not the remotest idea of my appearing in Bridgwater again, and I felt that to be a kindness on the part of Mr. Richard Smith, which I never forgot, and which accounts for a good deal of I might say the friendship that existed between us, his kindness to me on that occasion, for I was deserted by every one of the party but him. A few weeks after that I came down here. I sent down my card in remembrance of the election, and I came down a few weeks subsequently. There was a supper here. I think Mr. Heard convened it. The secretary of the committee at that time, Mr. Greenhil, presided, and I there, perhaps foolishly, whether or not I do not know, pledged myself to come down again, thinking an election would take place very shortly.

34,955. (Mr. Price.) How soon after your defeat of 1859 was that?—I should think about five weeks.

34,956. Had you, in the meantime, paid the expenses of the election?—Mr. Padwick. I must mention here that the only time I ever spoke to Mr. Padwick since was when I handed him my cheque for 200*l.*

34,957. That was exclusive of what were legal expenses?—Oh no. 200*l.* altogether. That was the agreement. I was to pay 200*l.* if I lost, and 1,000*l.* if I won. Besides that, I paid my hotel bill, 1*l.* a day. He made an objection to my not doing so, although I believe it was included in the 200*l.*, but I was merely brought down to catch the second vote and prevent it going off to the other party. However at this supper I pledged myself to come forward again whenever the time occurred. There has been a great deal of talk here, and perhaps it has been the occasion of a great deal of merriment of what was called my charity.

34,958. Nursing the borough?—There has been a great deal of talk about it, and I will explain to you how all that originated. A very few days subsequent to this supper I met Mr. John Trevor on the Cornhill, and he said to me that he heard I was coming again. He said, "Well I do not think you will have much "chance in this place, because," said he, "the Tynte "influence is predominant. In fact," he said (and he made use of an expression I shall never forget), "old "Colonel Tynte canvasses from the 1st January to "the 31st of December. He is very kind to every-"body here, and takes care of all the poor." I went away, and happened to mention this to some of my friends. They said, "You have income enough; why "don't you subscribe in the same way? The distance "is nothing. If they know that you are a person "that subscribes to all the large charities, and the "poor people know that you are a gentleman whom "they can apply to, you will keep together the party." The party was utterly knocked to pieces at that time after 1859. I did this, and I never meant it, and nobody can say in the town that I ever placed the name of charity upon it.

34,959. Under what head did you put it?—I put no heading whatever upon it. That I first subscribed to, I think in the year subsequently, was the School of Art. I gave 25*l.*

34,960. Was it done to counteract Colonel Tynte?—It was done to balance Colonel Tynte's influence; in the same way.

34,961. Which purse could last the longest?—Well I don't think I could contend with Colonel Tynte, but at the same time the charities that Colonel Tynte gave perhaps I may have equalled, if not surpassed, at least the sum of money. Well, then things went on in this way.

34,962. Then you had made up your mind about that time that you would have another try for Bridg-

water, notwithstanding the reception you had before?—Oh I had a very good reception always; nay, more than that, I was frequently told that efforts had been made by my party, I do not give it as true, that efforts had been made to have one and one, Colonel Tynte and myself, but that Mr. Padwick would not hear of it. That was told me. I do not know whether it was true. However this election of 1859 came off, and that election——

34,963. No, no, we have got beyond 1859?—Oh yes. Then things went on for six years, and——

34,964. Now be good enough to tell us. The sum which has been mentioned as the sum which you are supposed to have spent year by year between 1859 and 1865 is something like 300*l.* a year?—More.

34,965. (Mr. Anstey.) How much more?—375*l.* on an average. I have been trying to recollect it, but I have never left an account. 2,250*l.* I think was what I spent in the six years.

34,966. (Mr. Price.) Between 1859 and 1865?—Yes.

34,967. Very well, go on?—Well things went on until 1865, and in 1865, I am now speaking to you of what I have discovered (at least I am bound to speak about what I have discovered) since the time that I gave my evidence before the House of Commons. In that, if you will allow me just to say, I read it over carefully not many days since; with the exception of my having asked Mr. Veysey to dinner, which I was utterly unaware of at the time, I believe everything to be strictly true, or did believe it until this morning, when I read Tromp's evidence, and I will allude to that afterwards. In 1865 a relative of mine made me a present of 1,530*l.*, which was conveyed, I know not how, to Tromp. It was conveyed through a lady, but I do not know how it was in her hands.

34,968. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not know what?—I do not know how it reached her hand.

34,969. What is the name of that lady?—I cannot tell you.

34,970. (Mr. Anstey.) Then I must make no distinction between you and other witnesses, and I warn you that if you do not, I shall move that this Commission adjourn to consider what we shall do. I will have an answer to it?—Excuse me for saying, that, with all due deference——

34,971. (Mr. Coleridge.) The answer you have just given makes it impossible for us to trace this money but through that lady?—If you will allow me I will tell you exactly. I perfectly acknowledge it came from a relation of my own.

34,972. Who was that relation?—Sir, excuse me; I tell you this——

34,973. (Mr. Anstey.) Now sir, I ask the name of the female, or lady, or whatever it is, and I insist on having it. We have not here drawn a distinction between rich and poor?—If you will allow me to say, if you will defer asking that question until the end of the inquiry——

34,974. (Mr. Anstey.) Not for a moment. I must have it now?—I certainly, sir, with all due deference and respect, cannot give it.

(Mr. Anstey.) Very well, then we had better adjourn.

[The learned Commissioners retired to consult.]

34,975. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Westropp, what we have come to the determination to do is this, that we will permit you to hand to us the name of the relative whom you suppose to have found the money, and the name of the lady who is the person who took the money and gave it to Mr. Tromp. Those names will be handed to us, and for the purpose of to-day that will do. We, therefore, will not publish them, but we reserve to ourselves the right of summoning both those persons before us if we think it necessary for the objects of our inquiry. We can only give you that. I do not call it indulgence, but we will, under the circumstances, permit you to do it in that form, not wishing unnecessarily to drag into the matter persons names which it may or may not be necessary for us further to pursue, but at the same time we shall be guilty of a gross dereliction of duty if we do not insist on having that information, though not for mere public notice, the name of that lady.

(The Witness.) Will you allow me to give the name of the lady who was the means of transmitting the money, and let the other name remain?

(Mr. Price.) No.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, certainly not.

34,976. (Mr. Price.) No doubt, Mr. Westropp, you having been a legislator——?—I am quite willing to tell you everything that occurred, everything in the world where money——

34,977. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know the fountain head is the relative who gave you the money as you call it, and you must know it?—I cannot tell the name.

34,978. (Mr. Price.) Just allow me to point out to you this is a matter of very grave importance, and it is a matter which was considered very seriously some years ago in a case in which I was personally concerned, where an individual took upon himself in the witness box to decline to give up the name of a person who had furnished money for bribery, and after being admonished by the judge he still persisted in his refusal, and by that judge, at York, he was adjudged to be imprisoned for three months, I think, and pay a fine of 500*l.* Now we have the same powers as a judge at nisi prius or a judge on circuit has, and however painful it may be we shall be compelled. I tell you this merely to point out to you it is not a question of certificate. You know perfectly well that the time of 1865 is long past, the necessity of a certificate to protect you from any proceedings with respect to that election no longer exists, but what you are now about to be guilty of is withholding the name from us under circumstances which are of very great consideration for you. If you still maintain that obstructive silence, we shall be driven to the necessity of punishing you for the same contempt of court as was committed by the party at the York assizes?—If you will allow me, I will pledge you my word this evening I will write the whole circumstances and hand them to you to-morrow.

34,979. (Mr. Anstey.) I distinctly decline to be a party to any such understanding.

(The Witness.) There are circumstances, gentlemen——

34,980. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Westropp, I think it my duty to tell you that you have entirely destroyed in my mind any title to any consideration whatever by a statement you have volunteered, viz., that you have read over your evidence, as reported in the Blue Book, given before the Committee of the House of Commons, and that with the trivial exception of the part where you said that you had not dined with Mr. Veysey or he with you, you find that that evidence was truthful?—Mr. Anstey, if you will be kind enough to ask me——

34,981. (Mr. Anstey.) Within two or three minutes after that you began to state your connexion with this bribe fund of 1,500*l.*, and I read here your sworn statement before the Committee of the House of Commons in these words, which you say you have read lately and are an accurate statement. I shall make no comment upon it further than I have already made, which is this, that I can be no party to any arrangement or understanding with you after the disclosures which these words are about to make to your prejudice. "Upon your honour" is the question put to you by your own counsel, Mr. Sleigh, "as a gentleman "and a Member of Parliament, and upon your oath, "did you spend one shilling more in the course of "this election than the sum which is returned by the "returning officer?—A. Certainly not. Q. Or enter "into any bargain, or promise or engagement to pay "any further sum than that which is returned as the "sum of your legal expenses?—A. Certainly not"?—Will you allow me to say——

34,982. (Mr. Anstey.) I shall make no such compromise, or enter into any arrangement with you.

(The Witness.) Will you allow me to explain to you, Mr. Anstey, that at the time I appeared before the House of Commons I was not aware of this.

34,983. (Mr. Anstey.) This was in 1865 you were examined before the House of Commons ?—I think it was on the 18th of April.

34,984. (Mr. Anstey.) In the month of April 1866 ?—

(The Witness.) Will you allow me to ask you, sir, if a thing comes to your knowledge after you have sworn, are you to be answerable for it ? I assure you I was perfectly unaware—perfectly unaware—that the money had been spent.

34,985-6. (Mr. Price.) When did you first become aware of it ?—After the trial of the election petition.

34,987. (Mr. Anstey.) You have stated,—I am not going to ask you any questions,—but you have stated already that you received the money before the election began, and you received it under circumstances——

(The Witness.) Pardon me, I did not say that.

34,988. (Mr. Anstey.) I am not going to ask you any questions. I shall not ask you any questions until you give the name of that lady, and the name of the relative. If you do not answer I consider myself fully released from the concession offered to you just now, namely, that of your being allowed to hand it in on paper. In consequence of your refusal I shall consider myself released from that concession.

34,988. (Mr. Coleridge.) You see, Mr. Westropp, it is absolutely necessary for the purposes of justice that we should have the name of the relative who, you say, gave you the money. Whether you repaid him the gift afterwards or not I do not know, but it is an absolute necessity. As to the name of the lady, it is only right we should have it. Whether we use it is another thing, but as to the relative who is the fountain head, and who is really the very cause of this bribery,—his name is absolutely necessary to us, and have it we must, and we cannot ask you another question until you reveal it.

(The Witness.) Will you allow me to mention it to you in private ?

(Mr. Coleridge.) No.

34,990. (Mr. Anstey.) No, I will not do it. I beg to say that I shall not do it. I will not agree now to the concession made in the first instance.

(The Witness.) Will you allow me to write it down. If you will allow me to do that, I will do it.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Westropp, it is my duty to inform you that we have carefully considered this matter, and with a view to all the consequences which it may entail, we have come deliberately to the conclusion that it is your bounden duty to disclose to us the name of the relative who found the money, reserving to ourselves perfect freedom of action to demand also from you hereafter the name of the lady, but at present we tell you that you must take the consequences of your refusal to give to us openly in public court the name of the relative who found the money. It is a very serious matter for you to consider, and I have told you the very serious precedent of the conduct of a judge in a similar case. We have exactly the same power as that judge. I am holding this out as no threat of the terrors of the law, but this is a painful position for us to be placed in, and will be also for you eventually, and therefore if you want time to consider, we will give you a short time. These are matters of public concern.

(The Witness.) I am perfectly well aware of it, and I should be the last person——

34,991. (Mr. Price.) And these are matters of material concern, and no justification could possibly warrant Commissioners, sitting in the position in which we do, and armed with powers which we are very properly armed with, no justification would be enough for us if we did not exercise when we thought there was a fitting case the fullest powers we have for the purpose of eliciting the truth.

34,992. (The Witness.) Will you allow me to ask, if I write down a full statement of it, am I to consider it a private communication ?

(The Witness.) Then I cannot mention the name of that person. I must take the consequences. If you will allow me till to-morrow morning I will write you down the whole of the circumstances of it, and I think you will find that I am not asking too much.

(Mr. Price.) It is impossible for us to tell what are the motives which operate upon your mind for keeping back this gentleman's name from us, or lady's name, whichever it is. We have only one course to pursue, and we cannot continue your examination ; that is the point ; we cannot continue your examination, you have arrived at that part of the case which necessitates in our judgment the disclosure by you of the individual who found the money for the election of 1865.

34,993. (The Witness.) Will you allow me to ask whether you will have the kindness to defer my examination until to-morrow morning, until I can write out the circumstances of it. I do not want in any way to thwart anything, but I think, gentlemen, when I have given you the circumstances of it you will find yourselves as gentlemen the great difficulty in which I am placed, and if you should then think that the ends of justice are thwarted by concealment, I can only say I must let it go to the public.

34,994. (Mr. Coleridge.) I did not catch the last words.

(The Witness.) I say, if you find the ends of justice are at all thwarted by the concealment of this person who gave me the money of course there is no more about it.

34,995. (Mr. Coleridge.) And then you would give it?

(The Witness.) And if you will kindly allow me till to-morrow to put in a statement and hand it to you, I will ask no more.

34,996. (Mr. Anstey.) I for one shall decline to read or receive any communication from this witness except in open court. No such distinction as this is to be made between the briber and the bribee, between the candidate and the elector.

(The Witness.) I assure you, Mr. Anstey, I speak with perfect deference to your judgment.

34,997. (Mr. Anstey.) I must decline to hear any communication from you till you have answered the question.

(The Witness.) In no way whatever have I ever had anything to do with this man Tromp.

34,998. (Mr. Price.) I understand what you beg of us is time to consider the position in which you are with reference to the disclosure just made. Is that what you ask of us ?

(The Witness.) And to put it in writing, the circumstances connected with it.

34,999. (Mr. Price.) No, I disagree with that entirely. I do not think it is a case in which we ought to have any private communication whatever with the witness. It is a thing which would be unseemly in any judge of the land, and would not be attempted for a single moment, and, therefore, I quite agree, and I am not prepared for a single moment to be influenced by any private statement that you make to us. But if you ask for the grace of having time to consider your position, and a very serious one it must be, time for considering your position between this and to-morrow morning without making any statement, as to whether you will then come into court, and make the fullest possible disclosure (although I consider we are extending very considerable grace by so doing), I am not prepared to refuse that, taking into consideration that you are influenced by other motives than a wish to obstruct the communication of the truth. I will agree to that; but I entirely agree with my colleague, Mr. Anstey, that there must be no private communication.

(The Witness.) Well, Mr. Price, I can only say that I must submit to whatever you please to do.

35,000–2. (Mr. Price.) You must know, Mr. Westropp, forgive me for reminding you, you must know that the obligation of an oath in a court of justice is paramount to every other consideration?

(The Witness.) I am perfectly aware of it.

35,003. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Westropp, under those circumstances, if you like to take (with the fullest understanding that we only give it you for the purpose of considering whether to-morrow morning you will make a full disclosure or not) the grace we offer, you can do so, and you will appear here to-morrow morning.

(The Witness.) So far as counsel and consideration are concerned, I have but myself to think about. There is no person in this town who in the least knows anything about it. It is I myself have to take counsel with myself.

35,004. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know you can, by means of the telegraph, get absolved by this relative, if you think that necessary. If you are not absolved we cannot absolve you.

(The Witness.) I shall send no telegram; I shall say nothing to any person; I shall simply think over the matter. There are many and weighty considerations, and there are considerations, perhaps, such as I should almost prefer to decline to mention.

35,005. (Mr. Coleridge.) You will fully understand, Mr. Westropp, that if you are not prepared to-morrow morning to state in open court the name of your relative, which will be the very first question put by us here, you will then take the consequences.

(The Witness.) Mr. Price, may I ask, with all submission, what will be the consequences?

(Mr. Price.) I have told you what they were in the Fernandez case. He was committed to prison and ordered to pay a fine of 500*l.*, for refusing to disclose the name of a person who intrusted him with money for bribery purposes.

Mr. C. W. Gray.

Mr. Charles William Gray sworn.

35,006. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a merchant in London.

35,007. You have no connexion with the borough of Bridgwater?—I have not.

35,008. What is your particular business,—a general merchant?—A general merchant.

35,009. Have you anything to do with the trade of the town of Bridgwater?—I have nothing whatever to do with Bridgwater.

35,010. On any where else in this neighbourhood?—No, nothing whatever.

35,011. You were a candidate at the last election in this borough in 1868?—I was.

35,012. Will you be good enough to tell us how it was you were introduced to this borough?—My first acquaintance with the borough was through Mr. William Toogood.

35,013. Had you been in Parliament before?—No, I had not. My first acquaintance with the borough was through my friend, Mr. William Toogood, whom I had been in the habit of meeting at the Conservative Club in London. He stated to me he was a native of this town, and had a strong interest in seeing it represented by Conservative members, and he thought there was a fair opening for a Conservative member or members for the borough. Shall I go on with the short narrative?

35,014. Yes, if you please?—A short time afterwards I happened to be in the neighbourhood, and we made an appointment to come here about the 10th of September, and Mr. Toogood and I met Mr. Lilly. Mr. Lilly stated to me the position of the borough, and it was decided that Mr. Westropp was to come here as a candidate, but that he was determined to fight the election on purity principles. Mr. Lilly very candidly stated that he thought the Conservatives had a good chance if the election were conducted on purity principles, but that if the other side spent money he did not think that they would have any chance at all. I afterwards, on the same day, saw Mr. Brice and Mr. Ruddock, all those gentlemen, for the first time, and they confirmed to me what Mr. Lilly had told me in the morning. I then left, stating that I should see Mr. Westropp in London. I happened to know Mr. Westropp before. I went to London, and two days afterwards, by appointment, I met Mr. Toogood and Mr. Westropp at the Union Club. Mr. Westropp then went fully into all the circumstances of the borough at that time. He stated that he considered the borough almost in the light of a new constituency, seeing that it had been doubled, and he thought the strong element of the Conservative Working Men's Association would ensure a majority for the Conservatives, and he emphatically laid down that under no circumstances would he come down unless upon purity principles. We had a general talk over matters, and adjourned from that to Mr. Spofforth's office with Mr. Toogood. We saw Mr. Spofforth, and told him.

35,015. Mr. William Toogood?—Mr. William Toogood; and Mr. Spofforth stated that I should have all the support that the party could give me, and the party adopted me as their candidate in conjunction with Mr. Westropp. After that, I that same evening——

35,016. One moment. Had you known Mr. Westropp before, as connected with the Borough of Bridgwater?—I never heard of that before.

35,017. You did not know that he had been a candidate on two occasions, and had been unseated on one?—I did not, until Mr. Lilly told me for the first time. That evening Mr. Toogood wrote a note to Mr. Lilly, at my dictation, stating that, upon the terms and the principles that Mr. Westropp had enunciated, I would come down and contest the borough with him. A few days afterwards we had some correspondence respecting the address, and an address was drawn up, and I sent down my address, and I enclosed Mr. Westropp's at the same time to Mr. Lilly; and in order to make the position perfectly clear, I wrote a letter stating the terms,—a résumé in fact of what had taken place between Mr. Toogood, Mr. Westropp, and myself,—stating the terms on which I would come down to contest the election. I had a letter from Mr. Lilly in reply, stating that those terms were accepted by the party,—that those terms he thought would answer. Then the next thing was, Mr. Westropp went down, and I think he came down somewhere about the 10th of October; I think it was on the 10th of October, and he stayed down here several days, and then returned to London, and it was about that time that Mr. Toogood was going, I think, to Torquay, and said that he would call here, and I impressed upon him the necessity of his placing before the heads of the party here the terms upon which alone I would come here to fight. He did so, and he wrote a note to me from Torquay, stating that the terms would be quite satisfactory, were quite understood. Then I think there was nothing else, no other occurrence, until we came down to the canvassing. First it was said there should be no canvassing; after that, it was given up, and we had a canvass here. Canvassing went on till somewhere about the 4th or 5th or 6th of November,—somewhere thereabouts, and I was not altogether satisfied towards that time,—

I think I began to see signs of some wavering. There was nothing satisfactory, but there was something about the air of the place which looked as if money was expected to be spent, or something of that kind.

35,018. What was said?—Nothing positive, nothing definite, but there was something unsatisfactory in this way going about "Well the other side are spending money, and we shall not get in without spending."

35,019. Who made that remark?—It was a common remark; I cannot call to mind who it was stated that. I am not saying that those words were used, that was the substance.

35,020. That was the impression made on your mind?—That was the impression made on my mind. I was quite unwell just after the fatigues of this canvass, and I thought I would go to London, and also take a general survey how matters stood. I did go to London, I think, about the 9th or 10th of November, and I thought over the things which had occurred here, and I thought about this money, that there might be some disappointment if money was not spent, and I had great doubts whether I ought or ought not to retire; that I might be what might be considered in a false position with the party here who really supposed, or who had any idea on their minds, that I was going to spend any money unlawfully, that they and I might be in a false position. I saw Mr. Spofforth again, and asked him whether I could with a good grace retire, and he said "No, go to the poll, but take care spend no money whatever illegally, guard against that." I came down here.

35,021. Were you under any obligation to Mr. Spofforth, and the party, to go to the poll?—Not the slightest.

35,022. (Mr. Anstey.) You had made some engagement with them, had you not?—Not the slightest in the world. I dropped any obligation I was under to the party.

35,023. Then what did you mean in your letter to Mr. Lilly by saying that "the support promised here," "here" not there, but here, in London, "by "Mr. Spofforth, encourages me to hope for success "there." That is Bridgwater?—I think, if you will allow me to say so, that is hardly what the letter says.

35,024. We will have the letter; we have got it here?—I should like to have it.

35,025. (Mr. Coleridge.) You dropped the obligations you were under. What do you mean by that?—I mean the party who had applied to me to come down here to contest the borough.

35,026. (Mr. Anstey.) You say I am misrepresenting you. I must have this cleared up first of all?—No, I do not say that. I only say I think that is not quite the expression I made use of in that letter.

35,027. You say I am misrepresenting you in effect. Now just listen to this, after promising all sorts of liberal contributions to local interests as well as local institutions, and promising to pay a considerably larger sum than Mr. Westropp will pay, which is 500*l.*, you go on thus, "If you and the other "heads of the party think that my qualification as a "merchant, together with the fact of my having the "support promised by Mr. Spofforth here, renders "me a fit person to represent the constituency there, "I can promise you great zeal in the work and "liberal support to all your local interests and in-"stitutions."—Yes.

35,028. That shows there was an engagement between you and some party in London?—The only point to which that applies is just this expression of Mr. Spofforth, "I can only say that Mr. Gray will "have the support of the party." That is all he said to Mr. Toogood, "We accept Mr. Gray as a candidate, "and he shall have the support of the party." That is the only expression that Mr. Spofforth used.

35,029. When you used the word "proclivities" in this letter, empowering Mr. Lilley to make such alterations in your letter as he thought might "best "suit the sentiments and proclivities of your people," this is on the 25th of September 1868, were you not, Mr. Gray, perfectly well aware, that the best known and the most characteristic of those proclivities was the proclivity of the constituency on both sides to bribe and to be bribed?—I think that merely refers—the "proclivities"——

35,030. I only ask you, sir, were you not aware, when you used this phrase, that that was the leading proclivity of the borough?—I did not use that phrase in that way.

35,031. That is not an answer, as you know as a merchant. Did not you know that the leading proclivity of this borough, of the old constituency, was to bribe and to be bribed?—I think if you will allow me to say so, it carries its own refutation with it. I asked Mr. Lilley——

35,032. I ask you the state of your knowledge at the time you wrote this letter. At the time you wrote that letter did you know that that was the leading characteristic of the borough?—No, I did not.

35,033. Then why did not you answer the question at once?—The Commissioners must know I am judging now after the events have happened, I knew nothing of that at the time. The words "proclivities" and "sentiments" I used do apply to the address. It would not apply to bribery at the election.

35,034. Why not?—I suppose no man would put in an address anything tending to show he was going to bribe.

35,035. No?—I should say not.

35,036. Supposing your address contained these very words which you used in your own letter, which is to be a sort of sketch of the address, "If you elect "me I promise you liberal support to all your local "interests," do you mean to say that they would not understand by "local interests" their own individual interests?—Well I cannot say, I did not weigh every expression, I did not certainly take it to a lawyer to put down, I simply put down what was in my mind at the time. I intended no corrupt practices should be carried on, and no mixture in any shape or way with them, and I thought I had put it plainly.

35,037. But you were aware of two things, first, that Mr. Westropp had been paying 300*l.* a year for many years past, and a large sum in capital in 1865, and that he was now going to insist upon being let off with 500*l.*, that you were aware of at the time you wrote this letter?—That Mr. Westropp should be let off.

35,038. Will you tell me whether you were aware, I will use the words of your letter, that it was intended that Mr. Westropp's legal expenditure should amount to some 500*l.*?—About 500*l.* I think it was intended to be, that it should not exceed 500*l.*

35,039. I ask you was not the other point that you were aware of at the time you wrote this letter this, that your own expenditure would of course be considerably above that?—I thought it would most likely be so.

35,040. Therefore the two points had been ascertained by you to your satisfaction by the 25th September, namely, that whatever Mr. Westropp's election cost him, it would not be less than 500*l.*, but yours would be more?—About. Mr. Westropp said about 500*l.*

35,041. But yours would be much more?—Yes.

35,042. I want to know how much more than 500*l.* were you prepared to go to; were you prepared to go to 5,000*l.*?—Certainly not.

35,043. How far were you prepared to go in your own mind?—In my own mind I was prepared to go to 1,000*l.* or thereabouts if it could be paid legitimately or legally. I had no intention to spend it illegally.

35,044. Was it your intention to follow every pound of the money to see how it was spent, or did you intend to confide it entirely to your respectable agents here?—I had no agents here.

35,045. How were you going to secure the legitimate expenditure of a large sum of money?—I

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Mr. C. W. Gray.

simply had in my mind what I suppose every man would have under the circumstances, that every seat in Parliament must cost something, and I had running in my mind that to contest a seat in Parliament it must cost some money.

35,046. You are evading the answer ?—I cannot answer you in any other way.

35,047. I will put it to you again, a thousand times if you like, but I will have an answer to it. How were you to secure the honest application of a large sum of money, about 1,000*l.* or so, you having no agent ?—I was not an expert in electioneering matters, and I did not know what it would cost.

35,048. I will put the question to you again. I am not asking you what it would cost, but I am asking you with reference to your answer that you determined not to spend money corruptly, how were you to secure that it should not be spent corruptly ?—I could not tell.

35,049. You could not tell ?—No.

35,050. Therefore all this about purity of election was merely a subterfuge on your part, as is the case at all elections ?—I deny it.

35,051. You do ?—I do, entirely.

35,052. (Mr. Price.) As a man of business you are a merchant ?—Yes.

35,053. As a man of business you do not embark into an ordinary venture in your business without counting the cost thereof ?—Well, as well as I can I do.

35,054. Then you were going into a venture in the House of Parliament for a borough called Bridgwater ?—Yes.

35,055. Did it not occur to you, as a man of business, to inquire what would be the cost of the contest ?—No, I did not positively inquire what would be the cost of the contest here.

35,056. It is nonsense to say that you inquired the cost of the contest at Bradford with reference to Bridgwater ?—You see the determination was made in my mind whether it cost 5*l.* or 500*l.*

35,057. Or 5,000*l.* ?—No, I say not.

35,058. You say you would go to 1,000*l.* ?

35,059. (Mr. Anstey.) Or more ?—No, I did not say more; but to 1,000*l.* if it could be spent legitimately.

35,060. (Mr. Price.) It is nonsense to talk of "legitimately." You see your own legitimate expenses were only 196*l.*; do you mean to say, as a merchant and a man of business, that you never took the trouble to inquire what it would cost to contest the borough of Bridgwater legitimately ?—I did not.

35,061. (Mr. Anstey.) And you have told me, after considerable pressing, that you could not tell how you were to secure the money being spent legitimately and not corruptly ?—I could not.

35,062. Then why did you use that phrase just now, that it was not a subterfuge your stating that that money was to be legitimately expended ?—I had running in my mind that the contests of all the seats in Parliament cost sums of money.

35,063. (Mr. Price.) No doubt; but you know that the legitimate expenses of this borough came only to 196*l.* ?—I know now.

35,064. Did not you ask your friend, Mr. William Toogood, before you went into a matter of this kind, how much it would cost you ?—No I did not ask him.

(Mr. Price.) Then all I can say is, you went blindfold into the matter, prepared to bribe or not, as the case might be.

35,065. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did Mr. William Toogood say about it ?—We discussed the matter.

35,066. Did he discuss what it would cost ?—No, he did not; he said it might be 1,000*l.*

35,067. Then he did say something about it ?—I think I said so.

35,068. (Mr. Price.) Did it not astonish you that 1,000*l.* should be spent in a small borough like Bridgwater ?—It did not strike me at the time. If you remember I was then quite a new hand.

35,069. But you are not a child ?—No.

35,070. You are a grown-up man ?—I was not an expert in these matters.

35,071. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not Mr. Toogood tell you what was the character of his native borough ?—No, he did not.

35,072. Did he not tell you it was most impure, and he wanted you to go there to make it pure ?—No, he did not. I did not hear that until I came down here.

35,073. Had you not heard it before, that it was most impure ?—No, I had not. When I came down here, I heard it was a place where there was a good deal of money spent corruptly.

35,074. Had you not heard there had been a petition filed before in 1865 ?—I had not.

35,075. (Mr. Anstey.) As I shall not have an opportunity of asking Mr. Westropp about it, I will ask you. Did not he tell you before this of the manner in which he had bribed and his friends had bribed the voters here, and the demands the voters had made ?—He did not. He told me of course that there had been a petition against him, and that he had been turned out for bribery.

35,076. And that was all ?—And he added, "But "there is a different state of things now, because I have "determined to come down, and this shall be a pure "election."

35,077. I am asking you about Mr. Westropp's former experience. We have had it in evidence that it cost him thousands and thousands of pounds, and yet the voters kept continually saying "give, give." Do you mean to say that he communicated to you no part of that dearly bought experience both at the corrupt election of 1865 and the election of 1859 ?—He did not.

35,078. Then what is the meaning, let me ask you in the name of truth and your oath, of this concluding sentence of your letter of the 25th September 1868, to Mr. Lilly your agent here. "But if, on the contrary, "you are of opinion that victory will be hopeless "unless by a large," that is underlined, "by a "large," not any expenditure, but "a large expendi-"ture of money and outside influence"—"outside" is underlined—"then I fear my candidature must "drop. It would not suit my position here, nor my "convenience, to go through the ordeal of which "Mr. Westropp has had experience formerly ?"—Yes, that alludes to Mr. Westropp's petition, and his being ejected from Parliament.

35,079. Then he had told you of it ?—That is the ordeal Mr. Westropp had told me of—his being turned out of Parliament.

35,080. But the "it" has reference to large expenditure of money and outside influences. I cannot see that it has reference to a solitary case, that of his being turned out ?—Well I think the letter will tell you exactly the programme on which I was prepared to come down. I was not prepared, and do most strongly state it, I was not prepared to come here to spend money illegally.

35,081. Then you have no other explanation than that to give to that question of mine ?—No, I have not.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then all I can say is, it is no explanation at all.

35,082. (Mr. Price.) If, as you stated, Mr. Westropp had informed you that he was prepared to spend 500*l.*, why in the name of fortune should you be asked to put down double that sum for legitimate expenses ?—I did not know what the legitimate expenses might be. I think it might possibly be, and would probably be——

35,083. Why were you to pay double what Mr. Westropp had to pay ?—Well, because I thought I should require to have a great deal more of the time taken up of these legal gentlemen and others connected with the borough, and that I as a new candidate should be put to a longer canvass, and a greater amount of expense.

35,084. What expense?—The expense of the legal gentleman. A legal gentleman will not give his time without money.

35,085-6. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was work for Mr. Westropp was work also for you; it was not a different thing, you were working together?—Well, I required a great deal more time and tutoring than he would require.

35,087. (Mr. Price.) You say "tutoring," do you mean to say you used to sit in the attorneys' office to be tutored?—No.

35,088. Then what do you mean by "tutoring"?—I thought as a new candidate I should take up a great deal of these gentlemen's time, more than Mr. Westropp.

35,089. How?—In canvassing.

35,090. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you canvassed together?—Yes.

35,091. Then how could one take up more time than the other candidate, Mr. Westropp?—I thought I should take up a great deal more time, and that my legal expenditure would be a great deal larger than Mr. Westropp's.

35,092. What was the whole of your expenditure in fact, of all sorts and kinds?—The whole of my expenditure from beginning to end?

35,093. Both before and after the election, and up to the present moment?—Do you mean including the petition?

35,094. No, without the petition?—The whole of my expenditure would be about 500*l.*, just about 500*l.*

35,095. Including the lawyers fees and everything?—Including the lawyers fees and everything.

35,096. (Mr. Price.) You have not spent it?—I have not spent it; at least that is to say——

35,097. You have not paid the lawyers for their tutoring?—No.

35,098. Now a statement has been made in reference to your hotel bill remaining unpaid?—My hotel bill was included, as I understood, in the expenditure which was provided for. As you are probably aware, there was money sent down, and I suppose the hotel bill was paid from that money.

35,099. (Mr. Coleridge.) By the "money sent down," you mean the deposit?—Yes, the money sent down by me.

35,100. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to swear you have not been applied to by Mr. Brice repeatedly for the payment of that hotel bill?—He has repeatedly applied to me. Allow me to say, I wrote to Mr. Brice that that bill ought to be paid, and I wrote to Mr. Westropp, and his answer was, that it had virtually been paid, as it had been returned amongst our expenses here, and I concluded that that bill would be provided for out of the money which was here.

35,101. But Mr. Brice, who knew all about the money, and provided it, told you that the money was not sufficient to pay the bill?—He never said anything of the sort.

35,102. He applied to you several times about it?—He applied to me several times about it.

35,103. He was the person who had the money?—He wrote me twice about it.

35,104. No matter whether he wrote twice or 200 times. Do you mean to say that Mr. Brice was not constantly saying that the bill was not paid, and that Mr. Leaker was pressing for it?—Yes, he told me it was not paid.

35,105. And that Mr. Leaker was pressing for it?—Yes.

35,106. And do you mean to say that he did not tell you that the money he had in hand was not sufficient to pay it?—No, he did not.

35,107. Do you mean to say that he never told you that the money he had in hand was not sufficient to pay the fees of counsel and other moneys out of pocket?—No.

35,108. That it was not sufficient to pay counsel's fees, not to speak of other expenses which would have to be settled as well as the tavern bills?—Never. I never heard so.

35,109. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know that he stated so here?—I do not know it.

35,110. How much have you actually paid, not what your liabilities are; how much have you actually paid?—I have paid altogether 500*l.*

35,111. (Mr. Coleridge.) Besides the petition?—Besides the petition.

35,112. (Mr. Price.) How did you spend that?—I send down 350*l.* here, as you are aware. I paid Mr. William Toogood some time afterwards 150 guineas.

35,113. For introducing you?—Well, for his services generally. He sent me in an account.

35,114. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many days was he here with you?—I think he makes it 25 days, and at various times he was down.

35,115. (Mr. Price.) Then 350*l.* and 150*l.* make 500*l.*?—Yes.

35,116. Then 350*l.* goes partially towards paying the return expenses. I believe the legitimate expenses amounted to 196*l.*?—Yes.

35,117. Then there would be a balance?—There would be a balance.

35,118. Go on and tell us any more you know about that election. It seems to have got abroad, Mr. Gray, that your name meant money?—I endeavoured by every means that I could to dissipate any such idea as that.

35,119. Had you found it was the prevailing idea?—No; Mr. Toogood mentioned to me once or twice that he thought money might be required, and I said immediately "I will withdraw. I will do anything, "but as to spending money illegally, I will not do so."

35,120. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did Mr. Toogood tell you that money might be required?—I think Mr. Toogood mentioned that just before.

35,121. Was it after you were down here?—Yes, it was after I was down here.

35,122. How long before the polling day?—I cannot state the date, but I have it running in my mind that it was some time before the canvassing commenced. I think so. He was here, and he told me something that led me to suppose that money might be required.

35,123. Did he tell you how much?—No, he did not.

35,124. Did he ask you, in case money should be required, whether you had made any arrangements as to sending it down?—No.

35,125. Are you sure of that?—I am certain of it.

35,126. We have heard it said that money on your side was in the town on the night before. Now, do you know anything of that?—No, most undoubtedly not.

35,127. Had you made arrangements with your bank with respect to sending down money; you say you were prepared to spend 1,000*l.*?—Yes.

35,128. You were prepared to spend 1,000*l.*?—Yes, if it could be spent legitimately or legally.

35,129. (Mr. Anstey.) Legally! you say you had no control over the expenditure?—I did all I possibly could. I said I would not spend money illegally. I laid that down in every shape and way I could.

35,130. In every shape, did you? Perhaps then the newspaper reporters do you injustice, but I have looked in vain for any clear definite statement in your speeches to the people here, in your addresses to them, to the effect, "Do not hug yourselves with the "belief that you are going to have money; though "an accredited agent of mine tells you you are going "to have money, do not believe him. I shall not pay "you if he promises you ever so much, and if he pays "you I shall not recoup him." I find no such statement in your speeches as that?—I must say that I did not know, and I did not assume the constituency were corrupt. I did not know it, and would not assume it, and I should have thought it was an insult to the electors if I had stood up and told them so.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Mr. C. W. Gray.

4 Oct. 1869.

35,131. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew the old constituency were?—I knew the old constituency were.

35,132. You knew there were some 600 or 700 of the old constituency?—Ah! but I did not know they were all corrupt.

35,133. (Mr. Price.) You were under the private tuition of the lawyers, and you were here some time under their tuition. Did not they let you into the history of the borough a little?—I heard a little of the history.

35,134. Long before the day of the polling?—Certainly.

35,135. Was it not perfectly obvious to you that the contest could not be carried on without money?—When I thought that money was likely to be required I immediately took what I supposed to be the proper step in my circumstances, and that is, I considered whether I should not retire, and, as I said just now, I went to London, and I had a consultation as to whether I should then and there retire.

35,136. (Mr. Anstey.) When was that?—That was a few days before the polling.

35,137. How many days?—I think four or five after the canvassing, and before the polling.

35,138. Was not that because you were distinctly told by Mr. Westropp, or his friends here, that unless your side paid money to voters, they would have no chance at the election in the event of the other side bribing?—Yes.

35,139. It was?—Yes; and that was the general tenour of the conversation, that if the other side spent money we should stand no chance.

35,140. And nevertheless, Mr. Gray, with that knowledge, and with that conviction, which induced you to offer to retire, you, a man of purity principles, consented after all, to waive your purpose, and to go to the poll, and to enjoy for a season a large majority of bought votes, or votes of persons who had always been bought at elections?—Well, I am sorry that the Commissioners should not give some one credit for purity principles, but I can only say I never sought a bought vote. I had always held out from beginning to end that I would contest the borough on purity principles. I said I never would spend any money whatever for the purpose of buying votes. I said I would fight the borough for what it was worth, and the result is that I lost the election.

35,141. (Mr. Price.) The result is, that your majority might have been preserved to the end of the day if there had been no money spent on the other side, but your side would have expected you to buy their votes if you came down again?—I had no conception of it at the time.

35,142. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you suppose that any men in their senses in an old borough like this, where certainly there is no political enthusiasm, if there be an enthusiasm, would send to London for one utterly unknown, not connected with the borough, not distinguished as a statesmen, or an author, famed for nothing in the world but wealth, unless he meant that that wealth (the only qualification in their eyes) was to be liberally dispensed amongst them?—I did not take that view. As I said before I merely came to fight the borough for what it was worth on certain principles, and those principles I carried out, and the result is this Commission.

35,143. (Mr. Price.) Then you never have paid anything more than you told us?—I have not.

35,144. (Mr. Coleridge.) Taking the petition and all into consideration, how much are you the worse off with regard to Bridgwater?—I paid, as far as regards the petition, 300*l.*

35,145. How much more do you expect to pay?—I really do not know; I have not heard that there is any more to pay.

35,146. At present you have not quite spent 1,000*l.*?—At present I have not quite spent 1,000*l.*

35,147. And how much are you said to be liable for; how much have you been asked for?—I have not been asked for any more.

35,148. How much besides?—I have not been asked for any more.

35,149. Mr. Brice, I think, said he was 1,000*l.* out of pocket for counsel's fees and different things, and then there is Mr. Leaker's bill?—For Mr. Leaker's bill, if I am to be liable for it, it must be added.

35,150. (Mr. Anstey.) It may be, that when some of the bills are delivered which have not yet been delivered that they may possibly disclose some item which you may not like to come out before this commission?—No, certainly not. I know of no bill.

35,151. Why is a tavern bill left unpaid until after a lapse of a twelvemonth?—I supposed it was to be provided out of the funds sent down.

35,152. You were disabused of that when the custos of the money, Mr. Brice, wrote down to say the bill ought to be paid, and there were not funds enough to pay it?—No, he did not say so. I wrote down and said, I thought Mr. Leaker's bill ought to be paid, and I wrote to Mr. Westropp to say the bill would be provided for.

35,153. Did you not tell Mr. Brice that Mr. Westropp is hanging fire; did you not use those words?—No.

35,154. That is what Mr. Brice represented as being your words, whether they were yours or not?—Most undoubtedly not. I never used such words.

35,155. On what principles, may I ask you, did you stand here, never having rendered any political services or any public services whatever at any place I believe before,—upon what principles did you come here, except upon your money?—I came here because I was desirous of doing the party a service if I could.

35,156. What party?—You must admit some one to have principles; I had certain principles; I had certain political views, and those views I wished, as far as I could, to support.

35,157. Are you sure they were your principles, or those of Mr. Lilley?—I cannot undertake to say anything about Mr. Lilley's principles.

35,158. Because by your letter here, which is the sort of precursor to your address,—it seems your address was not prepared, nor was it to be prepared unless Mr. Lilley approved of it, just as if it had been a bill of sale.

35,159. (Mr. Price.) You say by this letter, "I would leave you," that is, leaving this auctioneering man whom you had never seen in your life before?—Oh yes, I had.

35,160. Or of whom you could only have heard as being a bribery agent in 1865?—Pardon me.

35,161. You say this, "I would rather leave you "carte blanche," that is you Edward Lilly, Esq., "to "add, reduce, or alter, as you think would best suit "the sentiments and proclivities of your people"?—I am not very happy in my expressions, but I wrote an address, and sent it down, and I thought there might be some points which it might be desirable to be touched upon.

35,162. Well, but Mr. Gray, there is positive evidence, which your letter furnishes us, of your having no principles except those of Mr. Lilly. The very next sentence is this, "There are other points "which I should have touched on myself, such as "freedom for all religious denominations, the late "Reform Bill, &c. &c., but you will best know." Therefore you had cut out church and state, and reform and anti-reform, and had left him carte blanche to put them in again if he liked, or leave them out, or reduce them—I do not mean the church—but to reduce the profession of principles if it was too large, and to increase it if it was too small, exactly according to the "proclivities" of these intelligent people. I ask you, were you not really standing in the name of Mr. Lilly's principles, and not on your own?—Certainly not, most undoubtedly not.

35,163. It seems to me that that letter allows Mr. Lilly to go to the extent of writing an address for you, advocating radical principles if he pleased?—Certainly not.

35,164. It seems to me to do so?—When I saw Mr. Westropp on the subject of this letter, he put down what he supposed a Conservative ought to touch upon as applying to this Borough. I wrote an address from that, and sent it down to Mr. Lilly, and in fact said in that letter, or I meant to say as much as that, "if there is anything else you think should be said, "or anything you think should be left out, let me "know, and I will alter the address."

35,165. (Mr Price.) Did you know what position in the town Mr. Lilly occupied?—I knew he was an auctioneer.

35,166. Not knowing that he was in the habit of knocking down Bridgwater to the highest bidder?—He was not my agent, he was the first person to whom I was introduced.

35,167. He was to be your confidential address writer?—No, he was not to be my confidential address writer.

35,168. You give him carte blanche by this letter, if you understand the meaning of the word?—Yes.

35,169. To alter and amend?—To alter and amend.

35,170. (Mr. Anstey.) And add also?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I have a copy of your address here, and with the single exception of the Irish church, as far as I can judge, it might do just as well for the address of a Liberal or a Conservative, or a Whig or a Radical. This is what it says: "Gentlemen, A dissolution of "Parliament being about to take place, I venture "respectfully to solicit from you the honour of being "returned as one of your representatives to the new "House of Commons. My principles are Conservative. "As a protestant and a sincerely attached friend to "the union of church and state, I am opposed to "the threatened disestablishment of the church in "Ireland, believing, first of all, that it will be futile "to accomplish the professed object of its advocates, "and secondly, that it will be the first in a series of "measures of which the end will be the dismember-"ment of the church and the destruction of our pro-"testant institutions. At the same time, I am alive to "the fact that serious anomalies exist in the Irish "branch of the protestant church, and to the redress "of these, as well as to all other measures having for "their object the welfare of the sister kingdom, I "should, if elected, give my earnest support. The "foreign policy of the present Government has "met with the approval of both sections of politicians, "and you will doubtless agree with me that the "direction thereof cannot be intrusted to more able "hands than those of Lord Stanley. Education must, "in my opinion, form a prominent subject of legis-"lation with the new Parliament, and I should give "my hearty advocacy to every well considered "measure for promoting the spread of knowledge "and its consequent results, the diminution of "poverty and of crime. I should also advocate "strict economy in the administration of the public "finances. As a merchant and one familiar with "the details of business, I should make it my duty "to closely scrutinize the estimates brought before "Parliament, with a view to check extravagance and "lighten taxation. I will only add that your local "and individual interests will receive every attention "at my hands. I hope shortly to have the honour of "meeting you in person, and of explaining more at "length my political views."

35,171. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not use words such as those I suggested to you just now, but you use words which the Heals, and Dyers, and Allans, and Bussells of this town would perfectly comprehend, such as "individual interests"?—I can only say that it was never intended to convey a corrupt intention on my part in that address.

35,172. (Mr. Price.) What do you mean by "individual interests"?—Well I suppose every constituency has individual interests to attend to.

35,173. Did you mean to get the individual a place?—I do not mean that, but every Member of Parliament, and every person, knows that every constituency has individual interests.

35,174. What individual interests are there of a person, apart from those which are private to himself?—I cannot answer that question, I can only say that every constituency has individual interests.

35,175. (Mr. Anstey.) In fact, it means the same thing as the passage I read from your letter, "liberal "support to all your local interests," does it not?—"Liberal support to all local interests and institu-"tions" it says.

35,176. Institutions may be one thing, and interests another thing, and yet be a local interest?—I did not use words purposely to convey the meaning you put upon them. I may be a very bad writer, or a very bad address writer, but I had no such intention as that.

35,177. You knew that Mr. Westropp had been unseated for bribery of the grossest kind, leaving uninquired into about 100 more cases, equally gross, which it was not necessary to inquire into, he being already unseated?—I did not. I simply knew that he was a gentleman who had been unseated in Parliament, that is all I knew of Mr. Westropp; I knew he had been in Parliament, and had been unseated for bribery.

35,178. And you also knew of the mysterious matter of the 1,500*l.*?—I did not.

35,179. He told you, as part of his experience, that he had been ill-used in the borough, did not he?—No, I do not think I ever heard that from him.

35,180. Do you mean to say that the very first day you took up your parable in this hall, and addressed the electors, that there were not a considerable body of electors who reproached him to his face, before, or at that meeting, not only with having ill-used the borough, but doing so after having taken an angry farewell of the borough for ever and ever?—I do not catch the question.

35,181. Do you remember the meeting of the 10th October?—I do.

35,182. Do you remember a person holding up a placard which Mr. Westropp had issued before, stating he would never come down to the borough again?—No, I do not.

35,183. Do you mean to say he never told you so,—that "if it had not been for the change in the con-"stituency, I should not have come down here again"?—Undoubtedly he did.

35,184. That he had taken leave of the borough?—Undoubtedly he did,—but that it was a new constituency.

35,185. Did he tell you that they had ill-used him?—No.

35,186. That they had been ungrateful to him after all his expenditure?—No.

35,187. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

35,188. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell me?—That is all I have to tell you.

35,189. (Mr. Anstey.) You meditated leaving the borough after the nomination before the poll?—I did.

35,190. What made you think of doing that?—That was on the night of the nomination.

35,191. What made you think of leaving the borough after your nomination?—Identically the same thing as I mentioned before. Something was said about money. "We shall lose unless we spend "money—the other side is going to spend money, "and we shall lose unless we spend money."

35,192. You are aware, that on the canvass the Liberals had two promises to one that you got?—I was not aware of that, on the contrary I was told——

35,193. You, at all events, were aware that the greater number of persons did not promise you?—A great number did not promise us.

35,194. You knew, I suppose, what that meant?—Well, I cannot say. When I say "a great number," I cannot say that the majority did not promise us, because, according to the books, the majority did promise us.

35,195. If you believe the books, why should you have thought of going away, having a majority of promises, according to the books?—Because, as I said before, there was a kind of intimation that there was to be money spent on the other side, and we should lose if we did not spend money; and rather than I would spend money I decided that I would go away—that I would go away at the eleventh hour, rather than spend money.

35,196. What induced you to recede from that wise determination?—Because it was said, that, under any circumstances, we had better go to the poll. It was decided, that, under any circumstances, we should go to the poll.

35,197. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is one thing you have forgotten to tell us about, and which I think you can throw some light upon, and that is, with respect to the compromise afterwards?—Most of the negotiations with respect to that were carried on by Mr. Westropp, and through Mr. Trevor, and the legal gentlemen on the other side. I was informed of what passed.

35,198. There was one period of time, we are told, at which the project was, that you should keep your seat, and not Mr. Westropp?—That was never intimated to me.

35,199. (Mr. Anstey.) Because I asked a witness, "Why was Mr. Gray to be sacrificed and Mr. Westropp "kept?" and the answer was just the reverse, "We "were prepared to let Mr. Westropp go, and keep "Mr. Gray"?—All that negotiation was without my knowledge.

35,200. (Mr. Coleridge.) I was going to ask upon that, was it not in consequence of that, your seat being kept and Mr. Westropp's let go, that he was induced not to spend any money on that election?—No.

35,201. (Mr. Coleridge.) If no money was going to be spent by you at the last election, why should he not have been kept, as against you the younger man?

(Mr. Price.) They probably thought there was more to be got out of you in the future.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at half-past ten.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Tuesday, 5th October 1869.

PRESENT :

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

DE TRACY GOULD, Esq., Acting Secretary.

(Mr. Price.) We understand that the gaoler has here the person who was committed by us yesterday.

(The gaoler.) He wishes to express his regret, sir.

(Mr. Price to the prisoner.) What do you say ?

(Hensley.) I am very sorry for what took place yesterday, and I beg the Court to release me.

(Mr. Price.) That is very proper behaviour on your part. It is impossible for any tribunal in the world, from the most inferior in the kingdom up to the highest, to conduct its proceedings if conduct such as yours was not reprehended and dealt with signally at the time ; but as you have expressed your regret, and it was done under the impulse of the moment and not from premeditated design, we remit further punishment, and you are now discharged.

HENRY WESTROPP, Esq., recalled.

Mr. H. Westropp.

35,202. (Mr. Price.) Are you now, in conformity with our unanimous decision yesterday, as it was your bounden duty to do, prepared to disclose the names of the persons who found the money for you, and who were the means of conveying it to Mr. Tromp, on the occasion which he says it was brought and given to him at Weston-super-Mare ?—Sir, it is with exceedingly great pain that, on consideration, I find I must submit myself to your wishes.

35,203. Then you are prepared, unconditionally and absolutely, to disclose to us the name of the person or persons who found you the money, and of the person or persons who carried the money down to Weston-super-Mare, and were the means of handing it over to Mr. Tromp ?—Yes.

35,204. And at other times, of course ?—Yes.

35,205. You are prepared ?—Yes.

35,206. Unconditionally and absolutely ?—Yes.

35,207. Under these circumstances, having vindicated our authority by insisting on that, we now have to tell you that you may put down on paper the names of those various persons, with their names and addresses, distinguishing the names and addresses of the person or persons who found the money from the name and address or names and addresses of the person or persons who conveyed the money ; that we shall most undoubtedly think it our bounden duty to call before us certainly the person who found the money ; but upon your putting that down, we will retire to consider what is the particular course we shall take. I ought to add to you after that, you must put down, if you please, the degree of relationship, if any, that those people stand in to you.

[The witness wrote down on paper. The Commissioners retired. On returning into the Court.]

35,208. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Westropp, are we to understand from you that the names and addresses of the two ladies who met Mr. Tromp at Weston-super-Mare are upon this paper ?—Yes.

[The Commissioners retired. On returning into Court.]

35,209. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Westropp, are you prepared, I do not say at the moment, but will you be prepared to prove to us by evidence other than your own, that the person whom you have named here as the one who found the money had control, being a married woman, over money to an extent and with such unlimited power, that she could find that money unknown to you, and have it handed over for the purpose of your election ?—I can. I will tell you the evidence. I can give you the name of the stockbroker who placed the money for her through the funds, in the year 1861, who I believe, indeed I may say I am certain, received the dividends, appropriated them to her use, and transacted her business for her until the year 1865.

35,210. And who would have to sell out do you mean the stock to produce the money brought down to Weston-super-Mare ?—Yes.

35,211. By her directions ?—By her directions, under her responsibility, and at her request.

35,212. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was she a lady with a settlement to her own separate use ?—It was a sum of money ; there was an annuity secured by bond.

35,213. And was it settled to her own separate use ?—If you will allow me to say, it was. It was an annuity secured by bond, with the alternative of paying over 1,500*l.* in the event of its being taken up. It was taken up, and to avoid trusteeship and various other inconveniences, it was invested in the funds by the stockbroker in her maiden name.

35,214. In effect, after she got married, that would become the property of her husband, there being no settlement to her private use ?—But she was married at the time.

35,215. Then it would be her husband's and not hers, unless there was a settlement ?—The bond was given originally to secure 150*l.* a year.

35,216. (Mr. Price.) An annuity to her ?—An annuity to her.

35,217. As a married woman?—As a married woman, immediately after marriage.

35,218. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you a party to that bond?—Yes.

35,219. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you produce that bond?—When the sum of money of 1,500*l.* was paid, that bond was destroyed.

35,220. (Mr. Coleridge.) And has not that sum of money been replaced?—No.

35,221. (Mr. Price.) Then you must be good enough, if you please, to give us the name of the stockbroker and any attorney who was concerned in the preparation of the bond?—There was no attorney.

35,222. Who prepared the bond?—I did.

35,223. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got a printed form, I suppose?—I got a printed form and drew the bond from an old one.

35,224. Who were the parties to the bond? Who was the person covenanted with?—The lady.

35,225. (Mr. Price.) Some one settled an annuity upon her?—Yes.

35,226. Who was the settlor?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Was her husband the settlor?—Yes.

35,227. Then, in fact, it was a void bond?

(Mr. Price.) A bond without consideration?—The consideration was marriage, of course.

35,228. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was a post nuptial bond?—Yes.

35,229. (Mr. Anstey.) One question more which I think very material, the date of the bond?—1853, I think.

35,230. (Mr. Coleridge.) But it was after marriage?—Oh, yes.

35,231. (Mr. Coleridge.) Under these circumstances we reserve to ourselves, as I said, the right and necessity, no doubt, of calling this person before us, but in the meantime we will not say anything further about that part of the transaction, but shall require you to give the name of the stockbroker who managed this to our secretary at once, in order that we may telegraph at once to that gentleman to come down here as soon as he possibly can?—Yes, I can give the name, but his address is somewhere near the Exchange. Probably you will find it in the Directory. It may be spelt in another way from that on the paper.

35,232. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is it in Change Alley, or one of those turnings out of Lombard Street?—I think it was.

(Mr. Price.) I think we got to this point yesterday, that we had arrived at this question of the 1,500*l.* being found, and then the question was put to you which at that time you declined to answer, but which on further consideration you have avowed your full determination to answer, and therefore have submitted yourself properly to the authority of the Court. We will not go further into the question of how that money was found at present; but you will be good enough to go on with the history of the election?

35,233. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got so far as the money being taken by a lady to Mr. Tromp?—You may recollect that I said yesterday to you that there was one other thing in connexion with my evidence before the House of Commons which I have since found out very much indeed to my great annoyance and great displeasure that I stated untruly besides that one of having had Mr. Veysey to dine with me, and it is with regard to the fact of the 500*l.* which Mr. Tromp alleges was placed on the garden seat. There was a luncheon at Hodge's down at the Railway Hotel, and there were a number of supporters there. The question was then very seriously mooted as to whether or not a second candidate were not necessary. I had always opposed it, indeed hoped, that as I knew Colonel Tynte was not coming forward, that the other party would have been contented to let me remain with Mr. Kinglake as the representative; but after the lunch was over, Mr. Bealy Smith came up to me and said, "Have you got another candidate?—Can "you get another candidate?" "No," said I, "I "cannot; the only man whom I know at all likely "is a man that I do not exactly think would come "forward; and at all events if he did he would "more likely expect his expenses to be borne than "anything else." "Well," said he, "I was going to "speak to you about that, and it is necessary that you "should go up and get 1,000*l.*"

35,234. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you do what?—"If "you have a second candidate you must go and get "1,000*l.*" "Well," said I, "1,000*l.* is a good deal of "money." "Well," said he, "If you do not, I "think it is probable that you would lose the elec-"tion. The fact is this, you must have it, and lodge "it for the expenses of the candidate; it is not for "any illegal expenses, but you must have it, and "lodge it for the expenses of the candidate." I went up to London.

35,235. How long before the election?—I think about four or five days, and I brought down 500*l.*; this I gave to Mr. Bealy Smith at the railroad station.

35,236. Did he ask you how you came not to bring the 1,000*l.* you had asked for?—Oh, I told him that I could not get it.

35,237. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the 6th of July when you went up to town?—Yes, it was; I only went up once just before the election.

35,238. After having finished your canvass?—After having finished my canvass.

35,239. Did Mr. Smith go up in the same train with you?—It is Mr. Bealy Smith, not Mr. Smith; Mr. Bealy Smith was his son.

35,240. I am aware of all that. Did Mr. Smith go up to London with you?—No, he did not; he went up two days before me.

35,241. Did Mr. Bealy Smith go up with you?—No, he did not.

35,242. (Mr. Coleridge.) I understand you to say that Mr. Bealy Smith went up two days before you?—No, Mr. Smith, and Mr. John Trevor, I think it was, went up to look for a candidate, the understanding being that the 500*l.* was requisite; if a second candidate came 1,000*l.*, and not otherwise.

35,243. (Mr. Price.) Did you come down the morning after you had left Bridgwater?—The evening after.

35,244. And had you in the meantime had any communication with a man of the name of Edwards?—No, none. Mr. Edwards came after my return. I had never seen Mr. Edwards until he came here on the Saturday.

35,245. Were you aware in London that Mr. Edwards was coming down, or was coming over rather from Barnstaple?—No, I had not the least communication whatever with anybody in London. I went to my home. I resided at Chiswick, and went from Chiswick to a bank that has since failed, Bainbridge's; and from that I went to Waterlow's to have some circulars printed, and to write them, and from that I went to the Bank of England.

35,246. (Mr. Anstey.) To do what at the Bank of England?—To get money changed into gold.

35,247. How much gold?—500*l.*

35,248. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got the notes at Bainbridge's?—I got the note at Bainbridge's.

35,249. On your own cheque?—On my own cheque.

35,250. (Mr. Anstey.) Then when you came to Bridgwater you met Mr. Lilly, did not you?—No.

35,251. Or some one who told you that a placard with "Westropp and Edwards," or "Edwards and Westropp" had been circulated?—Certainly not, because allow me to say it was on the Saturday that I came down; as near as I can recollect the Town

Hall was open here, I think as near as I can recollect on the Thursday, and there was a concert here at which Sir John Shelley sat at the end, and I was sitting near him, and I went out after the first act, and went to town, and in order that it should not be known that I was gone I walked down to the station.

35,252. But you see, notwithstanding all that, it is quite consistent with it that you did see, and did you not see, placards posted in the market place having "Edwards and Westropp" upon them?—Certainly not "Edwards and Westropp."

35,253. Westropp and Edwards?—Certainly not on my return, because Mr. What's-his-name did not come down until Saturday night, and I was back on Friday.

35,254. (Mr. Price.) Then we will say Saturday or Sunday if you like?—He came on Saturday night.

35,255. Then on Saturday night or Sunday did you not see those placards posted—and I will give you a place—on the market house?—Certainly, I saw placards.

35,256. It was right under your eyes, opposite your own hotel?—Certainly, I saw placards opposite.

35,257. Who posted them, or ordered them to be posted?—I have not the remotest idea, and I am happy to have the opportunity of repeating here what I said to the Committee in the most solemn way, before persons whom I look upon almost as my own townsmen, to assure you that I had no agent at that time other than Mr. Bealy Smith.

35,258. Did not you ask Mr. Bealy Smith what was the meaning of this juxtaposition of names?—If you mean to say I was not aware that he was coming to stand with me, I was perfectly well aware of it on Saturday night.

35,259. That was long before the election?—It was the Saturday; I went to town on the Thursday night.

35,260. The election was the Wednesday following?—Yes.

35,261. Therefore, in the interval had you any conversation either in London or in Bridgwater, it does not matter which, with one Mr. Wellington Guernsey?—On the Monday I had.

35,262. Where?—In the "Clarence" Hotel.

35,263. Was Mr. Edwards present?—No, he was not.

35,264. Who else was present?—I do not think any person was; the conversation was simply this, asking me why it was that Mr. Edwards had played me so falsely.

35,265. As to go away?—As to go away.

35,266. We have heard about his going away, and that is what you asked?—That is what I asked, and nothing more.

35,267. Did you make a statement to him then about money?—Certainly not.

35,268. Now Mr. Wellington Guernsey is going to be called to state what you said on that occasion; it is fair to tell you that?—You know it is a very difficult thing after such an interval of time to say what I did say, but I will tell you what I did not say, which is, that I never mentioned the subject of money to him.

35,269. Did you allude to it?—No, certainly not.

35,270. Are you quite sure that no statement was made by you from which he could have fairly have inferred an intention on your part to fight the election with corrupt means, or that such had been at one time your intention?—No, certainly not.

35,271. He is going to appear before us?—If he were here 20 times, I could only tell exactly what is the fact, and perhaps you will allow me to say something more. When Mr. James Trevor was in town last, about three weeks ago I think it was, he said to me "You said that Mr. Richard Smith was your "agent, how could you say he was not." I said "Well, Mr. Trevor, he was not," and he said, "All "I can tell you is if he was not he did things which "savoured very much of being your agent." I said, "I am very sorry for it, what did he do?" "Oh, he "did many things." The conversation stopped there, and afterwards I said to him, "But, Mr. Trevor, "there has been an allusion made about a meeting "which was held, in which it was decided that I "was to go to the poll by a majority of one. Was "such a meeting ever held?" He said, "There was "no such meeting ever held, but," said he, "I will "tell you what, there was a meeting convened by "Mr. Richard Smith to get together the heads of the "party to decide whether it was to be a pure election "or not."

35,272. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Trevor told you that?—Mr. Trevor told me that.

35,273. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you speaking of the election of 1865?—Yes, I am perfectly convinced that Mr. Trevor never supported for one moment the idea.

35,274. We have had his evidence?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Before you go on had you any monetary arrangement whatever with Mr. Edwards?—None in the world.

35,275. (Mr. Anstey.) How came you to meet this Mr. or Major Wellington Guernsey in the dead of night?—I did not meet him in the dead of night.

35,276. At your hotel?—Pardon me, it was not in the dead of night, it was on Monday in the middle of the day when the telegrams came in from Mr. Edwards, one to Mr. Smith, another to me, and I forget to whom the third.

35,277. Do you deny that you ever had a meeting with him at night?—Certainly not, never.

35,278. Did you ever speak to him at night?—Not that I am aware of.

35,279. How came you then, putting it in your own way, to talk on such a subject to an utter stranger at all at so critical a period of your own contest?—It was simply as I tell you in consequence of the telegrams that came in and then persons denied that the telegrams could be true, because, if they were not false, this man would be away—would not be at the hotel.

35,280. What?—When the telegrams came in I for one thought it was false, that it was a ruse in fact of the other side.

35,281. To say that Mr. Edwards had gone away?—Mr. Edwards had gone away, and he brought down the telegram to me from Mr. Smith's office to prove to me it was true, and I was in the hall at the hotel, and this man there. I do not know who, indeed, pointed out to me in point of fact that the telegram might be false, because this man was remaining there, and I rather think he went off.

35,282. But I want to know how did you hear anything which put you in communication with this man?—Some person in the place—I cannot tell you who—some person in the hall mentioned this man had been in the suite of Mr. Edwards, he was there with his luggage, and went off that time in the afternoon.

35,283. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Edwards had his daughter with him?—Yes.

35,284. (Mr. Anstey.) Cannot you tell us who told you that, because every witness we have had yet has denied your having as much as seen or heard of any person coming down with Mr. Edwards?—Mr. or Major Guernsey was away more than that now I begin to call the circumstance to my mind, which, indeed, had escaped me. I think as well as I recollect he told me he had been rather a humble scholar with a schoolmaster at Cork with whom I was preparing for College.

35,285. Just so?—I think so.

35,286. You recognized him, did you not?—No, I did not.

35,287. Are you quite sure?—Perfectly.

35,288. Are you quite sure that, speaking now from your belief at this present moment, you had never met Mr. Wellington Guernsey before that?—No, never to my knowledge; certainly not.

35,289. (Mr. Coleridge.) Look at those names, and tell us of the two which is the stockbroker (Handing the names to the witness)?—I think that is it (Returning one).

35,290. (Mr. Price.) While on this matter attend to me for one moment. Who was present at the interview which you had with this Major Guernsey?—There may have been many present.

35,291. Were either of the Mr. Smiths present?—No, certainly not.

35,292. Now was there any meeting—and let me draw your attention very carefully to this—was there any meeting at the "Clarence" Hotel when you and Mr. Guernsey, and one of the Mr. Smiths were present, and had a discussion as to the price to be paid for votes?—Certainly not, sir. I will tell you who there really was there if you will allow me.

35,293. Let us get the thing quite clear?—Certainly; I never in any way whatever talked about money to Mr. Smith.

35,294. Was there any meeting at all at the "Clarence" when you were present with one of the Mr. Smiths and Mr. Guernsey at which there was a discussion; whether you took part in it or not I do not ask you, but at which a discussion took place as to the price to be paid for votes?—Certainly not.

35,295. You say that positively?—Oh, decidedly.

35,296. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember any such meeting at which anything was said, with or without discussion, by anybody as to that?—No, I do not play on the words I assure you, but I will tell you what did take place. When Mr. Edwards came down I did not know of it until very late in the evening, but there was a large number of persons, all the usual heads of the party, in the room which, I believe, you are occupying at present in the hotel, and Mr. Edwards came in, and with rather a long speech, and he said, "Gentlemen, we must win;" just so—hitting the table, "I am determined to win."

35,297. (Mr. Coleridge.) That has a signification in Bridgwater we hear?—I am afraid it has.

35,298. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you are going to say about that?—Yes.

35,299. Did you know that this Mr. Guernsey was staying as long as a fortnight at the "Clarence"?—Certainly not, I had no idea whatever. He went away in the afternoon after, nor do I believe that he was staying a fortnight. I should think I must have known it.

35,300. I have sent for Mr. Leaker?—Mr. Leaker was not there at the time, it was Mr. Longhurst.

35,301. In fairness I tell you that Mr. Guernsey has now been telegraphed to to come down, and what I have been reading to you is a note taken of what he is prepared to swear, that he was a fortnight at the "Clarence," and thoroughly learnt the whole history of Bridgwater in that time, and that during that stay of his at Bridgwater he had an interview with you and one of the Mr. Smiths, at which a discussion or conversation took place as to the price to be paid for votes?—Certainly not that I remember.

35,302. I only want it to be perfectly clear, that there may be no mistake?—Not the slightest of having any conversation directly or indirectly with Mr. Guernsey about money.

35,303. I do not put it on conversation with him?—Or being present when the things were mentioned, because I am perfectly aware I was not present with either of the Mr. Smiths and Mr. Guernsey together.

35,304. Now go on?—As I say, after the election was over I asked on the part of Mr. Smith when I was going away next day. I said, "That money I "brought down yesterday, I think you may as well "let me have the 500*l.* you know." He said, "Oh, "perhaps you had better not take it up to-day." I said, "I do not know." "Well," he said, "You had "better not, I will settle it." I came away, and asked two or three times subsequently for it, but I could get no satisfactory answer.

35,305. (Mr. Price.) I do not think you have told us where you got that 500*l.* from?—Yes, I told Mr. Coleridge just now, and I suspect—I have no reason for saying it further than the evidence of Mr. Tromp here—that that money was the money found on the garden seat. At the same time, I assure you at the time I gave my evidence in the House of Commons I was not at all aware of it, and thought it was real and true, because at the time of the election, until after the petition was determined, Mr. Bealy Smith and I had no conversation about money matters, not the least, and I was chary of asking him then.

35,306. But were you at that time in 1865 professing that you intended to fight that election on pure principles?—I never professed anything at all, never.

35,307. But you had been nursing the borough from 1859 to 1865, therefore your agent, Mr. Smith, would naturally know that you were anxious to represent the borough, and that money was no great object to you, and yet it seems when it came to the pinch you objected, and did not find for him by 500*l.* as much as he asked for. I want to know whether you can account for that in any way by saying to Mr. Smith you did not intend to find money?—Certainly not. I never spoke to him, but I did not, certainly. I never told him that I did not mean to.

35,308. (Mr. Coleridge.) That would have been fatal at once?—I think some of the witnesses have told you, as was the case at the last election, of which I shall speak presently, but I think had it been generally known that we had determined not to give anything, it is very likely great dissatisfaction would have been manifested, although I am perfectly convinced that when the push came that morning all the men went up better on the few words said to them.

35,309. Were you under the impression then that what you had been doing for those six years had made your seat sufficiently secure without illegal expenditure at the election itself?—I did think so, and Mr. Smith also told me that I was deceived, but I really did think so.

35,310. (Mr. Anstey.) You are speaking still of the election of 1865?—Yes.

35,311. Let me ask you, if that be so, why did you take the trouble to change notes, which are far more portable, into 500*l.* in gold, which is far less portable?—Mr. Smith desired me to do that.

35,312. Then, knowing Mr. Smith's notorious character, his scandalous character for every species of corruption, how came you not to suspect Mr. Smith's object in asking you to become a carrier of gold?—If you mean to say that did I not suspect, I am certainly not going to tell you here that I did not suspect.

35,313. Very well, I will ask you further. You know your expenses at the contest which was not your election in 1859 were not above 200*l.*, I think, including extra expenses?—The 200*l.* was matter of agreement. I never saw the account of that.

35,314. You had ascertained what the official accounts of the expenses of the election of 1865 were before you gave your evidence in the House of Commons?—Yes.

35,315. Otherwise you could not have referred to them?—Certainly.

35,316. Were not they far short of that one sum of 500*l.* in gold, which you had brought down yourself to the borough, the sum stated in the official account of your expenses in the borough to which you refer in your evidence; was not the sum set down there as the sum total infinitely short of even the 500*l.* you had brought down?—I should imagine so.

35,317. Not half the amount?—I should certainly say so.

35,318. I have it here?—I should certainly say so. I cannot tell you how much, but I know they were.

35,319. Yet you, with the suspicion which you justly entertained of Mr. Smith, and the caution you had taken at his instance to change your notes into gold to the large amount of 500*l.*, nevertheless told the Committee of the House of Commons not merely on your oath, but added, upon your honour as a gentleman, you neither paid nor meant to pay one farthing more than was represented by that absurd thing called the election agent's statement of account, and furthermore that you had not entered into any engagement or promise of any kind to do so?—I am exceedingly obliged to you for putting it in that way, and I will tell you exactly. That 500*l.* which I stated about, until Mr. Tromp gave his evidence here the other day, and I read it, I was perfectly under the idea that it went to pay, with a vast number of sums, for the election without being specifically devoted to the purpose of bribing.

35,320. (Mr. Price.) Went to pay what kind of liabilities do you mean?—I do not understand. As I go on afterwards I will tell you the various sums I paid to Mr. Smith, which amount to a very considerable sum.

35,321. But the question is this, you are asked by the House of Commons, or rather you volunteer a statement, that you had paid and would pay nothing beyond the legitimate expenses. Now the legitimate expenses, so far as the House of Commons can recognise them, are those which are returned through the election agents, and those expenses will be nothing like 500*l.*; but you had at that time full knowledge that you had brought down 500 sovereigns from London, and that could not be legitimate expenses?—Yes, at the time I said that to the House of Commons, in the first place that 1,500*l.* was certainly not mine, therefore I passed that over, but for the 500*l.*, I was not at all under the impression that it had been said I could get no account of it.

35,322. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then do you mean to say you knew about the 1,500*l.*, but drew the distinction between its being some one else's and your own?—No, I told you that.

35,323. (Mr. Anstey.) I will read to you the questions and answers. I have them here in this book. You must not be under the least misapprehension from want of memory as to what you said. You were not asked anything about corrupt practices, but you were asked the question itself in the most general form, and in the way I suggested to you just now, "more money than appeared in the official returns"?—I did not spend it.

35,324. Now this is the question of Mr. Serjeant Sleigh, no doubt under your instructions?—No, excuse me.

35,325. It is question 1662, and do not interrupt me whilst I read it: "Upon your honour," that is, your counsel says it, "as a gentleman and a Member "of Parliament, and upon your oath, did you expend "one shilling more in the course of this election than "the sum which is returned by the returning officer?" "—Certainly not." Then question 1663 is, "Or "enter into any bargain, promise, or engagement to "pay any further sum than that which is returned as "the sum of your legal expenses?—Certainly not." Nothing about corrupt practices?—Certainly; and I did not expend it.

35,326. (Mr. Price.) That is the reason I asked you again not to depart from the question. You brought 500*l.* down from London?—Yes.

35,327. And you handed 500 sovereigns over to Mr. Smith?—Yes.

35,328. That with a shrewd suspicion, as you say, that it was going to improper practices, how could you declare as a man of honour that you had not paid?—Expended it is.

35,329. (Mr. Anstey.) Or entered into any engagement?—No, I had not.

35,330. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you mean, giving Mr. Smith is expending?—Because it had not been expended.

35,331. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean when you used the word "expending" you did not think handing it over to Mr. Smith to expend was an expenditure by you?—Yes, certainly; in that light it was not spent.

35,332. But it was spent?—Pardon me, I did not know it.

35,333. It was spent as far as you were concerned; it was given; it had left your hands, and was spent as a matter of fact, and you took care not to inquire because you had a suspicion how it was going to be spent; but do you mean to say, when you answered those questions to the House of Commons, you were quibbling—I can use no other expression—about the word "expending," and because you handed it over to Mr. Smith with the fullest power to deal with it as he liked, therefore you did not consider it an expenditure by you, is that what you mean to say?—Yes; but do not you see that was not to be used unless there was a second candidate.

35,334. (Mr. Coleridge.) You should have added that to the House of Commons to make yourself clear.

(Mr. Price.) You should have added that, if you mean to say now you thoroughly believed at that moment when you swore, that that sum of 500*l.* had never been used by Mr. Smith. If you really believed that honestly at the time, that would account for making that solemn declaration?—I did, that was it; and I did believe it.

35,335. I understand you now, and if you had, you ought to have taken very good care before you answered in that solemn manner to have assured yourself of the fact from Mr. Smith?—But I did.

35,336. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever asked him to give that sum back?—Yes, I did over and over again.

35,337. You did not get it?—I did not.

35,338. (Mr. Price.) What did he say?—He made an evasive answer. It never was said that it was spent. I may have been wrong in saying that the expenditure was not the fact, my giving it to Mr. Smith, but it was not.

35,339. (Mr. Price.) You are explaining a very serious matter indeed, that you were at the time you made this solemn declaration you mean to say under the false impression that that money which you had handed over to Mr. Smith had not been spent by him? I was perfectly convinced of it.

35,340. How were you convinced?—Because Mr. Bealy Smith told me on the day of the election it had not been spent.

35,341. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he tell you so the day after?—The day after the election.

35,342. After the election?—When I was going to town after the election.

35,343. (Mr. Price.) Told you deliberately the 500*l.* had not been spent?—Yes.

35,344. Do you mean to say that?—Yes, I do.

35,345. (Mr. Anstey.) Remember we are speaking of April 1866?—Yes, quite right; he told me the day after the election.

35,346. The 18th April 1866 you were examined on oath before the House of Commons?—Yes.

35,347. And as your counsel rashly, in my opinion, says,—— ?—Well, I think so, sir, for I never authorized him.

35,348. Now on oath and on honour you were asked these questions, which you have answered,

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

Now is it or is it not the fact that in the meantime, the 7th February that year, there had been a petition to the House of Commons, the petition against your return, setting forth something with the particulars of something like 110 separate cases, or more than that, of bribery of the grossest kind charged against you personally or against your agents, you are aware of that, of which number of cases only two or three were actually examined into by Mr. Baxter's committee, which broke off the inquiry after unseating you, and so predisposed matters for that election, which has had, I do not hesitate to say, fatal and deplorable consequences for the last three or four weeks. Do you mean to say, when you were told of these 110 cases, which the evidence charged against you personally or your agents, that you did not ask your respectable friends, Mr. Lilly and the two Smiths, "Is this petition true, or are any "of its statements true?" Do you mean you never asked them that question?—Mr. Lilly had never anything to do with that petition, and Mr. Smith was paralysed at that time.

35,349. Did you not ask your trusty friend, Mr. Smith, from whom you had received so much kindness, whether it was true or not?—He was paralysed.

35,350. Mr. Richard Smith was not paralysed till the trial was on?—Yes he was.

35,351. Put out of the question altogether Mr. Richard Smith, and his paralysis, which seems to be a very convenient thing, it comes and goes as the occasion requires. Did you ask Mr. Bealy Smith?—I asked him about the two statements with respect to Staples and Cooze.

35,252. Why did you, on hearing of 110 cases, in February 1866, pick out those very two cases which were first inquired into by the Commons in the month of April?—Because we knew they were the fatal ones.

35,353. Who knew?—Mr. Smith knew, and he said to me they were the cases that would upset me.

35,354. He first spoke to you about the matter?—Yes. He naturally talked to me about our winning and losing, and he told me that Staples' and Cooze's case, or at least Cooze's, would be a very bad case, because it had been alleged that it had been done by his clerk.

35,355. By Smith's clerk?—Yes, but he never said to me whether the cases were true or false.

35,356. No; but he told you of their existence, and you knew there were 108 or 110 other cases?—I did not know whether they were true or false, and he never told me. I am a man who has gone a great deal through the world, and I blindly put faith in what Mr. Smith told me.

35,357. Did you never hear of what are called the "particulars" delivered of cases on which the other side meant to rely?—I did not at the time, but I have heard of them since.

35,358. What do you mean by "at the time"?—Not at the time when my election was over, nor did I know very much about them until the last.

35,359. Until the last what?—Until this last petition.

35,360. Here is the petition. It is couched in the usual terms you know, and it charges you in the usual terms with having done it personally, and through your agents, making it thereby your duty to inquire, and see whether your name had been abused in the way described. And then came the particulars, which said that it had been abused in from 110 to 120 cases?—I say on my honour, that I never spoke to him except on that occasion with regard to that petition itself.

35,361. I am referring to the fact, that on the 26th April 1866, when you were giving your evidence in the House of Commons, you had had an opportunity of hearing, as I have no doubt you did hear, all, or nearly all the evidence that had been given before the Committee, referring to the other fact which you must take in connexion with that, that you were yourself perfectly aware then, that with the suspicion that Mr. Bealy Smith wanted it for the purpose of bribery, you had yourself raised the large sum of 500*l.*, more than double what was wanted for an honest expenditure, that you had gone to the Bank of England and got it changed into gold, under the same suspicion as to the reason why it was wanted to be changed into gold, and you had handed it over without condition into the hands of the most corrupt fellow in Bridgwater; and, against that, you had nothing but the assurance, which you must have known, coming from a bribery agent, was worth nothing at all, that it had not been spent. Do you mean to tell me you thought that sufficient to justify you in making, in the presence of the Committee of the House of Commons, the statement you did, as a gentleman upon your honour, and as a witness upon your oath?—Well, sir, in the first place, excuse me for saying that I did not hand that money over without condition to Mr. Smith. I handed it over to him, under the supposition that it was not to be used unless there was a second candidate, and for legal expenses.

35,362. (Mr. Price.) Unless there was a second candidate?—Unless there was a second candidate. In the next place, if you look at the way in which that question was put to me, it was asked whether I had a suspicion, or the least idea that bribery was going on. I had no more idea about it than I have now; I had a suspicion.

35,363. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long after the election was it that you knew about the 1,500*l.*?—Not till after the petition.

35,364. (Mr. Price.) You say that after the election Mr. Smith told you that 500*l.* had not been expended. Did you never make it your business to inquire, from that time down to the time the petition was tried before the Election Committee of the House of Commons, whether that 500*l.* had been spent or not?—I have told you so two or three times that I asked him about it.

35,365. And what did he say?—He gave an evasive answer.

35,366. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever speak to Mr. Trevor and the other lawyers about it?—Certainly not. Mr. Smith had the entire management.

35,367. (Mr. Price.) Who was the Smith to whom you gave the 500*l.*?—Mr. Bealy Smith.

35,368. Then the paralysis had nothing at all to do with it?—Oh no, not at all.

35,369. Then you say that Mr. Bealy Smith always in the first instance denied that the money had been spent, he positively denied that?—Certainly.

35,370. And then afterwards, when you asked him if it was spent, did he give you an evasive answer?—Yes.

35,371. We are in this difficulty: your counsel, you say, were not instructed to put these questions, but he must have been instructed to put them by Mr. Bealy Smith?—I do not know whether he was or was not. I think, as well as I recollect, I was asked whether I had any objection to go into the chair, and I said, "No, certainly not."

35,372. As we know, it is almost the universal thing when there is a charge of bribery against a candidate for the candidate to be called, if no other person is called, to clear himself from any personal complicity in the matter; therefore, naturally, you would have had to go into the box, but you were not aware beforehand that questions were going to be put to you in that form?—Certainly not.

35,373. However, they were put in that form, and you say now that the state of your belief of what Mr. Bealy Smith said to you justifies you in giving those answers?—Yes.

35,374. (Mr. Anstey.) Then, Mr. Westropp, Mr. Bealy Smith was a lawyer, was not he?—Yes.

35,375. Then how do you reconcile your answers to-day with your answer before the Committee of the House of Commons to question 1967? In answer to a question about payment made to lawyers, you say, "Upon my honour, as a gentleman, I can say no more "than that I have neither paid nor have agreed to "pay anything, and I believe I am not to pay one "shilling to them; I can say no more than that." You yourself admit now that you had paid 500*l.* to one of them, to Mr. Bealy Smith, the worst of them all; worse than Mr. Veysey, a great deal?—I think the question is No. 1967, is it not? "Is it usual at "Bridgwater for all these professional men to be so "earnest in a cause that they go out canvassing like "this, without being paid for it?"

35,376. (Mr. Price.) You say to that, "No; I "have neither paid nor have agreed to pay any-"thing?"—I did not pay more than that. I never saw an account.

35,377. You were in this position: 500*l.* you had handed over in sovereigns to Smith?—Yes.

35,378. Smith told you, the day after the election, that that had not been spent, and you asked him several times afterwards, you say, about it, and he gave you evasive answers; then, you took upon yourself to state to the House of Commons that you had not paid, and did not intend to pay, one single shilling. Now, at that time, you knew perfectly well that Mr. Smith had 500*l.* of yours, that he was your legal agent, and that he had refused to account to you for it?—Yes; but was I to suppose that he was going to spend that 500*l.*?

35,379. The question is, what you paid to the lawyers. Do you think that was a clear, candid, and true statement of the money matters as they stood between you and your legal agents? If you ask me what you should have said, I should say you ought to have had no hesitation in saying, "Smith has 500*l.* of "mine, which he has never accounted for." That is what you should have said at once, without scruple, when you were asked that question. If you ask me what you should have done, I say that is certainly what I should have advised you to have said, if I had been your counsel?—What I understood the question to be was, whether any arrangement had been made as to their fees.

35,380. (Mr. Anstey.) No. You are aware that those questions were put to you in the most searching, painful, and prolix form by counsel in cross-examining you, the last set of questions, I mean, about the lawyers. You are perfectly aware that they cross-examined you about that very closely indeed?—I did not engage those lawyers.

35,381. Are you not aware, that the way in which they closely cross-examined you about that was because the unequivocal, temperate, frank, and truthful answers which you gave in the examination-in-chief to the two questions put by Mr. Sleigh must have led them to think that it was impossible to cross-examine you upon the other part of your statement, namely, that you never had paid any election expenses beyond those contained in the official return, and consequently that they had nothing left for them to cross-examine you upon other than your statement which was less clear, namely, as to your having employed lawyers to act for you. Are you not aware that they forbore to cross-examine you upon the general statement you made with regard to your not having paid any election expenses beyond those contained in the official report, and only cross-examined you upon your statement with regard to the lawyers?—I am not a barrister, and I cannot say what ought to be done.

35,382. Are you not aware that you were not cross-examined at all upon those two answers of yours which I read to you, which you gave to Mr. Sleigh, when he asked you to speak on your honour as a gentleman and a member of Parliament, as well as upon your oath, and having made those two unequivocal answers, you are aware, are you not, that upon those two answers no cross-examination whatever on the part of the opposing counsel took place?—There was no cross-examination, sir, but if you will have the kindness to refer to the report, you will find that there is a little interposition by Mr. Powell, after question 1661. You will see Mr. Powell stated that that was not alleged in the petition, and there was no such allegation made. Now I should think that would account pretty well for there being no cross-examination made upon those two answers.

35,383. No, it would not account for there being no cross-examination with respect to answers which came after that interposition. That relates to a preceding question, and not to these two answers?—Yes. But do not you see——

35,384. Do not you know yourself, without being a barrister, that when a person who is not supposed to be anything but a man of truth states upon such high sanctions as those as a man of honour and a member of Parliament, not to speak of the sanction of the oath itself, that a state of things exist, or has existed, which seems to exclude cross-examination altogether, to make it impossible, or to make it useless, that the natural conclusion which must come to the barrister's mind is, "I must not cross-examine upon that, as it will be of no use." Do not you know that?—Mr. Price's suggestion to me what I ought to have done sets the whole thing right in my mind.

35,385. (Mr. Anstey.) There is no suggestion made at all.

(Mr. Price.) If you ask me, I am not bound to tell you, but I said, if you had intended to give the fullest information to the Committee, that upon being probed upon questions of that kind, I should have thought, in my judgment, that you ought to have mentioned to the Committee that "there is one sum of 500*l.* "which my legal agent has had, which he has not "accounted for, and which he says he has not "expended?"—Perhaps I am wrong in not having stated it.

35,386. It seems obvious to any man of common sense that that is what you ought to have stated?—The idea floating in my mind was, that he had not paid it.

35,387. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told me just now you did not know of this 1,500*l.* until after the election petition. Did the lady who advanced that money tell you about it herself?—I cannot remember.

35,388. Did you also hear how it came to her knowledge that 1,500*l.* was the amount of money that would be required? How came she to advance 1,500*l.*? Who suggested to her the necessity for it?—I cannot say.

35,389. I mean to say that a lady in her position is not very likely to know that 1,500*l.* was wanted in Bridgwater, without its being communicated to her by somebody. Who was the person who communicated to her and enabled her to find out that 1,500*l.* would be a very acceptable present to you?—I cannot answer exactly, but I have no doubt it was through Mr. Bealy Smith.

35,390. Had she been in communication with Mr. Bealy Smith at the time?—Oh, when he came to town he dined with me, I have no doubt.

35,391. (Mr. Anstey.) I will return to what I was examining you upon just now, with reference to your former evidence. Was it correct what you stated just now to the learned Chief Commissioner, that you were called before the Committee of the House of Commons just in the way in which candidates or sitting members are called when their names are mentioned. Is it not the fact that, on the contrary, you were the principal witness in defence of your own seat, the questions put to you, ranging from question No. 1,580 down to question 2,003,—you have the report there before you—you were therefore a principal witness?—Of course in the nature of things.

35,392. Did not your counsel, Mr. Sleigh, take you right through the election from first to last, and obtain evidence from you in contradiction or explanation of the evidence of witnesses who had been examined during those two days, the first days of the trial?—Let me clearly understand your question. Did he take me through it at the time of the trial of the petition, or did he take me through it previously to putting me in the chair?

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

35,393. No, when you were examined in the chair. You have got the questions before you. You allowed the Chief Commissioner to remain under the impression that you were called in the usual way, namely, because you were a sitting member. Now, was it not the fact, that you were called because you were a principal witness, and to rebut Staples's case, Cooze's case, and Veysey's case?—No, certainly not.

35,394. Why, were not all the questions put to you for that purpose?—Mr. Sleigh did not put any questions to me till I was put in the chair.

35,395. You know what I mean. You have read through all your evidence lately, which is contained in that report you have now before you I suppose?—Yes.

35,396. And you affirm it all through, except as to two statements. Now, having read it all through lately, I ask you (your memory being refreshed by that recent perusal), is it not the fact that you were called as a principal witness to answer a number of questions which affected the credit and the statements of witnesses who had been called in the preceding two days in support of the petition against you?—I cannot say that I was called as the principal witness. I was called there, and asked questions which would have the tendency to rebut (if believed) anything that might have been given in evidence against me.

35,397. Have you the index there?—Yes.

35,398. If you have the index there, you will see that the analysis of your evidence commences with the history of your defeat in 1859; the conduct of your supporters in the interval, and your enthusiastic reception in Bridgwater; the meeting of your supporters at the "Clarence" Hotel; the fact, real or fanciful, of your having a committee; of your having attended committee meetings; your having Mr. James Trevor for agent; Mr. Smith, junior, that is the Mr. Bealy Smith, as unpaid professional agent, and Mr. Smith, senior's positive refusal to act for you; the persons who accompanied you by name in your canvass; in particular Mr. Boys' authority with regard to you; Mr. Veysey's authority with regard to you; the case of the voter Cooze; your own accounts and expenses; the case of Mr. Stroud; the case of Mr. Lilly; the nature of the support given to you by old Mr. Smith, the pawnbroker; the nature of the support given to you by William Pimm of the "Golden Lion;" the nature of your knowledge with regard to public houses, committee rooms, committees; the fact of your having been accompanied by Mr. Heal; the nature of your connexion with Mr. Edwards; and the nature of your connexion with the two other Smiths, as well as the point, not that it is an important one, except as affecting your credit, of your actually having invited Veysey to dine with you, an invitation which you deny. That is the analysis of your evidence; and after my having taken the trouble to read it to you, will you now say you were not a principal witness for the defence of your own seat on that occasion?—Oh, certainly. I was called in support of the seat, and was turned out.

35,399. Then why did you not say so at once. Now let me go a little further, and then I shall have done with it. Mr. James Trevor and Mr. John Trevor, I believe, constituted then, as now, the firm of Trevor, did not they?—Yes.

35,400. They were both highly respectable men?—Decidedly so.

35,401. They had no part in this case of the 500*l.*?—Oh no, certainly not.

35,402. Or any other case that smelt even from afar of corruption?—I am not aware of it.

35,403. And you did not place in them any more confidence than that which you have described in your evidence before the House of Commons, namely, that he was merely your election agent, that is, the official agent?—Yes.

35,404. But that your professional agent, who acted for you in the general politics of the election, was this Bealy Smith?—Yes.

35,405. And you further stated—I wish to get rid of all mention of the Trevors at once—and you also stated that Mr. John Trevor in particular was very seldom with you, and a very "slow coach," and that he had not been with you altogether above three or four times?—Exactly so.

35,406. Then I may take it for granted, having refreshed your memory, that with the proceedings which we now know to be most reprehensible at that election, there is not the slightest pretence in the world to connect that highly respectable firm of gentlemen?—Decidedly not. Will you allow me to make one observation upon that expression "slow coach," because that has been the subject of great talk.

35,407. I think it is a compliment to him rather than anything else?—It was from a physical defect that he laboured under that I used that expression. It was simply from the fact of his having bad legs. If you will kindly refer to the report, you will see I state so and so was out with me—yes or no, according as the case might be; and then it was said I said Mr. Trevor was a "slow coach," and he was a "slow coach" because he did break down.

35,408. I am not going into a critical examination of the course of the cross-examination, but it proceeded, as my present examination of you is now proceeding, as to which of the gentlemen in Bridgwater had kept themselves with you, and which of them had kept themselves aloof from you. Now I will go on. Mr. Brice has told us in like manner, plainly, not by inference but plainly, that there was not any confidence imposed by him in you, nor by you in him?—On the contrary, I have had great confidence in Mr. Brice; but whether he reciprocated it I do not know.

35,409. I mean that kind of confidence which manifests itself by the outward and visible sign of employment?—Mr. Bealy Smith acted for me.

35,410. Is it not the fact that Mr. Brice did not act for you in the way of employment?—In 1865.

35,411. Yes?—Quite right. Mr. Bealy Smith and Mr. Brice were by no means friends at that time——

35,412. I am only proceeding now, as schoolmen say, via remotionis, that is, by way of exhaustion. Now Mr. Ruddock took little or no part?—In canvassing with me?

35,413. In canvassing with you, and in what you call in your own language the general politics of the election, which were handed over to the man Bealy Smith, he took no part?—I believe not.

35,414. I really forget whether I have gone through all of them?—Mr. Auber, Mr. Ruddock's partner, carefully avoided it.

35,415. Mr. Veysey, on the other hand, canvassed along with you?—No, excuse me.

35,416. He swears himself he did?—No, excuse me, he did not, except on one or two occasions.

35,417. Well then he did, if that is the case?—Yes, but he was not habitually with me. I remember he did on one occasion in Barclay Street.

35,418. Then he did canvass with you?—Certainly not.

35,419. You say "Excuse me, sir," as witnesses generally do here in Bridgwater, and it turns out he did canvass with you on certain specified occasions, and he also dined with you at the "Clarence" when other specified parties were there; you are aware of that?—I am aware of that.

35,420. He had been examined before the Committee before you had been examined?—No, he had not.

35,421. At all events, some of his victims had been examined, or his intended victims. I will tell you of one, Mr. Osborne, and also his daughters, the Misses Osborne?—Yes.

35,422. And it was very material for Mr. Veysey to show he was not your agent; because there were two highly respectable young ladies, and their highly respectable father, who gave evidence on the first day, who clearly convicted Mr. Veysey of having attempted to bribe the father. There is also evidence of his having been a party to the two cases, which you yourself say were of a most dangerous character, namely, the two who were commenced with, and found by the Committee to have been upheld; I mean, the cases of Cooze and Staples; and in both of those cases Mr. Veysey was proved by witnesses who swore to it to have been concerned together with Mr. Boys. Now when you made your statement with regard to Veysey, I ask you, in so many words, to tell me, in answer to the question I am going to put to you, was it not your object, in repudiating as you did Mr. Veysey, to get rid of the liability which Mr. Veysey's agency would certainly have cast upon you if you had admitted it?—My object was to show that Mr. Veysey was not my agent, decidedly.

35,423. I take it for granted, and I say nothing more about it?—Decidedly.

35,424. Mr. Veysey's evidence was not believed by the Committee?—I believe not.

35,425. In two points of view they did not believe him in what he deposed against Mr. Kinglake, because they seated Mr. Kinglake; and they did not believe him in what he deposed in favour of you; and his evidence took the same form that Boys' evidence took, because they found there were proved against him those two very cases of bribery which he denied having had anything to do with, and which you said Mr. Bealy Smith had admitted to you before the trial as being very serious cases?—Oh, most certainly.

35,426. The only other lawyer you appear to have had on your side is this same man, Bealy Smith; that is the only other lawyer I believe?—Yes.

35,427. Did it not strike you then, at the election, or if not at the election at all events at the election trial the year afterwards, that there must have been something very suspicious about a circumstance like this, that the only respectable lawyers on your side held themselves aloof from you, beyond giving you a general political support; whereas those who were willing to be taken to your bosom were men of such evil reputation and antecedents as Mr. Bealy Smith and Mr. Veysey?—Will you allow me to answer that in extenso? The reason I employed Mr. Richard Smith was this: as I told you in the first instance, he had been exceedingly kind to me during six years. I had been frequently dining, and staying at his house, and several persons told me I had no business to remain at Mr. Richard Smiths so long as I did; and, consequently, I stayed at the hotel. But I am sorry to say, both the Mr. Smiths are men of very bad temper, so that it was exceedingly difficult for them to get on with the other attorneys on that side; and I remember a very serious difference occurring between Mr. Brice and them, as I dare say Mr. Brice will tell you, if he is here, in the middle of the election. I believe it was on coming up from Hodges's from dinner. Mr. Brice had a very serious difference with them. He could not get on with them in any way. To prove that Mr. James Trevor had acted as an agent, when he was in town before the election he told me that he and the heads of the party had come together to determine as to whether my election was to be pure or not. I do not know who the heads were; and although these lawyers may not have ostensibly gone about and worked for me, as they did subsequently, it is not to be inferred from that that they disliked me or would have nothing to do with me.

35,428. If you were sincere in your wish that there should be no money spent beyond the legal expenses,—I can scarcely help smiling in putting such an hypothesis—why did you not from the windows of the "Clarence," which command the market place, putting aside men like Veysey and Bealy Smith, and all your other evil advisers, why did you not as a man of sense address the electors before you, the voters, the strangers, the mob, and tell them, "My "election is coming on next week, but I warn you "beforehand, notwithstanding what other people may "say to the contrary, not a penny shall be spent by "me in corruption; and whatever promises are made "by my agents, or anybody else in my name, or on "my behalf, I will not keep those promises, and if "money is paid by them, remember, it will not come "from me, nor will they be recouped the money they "may pay. I will not pay a farthing in bribery, and "we will have a pure election, and pit a Conservative "against a Liberal." If you had done that you would have been either defeated with honour, or have been gloriously returned?—Mr. Anstey, I am perfectly certain, from my own personal knowledge and experience, that that is the way you have always conducted yourself in elections in which you have been concerned.

35,429. That is precisely so?—I know it is. I am a native of Cork, which is near the place which you represented, and I know you have so conducted yourself; but it is not because you have so succeeded and rightly succeeded upon those principles that they would be successful everywhere. The old constituency of Bridgwater, I am sorry to say, had been so in the habit of receiving money, that if I had proclaimed upon my coming down here, that I did not intend to spend any money, I might as well have gone back at once, as my chance of winning the election would have been utterly hopeless. It is a different thing with the new constituency. The new constituency is a very very different thing from the old, very different. I know there are influences to be brought to bear, not monetary, such as that exercised by the employers of labour in this place.

35,430. (Mr. Price.) What does it matter what are the influences if it cannot be a free election?—Very well.

35,431. What does it matter if there cannot be a free exercise of the franchise by the voters; what does it matter whether there are 1,000 or 10,000 of them, or whether it is done by bribery or undue influence? Some people think that if done by undue influence it is nothing. You have had it in evidence from persons of respectability, that they believe the influence of employers is used by the employers in this way, and that it does prevent the free exercise of the franchise in this town. Now, if that be so, if the employers are Liberal, and it so happens that the employers in this town are Liberal, they might attempt to force a Liberal down the throats of the constituency; and supposing the tables were turned in the course of years and the employers became Conservative, they would then equally tend to thrust a Conservative down the throats of the constituency. It does not matter whether it is old Bridgwater or new Bridgwater, there never can be, under those circumstances, a free and independent exercise of the franchise.

(Mr. Anstey.) And besides that, unless the impression can be destroyed, that there may be money going on the part of the candidates, does it not strike you that there may be hundreds of votes secured, not by any promise, but through an expectation, which any honest candidate would at once dissipate into thin air; do not you see that?—I am sure you will not think it is any pleasure to a candidate to spend money.

35,432–3. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not quite finished about this money matter. You say, in a conversation after the election, you heard money had come down here?—Yes.

35,434. Had you heard the means by which it had come?—I knew all about it afterwards.

35,435. And all about Mr. Tromp, and so on?—Oh yes.

35,436. How soon after the election did you see Mr. Tromp, to speak to him as to what he had done?

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

—I never spoke to him in my life, except when Mr. Bealy Smith passed as a solicitor, and Mr. Bealy Smith was so overjoyed at his having passed a very good examination, that he asked some of his friends to dinner at the Charing Cross Hotel.

35,437. And you went?—Yes. After dinner Mr. Tromp sang a very good song. I asked who he was, and they told me it was Mr. Tromp. I then sat down beside him, and complimented him on his song.

35,438. And thanked him for his good service?—How could I thank him for his good service?

35,439. You did not know of it?—Oh no, no. This was in the year 1862, I think.

35,440. You say probably that the lady who found this money did so at the instigation of Mr. Bealy Smith?—It may be so.

35,441. How long before the election of 1865 had Mr. Bealy Smith been to your house?—I cannot say.

35,442. Within a week?—No.

35,443. Within six months?—I cannot say.

35,444. If it was done, it must have been done by letter?—How can I say anything about it?

35,445. You would probably know whether Mr. Bealy Smith had been in your house at all?—Mr. Bealy Smith had been constantly dining with me.

35,446. When was the last time before the last election that he had been in your house and met this lady?—I cannot say.

35,447. Had he been there a week before?—No.

35,448. Or a month before?—That carries out the story about pulling the hairs out of the horse's tail. I cannot say. It might have been a month before, I cannot tell.

35,449. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell me whether the lady in question either did meet, or might have met Mr. Bealy Smith somewhere out of London?—I cannot answer that. Certainly she could have.

35,450. What is your belief?—I have no belief about it, because I cannot go upon a thing upon which I have no premises to go, and I had not the slightest hint, except after the time I mention.

35,451. Were you aware that she had ever been to Weston-super-Mare about the time in question?—I should imagine not.

35,452. Or at Burnham?—I should imagine not.

35,453. Should you imagine that she had ever met Mr. Tromp before the time they met at Bayswater?—I should say not before that introduction, or the negotiations were entered into that have been spoken about. It may be. I see Mr. Tromp speaks of her having been several times at his house.

35,454. But my question has reference to her knowing him, not as to his knowing her. Might she have seen him, or have had him pointed out to her?—I should think not.

35,455. She had no opportunity?—I should think not.

35,456. How long before the election was it that Mr. Bealy Smith mentioned that Mr. Tromp was to be employed?—I could not know anything about the man until after the election; I could know nothing about him. To say that I knew about him would be to say I knew all about it.

35,457. Did any man ever say anything to you about employing him?—I cannot say anything at all about it.

35,458. Did Mr. Bealy Smith ever say anything to you about employing a man, not for bribery, but a useful man?—Not a word.

35,459. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever heard from the lady who advanced this money up to the present time the circumstances under which she was induced to advance this money to you?—No, I have not.

35,460. I mean who came to her? Had you suggested it to her?—No, I had not.

35,461. Had you suggested to her that money must go down to Bridgwater?—Nothing further than that; of course the character of the old constituency being known, I talked of it in that way.

35,462. Have you in talking to her said to her, "It will be necessary by hook or by crook to have "some money at the next Bridgwater election"?—No. If I were to say that it would be the same as saying that I contemplated the fact of bribery.

35,463. But you adopted it if you did not contemplate it?—I was under the foolish impression that I should be returned.

35,464. But I mean what induced that lady to advance the 1,500*l.* to Mr. Bealy Smith, and through Mr. Tromp, to be brought into the borough to secure your return? What brought her mind to that state?—It is a hard thing to say what brings a lady's mind into any state. That is all I can say.

35,465. Who suggested it to her?—I cannot say. We have hardly ever spoken to one another when we have met; it is a sort of tabooed subject between us.

35,466. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing this was a pure borough, or the amount of its impurity had not been known to her, would she, do you think, have raised the 1,500*l.*, or 500*l.*, whatever the sum may have been?—Until the case has arisen, I cannot say what she would do.

35,467. You must know whether it was arranged with her at all. How else would she know that money would have to be spent?

(Mr. Price.) I thought you said you had no doubt that she had been in communication with Mr. Bealy Smith as to the amount which would be required?—I said, I think so.

35,468. (Mr. Anstey.) I think the unhappy ignorance in which she seems to have kept you as to her sources of information, and her sources of advice, and as to the influences which have been brought to bear upon her in order to induce her to raise this large sum of money secretly to you, and in confidence with this fellow Bealy Smith, will make it necessary for me, I am afraid, as one of the Commissioners, to require our Secretary to summon her, for the purpose of her being examined here before us, unless you can tell us something about the subject which will leave no doubt upon our minds. In the meantime, you may look at this—this is the official document that I spoke of, containing that statement of legal expenses, which you know you represented in the House of Commons to be no more than you spent. It is signed, "James Trevor, Election Agent." Read it out, the sum total (handing the document to the witness)?—189*l.* 9*s.* 0*d.* Perhaps, if you will allow me to make a statement, however unwilling I may be, I dare say many persons here know who it is, therefore, if you will allow me to make the entire statement, it will save you the trouble of sending for the lady.

35,469. (Mr. Price.) Certainly. We will adjourn now, and hear your statement when we come back?—I shall not take five minutes to make it.

35,470. Very well. Then will you make it at once?—The fact is the lady who advanced the money is my wife.

35,471. (Mr. Coleridge.) And the conduit-pipe was your sister-in-law?—And the other lady was my sister-in-law. After we were married I was very ill, and I gave her a bond for this sum of money, an annuity of 150*l.* a year, with the option of redeeming it for 1,500*l.*

35,472. As a sort of post-nuptial settlement?—Yes. And afterwards, although I had a pretty fairish income at the time, I had no ready money, and afterwards ready money came in the year 1862, and one of the uses I made of it was to buy up this annuity, or at least to change it, because it was a better thing altogether I considered for her interests, and, as I told you, to avoid the very thing which you alluded to, which was the trusteeship for her separate use, and that we considered it better to invest the money in the three per cents. in her maiden name.

35,473. (Mr. Coleridge.) I need hardly say that no lawyer could have advised you to adopt that course?—There was no lawyer employed in it.

35,474. Because it was no protection whatever to her?—That is the way I did it. I gave you the name of the broker, and you will find, if you send for him, that the money was invested in her maiden name, and remained in that name from the year 1861 to the year 1865.

35,475. But that is not the object for which we shall require Mrs. Westropp's presence. We want to know who induced her to advance this money for corrupt purposes?

(Mr. Price.) What we want to know is this, whether you were in any way a party in the first instance to letting her be communicated with, not by yourself, but through somebody else, with the view to induce her to advance this money, or whether, after it had been so advanced, you were cognisant of it, and have in any way undertaken to recoup the money to her to place her in the same position as if she had not spent it?—Oh no, certainly not.

35,476. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is a delicate thing to put to you, but the question is this, in the event of your death, would she be 1,500*l.* the worse off by the expenditure of this money at the election at Bridgwater?—Yes, of course, except by will.

35,477. (Mr. Anstey.) I must confess, my curiosity must take a different turn. I do not seek to know what has become of the money, or what is the consequence of its expenditure; but I seek to know, and I certainly shall press for all the information which will enable me to know, who was the original tempter, who it was that persuaded her to waste her patrimony in the crime of bribery, and who furnished her with such an accurate estimate of the amount required in the borough, as to enable her to say, "I will raise 1,500*l.*"?—With regard to that, I think I have more than once spoken in her presence of Padwick's election; and we all know what Padwick's election cost.

35,478. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was above 2,000*l.*?—2,400*l.* I think it cost; and I dare say I have said that in that way. I have not talked of the necessity for money certainly, but I have talked about this being a corrupt place in that way, but I have never put any pressure upon her, or named 1,500*l.* to her.

35,479. (Mr. Price.) Who suggested 1,500*l.*?—That I cannot tell, but I believe it is exceedingly likely it was her own self who sent it down.

35,480. (Mr. Anstey.) But you must, from what you were, and the circles in which you moved in life between 1859 and 1865, be able to answer me distinctly this question: Were there any of these three classes of the Conservative party, namely, those in the House of Commons, those of the Carlton Club or the Conservative Club, and thirdly, those connected with certain great firms, any of the great firms of Parliamentary agents as they are called, who were in the habit of visiting at your house; because if they were, it is perfectly clear to me at least what the nature of the influences was that were brought to bear upon her in your favour?—The only time that any person came to my house who was a parliamentary agent was Mr. Spofforth. I have a very handsome breed of Charlie dogs, and he called and took a very handsome pup away with him in the January of 1866; I have never received the value of that book for it.

35,481. (Mr. Price.) What my learned colleague, Mr. Anstey, wants to know from you is this, whether any of the leaders of the Conservative party, who are supposed, rightly or wrongly, to have the means of advancing money for election purposes, whether any of those persons in the first instance ever visited in your house in such a way as to give them an opportunity of putting a pressure upon Mrs. Westropp, to induce her to advance this money for you?—To my knowledge, no person ever came near the house, or ever called, or pressed her in any way, or had any communication with her, of the three descriptions of persons you have described.

35,482. None of those classes of persons I have mentioned, either in the House of Commons or out of the House of Commons?—Certainly not.

35,483. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has Mrs. Westropp any relation of that class?—No.

35,484. (Mr. Anstey.) Did any leading politician call—— ?—No, none.

35,485. I have not finished my question. Did any leading politician of the Conservative party call upon you, or rather, was he in the habit of calling upon you, between 1859 and 1865?—Never; decidedly not.

35,486. (Mr. Anstey.) Then I am afraid we must examine Mrs. Westropp as to the sources of her information; because she must have had some pressure put upon her to induce her to advance this 1,500*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) It was the sole sum at her own disposal?—It was the sole sum at her own disposal. It was so covenanted by the bond.

35,487. (Mr. Price.) Do you wish us to be under the impression.—I do not say it is at all an unnatural one, I do not know why we should suppose it to be an unnatural one, that Mrs. Westropp did this;—she might have been guided as to the amount of it by Mr. Bealy Smith,—but is it or is it not your desire to leave us under the impression that Mrs. Westropp did this with the desire to secure her husband's election for Bridgwater?—I do. I believe that most sincerely.

35,488. Then how do you account for her being put in connexion with this man Mr. Tromp?—One thing is, that I know myself since that time, as I mentioned that it was through Mr. Bealy Smith's influence.

35,489. You ought to tell us those things at once?—That I know.

35,490. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you know?—I know that she was put—not she, but her sister was put—in communication with that man.

35,491. Tell us what you mean by "put into communication"?—There is a French word which expresses it best, "en rapport."

35,492. You had much better use an English word. This man, Bealy Smith, is either at Melbourne, or else he is in Teignmouth, and his father is either able to attend to business, or he is lying on his death-bed, paralysed, or in a hopeless state of imbecility; but we have you here in the box, and I should like to know from you when her sister was put in communication with that person, Mr. Tromp?—I cannot tell you the time, because it is so many months afterwards.

35,493. (Mr. Price.) What do you really know about the matter? You really seem desirous of embarrassing this matter more than there is any necessity for. You either can tell us from your after acquired knowledge the whole detail of this matter, which may or may not be satisfactory when we have heard it, or from your previous knowledge. You say, of previous knowledge you had none. But you then hint that you have some knowledge of the sister being put into communication with Mr. Tromp. Tell us all about that after-knowledge; because, otherwise, it is only trifling with us and wasting our time. We must have the two ladies down here. If you want to put us into that embarrassing position, we are quite ready to accept it. It is out of regard for you that we have abstained to a very considerable extent. We have offered indulgences to you, under the circumstances, which we otherwise should not have done, and you seem to me to desire to repay us for that indulgence, by fencing with the questions, or at all events by not making a full disclosure of your after-acquired knowledge. The result must be, that we must abstain going any further with your examination, and it must stand as it does, until we have the two ladies down. That is the position in which you place us?—I know perfectly well that my sister-in-law was in communication with Mr. Tromp.

35,494. How, in what way?—Going to his house.

35,495. Were you the means of putting her in communication with him?—No.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

35,496. (Mr. Anstey.) Then who was?—I cannot tell you.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is the very reason why we must have her down.

[An adjournment of 20 minutes here took place.]

35,497. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Westropp, will you be good enough to go on with the next election, your connexion with the next election; I think we have exhausted the other?—About 1866.

. Mr. Patton's.

35,498. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Patton's first election?—Well, in May, I think it was; I had been over in Ireland after I was unseated, and then I returned.

35,499. But before you go to that, you have not told us what was the cost of your election petition. What did the whole of that business cost you?—I never had costs from Mr. Bealy Smith from first to last.

35,500. What did the whole of that 1865 business cost you?—Allow me to say, through the election petition, I did not pay any subscription to things from the time I was elected until I was unseated. The whole thing amounted to within a few pounds of 7,000*l.*

35,501. Including nursing the borough?—Including every expense.

35,502. (Mr. Price.) 7,000*l.*?—I think so.

35,503. Including the election inquiry of 1865? Do you mean including the expense of that of the committee?—Yes; I think about that.

35,504. (Mr. Anstey.) There is another thing I wanted to ask you, Mr. Westropp, before you went on. When Mr. Bealey Smith told you that he thought there was great danger of those two cases being proved, because his clerk, Mr. Boys, was named as the person who had bribed them, did he tell you that he had spoken to Boys on the subject?—He said that if the two cases were proved, there would be great danger of losing the seat, on account of Boys being connected with his office.

35,505. Being what?—Being connected with him. He did not say that Boys had bribed them.

35,506. Did he tell you he had spoken to Boys on the subject of those two cases?—No.

35,507. Did you gather from what he said that his fear that they would be proved so as to unseat you, or his fear that there was danger of that, was entertained by him after he had seen Boys on the subject?—No, he did not.

35,508. Of course you are not aware?—I am not aware——

35,509. Are not you aware that he had told Boys what Boys was to say?—No; not the least.

35,510. It has been stated by Boys on oath before us, that he was positively ordered by Bealy Smith, in order to neutralize that danger, to go up and deny all knowledge of these things?—I am certain that——

35,511. And you are aware that Boys, who was examined before you were examined —— ?—No; I think afterwards.

35,512. Well, who was going to be examined; you are aware that Boys positively denied all knowledge of those two cases?—I am aware that he denied them.

35,513. Both the bribery and the employment; both his employment about your election and his having used that employment for the purpose of bribing these two voters?—I was not aware that he denied the employment, I was aware that he denied the bribing.

35,514. Now, since that election, any time since that election (you know it is four years ago now, more than four years), had you learnt, till it came out in evidence before us the other day, that Boys had acted in the way he did under the influence of Bealy Smith?—No, I did not; the only thing I had ever——

35,515. That he had given his evidence under the influence of Bealy Smith?—The only thing I ever heard of Boys, subsequently to that election, was after Mr. Patton's second election, and Bealy Smith was then talking about various things that took place. He came up to town and said that Boys had kicked some of the voters, told them to go to a warm place, and kept the money.

35,516. That was after the second election in 1866?—Yes.

35,517. But I am asking you, did Bealy Smith ever say anything to you at any time, either at the time or since, about the evidence which Boys had given before the Election Committee?—No, never, never; he never mentioned his name save once, and I tell you that was exactly what occurred.

35,518. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now go on with the 1866 election, Patton?—I am not exactly certain whether the first time that I heard of Mr. Patton coming down was from Mr. Spofforth or not, but I recollect that Mr. Spofforth asked him and me to dine at the "Carlton," and after dinner Mr. Patton and I discussed generally the prospects of the borough.

35,519. To dine where?—At the "Carlton."

35,520. Oh, the "Carlton Club"; the "Junior Carlton"?

(Mr. Anstey.) No, no, the "Carlton"?—The Senior.

35,521. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were both members?

(Mr. Anstey.) Yes.

35,522. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Patton was a member too, was not he?—Yes, he was; and he asked me what his prospects of success were? I told him I thought, as far as I could say, they were good, for I had been returned by a large majority, and I could hardly understand that a very great number of them would go away so as to leave him in a majority. I told him what Mr. Bealy Smith had told me, that sometime before that, he and Mr. Cook, I believe, had been talking about election matters, and Mr. Cook remarked, "You are a great deal weaker than you were "at the time of Mr. Westropp's election."

35,523. (Mr. Coleridge.) What Cook?—James Cook, is it not?

35,524. What Mr. Cook do you mean?

(The Witness.) The solicitor.

35,525. What was it?—That he and Mr. Smith had been talking over the probable strength of the two parties here, and that Mr. James Cook said that we were—that is the Conservative party were—weaker than we were at the time of my election, and he recounted that so many of them had gone away, and all that sort of thing; and Mr. Bealy Smith said, "Well, it is astonishing, those fellows, how well-"informed they are." Well, Mr. Bealy Smith came up to town, and I am in perfect ignorance of any arrangement that he may have made. I know not what arrangement he may have made with any person, but he came to me and he told me that I must get 1,500*l.*

35,526. (Mr. Coleridge.) For Patton?—For Mr. Patton.

35,527. What security did he offer you for it? Did he offer you any security for it?—Oh, none.

35,528. Then why should you have got 1,500*l.* for Mr. Patton?—I tell you that is what he came and told me, and I said "1,500*l.*! Where on earth am I "to get it?" Well, a few days after that a gentleman came up to me at the Carlton Club and told me that he was Mr. Patton's agent.

35,529. Have you seen that gentleman here to-day?—No, he is not here.

35,530. What was his name?—Mr. Thompson.

35,531. (Mr. Price.) Wait, just let me ask for a moment, had you known Mr. Patton before the interview at the Carlton Club—at the dinner?—No.

35,532. Then at that time were you aware or not whether Mr. Patton had had an interview with any deputation from Bridgwater?—No.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

35,533. Did Mr. Patton inform you that he had had an interview with a deputation from Bridgwater?—Not that I can recollect.

35,534. Were you under the impression, from what took place at that interview, that that was the first communication that Mr. Patton had had with respect to Bridgwater, viz., such information as you, Mr. Westropp, could give him?—Certainly not, certainly not. He seemed to speak as having had some talk about standing for Bridgwater.

35,535. Before he saw you?—Before he saw me.

35,536. (Mr. Anstey.) Therefore it is not true that you were the person who first proposed to him coming down to this borough?—Certainly not, certainly not.

35,537. Who was it, do you know?—I have not the slightest idea.

35,538. He did not tell you?—No, he did not.

35,539. Not the least?—Not a word said on that subject. However——

35,540. Did you understand from him that he had never canvassed a constituency before, never stood for a constituency?—The subject never was mentioned one way or the other.

35,541. (Mr. Price.) Then Mr. Patton did not tell you at that dinner that he had had an interview and introduction from Mr. Spofforth to the Bridgwater gentlemen in the lobby of the House, and that he had made any arrangements with him?—No, certainly not. I am quite positive of that.

35,542. At the same time you did gather from his conversation that he had intimated to somebody that he was going to stand for Bridgwater, or thought of standing?—I understood from his conversation that he was thinking of Bridgwater, and, in point of fact, my dining with him at that time was not the first idea of it.

35,543. Exactly; that is what I wanted to know. Well?—I think it was the day subsequently I told Mr. Thompson. Mr. Thompson introduced himself to me, and that sort of thing, and Bealy Smith told me, as I tell you, I must find the 1,500*l.*, and Mr. Thompson, being Mr. Patton's agent, I told him this. I told him as Mr. Patton's agent, and he gave me 1,500*l.*

35,544. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did?—Mr. Thompson.

35,545. Who is Mr. Thompson?—I really do not know at this moment. George, I think, his name is.

35,546. Where does he live?—I think he lives about the world pretty much.

35,547. (Mr. Price.) How was he introduced?—He came and introduced himself to me.

35,548. Was that at the Carlton Club?—Yes.

35,549. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Mr. Thompson a member of the Carlton Club?—Yes. He is a Scotchman.

35,550. (Mr. Price.) You are sure it was not Mr. Pitman?—I am sure it was not. There is Mr. Pitman there (pointing). I know Mr. Pitman very well.

35,551. Mr. Thompson gave you 1,500*l.*?—Yes.

35,552. What in?—In notes.

35,553. Did he tell you what to do with them?—No, not a word. I told him that Bealy Smith wanted 1,500*l.*, and he gave it to me.

35,554. (Mr. Anstey.) Was this in the Carlton?—Well, he gave me two sums, and I think the same on both elections.

35,555-6. Was it at the Carlton he gave it to you?—I am just saying I went to the room one morning, and I cannot tell you whether he gave me two sums of 1,500*l.*, one at the first election. I am not very sure that it was not 2,000*l.* at the second. However, it was either 1,500*l.* or 2,000*l.* at the second, and it was 1,500*l.* at the first, and I am not sure which, but one of those sums he gave me standing close to the Carlton, and the other was in at his lodgings.

35,557. Where were they?—It was either in St. James's Street or some street off St. James's Street.

35,558. (Mr. Price.) St. James's Place?—Some place; I do not exactly know.

35,559. (Mr Anstey.) Is he still a member of the Carlton?—Oh yes, he is.

35,560. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you last see him?—I saw him before our petition was presented.

35,561. (Mr. Anstey.) This year?—I think about January.

Mr. Frederick Pitman, sworn.

Mr. F. Pitman.

35,562. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of this Mr. Thompson?—I know him and I saw him within the last few days, and I was requested by him to state to the Commissioners that he would be most happy to attend and give evidence provided I telegraphed to him to-day. He is in Edinburgh at present, but he will be here on Thursday, and I will telegraph to him immediately.

35,563. (Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps you will have the kindness to do it now. Our secretary will do it in your name, if you like.

(The Witness.) Will you allow me to send the telegram?

35,564. (Mr. Price.) Oh yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) For Thursday morning, half-past ten.

(The Witness.) I think he could hardly be here in time.

35,565. (Mr. Coleridge.) Thursday or Friday.

(The Witness.) He could be here on Friday. He told me so.

(Mr. Anstey.) If he is here at two o'clock on Thursday we will examine him, if he is not here by then, we will examine him on Friday morning.

Mr. Henry Westropp, recalled.

Mr. H. Westropp.

(The Witness.) I gave as well as I recollect 1,250*l.* to my sister-in-law to take to Mr. Tromp.

35,566. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you give it in notes?—No, not in notes.

35,567. (Mr. Price.) Just give us the history of that. You got it changed into sovereigns?—No, I did not.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, not on this first occasion.

35,568. Having known at that time what your sister-in-law had done at the former election, you gave it to her to give to Mr. Tromp?—Oh yes.

35,569. By Bealy Smith's directions?—Yes.

35,570. 1,250*l.*?—Yes, and the other 250*l.* I think there was 1*l.* of it that I told Mr. Thompson I should keep. There were some small expenses. I sent the account to Mr. Pitman afterwards. He is here, and he will tell you I sent the account how that was expended; and the other 150*l.*, as well as I recollect, was sent to Mr. Bealy Smith in notes.

35,571. Sent to whom?—Mr. Bealy Smith, in notes.

35,572. What, by post?—Yes, Mr. Pitman and I.

35,573. (Mr. Price.) I think we must ask you, where did you get that money from?—

(Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Thompson?

35,574. (Mr. Price.) Oh, Thompson gave you that?—Yes; Mr. Thompson gave it to me.

35,575. (Mr Anstey.) You were going to say something about Mr. Pitman?—Mr. Pitman and I were coming down to Bridgwater, I think two or three days before the election, and we had got on to the platform at the Great Western, and Mr. Pitman received a telegram from Mr. Bealy Smith, telling us not to go down till the following day.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

35,576. Who was the telegram from?—Mr. Pitman can tell you. I think it was from Bealy Smith. Well I was rather annoyed at this altogether, having made up my mind to travel, and I went home and I found there a letter from Mr. Bealy Smith telling me he wanted 500*l.* more.

35,577. You found the letter as soon as you got home?—I found the letter when I got home telling me that if I did not send it the election was lost and I do not know what. I came to town again. It was late and I saw Mr. Thompson. Mr. Thompson said "I will have nothing to do with it. The first money, "I did not know what it was to be expended in, but "if you come to me and tell me that this was what "of course it evidently must be for, I will have "nothing to do with it."

35,778. Will you repeat that sentence? — Mr. Thompson said "The first money I gave I really "know nothing about, I gave it; but the last, "as you are asking for it in this way, I know its "destination and therefore I will have nothing to do "with it."

35,579. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is a bit of Scotch casuistry.

(The Witness.) Mr. Pitman and I came down the following day, I think it was, and there was a proposal and all that sort of thing. The following day was the election day, and about eleven o'clock Bealy Smith came running in to me and said "We are beaten." "Well," said I "I am sorry to hear that, it is a nuisance," and that sort of thing. "Have you got," said he, "that 500*l.* that I wrote for?" "No, I have not." "Have you got any money," said he, "Not a farthing," said I. "Humph! the election is lost, that's all," said he. I walked downstairs and there was standing in the room that man Heal, William Heal. He came up to me. "Mr. Westropp," said he, "do you mean to win this election?" "Well," said I, "I hope we shall." "Well," said he, "you had better begin if you do." "What do you mean," said I. "You know," said he, "haven't you brought it down?" "No," said I, "I have not, Mr. Heal." "Well," said he, "I know there are forty men on your side that are here and there," I think he mentioned some of them at the Bull and Butcher.

35,580. (Mr. Coleridge.) Very likely.

35,581. (The Witness.) "And if you can get me "to them as you have no money they will vote for "me on promise." I knew Mr. Heal's character and I did not trust him. I said "Mr. Heal, I have no "means of getting at these men. You had better "stay where you are, stay in the room, stay quietly," and he remained, and thinking the election was over I went upstairs to my bedroom. Now I know what Robert Bussell swore about my having received a letter and asking about the mysterious stranger and all that.

35,581. (Mr. Price.) He said you know this, he said that he went down with a letter; we now know it was from Mr. Tromp, if it was true at all, and he met you. You were going in to Mr. Bealy Smith at the Clarence, and you said "Is that from the friend at the Globe?" and you took it from him and went into the room?—No, I did not, that is perfectly false.

35,582. The whole of that?—The whole of that. It never took place.

35,583. (Mr. Price.) This is a very important matter, because if there is any means of confirming that account which you give of that matter we should think it quite worth our while to pursue it further, for the sake of showing that the man Robert Bussell should not amongst his other enormous offences——

(The Witness.) There is certainly not the least doubt that I received no letter from him, nor did I ask him about the stranger.

35,584. A friend?—I never knew anything about "a friend" as he called him.

35,585. Did you use any such expression as that?—No.

35,586. Just tell us what took place?—Bealy Smith—I am afraid I must call him Bealy Smith—came up to me and was talking, and when he was talking Robert Bussell came up and stood in the doorway, and said one or two common-place remarks and went away. That is what really did take place.

35,587. There is nobody whom we can get at who can confirm your contradiction of Robert Bussell's evidence on that point?—None.

35,588. (Mr. Anstey.) You are aware that the "friend" or "stranger" Tromp was staying at the house of Robert Bussell?—No, I was not aware of it. That is the reason why I could not have asked the question.

35,589. There is no doubt he was staying there?—I daresay he was. That I do not know. Well, I was saying that he said "It is lost altogether," and I said, "Well, I am very sorry for it," and all the rest of it, and whilst I was in the room some one came upstairs.

35,590. (Mr. Price.) Did he present a note at all to Bealy Smith?—None that I saw. He may have given it to Bealy Smith outside. I did not see it.

35,591. There is this corroboration of the story. That is followed up by an action on the part of those present, viz., that there is a whip then and there made. It is a story which also implicates you; there is a whip made of 350*l.*, and you were the person who said "I cannot draw a cheque." This is the evidence, you know; I am drawing your attention to that which is the effect of the evidence, "I cannot draw a cheque, "but I will be guarantee if you gentlemen will find "the 500*l.*"?—So far from it, Bealy Smith asked me if I would guarantee it, and I said "I certainly wont," because Mr. Thompson had refused the 500*l.* when I asked him for it.

35,592. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not mean to run the risk of having to pay it yourself?—Certainly not.

35,593. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you aware that your name was used in this way?—I forget the name of the tradesman, but one tradesman paid 30*l.*, saying he would pay that and much more for you.

(Mr. Price.) "Will you lend Mr. Westropp 30*l.*?"

(The witness.) I was not aware of it until I read the evidence given in this Commission.

35,594. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you aware that moneys were repaid or paid after that election to persons who were said to have advanced money during the election?—I have read it here.

35,595. Not till then?—Of course I took for granted it was paid. If you will let me, I will tell you exactly how it was.

35,596. I will put it to you in this way, not asking you about anything that took place before the election, but did you after the election, or if you like, on the election day—either the one or the other—understand that payments had been made to persons whose claim to receive them consisted in the fact of their having previously, on the day of the election, for election purposes, advanced sums of money in equal amount?—I did.

35,597. How soon did you become aware of that?—I think about a week afterwards.

35,598. (Mr. Price.) Now give us your account of the thing, Mr. Westropp?—I was, as I say, sitting, when—I really forget now who it was came up and said, "Here is some money." I was rather taken by surprise at first, but I took it. I suspected of course what it was for, but it was followed up in quick succession by various sums from different persons, whose names at the time I took down, with the exception of two or three of them, I really cannot recollect.

35,599. (Mr. Coleridge.) What sort of sums?—There were thirty, and forty, and five-and-twenty, and fifteen.

35,600. That was the subscription of which we have heard?—Yes, that is the subscription.

35,601. (Mr. Price.) 350*l.* altogether ?—Oh, there was more.

35,602. 500*l.* ?—There was over 500*l.* and odd subscribed.

35,603. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you also become aware that the moneys so advanced were said at that time to have been the means of turning the election in favour of Mr. Patton ?—Oh, I heard it, certainly. Immediately when I got the money there——

35,604. (Mr. Price.) Did you say anything whatever of the kind, because let us have it as specific as possible. Did you say anything whatever to any number of persons assembled or to anybody at the "Clarence," that you would be guarantee for any sum of money raised ?—No.

35,605. Never anything of the kind ?—No.

35,606. Nothing of the kind to induce them to rely upon your guarantee or your word in any way ?—Certainly not. I would not have done it.

35,607. When these sums came in, Mr. Westropp, did you express, or did you make any remark about it to anybody ?—Oh, of course I knew perfectly well what it was for.

35,608. Well, but did you say anything to repudiate any notion that you were to be liable to repay ?—No, certainly not.

35,609. Whom did you hand it over to ?—If you will allow me I will go on. I said, "Now here am I "with this large sum of money. What in the world "am I to do with it ?"

35,610. (Mr. Price.) How was it it was handed to you instead of being handed to Mr. Bealy Smith. That is what I want to know, why it was handed to you ?—Well, I tell you candidly that from my known character in the town, I never told a falsehood in the town, and I never in any way owed money and not paid it, and all that, and I think it was as much as anything else on that account.

35,611. Rather than trust Bealy Smith with it ?—I think so.

35,612. They would trust you ?—I think the people of Bridgwater, it may be vanity to say it, but I think at this moment they would trust me with a good deal of money upon my own word.

35,613. You have a right to say so. Mr. Bealy Smith absents himself, has chosen to absent himself, therefore he must take the consequence of anything which is said in his absence. Do you think it was because they trusted you in preference to Bealy Smith that they allowed you to be custos of the money ?—I think so, and at the same time, neither by word nor deed did I let it be understood that I would be liable in any way for it.

35,614. (Mr. Anstey.) You declined you say to have anything to say to William Heal ?—Yes.

35,615. Because you say you knew his character; how did you become acquainted with his character ?—Well, in the first place, when he came to the Conservative dinner it was contrary to my will. Having been in Bridgwater for a good many years, I knew pretty well the characters of almost everybody here.

35,616. When did you first become acquainted with the character of William Heal ?—From the time I knew Bridgwater.

35,617. All the time ?—Yes.

35,618. You knew it therefore when you canvassed him at the contest of 1865 ?—Yes, perfectly well.

35,619. You are aware that he was employed ?—I am aware.

35,620. In that election ?—I am aware since this Commission that he was employed. I was aware after my election petition that he had been employed, and I was aware that he had taken exactly what he has since acknowledged that he did take.

35,621. You were asked by the Election Committee how often you had seen him ?—I think I had only seen him twice.

35,622. But you knew his character ?—But I knew his character perfectly well; and there was a dinner here in 1864, as well as I recollect, a Conservative dinner, and he was introduced to it I think by a man of the name of Stroud, who has since gone away, and I very strongly objected at the time to his being amongst us at all.

35,623. Stroud was afterwards examined before the Election Committee of 1866 ?—Yes.

35,624. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not agree with Heal's estimate of himself that he is none the worse for what has happened, and anybody in Bridgwater would trust him to any amount ?—I should not trust him.

35,625. (Mr. Anstey.) Facts speak for themselves, do not they ? He has been trusted, and is at this moment in a position of great trust by a man who knows perhaps even more about his villanies than we do, Mr. Symmons ?—I cannot account for any fancies that a man may take to another.

35,626. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on ?—Well, as I tell you, here was I with this large sum of money, and in came Bealy Smith. Said I, "They have brought me "here 550*l.*," or something of that kind, I think it was, "What am I to do with it ?" I will send presently for it, said he, and you give 400*l.*

35,627. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know of a man of the name of Batten going over to Robert Bussell to tell them they were to expect money just at this time ?—No, I do not. I know nothing of the machinery that carried it on.

35,628. The after-manipulation you know nothing of ?—I know nothing in the world.

35,629. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you know that Bussell was employed ?—At that election ? No, I did not.

35,630. He was standing at the door ?—I did not know who was employed. I knew nothing at all further than I knew perfectly well——

35,631. (Mr. Price.) Bussell is a man evidently who will take very good care to let it be thought that he was a man of immense importance wherever he was ?—He is a very clever man.

36,632. That may be, but he takes care to make himself very notorious, and tries to make himself out as of as much importance as anybody in the borough of Bridgwater. Did not you know that he was employed in any way ?—I know that he had been employed.

35,633. As a bribe agent ?—I know from having read the evidence.

35,634. (Mr. Anstey.) You know how active he had been ?—I suspected it.

35,635. You knew it ?—I did not know it, except——

35,636. I am talking of your knowledge in 1866 of what he had done at your election in 1865. You knew that after he had been examined before the House of Commons ?—I knew that.

35,637. And he had been so trusted by your party that he had been actually employed during the whole of the nomination day watching the house of Mr. Smith ?—I read it in evidence.

35,638. If you say you know nothing about it, I shall have to put a great number of questions to show that you did know all about him. In the first place you know that Bussell had obtained a bailiff-ship for his political services ?—Yes, I know he was bailiff. I do not know that it was for his political services.

35,639. And you know that when he came before the election committee of 1866, there was no attempt made to deny his agency at your election, but the attempt was made to show that he was doing nothing that was wrong or improper. That was all. His agency could not be denied. Then in 1866 you saw him, you say, himself standing in the doorway. He says he was in the room. You say he came to the door, and stood in the doorway, where you and Bealy Smith were having your confidential conversation. Surely you must have known from that that he was again employed by the party ?—I am perfectly willing to admit it.

35,640. (Mr. Price.) Go on, Mr. Westropp ?—He said I must send 400*l.*, and I gave the 400*l.* to a young man who is here now.

35,641. Who is that ?—Mr. Neal.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

35,642. A clerk to Bealy Smith?—He was a clerk to Bealy Smith. He went away, and came back a short time after that as white as a sheet of paper. I said "My goodness, have they taken the 400*l.*?" I thought somebody had seized it. "Oh no," said he, "they have not. It is all right." I said "What did "you do with it?" He said "I gave it to a man "whom I met in the churchyard, and he dropped it "into a big pocket."

35,643. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he tell you who the man was?—No.

35,644. (Mr. Price.) Well go on?—Well that is all I know of that election.

35,645. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you do with the rest of the money?—Oh the rest of the money I put into my portmanteau. And that evening we had a dinner, and after dinner Mr. Joseph Smith said to me "You had better give me the money." He had brought me some money. I forget how much; it was a good sum.

35,646. Joseph Smith?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) You mean Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, the ex-pawnbroker?

35,647. (Mr. Coleridge.) When had he brought you that?—During the day.

35,648. It was a part of the subscription?—Yes. And I said to him "Yes," and I came in. I forgot how much I gave him, but I reckoned it out to him.

35,649. Something over 100*l.*?—Yes.

35,650. Was it all that you had got?—Yes; indeed it did not quite make up the money, because I had four or five pounds to put to it.

35,651. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you go to the next election, Mr. Westropp, I want to understand you clearly about that dinner at which you met Mr. Patton. How many were present?—Mr. Spofforth, Mr. Patton, and I.

35,652. What were you to do? I do not understand. Why did you meet with him?—I had never seen Mr. Patton before, and Mr. Spofforth brought him there to introduce him to me, because, of course, having been such a length of time in the borough, and knowing more about it than anybody else, he introduced me to him.

35,653. For what purpose? I do not understand?—Nor do I. There was no particular purpose.

35,654. He began to converse about the borough and you told him, of course, all that was fresh in your recollection. Well, then did you tell him that it was a most corrupt borough, being so then, at all events, in the time of the old constituency?—No, I did not, and I never mentioned——

35,655. It being then, at all events, at the time of the old constituency, did you tell him that there was a great number of voters who expected to be bought?—No; I never mentioned to the poor old gentleman one single word connected with the monetary business of the borough.

35,656. But you saw that he wanted to start for the borough?—Yes, I did.

35,657. Do you mean to say that you allowed that "poor gentleman," as you most properly called him, to go down to the borough without one word of information which in his case would have been a word of warning?—I never said a word of money matters directly to him, licit or illicit.

35,658. Did you allow him to go down in perfect ignorance of the state of things without one word of warning?—Yes.

35,659. Well, you had your own notions of what was right or not. I presume you came to the conclusion that Mr. Spofforth had sought the meeting for the purpose of your giving him useful information?—I could not suppose for one moment that Mr. Spofforth would bring me to speak to a gentleman about illicit expenditure.

35,660. Did not you think Mr. Spofforth had brought you there for the purpose of putting him on his guard?—I did not think it was for that purpose. I certainly should not say anything.

35,661. Your thoughts seem to be running in a direction which is quite counter to the direction in which my questions point. I am speaking about warring against illicit expenditure. I will put the question to you again. Did you suppose, or did you not suppose that Mr. Spofforth and Mr. Patton wished to know amongst other things whether there was any danger of Mr. Patton's being called upon for expenditure for illicit purposes?—No, certainly I did not.

35,662. You did not?—No.

35,663. And you avoided altogether giving him any information on that point?—Had he asked me I should have told him exactly the state of the case. He did not ask me, and, therefore, I said nothing to him about it.

(Mr. Anstey.) Now I have got an answer.

35,664. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Westropp, if you had been asked, I suppose, to meet a friend there, a person whom you had known before and to whom it would have been a serious question whether he should spend a great deal of money or not, you would then have considered yourself bound, I suppose, to tell him?—Of course with an intimate friend one would talk upon many subjects which you would not do with other people; but most assuredly I should doubt very much if I was talking to a man who wanted to get into Parliament whether I should say a word about expenditure, because if he were to go in and knew that there was bribery going on, it might be alleged against him that he went in with the full knowledge, and, therefore, concurrence in it.

35,665. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there anything said then, or after this or about that time,—about a place being made or kept for you in the next Parliament?—Never.

35,666. Did you not contemplate standing again when there should be a new Parliament?—I did.

35,667. For Bridgwater?—I did, but I never for one moment contemplated that Mr. Patton was to go in and keep the place.

35,668. No, no; I said "kept" or "made." There are two seats, you know?—Yes.

35,669. Was anything like an arrangement—it is a word you do not seem to like,—but was there anything like an arrangement or understanding, or anything of the sort, that as soon as that Parliament was at an end, and thereby your incapacity was gone, you should be at least one of the Conservative candidates?—None whatever.

35,670. For Bridgwater?—None whatever.

35,671. But it was your intention that you should become one of them?—Yes.

35,672. Notwithstanding your experience of the election of 1865 and the election trial of 1866?—Yes.

35,673. (Mr. Price.) And there was, therefore, nothing whatever either passing from you to Mr. Patton, or from Mr. Spofforth to you, in any way which could lead up to the idea that Mr. Patton was to go down there to be a kind of warming-pan for you till you were ready?—Certainly not.

35,674. Because that would be,—I need not point out to you, a very serious thing indeed?—Nothing in the world, I assure you; nothing of the kind.

35,675. (Mr. Anstey.) It was known in Bridgwater that you meant to stand again?—No, I do not think it was. They sent a deputation to me.

35,676. A number of witnesses said——?—Well, they gave me a requisition afterwards, when I came down with Mr. Patton. Then I said if I found circumstances would allow, I would stand again, but I did not give an unqualified pledge.

35,677. Well, that was the intention?—In my case it was a perfectly true thing. It was not saying "Do "not bribe when you mean to." There was a real bonâ fide doubt whether I would stand or not.

35,678. You said you had an intention?—Under certain circumstances.

35,679. And a number of witnesses have said that that intention was known—was understood in the borough, and I suppose it must have got out in some way or other—that you did so intend?—Oh, I daresay.

35,680. (Mr. Price.) Well now, go on, Mr. Westropp, with the next election. I do not know whether it is a convenient time to ask you this, but I want very much to ask you some time or other, perhaps you may as well tell us now. It cost you 7,000*l.* up to the time Mr. Patton came down here. This borough did?—No; that is the amount of the expenses, but I did not pay them, a great many of them, till after then.

35,681. Very well; but I mean it has cost you, that is enough for us?—Up to the last election.

35,682. It has cost you 7,000*l.* What the last election cost you as well. I do not inquire now into that, but it had cost you up to that time when Mr. Patton came down, you now know, as you have estimated it, 7,000*l.*?—Yes.

35,683. Had you then, or have you now, any reason whatever to believe that any portion of that 7,000*l.* beyond the sum that Heal is known to have embezzled, and has confessed himself to have embezzled, and Newton also, and perhaps Truman, about whom there is some suspicion, but with the exception of those three cases, have you any reason to believe that any portion of this large sum which you were called upon to give—of course that which is under the control of yourself, your annual subscriptions is another matter—but beyond that, that any other sum of money has stuck in any way to the hands of Mr. Bealy Smith, whom you have employed?—No; I have no reason in the world to suppose it, none in the world. I paid the money to him.

35,684. What you paid in the way of annual subscriptions you had a certain amount of check upon?—Yes.

35,685. But when you found 1,500*l.*, and he wanted 500*l.* more, when you found 1,500*l.* again, or rather Mr. Thompson did, and then another 500*l.* was wanted, have you any reason to suppose, from these constant demands, that Bealy Smith put any of that into his own pocket, or that any went into the pockets of persons employed by him?—I should say not. I am perfectly convinced that when he left this place he was a very poor man.

35,686. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you last see Bealy Smith?—The night before he sailed for Australia.

35,687. Did he apply to you for assistance?—No; he came in perfectly mad.

35,688. With his wife?—No; he told me he had just parted from her. He said, "We have been to "the theatre," the night before "we have just had "dinner at the station; I have sent her off home, "and I am going away to-morrow."

35,689. Did you send him any money?—No.

35,690. Has he written to you for any?—He has written to me once to tell he was at Melbourne, and that he was seeking employment.

35,691. You in no way assisted him?—No.

35,692. Either directly or indirectly?—

(Mr. Anstey.) Did you say just now that he was a very poor man?—I think so.

35,693. Would not a very poor man, who was also not a very scrupulous man, be very likely to intercept money which he was not called upon to account for?—If I was asked my belief, I really do not believe he did.

35,694. You are aware, of course, that you could not get the money back from him, as you had put the money into his hands for an illegal purpose?—Well, I don't know about the legal right. I have lost many a pound by not actually enforcing my rights.

35,695. (Mr. Price.) You have no reason to believe that the money was stopped by him, or that he had his own ends to serve in making these additional demands?—No.

35,696. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you pay him for his services in 1865?—Pay whom?

35,697. Bealy Smith?—I do not know. I paid, as I said, 7,000*l.* altogether, and I really don't know. I can hardly tell you.

35,698. Do you know what Mr. Patton paid?—No; I had nothing to do with the expenses of Mr. Patton's election further than this, that he told me what sums I was to get. I got them from Mr. Thompson, and directly they were got they were passed on.

35,699. (Mr. Anstey.) Cannot you tell me how much Bealy Smith got out of that whole sum for your election in 1865?—I cannot tell you in the least. I can tell you how much I paid him, and there was in it the petition expenses and subscriptions and things that I used to give, for I did not give a farthing from the time I was elected until I was turned out. He paid any subscriptions that might be going on in the town, and what he said was the election expenses. I paid altogether,—it cost 7,000*l.*

35,700. Altogether what?—Altogether, from first to last, my connexion with this borough up to the last election cost 7,000*l.*

35,701. If you cannot tell me the exact sum that Bealy Smith got, perhaps you can tell me what portion of the 7,000*l.* you set down for expenses of the same kind as the remuneration of Bealy Smith would be. You call them, perhaps, "professional men's expenses," or something of that kind?—Here is my banker's book, and if you will allow me I will just tell you exactly the sums that were——

35,702. (Mr. Price.) What my brother Commissioner wants to know is this: whether you can give any clue, the whole sum you have given us—no doubt your banker's book would show how much you have drawn; what we wish to know is whether you have any item or any heading which will show what was paid in the shape of expenses to legal gentlemen?—Not in the least; he never gave me any account. I am obliged, of course, to prove everything to your satisfaction, but to prove that I did not know, I may say that there was a testimonial given to Mr. Lilly, to which Mr. Vanderbyl had not subscribed, and there was a letter sent to me by Mr. Gabriel Poole asking me to subscribe, and I got a letter from him subsequently, saying that he was very sorry, as I had lost so much in the borough, that a request had been made to me for a subscription, and I wrote a letter back to him to say——

35,703. That has nothing to do with it?—I said I was not aware; that I had never had an account furnished me, and therfore I was not aware of what I had lost.

35,704. Nobody suspects Mr. Gabriel Poole of having taken part in any election except giving his own vote. I wish you would attend to my questions. You are wasting a great deal of valuable public time by your habit of running off into one groove when I am directing you, as I said before, into another groove. I will take it point by point. Bealy Smith got some remuneration, did not he?—Yes, he did.

35,705. And he paid himself?—I suppose so.

35,706. When did he pay himself? I am speaking of the election of 1865. When did he pay himself for that election?—I cannot tell you when he paid himself, but the last sum that I paid to him for that election was the 23d November 1866 when I paid him 240*l.*

35,707. But you had made payments to him before that?—I had made payments to him before that.

35,708. The first payment being the 500*l.* in sovereigns?—Yes, if you call that a payment. Well then, as well as I recollect (I put them down this morning.) I sent him 700*l.* in notes; I sent him 100*l.*, 50*l.*, 250*l.*, 150*l.*, 330*l.*, and 240*l.*

35,709. (Mr. Price.) Did he never render you any account which will show how much he put down for himself for his own services as your agent?—Never; he never rendered an account at all.

35,710. (Mr. Anstey.) How did you know that he paid himself?—I cannot tell you that he did.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

35,711. You have told me?—Pardon me; I said I supposed he did. I cannot tell you that he did.

35,712. You meant that he should; you never intended him to give his services for nothing?—He said he never would ask——

35,713. That is no answer to my question. Did you mean when you employed him as your agent to do all these things,—did you mean it to be gratuitous or did you not?—He said he never would.

35,714. What did you mean?—I should have given him a present afterwards.

35,715. Well, call it a present. I will re-commence my examination if you like, and use the word "present" all through instead of remuneration?—It is perfectly unintentional. I know you are a very straightforward man, and I wish to be straightforward in my evidence.

35,716. You know perfectly well that a present, under such circumstances, is the same as a remuneration. I must go back again. Did you make Bealy Smith any present at any time?—No, I did not.

35,717. Did you intend to make him a present?—No, I did not, after the sums of money which he charged me.

35,718. Then he did charge you with money?—He charged me with money.

35,719. Did you understand that the moneys with which he charged you included moneys of an amount equivalent to that which you would have given him in the form of a present if he had not charged it?—No, I did not.

35,720. Then I do not understand your answers. You meant originally to give him a present; you did not give him a present because of the amount of money charged?—I thought there was a great deal of money spent at the election, and therefore I did not give him a present.

35,721. You thought he had paid himself?—I took it for granted.

(Mr. Anstey.) Therefore you ought to have told the Chief Commissioner just now that you had some reason to believe that some of the money had stuck to his hands.

35,722. (Mr. Price.) It comes back to that. I am sorry I did not make myself understood by you. My question was this, whether you had any reason to believe that Mr. Smith paid himself out of that money. You now say that having that belief you did not give him a present which you would otherwise have given him. There is no doubt he did pay himself, but you cannot tell what amount he paid?—Supposing he paid it to a number of others.

35,723. I am sorry I could not convey it to your mind?—I have not perhaps such a legal mind as yours.

35,724. We want to know whether you have any reason for supposing that out of this large expenditure Bealy Smith stuck to any money for himself. You said you had not. Now it turns out that you had the best reason for believing it, because he, having spent such a large sum of money, you did not think it necessary to make him a present?—If you make that inference.

35,725. (Mr. Anstey.) You told the Committee of the House of Commons, through the counsel, Mr. Powell, who was cross-examining you, when you were asked a question about the remuneration of the lawyers, "Upon my honour as a gentleman I can say no more "than that I have neither paid nor agreed to pay "anything, and I believe I am not to pay one shilling "to them. I can say no more than that." Then the counsel applying his question to all the lawyers, says, "Am I to understand that all these gentlemen were "out at the time that you have mentioned, and you "have paid them nothing for it? A. Decidedly no. "Q. What you may be called upon to pay of course "you do not know? A. I do not believe I shall be "called upon to pay anything. Q. I believe it is "usual for the agent, as Mr. Bealy Smith, to charge, "is it not? A. I have nothing at all to pay Mr. Bealy "Smith. Q. But he was your agent? A. Yes. "Q. Have you returned any charge in your election "expenses for Mr. Bealy Smith, your agent? A. No, "because I am not going to pay him anything. "Q. Now, without having any communication about "the matter with Mr. Bealy Smith, do you mean to tell "the Committee that you do not think Mr. Bealy "Smith, your election agent, is going to charge you "anything? A. Upon my word, I do not think he is. "Q. You have never had conversation with him "upon the subject? A. The only thing I have had "in the way of professional business with Bealy "Smith was when I gave him my address, and "told him to wait until Mr. Kinglake's address "was published. And directly it was published "the address was to be sent to me, and on the "receipt of that I said I would come down. Q. Is "it on that ground that you are not going to be "called upon to pay him? A. I think so. Q. I "hope you will not be disappointed. A. I hope that "all our expectations may be realized." I ask you, Mr. Westropp, whether these answers of yours to the questions which I have read of the 18th of April 1866 contained a true, complete, and candid statement of the pecuniary relations of Mr. Bealy Smith to yourself, after the statement which you have made to us of your intention, of his charges, and of your payments?—I had an intention—I had a general intention of giving him a present, but I certainly had not made any arrangement to pay anything to him, nor to anybody else directly or indirectly. There was no charge.

35,726. (Mr. Price.) Was it the largeness of the sum you had to pay eventually for your election expenses which determined you to change your mind with regard to making Mr. Bealy Smith a present?—Yes, the largeness of the sum.

35,727. At the time you gave that evidence I suppose you had not had the sum total of your expenditure present to your mind?—I will give you the dates; the first is the 18th of April, the next is the 2d of May, the third is the 23d of May.

35,728. Then you would be in this position that at that time you say you intended making him a present, and would have done so but for the large bill he sent in, or the large expenditure which you were at at that time; you might well have contemplated making him a present, yet you stated to the Committee of the House of Commons you had no intention?—No, I had no intention at the time; in fact I did not know what way the accounts could be furnished.

35,729. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now go to the second election of Mr. Patton?—Between the first and second——

35,730. About a month elapsed?—On the 7th of June Mr. Bealy Smith made two claims upon Mr. Patton; I forget either sum, but they were very large, and my own impression is that Mr. Patton's first election cost very close upon 4,000*l.* I may be wrong, because I never kept an account, but that is my own impression.

35,731. (Mr Price.) How did you make that out, because 1,900*l.* is said to have passed through the hands of the bribery agents here. Mr. Temblett, I think, told us that amount, how could you make up the difference between that and 4,000*l.*?—I will tell you what made me think so; it may be 950*l.* less, but I have been trying to recollect it, and I have got some idea floating in my mind that there were two sums of 950*l.*

35,732. (Mr. Coleridge.) Two claims on Mr. Patton?—I know there was one claim of 700*l.* besides.

35,733. (Mr. Price.) Made by Mr. Bealy Smith?—Yes.

35,734. Did Mr. Patton pay them?—Yes, it went through my hands, but it was either a certain sum which I imagined to be 4,000*l.* or something near it, or it was 4,000*l.* minus 950*l.* which I did not receive; a second sum of 950*l.*; but Mr. Thompson when he comes before you——

35,735. You had it all through Mr. Thompson?—Yes, and if he came and said I received two sums of 950*l.*, I should say "Yes."

35,736. (Mr. Price.) The importance of it will be very great in this way, that whereas as far as the account given of bribing is concerned, we have not had accounted to us for more than 1,900*l.* at the election, therefore if any demands are made up afterwards, making it up to 4,000*l.*, a large sum has been stuck to?—I am perfectly convinced that there was a sum of 950*l.*

35,737. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you happen to know from Mr. Thompson where he obtained the money?—Not the least.

35,738. (Mr. Price.) That is your impression at all events?—As I told you, it is either 4,000*l.*, or if Mr. Thompson were to say to me, "You received two "sums of 950*l.*" I should say, "Yes, I did," or if he said, "It is only one," I should say, "That is it," too. I am really in doubt.

35,739. (Mr. Coleridge.) Assuming it is only one sum of 950*l.*, when and how did Mr. Thompson pay you that?—In notes, all.

35,740. But when and how?—Just after.

35,741. What did he say to you?—I asked him for it. The way was this—any accounts that were settled were settled by Mr. Bealy Smith, with whom I did not know, and Mr. Bealy Smith said, "Will you "send me the money;" and I applied to Mr. Thompson. Mr. Thompson gave me the money, and I sent it. I had nothing whatever to do with the arrangement as between Mr. Smith and Mr. Patton, nothing. The next election, I think it was Mr. Thompson said there was a great deal too much money spent at the preceding election, and as well I remember, Mr. Smith told me that he had agreed for 4,000*l.* for the election, that it was to cost no more.

35,742. (Mr. Anstey.) That who had agreed?—That he had agreed, he did not say with whom, for 3,000*l.*

35,743. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Thompson told you that?—No, Mr. Smith told me 3,000*l.*

35,744. (Mr. Price.) Now I ask you this, you had been introduced to Mr. Patton in the way you have told us, and you had to a certain extent assisted him by encouraging him by your presence here, why was it necessary for you, he having secured his election at that time by the means you have told us, to have anything to do with his re-election?—I will tell you. I thought I had been very badly used, because I was perfectly well aware that there never had been an election without some money going on, and at that time I knew, it was after I came to know the whole modus operandi, and I thought, having beaten them with their own weapons, the least they could have done was to have allowed me to stay in. I acted very foolishly, and I am very sorry I did it. Only to show my sorrow for it or at least my annoyance at the last election, I said nothing would ever tempt me to have anything to do with it again. It brought on so much falsehood and deceit that I was perfectly disgusted with it. Why I did it was a sort of madness that came over me. Having turned me out, I did not choose for them to have the seat if I could prevent it. After that election Mr. Bealy Smith came up to town, as I told you, and he told me he had arranged for 3,000*l.* with some one whom I did not know.

35,745. (Mr. Price.) Did it never occur to you or to any one of your party, or to Mr. Patton; one does not say more than one can help about poor Mr. Patton, but one would have thought it would strike any man coming down here with you who had been unseated for bribery, that it was rather a dangerous thing?—I cannot say anything about that. But, however, when Mr. Bealy Smith came up to town, I got, I am not very certain whether it was 1,500*l.* or 2,000*l.* from Mr. Thompson then, it was either one or the other; however, suffice it to say, I went with it to the Bank of England and changed it into gold, and I brought it down and put it into a box that had had chocolate in it, one of those flat boxes, and handed it to Mr. Bealy Smith.

35,746. Why did you take it to the Carlton?—I will tell you, it was in bags, and another club to which I belong is the Union, and the dressing-rooms of the Union are directly opposite upstairs where the servants are, on the contrary, at the Carlton the dressing-rooms are underneath, looking into the street, and there you are perfectly quiet, no one can come near, and that is the reason I did it.

35,747. But you could have locked the door always?—Yes, only at the Union I must have run the risk of being heard.

35,748. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you went there and took it out of the bags and put it into the chocolate box?—Yes, into the chocolate box.

35,749. Who handed it to Mr. Bealy Smith in the cab?—I handed it to him.

35,750. We have heard something of your standing on the steps?—I think Mr. Lilly was mistaken; whether Mr. Bealy Smith was standing by the cab or not I do not know, but I am perfectly satisfied that I handed it to him.

35,751. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you say?—Nothing in the world; he knew well enough what it was.

35,752. You are quite sure that there was nobody out of livery?—Not that I saw.

35,753. Let me finish; you are quite sure there was nobody out of livery who carried it out into the room?—Perfectly certain of that.

35,754. And you were not standing on the top of the steps at all, but at the cab?—I walked down the steps.

35,755. Then you did not stand there?—No.

35,756. You gave it into his own hands, and then he drove off?—Well whether Mr. Smith was standing at the cab or not, and whether he handed it to anybody, it being very heavy—you know it weighs nearly 34 lbs.—whether he got into the cab, and then got someone to hand it to him, I do not know; but I did not stand at the cab, but walked away.

35,757. Then was anything said either by them or by you on that occasion?—Well, there was.

35,758. What was it?—Mr. Bealy Smith said, "We shall win."

35,759. Was he in the cab when he said that?—I do not think he was in the cab, because I walked away directly after giving it to him, and then it would be inferred that I gave it to him in the cab.

35,760. What Mr. Lilley's motive could be for concealing such a material fact as that I do not know, but he has given a totally different story?—I do not know how that is.

35,761. Whilst the money was in the Carlton Club had you any conversation there with anybody about it?—Certainly not.

35,762. Did anybody ask you anything about it?—Certainly not.

35,763. No joke?—No, nobody knew it; not a soul. I am certain nobody knew it.

35,764. Then go on?—That is all I can tell you about that election.

35,765. Did you not come down?—No, I went to Ireland.

35,766. By whose arrangement did the two ladies go to Weston-super-Mare?—That was my election.

35,767. You did not come down at all at that election?—No, I went to Ireland.

35,768. Did you see Mr. Patton between those two elections of 1866, between that election and his coming down a second time?—Yes.

35,769. Did he tell you he had discovered there had been a good deal of expenditure?—No, he did not.

35,770. Did he express anything like disgust or anger at the expense he had been put o?—To me?

35,771. Yes?—No, he never spoke of it, and knew nothing of it, I am perfectly convinced.

35,772. Do you remember what he said to you?—He said very little to me more than good morning, or something of that kind. Where I saw him just to speak to him in that way was on one of the staircases at the Carlton, coming down stairs. Then, if you will allow me, there is something here which will assist you, and I know that you are anxious to be informed there was a petition threatened at that election, and I have some correspondence here that perhaps would be useful. I was in Ireland, and on the 22nd July I got this paper. It is a paper from Mr. Bealy Smith to Mr. Pitman, and it contains some very monstrous demands.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

35,773. What is the date of it?—Bridgwater, 19th July 1866.

35,774. And signed by Mr. Bealy Smith?—"Very "faithfully yours, R. Bealy Smith," directed to "Fre- "derick Pitman, Esqre." He says here, "Dear Sir, "a meeting of the heads of the party was held yester- "day afternoon, and it was unanimously resolved "that, while on the one hand every attention and "respect should be paid to the wishes of the Lord "Advocate, yet on the other, it was of great impor- "tance to keep up the position of our party in the "town. This can only be done either by a diligent "prosecution of this petition, or by making all our "partisans quite satisfied so far as the recent contests "are concerned, and by obtaining assistance from the "present Government in appointing a sufficient num- "ber of new justices of the peace, to outnumber those "who have been appointed by our opponents, and in "the distribution of some of the patronage in their "hands in favour of the Conservative party in the "town. There is a very strong feeling in the town, "encouraged, doubtless, by the Lord Advocate's "parting address, that a petition should be presented. "The signature thereto and recognizances have been "arranged, and I am quite satisfied that there would "be a liberal subscription to prosecute it to the "utmost, and evidence to support it would not be "wanting. Indeed, a great many people are in favour "of an inquiry and a partial disfranchisement of the "borough rather than allow the Liberal party to ride "in tyranny over the town. The meeting, however, "desire to consult the wishes of the Lord Advocate, "and if I receive your assurance that his Lordship "will use his utmost exertions to cement the party "here by giving us the means of making a liberal "settlement with all parties for the last two elec- "tions, and by obtaining a sufficient number of justices "appointed and a fair share of the patronage distri- "buted, I think the party generally will be satisfied, "because they will then believe that a fair oppor- "tunity is open of winning at the next election both "seats, and thereby maintaining the status of the "town. If you desire to see me upon the subject "of this letter, I shall be prepared to meet you in "London either on Monday or Tuesday next, but I "should receive your reply at latest on the morning "of the latter day. These are the opinions of the "heads of the party, and I write at their request."

35,775. (Mr. Coleridge.) Of your own knowledge can you tell us who the heads of the party are who are there referred to?—Certainly not.

35,776. You know the place so well, can you tell us who you supposed were meant by the heads?

(Mr. Price.) By whose authority could he pretend to write in that way?—I should say in the first place perhaps his uncle, Mr. Lilly and all the solicitors, Mr. Boyle was not here then.

35,777. (Mr. Anstey.) All the solicitors?—Yes, I should say so.

35,778. (Mr. Coleridge.) All the Conservative solicitors that is?—All the Conservative solicitors.

35,779. Including Mr. Gabriel Poole?—No, he never took any part.

35,780. (Mr. Price.) That sort of letter would have been written, would you judge, after consultation with the Trevors and Mr. Brice?—I should say so most decidedly if asked to put an interpretation upon it if it be true.

35,781. Exactly?—I do not mean to say it was true or had taken place.

35,783. But my learned colleague rather wanted to know whether you had any reason for supposing that Mr. Smith was ever made the mouthpiece?—Certainly I did.

35,784. Of the party?—I did certainly at that time, 1865 or 1866.

35,785. That he was the mouthpiece of the gentlemen?—I do think he was the leading man then.

35,786. That is another thing; a man might make himself a leading man, as Robert Bussell might suppose himself to be, for a short time, but the question is, whether Mr. Smith was in a position to be mouthpiece of the leading men of the party expressing their sentiments when he wrote that letter?—If you ask me my opinion I should say he was.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Is either Mr. Brice or Mr. Trevor in Court?

Mr. W. Brice.

Mr. William Brice recalled.

35,787. (Mr. Price.) You heard that letter read?—Yes, it is a pure fabrication from beginning to end.

35,788. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there any such meeting at all?—Never.

35,789. (Mr. Price.) Any consultation between the heads of the party that could possibly justify Mr. Bealy Smith writing in that tone to Mr. Pitman?—Not to my knowledge, and I do not believe it either.

35,790. (Mr. Anstey.) You will not answer for such a leader of the party as Mr. Lilly or Mr. Veysey?—Mr. Veysey was never consulted.

35,791. But I am speaking of this demand, which in any view of the case is a most infamous demand whether warranted or not warranted; therefore you understand I am not saying who was or not consulted, I know what I think about it; but you say the heads of the party were not consulted?—I do.

35,792. But Mr. Westropp has put his own meaning on "the heads of the party" by including amongst them Mr. Bealy Smith, Mr. Lilly, and inter alios Mr. Veysey, because he says all the solicitors except Mr. Poole. Now it is just possible is it not, that such a demand as that may have been got up between Mr. Bealy Smith and those other two persons Mr. Lilly and Mr. Veysey?—Yes, possibly, not to my knowledge.

35,793. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not know of such a meeting?—No.

35,794. (Mr. Price.) Would such a thing as that be a sort of thing if true that would have been likely to have been discussed at the Bridge Committee?—No, the Bridge Committee is about a hundred people.

35,795-6. Where then would it be likely?—It would be at a private meeting, if anywhere. As I said before I was not friendly with Mr. Bealy Smith.

(The Witness.) I should state that at this election Mr. Bealy Smith told Mr. Trevor and myself that money was short, and instead of getting 50*l.* we got only 35*l.* or 40*l.*

35,797. (Mr. Price.) Had you the least idea that there had been 4,000*l.*?—No, not the least idea. I never received but 40*l.* in my life.

35,798. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that paid for the 1865 election?—One fee, 1865 and 1866.

35,799. When?—After the election of 1866.

35,800. But your charge was made before?—No, none.

35,801. But you expected it?—Yes, I expected 50*l.* At Mr. Padwick's election, I should tell you, that Mr. Richard Smith then came and said he agreed to "no cure no pay," and we abated our fee to make up a fee for him on that occasion.

35,802. (Mr. Anstey.) While you are there, I may ask whether I correctly represented you in your absence yesterday. I asked Mr. Gray whether you had informed him that the tavern bill at Mr. Leaker's was unpaid, and he said, yes, you so informed him, and that he wrote back simply that it ought to be paid, but he denies that you afterwards informed him that Mr. Leaker was pressing for it, and that there was not money enough to meet it?—What I stated in my evidence I repeat, that Mr. Leaker was pressing me; he came to me frequently for his bill. That is not the bill in reference to the election, there Mr. Gray is making a mistake, but there was a bill sent in by Mr. Leaker to the election auditor, which bill he paid then. There was a subsequent bill in reference to the petition, which is the bill now unpaid.

35,803. That is what I understood?—Mr. Leaker came to me, and said "This bill ought to be paid, it has nothing to do with the election." And I said "I think so too."

35,804. And you wrote to Mr. Gray?—I wrote to Mr. Gray.

35,805. To that effect?—I did.

35,806. I rather took upon myself in the absence of my notes to quote your words, which I think were "hanging fire"—that Mr. Gray was willing, but Mr. Westropp was hanging fire?—I did.

35,807. Did you obtain the information to that effect from Mr. Gray?—No, that was the conclusion I drew from Mr. Gray's reply to me, which was this: I wrote and told him the bill ought to be paid, as it had nothing to do with the election. Mr. Gray wrote back that he thought so too, and would write to Mr. Westropp, and then not receiving the cheque, I inferred that he was under the impression that there was money here to meet it.

HENRY WESTROPP, ESQ., recalled.

Mr. H. Westropp.

35,808. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now you have another letter to read?—I did reply to that letter; do you wish me to read it?

35,809. Yes, if you have your own reply?—This is written on July 22nd. "My dear Bealy, I received "yours of the 20th this morning. As this letter "will reach you on Tuesday morning just before the "last opportunity of forwarding a petition, and as "I learn from your letter to Mr. Pitman that all is "quite prepared at Bridgwater, I would suggest a "few considerations to the heads of our party. I shall "be very pleased if you would take counsel with "them in whatever way appears most desirable to "you. Perhaps it is not for me, in a matter where "the lasting interests of our party at Bridgwater "are concerned, to oppose my own judgment to that "of a number of gentlemen living on the spot, and "therefore more conversant than I with the interests "of that party, especially as my opinion may be "considered biased by personal motives and feelings; "but I would ask, in the event of Mr. Patton's non-"acceptance of the alternative for the petition as "expressed in the letter to Mr. Pitman, what is to "be done? If nothing, where will our party be sup-"posing Mr. Pitman does not reply by Tuesday "morning. How are you going to act after having "turned me out for bribery, and after the very men "thus acting having, as we know and can make "appear, done the same thing at both this last "election and that of June 7th, is it unlikely that "the presenting a petition would drive them into a "compromise for next election. My impression is "that an exposure of the conduct pursued by the "Liberals at the last election would effectually "shatter their party for a very long while, as it "would destroy their agreement and falsely insisted "upon prestige for purity. Supposing even two "seats won at the next election,—a very great "stretch of imagination—can it be supposed that "then there would not be a petition? We all know "how those seats must be gained, and that petitions "are not very difficult. These are points which, in "my idea are well worthy of being considered before "the abandonment of the petition is resolved upon, "and though last not least is the consideration that "supposing all sought from Mr. Patton to be granted, "and put into execution, the patronage of the Govern-"ment will naturally be given, will it facilitate the "finding two candidates, or even one at the next "election with all the requisition for winning, things "remaining as they will then appear on the surface, "37 majority for the Liberal candidate,—a petition "threatened,—a bribe produced on the hustings, "stated to have been given by the Liberals to a "Conservative voter—and after all this no pro-"ceedings taken, a very lame and impotent con-"clusion." I then had a letter from poor old Mr. Patton of the 24th July, "I awaited your arrival "with a view to aid you in certain matters in con-"nexion with Bridgwater," this was the appoint-of magistrates, "but I have received a communication "from Mr. B. Smith of a character which precludes "me from further interference; if not immediately "corrected, I shall be in Edinburgh, where any "communication addressed to me at No. 30, Heriot "Row will reach me."

35,810. Did you answer that?—No, I do not think I did, I forget.

35,811. Did you write again to Mr. Patton?—Subsequently I did. Then on the 25th July Mr. Bealy Smith again wrote to me to tell me the letter which I had written on the 22nd July was in fact nothing, and writing me a humbugging letter.

35,812. Have you it?—No, I have the letter he has written to the Lord Advocate himself, in which he says, "A meeting of the heads of the party has "been held to-day, and the subject of the petition, as "well as of your letter of the 23d instant, has been "brought under their consideration. They have de-"termined to fall in with your views, and no petition "will be presented. For your kind assurances of "assistance, with reference to the justices and the "patronage of the Government, I am desired to "tender to you their warmest thanks. In these "matters the party throw themselves entirely upon "your kind consideration."

(Mr. Price.) Bear in mind that is the 25th July 1866.

35,813. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then the petition was dropped?—Then the petition was dropped, and I went over to Ireland, and in consequence of finding how matters were going on at the last election, after all their promises to me and asking me to stand again, and all this sort of thing, I made up my mind.

35,814. (Mr. Price.) What were those matters?—Why, seeing that there were 26 men, I think, who put down their names as ready to support me through thick and thin, and I found them voting for Vanderbyl and Bagehot, I found there could be no faith placed, no certainty; and, as you may see by my letter here, although I have mentioned my determination I was very undetermined in my mind even then as to how to act, and I went to Dublin. I do not know whether you have heard of the late Judge Dobbs, my brother-in-law?

35,815. A judge of the Landed Estates Court?—A judge of the Landed Estates Court, and he and I had a consultation, and he perfectly well knew my anxiety to get into Parliament was nothing more than an occupation, that there was nothing to gain, and he begged me, for God's sake, to have nothing to do with that place at all. I then came up and waited on Mr. Spofforth. I thought it would be right to tell him, in case anything afterwards occurred, if he wanted to look for a candidate he would find the coast perfectly clear, and I went to him, and curiously enough whilst I was there in walked Mr. Lilly and Mr. Smith, and I then told them I would have nothing to do with the place again, and Mr. Smith was rather angry with me for it, and all that sort of thing; and I at once sat down to write an address, and it began, "In consequence of the results of the last election." And Mr. Smith said to me immediately, "Do not do "that, that will be ruin to our party; do not injure "the party." And he then copied this out; "From "the circumstances which have occurred,"—"Well," says I, "that will not do; they may put that down

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

"to me or 50 things, and I will not do it. The real "thing is, I am not satisfied with the results of the "election and will not stand again;" and I then turned to and wrote a parting address to the people and sent it down to Mr. Lilly to have printed off. I dare say you have seen it.

35,816. No, we have not seen it; we have heard of it?—It began, "Gentlemen, In consequence of the "results," that was the most important part of it, "the results of the last election, I am sorry I cannot "again offer myself as candidate for the representa- "tion of the borough of Bridgwater." I received a good many kind letters, saying they were very sorry I had so determined.

35,817. (Mr. Price.) What would be the date of that address?—I can tell you, because this is dated a few days subsequently.

35,818. Before the passing of the Reform Bill?—Yes, it was in 1866; it must have been before August 10th, because here is a letter I wrote to Mr. Patton, to tell him I had determined never to stand again. He wrote me, "I am surprised and sorry that you "should no longer remain a candidate for Bridg- "water. With such a number of pledged requisition- "ists, and such popularity as you enjoy, I should have "thought that you would not have retired. The "petition would have been forced on, and ended in "expense and annoyance. I do not believe that any "compromise can be effected with such persons as "manage the Liberal interests in that borough. If "there were any chance for it, it would be by your "remaining in the field. I am glad that the magis- "trates question has been favourably settled."

35,819. Was there an addition made to the magistrates then; there were four or five added, I believe?—There were, but they wanted me to interfere about it. I said I would not.

35,820. Who wanted you to interfere?—Mr. Bealy Smith.

35,821. Did he give you any names of nominees of him?—No; he merely said he wished to do it. I said, I had nothing further to do with the borough; and such being the case I begged to decline any interference, and I subsequently was told that the matter had been sent to Mr. Gore Langton, and that he had referred it to Mr. Gabriel Poole.

35,822. I only want to know if you know any pretence being put forward by Mr. Smith to have any particular persons named as magistrates here?—No; I can tell you nothing whatever.

35,823. (Mr. Coleridge.) All that he wanted was to have Conservatives, I suppose?—Well, I do not know; I wrote subsequently, after he had been appointed, and he says, "My dear Mr. Westropp, I "thank you most sincerely for your kind letter. I "have certainly had a more than ordinary share of "good fortune in reaching the safe haven in which I "am now moored. In looking back to our Bridg- "water experience, although not without disagreeable "reminiscences, it forms a chequered page in a some- "what monotonous life. My only regret is, that my "misfortune should have been the means of severing "a connexion between you and the borough which "had all the surface appearance of affection and "cordiality. When you visit the north do not "forget that you have friends at No. 30, Heriot Row, "who will rejoice to see you, and who now unite in "best wishes for your health and happiness."

35,824. (Mr. Anstey.) You receded from that determination, and stood again in 1868?—Perhaps you will allow me to mention why? I do not know whether I have it here or not.

35,825. (Mr. Coleridge.) One question first, had you during the time this Commission has been sitting any communication with Mr. Patton?—Not a word. There are some papers here, allow me to propose to disembarrass myself of them; they are letters from poor persons in this town since the last election, and I think they tend very materially to show how it was not very much that was expected.

35,826. Read them if you like?—There are a great number.

35,827. Read one as an illustration?—There was a man who was here to-day, Abraham Frost, whose name has been a good deal mentioned as never having voted without money.

35,828. (Mr. Price.) These are letters as I understand which you have had since the last election?—Since the last election.

35,829. From persons who voted for you?—From persons who voted for me, which will tend to show that they did not expect money, that they did not come to vote with the intention of receiving money.

35,830. (Mr. Anstey.) The writers did not?—No, the writers did not.

(Mr. Anstey.) We have not to inquire into their virtuous practices.

35,831. (Mr. Price.) The only thing I understood you to say was that there was one man who was mentioned before us as not being likely to vote without?—Abraham Frost. The reason I pick him out is, that I think it was Mr. James Cook that said he had no doubt whatever that money was going on our side at the last election, giving as a reason because Abraham Frost had voted for us, and was not known to vote without money, and that is the reason. "I am "at present in great distress and trouble, having "lost my wife after a few days suffering. I am "pressed very sorely. My children have robbed me "since her death, and I am a little in debt on the "opposite party, and they are pressing me. I want, "sir, a small favour to ask, that is if you will oblige "me with a small sum, and I will give you a note of "hand to repay it again at any time you may fix. A "few lines from you will greatly oblige, as I hope "shortly to have the pleasure of seeing you, and "Mr. Gray again. You will always have my sup- "port, but pressing circumstances have induced me, "sir, to apply to you for a little assistance, which I "trust will not offend."

35,832. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the date of that?—June 7th last.

35,833. How does his coming to you, we will say for the first time, or we will say for the second time, in June 1869 show that he had not expected a reward for his vote in November 1868?—I give it quantum valeat.

35,834. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, if they are like that—— (Mr. Coleridge.) They only show there was an expectation going on amongst them still.

(Mr. Anstey.) Now go on and tell us how you came to stand for the borough in 1868?—I do not know whether I have it here or not, but perhaps you will allow me to give you the last letter which I ever had from Mr. Bealy Smith with regard to money.

35,835. Yes, the date first?—"Bridgwater, 19th No- "vember 1868." But I may read first of all a letter of the 10th November 1866, "My dear Sir, I have "been a good deal from home lately, otherwise very "much occupied, or you would have heard from me "before. The amount remaining due to me is "235*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* The cheeses cost 2*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* eah. "I am glad they are liked. I was at Brighton last "week, and saw a decided improvement in my "father. He is quite looking forward to seeing you. "Brighton is a charming place, and much pleased "me. I should be truly glad to know that you have "successfully contested the county of Limerick. It "is more worthy of you than this blackguard place. "I saw Spofforth when I was last in town, and he "was very kind. Sir A. A. Hood was consulted by "the Government as to the justices, and he con- "sulted Mr. G. S. Poole, who undoubtedly selected "the names appointed and put in. Mr. W. H. Axford, "whose name was not on the list. The matter has "given great offence to some, but I hope to remedy "it early next year. Mr. Hammill has been elected "mayor. I send you about it. The town council "election passed off very quietly, and the registration "resulted in a gain to us for what it is worth. I am "going to Ireland on Tuesday next. I shall be glad "to see your new villa when I am next in town. "You may be interested to know that I am now

" engaged to be married to the young lady whose " carte I sent you, and I shall get married at South- " ampton as soon as my house is finished." I then sent him the money, and he wrote me on the 19th November 1866, " My dear Sir, I am in receipt " of your cheque for 240*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* to close our " accounts to this time, and I need not say how sorry " I am that anything should have occurred to neces- " sitate its closing. I have only this evening closed " for the purchase of a piece of land upon which to " build my house. I shall now set to work in real " earnest, but I shall send plans for your inspection, " as promised. After you come back from Brighton " I shall be glad to know your opinion of my father. " I find that Vanderbyl has given 5*l.* 5*s.* to Lilly's " testimonial."

35,836. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did they testimonialise him for?—He did very efficient services to the infirmary. " Neville Grenville and Earl Cavan, " 2*l.* 2*s.* each, along with several others. I think if " you feel disposed to give, this latter would be the " correct sum. Gabriel Poole is the treasurer of the " fund. The weather has set in quite cold, and we have " winter at last. Trusting it does not increase your " rheumatism." After that he wrote me respecting some furniture—it is only to show how it ended, and I wrote to him to say that I did not like exactly the way he was going on, and he wrote me on the 10th July 1867, " We have known each other for " some time, and I have received very many marks " of kindness at your hands, and I very much regret " that anything should have occurred to induce you " to take the course mentioned in yours of yesterday's " date."

35,837. (Mr. Price.) That was in consequence of your address?—No, it was in consequence of getting married, and many things occurred I did not like, and I told him.

35,838. Will you come to the time you determined to stand again?—I do not think I have it, but suffice it to say I received it from Mr. Lilly to say they were going to have a meeting on the 5th May, and it was left an entirely open question to myself whether I would come down again or not. I came down. A good many speeches were made containing expressions of good feeling towards myself, and they should be obliged if I would stand again. I told them I certainly could not unless I had a deputation.

35,839. That was the dinner at the Bridge Committee?—The Bridge Committee. On the 4th July I got a letter from Mr. James Trevor: " My dear Sir, " Some of our friends are very anvious to complete " the arrangements for the coming election, and have " deputed Mr. Brice and me to go to London on " Monday and see you and Mr. Spofforth on the " subject. We will call on you at the Union on " Monday evening or Tuesday morning if you will " kindly write me a line addressed the 'Tavistock' " Hotel, Covent Garden, naming which day and the " hour." And they came up, and Mr. James Trevor asked me about standing again, and I said I should be glad, that I considered this a deputation, that I should have no objection to stand again. That went on for a little time, and he at last asked me, and I said, " I will not expend another shilling towards the " illegal expenses." That I was determined on. He said, " I do not know how it is, your popularity is not " worth 10 votes."

35,841. Who said that?—Mr. James Trevor. " Your popularity is not worth 10 votes." " I do not " know, Mr. Trevor, I should doubt very much if there " is very violent opposition to me, for I have been in " communication in a curious way with one of the " people who is prominent down at Bridgwater, and " from what I gather from him, I do not think there " will be much opposition to me."

35,842. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is Mr. Smith?—If you will allow me I will speak to that presently. " Well," says I, " I do not know. Let us go down to " Mr. Spofforth;" and we went down to Mr. Spofforth. He told Mr. Spofforth I was determined to stand, and Mr. Spofforth did not say a word, no further than he thought I was right. I had spent a good deal of money, and we went away, and I think on the following day he communicated with Mr. Treby, and Mr. Treby said he would have nothing to do with it.

35,843. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who is Mr. Treby?—A gentleman who represented Lyme I think. I forget how it cropped up, but it was Mr. Trevor, I think, said, " I can hardly expect anybody to throw " himself away in Bridgwater running second," as I should have all the popularity. " Now, Sir, I will " tell you what, if you can get a man to go down, if " he makes the objection that I am the first can- " didate, I will run second and let him go first. I " am anxious to get in that place at which I have " been scandalously used," and I said, " I should like " to get in, and I think that with a new constituency " there is a very good chance of it." That evening I mentioned that to some of my friends, and they said, " Stop, stop, you must not think of it one second; it " will never do, never." On the following morning I went to my house at Norwood, and told Mr. Trevor that I would not run second. We then went to a Mr. Thruston; his friend Mr. Jamieson lives at 34, Lincoln's Inn Fields; we were told immediately about that, and Mr. Thruston said he would stand with me on purity principles. I must tell you in the interim Mr. Pain had made an application to me for a cousin of his.

35,843–4. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the intellectual young gentleman who was examined here the other day?—I do not know; a solicitor here. Well, I did not altogether like—there were reasons why I did not exactly like to say anything about it. I told him, in fact, that I did not like the way he was introduced.

35,845. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this Mr. Thruston, Mr. Pain's cousin?

(Mr. Price.) He is Mr. Pain's cousin?—I forget his name altogether. But we went up to this gentleman, and Mr. Thruston said he was perfectly content to run with me on purity principles. Then Mr. Brice and Mr. James Trevor said they would come down, for they could not take on themselves to report what the party down here would like, but that they would send a telegram or letter by the following Wednesday, and on Tuesday I went into Mr. Jamieson, as I had heard nothing at all from Bridgwater, and he told me that Mr. Thruston was sent down last evening, that is Monday; then the letter, of course, reached on Tuesday morning here, saying he would have nothing to do with the borough. Mr. Trevor then said afterwards to me I do not know whether Mr. Brice told you there was a gentle pressure put on me to give up, and certainly that was what I hardly expected. I said I would come down here, and would throw myself entirely on the Conservative Working Men's Association, and I do not know exactly how it was, but I do not think it pleased them, it may or may not; but however, things went on in that way, and on the 1st September it was, I recollect perfectly well, that Mr. John Smith and Mr. Ruddock met me in Clifton. There I told them again I would stand decidedly, and then determined to come down and have a meeting with my friends, and speak to them. In the meantime I got a letter from Mr. Ruddock to say that Mr. Gray had called on me at the Union. I had not the most remote idea who Mr. Gray was, and I went to Mr. Spofforth, and said, " Can you tell me?" He said, " All I can tell you is, if it is Mr. Gray of " St. Helen's, he is one of the best men you can get," and he instanced a case where a poor boy was deprived of his work, and Mr. Gray took care of him as long as he lived.

35,846. (Mr. Price.) That was Mr. Spofforth's idea of an eligible candidate?—I only tell you what he said.

35,847. He having taken care of the boy, might take care of the borough?—That he was a kind man; if it was Mr. Gray of St. Helen's you could not have a better candidate.

35,848. If he took care of one, he would of all?—Yes, I suppose so. However, Mr. Gray then met me, he was with Mr. Toogood, and when he came in I said, "Well now Mr. Gray, there is one thing I "must place before you, I will not either directly or "indirectly spend any money, I will not spend any-"thing, but will go on purity principles, because I "have no intention of being turned out again, and to "be kicked out once is all very well, but a second "time I will not stand it, therefore, if you like to "come with me it must be on purity principles," and he assented to it. He came down here. We had no particular arrangement with any person as to costs. Mr. Toogood came. The night before he was there, and I do not know who he went to, I think it was Mr. Brice's office, and he arranged then there would be 200*l.* lodged by each of us for legal expenses, and 150*l.* each for the solicitors; that was 350*l.* each lodged. We went to town, then there was a truce. I was in hopes that we were not going to canvass, and on the 26th October I think it was Mr. Lovibond told Mr. Trevor that the truce was at an end, we must begin to canvass. I did understand, and I have heard it stated here by the Liberal solicitors, that they had a very large majority on their books. I dare say, and I think it is perfectly likely, that many men promised on both sides, that I am quite willing to admit, but I have no hesitation in saying that on our books we had a majority of something like forty promises.

35,849. (Mr. Price.) From your experience as a candidate I ask as a general question do you believe there is the slightest virtue in a canvass?—Decidedly not, it was one of the things that in the new Reform Bill I should have been most anxious to see put an end to with the nomination. I think it would do so much good if made penal to divulge in any way the state of the poll during the hours of polling. There is nothing that would tend so much to counteract bribery.

35,850. (Mr. Anstey.) Before coming to the poll I want to ask you about this particular canvass; you were accompanied by that same Mr. Pain nearly every day he says?—No, I do not think we were accompanied by him, in fact I know we were not, for this simple reason, Mr. Pain on one occasion expressed his anger at not being more employed than he was, and when he was, only to carry cards.

35,851. Will you finish your answer which you broke off. My question was, he accompanied you every day during your canvass?—I should say not every day, nor nearly every day.

35,852. On some occasions when canvassing with you he says that it is very likely indeed that he admitted he had; very likely he might have, he certainly admitted he had said to the voters whom he saw with you that in all probability there would be money by-and-by. I asked him whether you ever found fault with him for doing that or Mr. Gray either?—We never heard him do it.

35,852. And after considerable hesitation he said no, but he was not sure whether you heard it or not. I here ask you, did you hear any of those assurances or expectations held out by this intellectual gentleman?—Never. Do you think that if I had I should not have considered it tantamount to a promise, and do you think I should have presented a petition against the sitting members if I had not believed we had not been guilty of bribery in any shape or form?

35,853. Especially as you relied not on what you were going to give but on large sums already paid, and the popularity already purchased?—I relied on popularity as I told you yesterday the reason why it was I made the commencement at the commencement.

35,854. (Mr. Coleridge.) To purchase popularity? It may be.

35,855. (Mr. Anstey.) You were not a Bridgwater man?—There is Mr. Kinglake.

35,856. You made yourself a Bridgwater man by frequent bleeding?—There is Mr. Kinglake, but I doubt very much, except among a few, that he is very unpopular.

35,857. (Mr. Anstey.) He will have his account to render by and by, we will take yours now.

35,858. (Mr. Price.) At all events you never heard such things said in your presence?—Most certainly not. At the same time I daresay it is a fact, because Mr. Pain himself in unmeasured terms abused both Mr. Gray and me on the evening of the nomination for not having spent money.

35,859. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean the eve or the evening?—The evening.

35,860. Therefore on the eve of the polling day?—On the eve of the polling day after the election.

35,861. I thought you said the nomination?—No, pardon me, "election."

35,862. Then there was an agreement between you and Mr. Gray he has given us some evidence about, and there is a letter from Mr. Lilly which bears further record of it by which you were to spend 500*l.*, and he was to bear the rest of the expenditure which he thought, he says, in the letter would be considerably more, and which he told us he was prepared to bear if it did not exceed 1,000*l.* or so, which means 1,500*l.* I suppose, the mystic sum which has been what candidates are expected to spend here?—I will tell you about that. When I mentioned Mr. Gray I was standing upon paying merely legal expenses, and he said, "What will this "be, 1,500*l.*?" I said, "What nonsense talking like "that," I said, "500*l.* is the limit; it cannot be "more, and in fact I will not spend more than that." "Dear me," he said, "I thought it would be con-"siderably more than that; I thought it would be "1,500*l.*" Then I think he added, "I think I "ought to pay more than you." "Well," said I, "nothing of the sort, my impression is we ought "only to pay share and share alike, as it will be "merely costs, and I give you fair notice I am not "going in any way to spend more than 500*l.*"

35,863. He first of all says that he got a manuscript letter, what the manuscript is does not appear; it cannot have been, as was suggested by Mr. Lilly, the manuscript of the address, because he puts it thus, "Mr. Westropp manuscript, and also a draft address." The manuscript, whatever it was, was not preserved by Mr. Lilly, at least he does not know what it could be. This is what he says of his interview with you. This letter is the 25th of September, what date his interview was he does not state. "On our first inter-"view with Mr. Westropp he gave me to understand "that he had information (later than any I could have) "that was most encouraging that a large number of "the men electors were prepared to vote blue, that "there were diversions in the opposite camp, and "that in his opinion the latter were demoralized. On "the subject of money he was decidedly oppposed to "anything beyond legal expenditure, giving reasons "in which I entirely agreed." Then he says, "Mr. "Westropp estimated that his legal expenditure "would amount to some 500*l.*" It being in 1865, 185*l.*, and again in in 1859 something less than 200*l.* Then he goes on to say, "Of course mine would be "considerably above this as I should have to ask the "active assistance of yourself"—That is Mr. Lilly, —"And our legal friends. But what I should wish "clearly understood is that I am not prepared to fight "the battle by undue influence." Then again he says, "If you and the other heads of the party think that my "qualifications as a merchant, together with the fact "of my having the support promised by Mr. Spofforth "here, render me a fit person to represent the "constituency, then I can promise you great zeal in "the work, and liberal support to all your local "interests and institutions. But if on the contrary "you are of opinion that victory will be hopeless "unless by a large expenditure of money on "outside influences then I fear my candidature must "drop. It would not suit my position here, nor my "conscience, to go through the ordeal of which Mr. "Westropp has had experience formerly. Pray "give me your candid views. I should have been "glad to have seen Mr. Toogood before sending you "this letter, but he will not be at business before "Monday, and meanwhile you may be called on to

" act." Now you see what was in his mind when he wrote this?—Well, if you will kindly ask me any question about it.

35,864. The question I put to you a little while ago which was whether that correctly represents the result of your conferences down to that time with Mr. Gray?—Very nearly; the only thing is that I did not say I was prepared to spend 500*l.* in legal expenses of the election but that I would not let them exceed it.

35,865. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you spend at the last election?—350*l.* was lodged. And now, if you will allow me, I am glad that Mr. Brice is here, for he will be able to put an end a great deal to the subject of this tavern bill, which I hope I am not taking up the time of the Court by trying to make clear.

35,866. (Mr. Price.) I think we understood about that bill unless you have something to add?—I have, which may alter your opinion.

35,867. About that 500*l.*, did you represent at all to Mr. Gray that he would have to spend anything like double the sum you would have to spend?—Certainly not.

35,868. Did you give him any idea?—No.

35,869. Where could he have got it?—He said I am prepared to pay more, and asked me what the legal expenses would be; I said certatnly not more than 500*l.*

35,870. Each of you 500*l.*?—No, they could not be more than that. "I would pay more than you, and " I think I ought to, because I am a new comer." " No," I said, "Mr. Gray, that will not do, we must " pay share and share alike." But in the first instance when he came to me he said he thought 1,500*l.* would be it. The first time he ever stood, and as we were walking in Trafalgar Square, he said, " By Jove! You have enlightened much to-day; I " always thought the legal expenses could not be less " than 1,500*l.* to 2,000*l.*" "I assure you," I said "it " cannot by any possibility be any higher."

35,871. (Mr. Coleridge.) You lightened and enlightened his mind?—Yes; I think so, rather. Then, as I told you, Mr. Toogood came down and made an arrangement that there was to be 200*l.* lodged for our legal expenses, and 150*l.* for the solicitors, by each of us. After the election Mr. James Trevor wrote up to me to say, on the 23d of December, "My dear " Mr. Westropp, Leaker has sent bills of 26*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* " and 96*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* on you and Mr. Gray, which I " enclose, for your tavern expenses, which should be " paid by yourselves and not by me as agent, and " you and Mr. G. must send me account of all your " personal expenses." I sent down my personal expenses to him, which I thought were about 8*l.*, and two or three days after I got a letter from him, dated the 27th, in which he says, "I think your tavern bill " at Bridgwater must be included in your personal " election expenses, so will you send me amended " account, and get Mr. Gray to send me his account " also." We sent down that, and I am under the impression that our personal expenses are made 72*l.*, which would be 62*l.* of the tavern bill, the half, and 10*l.* which I returned him, or something about 10*l.*, the legal expenses. That 72*l.* does not exhaust the 200*l.*

35,872. No?—And, therefore, when Mr. Brice wrote up to Mr. Gray to say that we ought to pay our tavern bills, and that it was disreputable not to do it, when he made the first application I said, " Oh yes, let us pay." In the interim came that second letter, saying it ought to be included in our legal expenses.

35,873. Personal expenses?—Personal expenses; and when I found this, "By Jove!" I said, "I will " not pay it because the tavern expenses are included " in our legal expenses, and the whole account does " not amount to the 200*l.* which I have lodged." Have I made myself clear to you?

35,874. Yes; but the way I understand Mr. Brice to put it is this, that quite apart from that bill incurred at the election, there is a further bill unpaid at Mr. Leakers, which is irrespective of expenses connected with the petition, and that is that bill which is unpaid?—It is not so much, it cannot be; it is perfectly impossible that it can be what was alleged, 139*l.*

Mr. William Brice recalled.

Mr. W. Brice.

35,875. (Mr. Price.) How is that?—Mostly for the petition.

35,876. Do not let us have any confusion about a matter of this kind. The bill incurred at the election Mr. Westropp represents to be one which you thought ought to be included in personal expenses?—A portion of it.

35,877. What do you mean by a portion?—I never looked at the bill, I took it from Mr. Leaker.

35,878. Whatever Mr. Westropp's expenses incurred were it was debited to him, and he would have a right to return as personal expenses, even if he entertained his friends?—No doubt.

35,879. If he entertained them every day he would have a right to return them as personal expenses?—Clearly.

35,880. Beyond that what is there?—It was a portion of that, I apprehend. It was not included in the election account.

(Mr. Anstey.) I understand the bill is cut into two parts, but each part is not complete itself, but is made up of part of the expenses incurred during the election, and partly of the petition.

Mr. Henry Westropp recalled.

Mr. H. Westropp.

(The witness.) Excuse me addressing you again, but I am very earnest about this, and I do not wish it to be supposed that I am acting in an ungentlemanly manner. If you add those two sums of 22*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* and 96*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* together and divide it by 2, and add it to the 10*l.*, you will find that sum, thus made up, amounts exactly to our private expenses, as returned by the election agent.

35,881. (Mr. Coleridge.) 72*l.*, is not it?—Yes. Therefore I maintain that the only thing that can be put down to the petition is anything above those two sums.

35,882. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Leaker must explain that; you understood that was the whole incurred at the election?—I knew well there was the petition, but was never applied to for that.

35,883. (Mr. Anstey.) I have a lively recollection of what Mr. Leaker stated then, and being followed by Mr. William Brice, he modified some statement of his, and he modified some statements of Mr. Brice, and the result was what I have now declared, that the bill has been cut into two parts, which do not seem to have been separated from one another without much regard to principle, and if either be unpaid, it is in fact unpaid election expenses as well as unpaid petition expenses, and that is the important part we have to inquire about. While you are upon that I must ask you, you have been a party in your time to three returns,—what were the legal expenses at the election of 1859, 1865, and 1868? There have been three elections of which returns had to be made. Now, a person who publishes under an anonymous name, but who is a very recognisable writer has stated within the last two days in print that he has been behind the scenes at the cooking of accounts of that kind, that he has seen member, agent, and returning officer racking their brains in a frenzy to make those accounts fit, "and I," says he, "have seen accounts sent in at a

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

5 Oct. 1869.

" sum of 400*l.* or 500*l.*, when within the knowledge " of everybody more than 1,000*l.* has been spent in " beer alone." Now, rejecting those incidental circumstances of aggravation about the beer, and so on, I ask you as a matter of fact, were the accounts in 1859 settled between you, your agent, and the returning officer ?—Certainly not.

35,884. Nor in 1865 ?—I never directly or indirectly arranged or had anything to do with what is vulgarly called " cooking " the accounts, in my life.

35,885. Nor in 1865 ?—Nor in 1865.

35,886. Nor at either Mr. Patton's contests in 1866, nor in 1868 ?—None whatever.

35,887. (Mr. Price.) I for my part do not hesitate to say that I am perfectly disgusted when a man writes and makes these wholesale accusations. If he is an honest man, why does he not come forward and swear to his statement ? It is perfectly discreditable and disgraceful.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is a public print.

(The Witness.) Then there was some question about the cost of the petition. I know that Mr. Gray and I lodged 700*l.* for the petition.

35,888. (Mr. Price.) Now I have Mr. Leaker's evidence, and he says, " They came down for a month. " Q. The 10th of October ?—A. The commencement; " I have not the date here; that was 21*l.* 16*s.* " Q. From the 10th to the middle of November ?— " A. From the 10th to the middle of November, one " month's account, 21*l.* 16*s.*, and their second account " was from November; they were there a long time, " and it was altogether for posting Mr. Westropp's " private account—when he came down about the " petition he came down alone—was altogether from " the commencement staying at my house till they " left 139*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* Q. Were there any payments " made either by Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray, or for " them ?—A. None at all; I never had a shilling of " their money yet. Q. Does not it strike you as a " very long time to have a mere hotel account unsettled ? " —A. It is. Q. Does not that suggest that in " Mr. Westropp's mind, if not in yours, there are " other items of expenditure which he has to account " for ?—A. I really do not know, but I have applied " for the account to Mr. Brice, and they have said in " consequence of the Commission coming down, and " one thing and another, they did not feel inclined to " pay it Mr. Price. Q. If there are no items, but " what a gentleman would legitimately incur for " himself or a few friends by way of hospitality, why " should he be afraid of paying it ?—A. Well, I think " it lies between the lawyers and themselves. They " fancy that the lawyers have had sufficient to pay my " account, and the lawyers fancy that there are other " claims on them. Q. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is not it " that there are items for conveying voters to the poll " in hired carriages in that account ?—A. No. Q. Were " not there such items ?—A. I lent a carriage from " my stables to take two or three, such as Sanders, " who could not go. Q. There was not any general " system ?—A. No, I never charged a shilling for a " carriage. (Mr. Anstey.) Is this what Mr. Brice said " to you, returning to what I have been putting to you, " that having regard to the election trial and the " present Commission, and one thing and another, " Westropp and Gray's agents thought it better to lay " down a general rule, that is, to settle none of " Westropp and Gray's for the present ?—I never " heard that mentioned at all. Q. Is not it the fact " that there are no election accounts positively settled " as yet ?—A. I do not know a single word about any " account but my own account. My account is still " unpaid. Q. Do you suppose if all other bills had " been settled yours would have been made an excep- " tion ?—A. I should think not. I should think there " were several in abeyance up to the present time. " Q. Is Mr. Brice the only election agent ?—No, the " Trevors." I understand from that, that Mr. Leaker meant to leave us under the impression that he never had a single shilling in respect of any bill incurred from the month of October down to the petition ?—Half our tavern bill was included in our expenses.

35,889. He never had a penny from either Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray ?

35,890. (Mr. Anstey.) It is further stated by Mr. Brice, after Mr. Leaker had been called and after Mr. Brice had been recalled, that Mr. Leaker has been obliged to receive payment of a portion of this, for which he has given a note of hand to Mr. Brice, and Mr. Brice on that note of hand has advanced him the amount of it. The note is payable on demand, and as Mr. Brice very candidly stated, is not a payment at all to him on your account, but is, in point of fact, a loan to Mr. Leaker on Mr. Brice's account ?—All I can say is, I hope I have made it clear to you.

35,891. You see the effect now, seeing that matters are disposed so as to make it necessary for Mr. Brice to take that note for his own security, that note is not a payment and therefore could not find its way into the return of your legal expenses, do you perceive that ?—There are 62*l.*

35,892. (Mr. Price.) I understood you to say that you deposited a sum of 200*l.* ?—For legal expenses, and 150*l.* for solicitors.

35,893. You have an account of the tavern bill sent in. You had before you that tavern bill, and you return your own private expenses at 10*l.* ?—Under 10*l.*

35,894. Upon that Mr. Trevor writes to you to say that your tavern bill ought to be added to that. You then add that tavern bill on to the 10*l.*, and then refuse to pay any more, because you say these men have had 200*l.*, and adding your tavern bill which they now say you owe, and 10*l.* your own personal expenses, they have ample to pay ?—And other things, hustings, and various things, do not amount to 200*l.*

35,895. Therefore there is no occasion whatever for Mr. Brice paying anything whatever out of his own pocket in respect of Mr. Leaker's bill to you during the election ?—Exactly.

35,896. And I find Mr. Brice says he has " an ample " balance to pay the 139*l.* which is the balance run up " since the petition, but we are several hundreds of " pounds out of pocket at this moment " ?—But, sir, how could 100*l.*——

35,897. I do not know how that may be. You will have to look for that; but at all events, I understood your explanation to be that you believe you had thoroughly paid Mr. Leaker his bill out of the deposit money which was ample to cover that and the hustings.

35,898. (Mr. Anstey.) But do you believe that ?—Yes, I do.

35,899. Do consider for a moment—you know the amount is 79*l.* odd, and that Mr. Leaker's demand was 139*l.*

35,900. (Mr. Price.) That is not for the election but the petition ?

(Mr. Anstey.) And you see the total amount is 139*l.* It is said of that, a portion, not by any means exhausting for the election period, has been paid in the way you describe, but it is stated by Mr. Brice and by Mr. Leaker both that the unpaid residue of the 139*l.* consists of items partly relating to the election period and partly to the subsequent time; that is stated by both of them. Now if that be true, it is your business, is it not, to inquire into the truth of it ? —Decidedly.

35,901. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever hear, for I never did before, that the bills of your expenses at the election—now quite understand—are more than 72*l.* would cover ?—No, 62*l.*

35,902. Is there any document you have either from Mr. Brice or Mr. Trevor which shows that a portion of that election bill would come to more than your deposit money would cover ?—No.

Mr. WILLIAM BRICE recalled. Mr. W. Brice.

35,903. (Mr. Anstey.) I have correctly stated your evidence on that subject, Mr. Brice?—Yes.

35,904. (Mr. Price.) I should like to hear you tell us what portion of Mr. Leaker's bill against candidates during the election is not amply covered by the amount deposited by the candidates?—I do not know for this reason, I never had anything to do with that 700*l.* deposit.

35,905. 200*l.*?—700*l.* altogether. I have never had anything to do with it from first to last. I said to Mr. Leaker, "Have not you claimed to have the account?" He said "No." I said, "You had better speak to Mr. Trevor about it." He told me it was to be paid by Mr. Westropp himself, whereupon I wrote to him, and that is all I had to do with it.

35,906. Do you know anything of your own knowledge which will support you in stating that Mr. Leaker has now an unsettled claim for any portion of the election bill?—I understood him that that was made up in that way by Mr. Leaker.

35,907. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why was it divided?—I understood Mr. Leaker to tell me so.

35,908. Mr. Leaker gets 62*l.* or 72*l.* out of the election expenses; he ought to?—Yes.

35,909. And he did, I suppose?—I do not know

Mr. JAMES LEAKER recalled. Mr. J. Leaker.

35,910. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Trevor ever pay you a bill?—He paid me a bill which you have.

35,911. How much?—I think just about 24*l.* for committee rooms and refreshments.

35,912. (Mr. Price.) Then Mr. Trevor or Mr. Brice have stuck to the money, that is all; and we had better have it found out at once. What was your bill against Mr. Westropp for items incurred during the election, personal expenses?—October, November, and a short time that Mr. Westropp was at my place when he came down on the Commission.

35,913. Leaving the Commission alone, what was the expenditure incurred by Mr. Westropp at your place during the election?—It would be about 134*l.*, and the odd money would make it 139*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

35,914. Against Mr. Westropp alone?—No, against Westropp and Gray.

35,915. Had it to be divided between the two?—That is to be divided between the two.

35,916. Did it include the whole of what they paid you before the election inquiry?—Everything.

35,917. That would be about 62*l.* each?—That would be about 62*l.* each.

35,918. Then it is perfectly clear Mr. Trevor has had the money to pay you?—Not one penny is paid me.

35,919. No, but Mr. Trevor has had it?

Mr. HENRY WESTROPP recalled. Mr. H. Westropp.

(The Witness.) I am glad to have an opportunity of this explanation.

35,920. (Mr. Price.) Your explanation to my mind is satisfactory. You found a bill of 62*l.* owing by you to Mr. Leaker, and you considered that ought to come in the 200*l.*?—By Mr. Trevor's desire.

35,921. Including that, when we add that together, 200*l.* you deposited would cover it; you considered you had discharged that bill?—Yes.

35,922. Therefore there is remaining the question what became of that?—In addition to that, they had 700*l.* on the petition.

35,923. (Mr. Anstey.) This is what Mr. Leaker stated when examined before. I ask him the question, "You used a phrase just now which struck me "as important. You said that the only part of your "bill which was paid was the demand for their own "legitimate expenses. What other expenses were "there in the months of October and November "incurred at your place besides those which you call "legitimate?—No other expenses, only their private "account in October. What do you call the private "account which is not settled by the election auditor? "—Their private account would be for their dining, "apartments, and wine. And that is not in the "account furnished to the election auditor?—Cer- "tainly not. Then do you mean legitimate expenses "or merely those expenses which were specified just "now by you, the committee-rooms, sending refresh- "ments, or whatever it is—to the polling booths or "things of that sort; but that formed a very small "part of the entire demand, did not it?—A small "portion it was of the entire amount."

(Mr. Price.) The whole was 134*l.*; that divided between the two would be 62*l.* a-piece, and you considered that having deposited the 200*l.* and being told by Mr. Trevor your tavern bill ought to come in your personal expenses, you added that on to the 10*l.* and considered they had enough to pay?—Exactly.

35,924. (Mr. Anstey.) And they had not, I suppose?

(The Witness.) There were many letters addressed to me at the time about the compromises. I have a very great deal to tell you about those compromises.

35,925. (Mr. Price.) We want the whole history of that?—I am afraid in Mr. Anstey's mind there is an impression that I laid a plant. I assure you it is nothing of the sort.

(Mr. Price.) You had better keep those letters, and, at your request, we will go into that matter on Thursday.

Mr. FREDERICK PITMAN recalled. Mr. F. Pitman.

35,926. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A writer to the Signet in Edinburgh, but I was not an agent or solicitor in any way for the late Lord Justice Clerk. At the time it was arranged that Mr. Patton should stand for Bridgwater I happened to be in London, and he asked me if I would come with him as a private friend. This was, I think, before a Bridge Committee meeting early in May.

35,927. Had you been on terms of intimate friendship with the late Lord Justice Clerk?—Many years.

35,928. Had you had anything whatever to do with electioneering matters previous to this?—I have had electioneering in Scotland for the county of Midlothian. I am an electioneering agent there. I came down to Bridgwater to a meeting of the Bridge Committee, and was present at the dinner here. After that Mr. Patton remained and canvassed. I did not remain, but I returned to Bridgwater with him. Mr. Westropp reminded me to-day that I came to London with him. I returned just before the first election. I did not remember that I had come down with Mr. Westropp, and I had no recollection of the telegram which I heard him speak of in his evidence from Mr. Bealy Smith. I came down, however, two or three days before the first election, and I was here at that time with Mr. Patton. At the time of the second election I was also here.

35,929. Keep to the first one. Tell us about the money?—Well, I know nothing about the payments of any money except as has been stated to-day, that Mr. Patton, when he went to Edinburgh, asked his friend Thompson in London to advance any sums that might be required for the election. I cannot tell exactly what they were, except what I will mention afterwards. I heard it accidentally after both elections were finished. The only money transactions which I had to do with were after the second election. Mr. Patton came to me and said he was very much annoyed that he had spent some 6,000*l.* in this place, Bridgwater.

35,930. (Mr. Coleridge.) Between the two elections?—Between the two elections; something over 6,000*l.* I think you will find it to be. That he was very much annoyed that claims were still being made upon him, and he asked me if I would endeavour to get a settlement of them with Mr. Bealy Smith. I wrote several letters to Mr. Bealy Smith, asking for a statement of accounts. He gave no answers to some of them, and to others he gave excuses that his father was ill, or press of business; in fact, he put it off altogether. Towards the end of the year he let out in a letter that he had some 700*l.* or 800*l.* of claims still against Mr. Patton. I saw Mr. Patton with regard to that, and he requested me to make the best settlement I could for him. He said, he was anxious to be relieved from the place altogether; that if there were claims of agents still unpaid, or anything of that kind, "do not press for accounts, but clear them up, and try "to get rid of this disagreeable business altogether." I wrote to Mr. Bealy Smith for an account of what was owing, which he sent me, claiming 700*l.* or 800*l.*, and I got a cheque for 500*l.* from Mr. Patton, and in February 1867 I met Mr. Bealy Smith, and handed him the cheque for 500*l.* in discharge of all claims.

35,931. So that it cost Mr. Patton nearly 7,000*l.*?—Yes.

35,932. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Patton Lord Advocate then?—I think he must have been Lord Advocate.

35,933. You recollect the vacancy which was created by the promotion of Sir Duncan M'Neil to the House of Peers by the title of Lord Colonsay?—Yes.

35,934. When the Parliament met in February 1867, it was probably in that month the promotion took place?—I am under the impression that he must have been Lord Advocate. I am not quite sure of the date. At that time I received that 500*l.* from Mr. Patton to discharge all claims in full. That is the only money transaction, to the best of my recollection, that I have had to do with in the matter.

35,935. We have had it in evidence from Mr. Spofforth, that at the beginning of Mr. Patton's connexion (an unfortunate connexion for him) with this borough, Mr. Spofforth said to him (I believe it was Mr. Spofforth), "Don't let any people down there "talk to you about money; you had better, there-"fore, have a private confidential friend;" and the witness, be it Mr. Spofforth, or be it somebody else, considered that his applying to you was in consequence of that advice which he gave. Do you remember that?—Not in the least.

35,936. What were you to do when he first applied to you?—He asked me to come down to Bridgwater. He said he wanted me to go down to this Bridgwater, to be present at this Bridge Committee.

35,937. Did he ask you to be the medium between him and the voters?—Certainly not.

35,938. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Spofforth said, "to prevent importunity"?—I saw the report and was struck with the expression. I did not know what it meant.

35,939. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you to be interposed between Mr. Patton and Mr. Bealy Smith?—I am afraid I was to some extent, not with respect to payment of money, but after the second election I had a good deal to do with him.

35,940. But after the time of the first and before the second election?—I may have done so.

35,941. It appears from the evidence of Mr. Westropp, that Bealy Smith was a perfect horse leech's daughter, and he was continually calling out "Give" "Give," does that tally with your experience?—That is my idea. My idea is that Mr. Patton was desirous of being released altogether from the thing. I was present at a meeting with Mr. Bealy Smith, and Mr. Bealy Smith led Mr. Patton to believe that the expenses would be from 1,000*l.* to 1,500*l.*, something of that kind, and I remember Mr. Patton using the expression that he did not grudge any sum, providing it was legal.

35,942. Did not that sum, being so put in the alternative, 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.*, convey to your mind, amongst other circumstances, the idea that illegal expenses were contemplated?—I must honestly admit it.

35,943. (Mr. Price.) There were 600 voters?—I knew nothing about any borough elections at all, but I certainly did fancy that there must be—under cover of employment of agents and others—that there must be payment of that sum. That was my own fancy on the thing.

35,944. (Mr. Anstey.) If you had been told, moreover, that 1,500*l.*, the mystic sum, had been on several occasions named as the sum for bribing voters, you would have thought it still more suspicious?—Yes. The last time I saw Mr. Patton was on Monday the 30th August. He had been summoned to attend the Commission on the Wednesday following, and I had been summoned I think on the same day. His brother had died suddenly I think on the previous Saturday, and he had come into Edinburgh on the Monday, but he came up with a view to other arrangements after his brother's death. He was then engaged in going through the accounts in connexion with the election, and I do not think at that time he had realized the total amount which had been spent. He told me then what it was, that it was over 6,000*l.*

35,945. (Mr. Price.) The two elections?—The two elections, and that he had paid Mr. Thompson himself 4,000*l.* between the first and the second election. That was evidently the matter which annoyed him more than anything else. He said that he could conscientiously state that he believed there had not been direct bribing, but he thought there had been treating, and he explained to me that he thought the larger proportion of that sum was required with reference to a petition against Mr. Kinglake. I do not think he had heard before this Commission that bribing had been going on, and it was hearing that which certainly broke him down.

35,946. (M. Anstey.) When did you hear him say first that he expected to have to pay some of Mr. Kinglake's expenses in 1865 and 1866?—I think I must have heard of it down here.

35,947. Before he came down here?—Either before he came down here, or when he was down here. What I was speaking about just now was only the other day. He thought that might account for a large amount of expenditure.

35,948. It is the fact, as has been stated by one of the witnesses who have been called here, that he was called upon to pay the expenses of the petition and the cross petition tried before the House of Commons in 1866?—Most certainly; but the fact is, I never saw an account, neither did I ever have the remotest idea, till I read the evidence given before this Commission, how much went in bribery, or how much went to Mr. Smith.

35,949. (Mr. Price.) But Mr. Patton might have been under the impression that the greater part did go to pay for that petition?—Yes. But it was my own impression, and it was his impression, that there had not been direct bribery.

35,950. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you not aware that those expense were paid to the insatiable Bealy Smith?—I understood everything had been paid to Bealy Smith.

35,951. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did anybody write to Mr. Patton, pressing him for money after the election?—After the election I think there were one or two letters.

35,952. From where?—I think one was from a public-house.

35,953. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes; we had one in evidence here, and either you or Mr. Patton told the writer very properly, "You had better apply to Bealy Smith," and refused to have anything to do with it. I forget who the man was. He handed in one letter, and said, he had lost another letter.

(A voice.) Mr. Harden.

35,954. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes, Mr. Harden.

(The Witness.) Mr. Bealy Smith offered to come to Edinburgh at my expense, and he said, really, what he did must be at our cost.

35,955. (Mr. Price.) As you say, he was insatiable.

35,956. (Mr. Westropp.) If Mr. Pitman is going away, will you kindly ask him this; there is a letter there, the authenticity of which has been doubted. Will you kindly ask Mr. Pitman if he has seen it.

(The Witness.) I remember the letter perfectly well. I do not think the Lord Advocate answered. He was immensely disgusted with the thing, as was shown by a letter which I was glad to see was preserved.

35,957. (Mr. Price.) Can you give us any idea, whether the Lord Justice was under the impression that Bealy Smith had pocketed an immense amount of this money?—My impression is, that he had pocketed a large proportion of it.

35,958. (Mr. Anstey.) There is one thing which is necessary to connect your evidence with that of Mr. Westropp, which has been given, and that of Mr. Thompson, which is to come. Will you inform us what you know of Mr. Thompson's employment in this business?—Mr. Thompson came to London after Mr. Patton had started for Bridgwater after he had been down here, after he had canvassed the whole constituency; and perhaps I might bring in a remark here, that one of the remarks Mr. Patton made to me was, that he canvassed the whole constituency, and there was not one word spoken to him that led him to believe bribery was expected. That was in the beginning of 1866. Mr. Thompson was an old friend of Mr. Patton's, and he had travelled about a great deal, and Mr. Patton asked Mr. Thompson if he could recommend anybody in Bridgwater in whom he could repose confidence. That is Mr. Thompson's connexion with him.

35,959. Who had recommended Bealy Smith as a person to be trusted with money?—I suppose we must have got his character from Mr. Spofforth; he spoke of him, I believe, as the recognized Conservative agent here.

35,960. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is Mr. Thompson?—He is of no profession.

(Mr. Westropp.) I mentioned to you that Mr. Thompson gave me 1,500*l.*, and that there was 100*l.* that I kept. Now, sir, would you ask Mr. Pitman if I did not send an account to him showing the balance?

35,961. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Westropp send an account to you with reference to that 100*l.*?—I have a recollection of something coming from Mr. Westropp, and my just handing it over to Mr. Patton.

(Mr. Westropp.) On the 30th November 1866.

(The Witness.) I certainly do remember it.

35,962. (Mr. Coleridge.) All the accounts were supposed to be fully closed up?—Fully closed up. He felt that Mr. Westropp had worked very hard for him in the matter.

35,963. (Mr. Anstey.) At what time did Mr. Patton obtain, I do not say perfect knowledge, because he may never have had that, but a resonable surmise that bribery had been practised on his behalf at his first election?—Well, I am sorry I cannot answer that question; it was a subject that was never mooted between us. He was a very sensitive man, and I really felt myself, that although I knew pretty well what must have been done, it was better not to annoy him on the subject. He always kept away from himself everything having any connexion with Bridgwater. All I can say is, he paid 4,000*l.* between the two elections.

35,964. And then he expressed his disgust at the largeness of the amount?—Yes; he told me that he had expressed his disgust with that, and he had threatened not to stand again, but that Bealy Smith had told him that the Liberal agents had had enough of fighting for the present, and there was no chance of a contest; and I know, as a fact, that it was only on the day before the nomination on the second election that he learnt Mr. Vanderbyl was to stand, because he said to me at Edinburgh, "I will not "trouble you to go up again, I will not allow you to "do so; I will telegram."

35,965. (Mr. Price.) He thought it was going to be a walk over?—He thought it was going to be a walk over, but I firmly believed he would not have stood.

35,966. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know where Mr. Patton found the money?—Every penny was paid by Mr. Patton himself.

35,967. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did Mr. Patton abandon the purpose which he announced here, in unequivocal language, and which he made the subject of the last passage in his farewell speech, that of contesting the validity of Mr. Vanderbyl's return by a petition?—I think his reason was simply this: that he had thrown enough money away upon the place, and that he was determined, when he thought more seriously of it, that he would not allow another penny to be spent in connexion with Bridgwater. It was not from any knowledge of bribery on his part.

35,968. You do not think it was from his having discovered the impurity of the practices in Bridgwater?—I think not. He remarked a little while ago, with regard to that threat of the petition, that he intended to mention that to the Commission.

35,969. To show his bona fides?—To show his bona fides. He would have mentioned that to the Commission if he had been alive.

35,970. There is no reason to suppose that he got that money from the Carlton Club, or the Conservative Club, or from anywhere else, but that he paid it out of his own pocket?—I am perfectly certain that he never had any assistance from anybody, but that he paid it out of his own pocket.

35,971. Have you anything further to state?—No.

35,972. (Mr. Westropp.) I mentioned that at the second election Mr. Bealy Smith agreed with Mr. Patton for 3,000*l.*, and my recollection is that 4,000*l.* was the cost of the first election, which has been substantiated by Mr. Pitman now. When you come to examine Mr. Thompson, he will tell you, I think, that he gave me 2,000*l.* before coming down to the election, and I would like you to ask Mr. Pitman, if he did not write to me to appeal to me as to the agreement with Bealy Smith when Bealy Smith wanted too much.

(The Witness.) Yes, I did. On the final settlement of the claims, one of the things complained of was, that he had not accounted for that 500*l.* which has been spoken of, and I wrote to Mr. Westropp to know about it.

(Mr. Westropp.) And I told him that 3,000*l.* was the sum agreed upon.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at half-past ten o'clock.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Wednesday, 6th October 1869.

PRESENT :

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHLOM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.
DE TRACY GOULD, Esq., Acting Secretary.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Leaker.

6 Oct. 1869.

Mr. JAMES LEAKER recalled.

35,972. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you your book there?—Yes. (Handing it.)

35,973. If I understand, there was some confusion about what you were paid, and what you were not paid; you have turned to your book and pointed out to me all you were paid last time was this item; "Sandwiches & sherry for 6 committee or poll rooms," and also some trifling sum that was had in the coffee room at your own house, 2*l.* 10*s.*?—Yes.

35,974. Amounting to how much?—21*l.* something.

35,975. And that is all you have received from Mr. Trevor, the election agent?—Every farthing.

35,976. And the whole of this private account, if I understand, of Westropp and Gray, amounting to 139*l.*, every single item on those two pages applies to the election and to the election petition?—Quite so.

35,977. And all that applies to the petition is some 4*l.* 6*s.* Mr. Westropp incurred when he came down on the inquiry?—Yes.

35,978. Therefore the whole money owing to you now is for personal expenses at the election itself?—And before the election.

35,979. And nothing in the world to do with the petition?—Not the least.

35,980. And the whole to do with the petition is 4*l.* 6*s.*?—The private account of Mr. Westropp.

35,981. You have received a cheque from Mr. Brice for 139*l.*, but for that you have given your I O U?—I do not know; I forget the amount Mr. Brice has paid me.

35,982. One hundreds pound odd?—100*l.* odd, which I gave him an I O U for; a personal debt of my own.

35,983. (Mr. Anstey.) A promissory note, was not it?—An I O U.

35,984. You are liable for it?—Yes.

35,985. Therefore you look on that cheque as more in the nature of an advance than a payment of a debt to you?—Yes.

35,986. Were you party in any way to any arrangement by which you were to look to the lawyers for the payment of your claim on Westropp and Gray, and not on Westropp and Gray themselves?—Not at all.

35,987. Therefore it was nothing to you what arrangement they made among themselves?—Not at all.

35,988. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is one other thing; I do not know whether you can explain it or who, except Mr. Trevor. Why are the personal expenses charged as having been paid to you, you only receiving 21*l.*?—The bill I sent to Mr. Trevor was by his dictation. He said he could not pay any private account.

35,989. How can you account for his putting down 72*l.* and only paying 21*l.*?—I cannot account for it.

(Mr. Anstey.) I think Mr. Brice explained that; that they cut the bill into two parts.

35,990. (Mr. Coleridge.) This bill for personal expenses was never paid?—Not that I know of.

35,991. Was there any other house where they could have had personal expenses besides yours?—No.

35,992. Any other house where they could have had large parties or dinners?—No.

(Mr. Price.) There is Mr. Trevor's letter of the 23rd December:—"My dear Mr. Westropp,—"Leaker has sent me bills of 26*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* and "96*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.*, on you and Mr. Gray, which I "enclose, for your tavern expenses, which should be "paid by yourselves and not by me as agent; and you "and Mr. Gray must send me account of all your "personal expenses without loss of time as to the "election. The charge seems high for rooms, but "Leaker says his home was so overrun that the ordi-"nary charge would not pay." Now Mr. Westropp says in consequence of that he returned as part of his personal expenses, he having originally only returned to Mr. James Trevor as personal expenses 10*l.*, or not quite 10*l.* He did not explain quite what that was for, but we shall get it from him; then added on to that 10*l.*, half of Mr. Leaker's bill. There is something more to Mr. Gray which we did not get explained from Mr. Gray; it is 72*l.* here, and he says he added on half of your bill. Now the whole of your bill as against the two would be somewhere about 24*l.*, would not it?

35,993. (Mr. Coleridge.) Including the 21*l.*?—If you will look, that is what I brought when I gave my evidence the first day. (Handing in an account.)

35,994. Amounting to 139*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.*?

35,994*a*. (Mr. Price.) Does that 132*l.* include anything beyond the tavern bill incurred by Westropp and Gray?—No, it does not include anything besides that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Lend me your book again; it is as simple as possible.

35,995. (Mr. Price.) What is this 4*l.* 6*s.*, Mr. Westropp's bill?—That is when down at the petition.

35,996. Then that is to come out?—That is to come out.

35,997. Then it is 135*l.* and not 139*l.*, because you struck off what Mr. Westropp incurred at the petition inquiry altogether, and taking that 4*l.* 6*s.* from the 139*l.* 4*s.* leaves 134*l.* some shillings; then Mr. Westropp says, "I divided that with Mr. Gray, and conse-"quently I added as my part of my personal expenses "the half of what I should owe Mr. Leaker for my "tavern bill;" and that with the sum he had already returned as personal expenses he says makes up the sum of 72*l.* Now, according to all rule that I ever have heard of, that 72*l.* ought to have been accompanied by vouchers, which could easily have been done, because your bill would have been an ample voucher for it; it should have been returned with a voucher to show that it had been paid, and then the whole personal expenses would have been discharged, and would have come within the 200*l.* which Mr. Westropp says he and Mr. Gray deposited with the attorneys for the legal expenses?—After the petition was over, when Mr. Gray and Mr. Westropp left my hotel they told me that Mr. Brice would see to my account, which would be paid.

35,998. That has nothing to do with it, but that is the way we stand, because, according to these returns, they purport to be information to the public of what each candidate has actually spent at the elections; therefore this represents that Mr. Westropp spent as personal expenditure 72*l.*, and paid it, whereas it turns out now he says he has paid it, because he gave enough to pay to his agents, and they have not paid, but they kept the money for some other purpose?—If they have returned my bill as paid, they ought to have returned me my money.

35,999. Of course, and the voucher should have gone in for it?—Mr. Brice will produce my account if you ask him.

That ought to have gone into the returning officer with every other voucher.

36,000. (Mr. Coleridge.) They have taken your bill and paid you 21*l.* on account, thrown it into the one amount, and then charged one candidate 76*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*, and the other 72*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, and that has not been paid you, but put into the personal expenses?—Not paid me, but put in as paid.

36,001. In one sense it has been paid you, but you have given your I O U for it?—I have.

36,002. (Mr. Price.) It is 130*l.*, I think, as near as possible. I do not know but what the share of the dinner of November 9th would have to be added?—It would have to be added.

36,003. Then it is exactly 132*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, exclusive of Mr. Westropp's 4*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*?—Yes.

36,004. Then half of that would have to be paid by each candidate?—Yes.

36,005. Then Mr. Westropp would have to pay 4*l.* 6*s.* himself?—That is another transaction.

36,006. Mr. Westropp says, "I did not leave Mr. "Leaker's bill unpaid, because I considered the 200*l.* "I lodged with the attorney as ample to cover it, and "when I looked at the return of my personal expenses "I found it was ample to cover it"?—That is the impression Mr. Westropp laboured under.

(Mr. Price.) And quite properly it seems to me.

36,007. (Mr. Anstey.) It is quite clear that the unpaid bill includes items relating to the election?—Yes, nothing more than their private account.

36,008. Have you had any conversation with Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray since we came down here this time about it?—Not at all; only Mr. Westropp expressed his surprise the bill was not paid, that it should still be owing.

36,009. Surprised he is returned as having spent 76*l.*, and therefore thinks he has paid it.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled.

F. C. Temblett.

(The witness.) I heard a good deal said about a letter written yesterday by Mr. Smith in the name of the heads of the party. I happen to know something about that, which I heard at the time. That letter was written, I believe, in the name of the party. I heard that a meeting had been held——

36,010. (Mr. Price.) You are telling us a great deal you have heard. Where did you get your information from?—I believe it was from Joseph Richard Smith that I got it.

36,011. Tell us, and then we will have him here?—That this meeting had been held, and in the first place when it had been decided to petition against Mr. Vanderbyl, after some time the thing fell through, and that Mr. Patton wrote down to say he would have no more to do with it.

36,012. It has nothing to do with that. The letter which Mr. Smith says he wrote in the name of the party was a totally different thing altogether?—I heard the meeting was held, and they came to a determination that Mr. Patton would use his influence to get a batch of magistrates appointed, to get a majority on the bench, and pay up all outstanding accounts.

36,013. Who but the Smiths were present at this meeting?—I cannot say, but I heard that there was a meeting of the whole party; that is, the heads.

36,014. You know nothing about it?—No, not more than that; but while I am under examination I may say that Murlis gave my name as having had some money from him. I did have some money from him, but not for myself. I paid it to another man. He gave in the names of several people as sub-agents. He does not give my name as sub-agent. I paid the money to William White, of Durley, to give a voter.

HENRY BEALE sworn.

H. Beale.

36,015. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you a clerk in Messrs. Sealy and Prior's bank?—Yes.

36,016. Were you there on the polling day of the last election?—Yes.

36,017. Did you see Dr. Kinglake come into the bank?—No.

30,018. Did you see him go out of the bank?—No, I did not see him there the whole day. I was there between 12 and 1, and that is when Mr. Prior stated he came in.

36,019. And were you there between 1 and 2?—Yes.

36,020. How long?—I was there the whole time.

36,021. And did not leave?—Between 1 and 2.

36,022. Did you hear the clock strike one?—It does not strike.

36,023. Did you see the clock?—Yes.

36,024. Are you sure you were there at 1 o'clock?—Certainly, or within a few minutes.

36,025. How many minutes?—Five.

36,026. From about five minutes past 1 to 2 o'clock you were there?—Yes.

36,027. Did you see Mr. Kinglake come in at that time?—No.

36,028. Did you see a fly drive up to the door?—No.

36,029. What other clerks are there in the bank?—Mr. Edward Prior.

36,030. Only Mr. Edward Prior?—That is all.

36,031. Was he there when you were absent?—Yes.

36,032. Was he there when you were present?—Not between 1 and 2.

36,033. He was not there?—No, at dinner.

Mr. EDWARD PRIOR recalled.

Mr. E. Prior.

36,034. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Dr. Kinglake come to the bank that day after the time you have spoken of, when he went in to your father in the parlour?—No, he came soon after 12.

(Mr. Price.) That is not an answer to the question.

36,035. (Mr. Anstey.) You have already stated that Dr. Kinglake came there that day and went into the bank parlour?—Yes.

36,036. And came out again, and you do not know what took place?—I do not know what took place.

36,037. And immediately after that you were sent down with the 500*l.* to Allan?—I went to Allan's after 3 o'clock.

36,008. But you were told to go after Dr. Kinglake had been there, immediately after?—No, I was not told until after 3.

36,039. When were you first told to take the 500*l.*?—After 3 o'clock.

36,040. By your father?—By my father.

36,041. When you saw Dr. Kinglake come out of the bank parlour and go away, what o'clock was that?—Soon after 12.

36,042. How soon?—It must have been between 12 and a quarter past.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. E. Prior.

6 Oct. 1869.

36,043. Did you see him come back again that day?—I did not.

36,044. When he came that time did he come in a fly?—No.

36,045. Did you see a fly drive up to the door and then go away, having been dismissed?—No.

36,046. Were you there between 12 and 1?—I was not there between 12 and 1.

36,047. I mean between 1 and 2?—I was not.

36,048. Did you leave before 1?—I left about 1; I cannot say to five minutes.

36,049. It might have been five minutes before 1?—It might have been five minutes before 1.

36,050. Or a few minutes after?—Or a few minutes after; I cannot say to five minutes.

36,051. But you can charge your memory thus far, that the time when you saw Dr. Kinglake going into the bank parlour was from 12 to half-past?—From 12 to a quarter past.

36,052. And you can also charge your memory thus far, that you did not see him after that?—Not after that.

36,053. How can you fix the time when you did see him, because I want to draw your attention to this, if you had been told then to take the 500*l.* down that would have struck you, and made you think of the time, but had anything occurred to make you look at the clock, or think what the time would be when you saw Dr. Kinglake enter the bank?—Well, it was soon after Mr. Beale left; that is the only answer I can give.

36,054. But you were employed, were not you, in the business of the bank?—Yes.

36,055. You were at your work?—I was at my work.

36,056. And you were occupied at your work from the time that Mr. Beale left until the time you saw Dr. Kinglake?—Yes of course; I was attending to my duties.

36,057. Did you look at the clock then?—I did not particularly look at the clock. I did not look at the clock immediately when he left.

36,058. Did you look at the clock about the time when he came in and left?—Yes, I did.

36,059. How long after?—Well, I looked at it the time he was there.

36,060. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean positively to swear that you looked at the clock?—Yes, I am in the habit of looking at the clock.

36,061. I do not say you are not; but the question is, will you undertake to say positively that you looked at the clock, and have such an accurate recollection of it that you will swear it was not between 1 and 2, instead of between 12 and 1?—Yes, I can.

36,062. Then how?

36,063. (Mr. Anstey.) What made you look at the clock to begin with?—Well, I cannot say particularly what I had looked at the clock for, but I am in the habit of looking at the clock.

36,064. Do you swear positively that whilst Dr. Kinglake was staying in the bank you looked at the clock?—Yes.

36,065. Positively?—Yes, I can.

36,066. Then you can tell me positively what time it was?—I cannot say to five minutes, but between 12 and a quarter-past.

36,067. (Mr. Price.) Was there anything particularly to draw your attention to the clock; was it your hour of leaving the bank to go to luncheon?—It was about the time that I make the exchange with the West of England Bank, and I left the bank to go to the West of England immediately after Mr. Kinglake left.

36,068. Whom did you make the exchange with at the West of England Bank?—I cannot say what clerk it was.

36,069. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you had an exchange to make with the West of England Bank, and you did make that exchange as soon as Mr. Kinglake went; which Mr. Kinglake?—Dr. Kinglake.

36,070. As soon as he went there?—As soon as he left the bank.

36,071. How long was he in the bank?—He was there about three minutes I should say, not any more.

36,072. How came it that you did not look at the clock before he came into the bank, as you were so anxious to go there in time?—I never go there until a little after 12, and I could not leave while he was there, because I could not leave the bank alone.

36,073. But you did not arrive at the bank until 12, did you?—Yes.

36,074. Then Mr. Beale did not leave until 12?—He does not leave until 12; he leaves at 12.

36,075. Answer my question, and do not take example of other witnesses of that sort. You gave your answers before right enough, and you understand what I mean. Is not it the fact that he left at 12?—Yes.

36,075*a*. And is not it a fact that he then left because it is his usual hour?—That is his usual hour.

36,076. Then what earthly motive could you have for looking at the clock, knowing that he had left, to look a few minutes afterwards?—As I said before, when Dr. Kinglake left I looked at the clock to see whether it was time to go to the bank.

36,077. What made you do it?—I cannot give you any idea.

36,078. (Mr. Price.) You knew that Mr. Beale had gone?—I knew Mr. Beale had gone.

36,079. And that he goes at 12?—He goes at 12.

36,080. And therefore there was no occasion to look at the clock to see whether it was or was not, because the fact of his going pronounced it to be 12?

36,081. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is his dinner hour?—He goes to luncheon.

36,082. What time did you go?—At one o'clock.

36,083. Is it that you looked at the clock to see whether your own dinner hour was approaching?—No.

36,084. Or luncheon?—No, because it was three quarters of an hour to that.

36,085. How much time did you give to effect the exchange you spoke of?—Three or four minutes.

36,086. (Mr. Price.) You did not require three-quarters of an hour to effect the exchange in?—No.

36,087. (Mr. Anstey.) Then why were you so particularly anxious during the three minutes Dr. Kinglake was there to see what the time was after Mr. Beale had left. Explain it if you can; come, tell me?—I cannot give any.

36,088. I am tired of asking questions; you cannot give any what?—Any further explanation.

36,089. (Mr. Price.) Is it your custom to go to clear with the West of England Bank when you are the only clerk left in the bank?—If the partners are present; if my father or Mr. Sealy is in the bank, I go then.

36,090. There is no necessity to go at any particular hour?—Well, we generally go at either 12 or soon after.

36,091. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you go that day?—I went immediately after Dr. Kinglake went out of the bank, which was about from 12 to a quarter past 12.

36,092. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did your father send you there?—To the West of England Bank?

36,093. Yes?—No, he did not send me there; I do it as a matter of course.

36,094. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever tell him you were going?—No.

36,095. But he was shut up in the parlour, and there was no clerk?—He came out in the bank when Dr. Kinglake left.

36,096. You did not tell us that. Now tell us what took place between them?—Dr. Kinglake came out of the bank parlour, and went out of the bank door, and left; and then my father came out into the banking room, and said nothing to me whatever about what took place then.

36,097. Did Dr. Kinglake say anything?—Not a word; he does not know me, I believe.

36,098. I did not ask whether he said anything to you; my question was as general as your answer is particular. Did you hear Dr. Kinglake say anything?—I did not.

36,099. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is your regular time for your going out to your luncheon?—One o'clock.

36,100. How long do you stay then?—Sometimes three-quarters of an hour, and sometimes an hour.

36,101. (Mr. Price.) Why should you not go and clear at that time, why go at 12 o'clock?—Well, it is a rule we have to go soon after 12 to the West of England, and about two, or soon after, to Stuckey's.

36,102. (Mr. Anstey.) What time did you go to the West of England Bank?—It was about a quarter-past 12 I must have been there.

36,103. It was a quarter past when you left, and a quarter past when you arrived?—Well, I cannot say to a few minutes; it is only across the road.

36,104. Who did you see there?—I cannot say who was in the bank.

36,105. But you must say?—I do not really know.

36,106. Who did you speak to?—The clerk who attended me for the exchange.

36,107. How many clerks are there?—Two.

36,108. Then if it was not one, it must have been the other?—Well, they have changed, I believe, since. I think so; I am not sure.

Mr. John Ford recalled. Mr. J. Ford.

(The witness.) I do not know whether the clerks will remember the time.

36,109. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the customary rule to go at that time?—Yes, generally between 12 and 1, except on market days it may be later.

Mr. Edward Prior recalled. Mr. E. Prior.

36,110. (Mr Anstey.) How long did you remain at the bank?—Two or three minutes; just time to allow me to make the exchange.

36,111. (Mr. Price.) Now we have evidence before us of persons who are perfectly impartial about the matter, who fix the hour that Dr. Kinglake was at the bank, whether at the time you speak of I do not know, but who fix an hour at which he was at the bank which is quite inconsistent with your story that he was only there once, and that was half-past 12. They give a reason for fixing the hour, and you give none?—I was not there between one and two.

36,112. Was he only there once?—Not to my knowledge.

36,113. Then we must have your father here to see whether he was there twice.

(Mr. Price.) Now step down and consider the thing carefully over. Do not hurry, because the matter is of considerable importance, the question of time.

Henry Beale recalled. H. Beale.

36,114. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you out of the bank making exchanges, or doing anything else between one and two after you came back from luncheon?—No, I stayed in the bank the whole time with Mr. Sealy.

36,114*a*. With whom?—Mr. Sealy. Mr. Prior and his son went to dinner at one o'clock, and I was with Mr. Sealy between one and two.

36,115. Where was Mr. Sealy then?—In the bank.

36,116. What part of it?—In and out from the room.

36,117. Where were you?—In the banking room.

36,118. You mean the front room?—Yes.

36,119. Were there many people in during that hour?—No.

36,120. Do you know Dr. Kinglake by sight?—Oh, yes.

36,121. Had you often seen him at the bank?—No, not often.

36,122. Had you ever seen him there?—Yes.

36,123. When before?—I cannot tell; I daresay he comes in twice or three times a year.

36,124. How many years have you been there?—Ten.

36,125. Had you seen him there the day before?—I do not remember.

36,126. Or within a week or two before?—He may have.

36,127. But did you?—I do not remember seeing him.

36,128. (Mr. Price.) Is there any way of getting into your banking establishment without going through the bank?—They must pass through the banking room, if they go round the passage.

36,129. They must go through the office?—Yes, to go to Mr. Sealy's private room.

36,130. That is the bank parlour?—Yes.

36,131. (Mr. Anstey.) There is only one private room for Mr. Sealy and Mr. Prior?—Only one.

Mr. Edward Prior recalled. Mr. E. Prior.

36,132. (Mr. Anstey.) When your father was at the bank that morning before he went to dinner with you, was Mr. Sealy in the room with him?—No. I did not see Mr. Sealy until I came back from my dinner. I did not see him the whole of the morning before, not in the bank.

Henry Beale recalled. H. Beale.

36,133. (Mr. Anstey.) When did Mr. Sealy arrive at the bank?—He was there before me; I got there about one, or five minutes past.

36,134. That is what I want. Now, be particular, it was past one you have told us already when you got to the bank?—Yes.

36,135. And when you got there you found Mr. Sealy there?—Yes; and Mr. Edward Prior.

Mr. Edward Prior recalled. Mr. E. Prior.

36,136. When you went away with your father to dinner it was one o'clock?—It was about one; I cannot say to five minutes.

36,137. It may have been five minutes, then?—It may have been five minutes, then.

36,138. When you went away had Mr. Sealy already arrived?—He was coming in at the door when I went out with my father.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then perhaps it was done in those ten minutes; that is all.

Mr. William Brice recalled. Mr. W. Brice.

36,139. (Mr. Price.) What I want to understand about this bill is this, Mr. James Trevor seems to have received from Mr. Westropp an account of personal expenses, amounting, I think Mr. Westropp said, to something under 10*l.*, and on the 23rd of December he seems to have written to him in this form :—" My dear Mr. Westropp,—Leaker has sent me " bills of 26*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* and 96*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.*, on you and " Mr. Gray, which I enclose, for your tavern expenses, " which should be paid by yourselves and not by me " as agent; and you and Mr. Gray must send me " account of all your personal expenses without loss " of time as to the election." Then Mr. Westropp then says that he added on to this item, whatever it was, something under 10*l.*, his half of Leaker's bill, which would be about 62*l.*, and that therefore he then returned to Mr. Trevor as his personal expenses, half the expenses—half of the tavern bill—which with the sum he had already returned makes the sum of 72*l.* 2*s.* 3½*d.*, and accordingly Mr. Trevor returns this to the returning officer, but without the voucher I think he ought to have sent, because it is very easy to get Leaker's bill signed as a proper voucher for it, but he returns as actual expenses by the candidate, Mr. Westropp 72*l.* 2*s.* 3½*d.*; and it turns out afterwards that Leaker is not paid, and Mr. Westropp expresses surprise that he has not been paid, and so does Mr. Gray; but they refuse to send any more money to pay Leaker's bill, because they say, "We deposit with " you 200*l.* each of us, to cover legal expenses. You " make a return of 191*l.* to me as legal expenses. In " that is included my tavern bill, and therefore you " have had enough out of that 200*l.* to pay my tavern " bill, and I will not pay any more." Now, I do not know whether you can explain, Mr. Gray's is an analogous case, only his personal expenses are larger, 76*l.*, and his total is 195*l.* Therefore, according to that, there is no doubt 200*l.* ought to have covered the tavern bill?—Clearly.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. W. Brice.

36,140. And Mr. Leaker ought to have had it out of that 200*l.*?—To that extent.

36,141. (Mr. Coleridge.) To the whole extent?—To the extent of 200*l.* I understand what you mean.

36,142. It is charged as having been received, but he says he has not had it. What has become of that money?—I do not know. I never received a farthing, or paid a farthing.

36,143. (Mr. Price.) Mr. John Trevor is the only person who received that?—Clearly; he can give you the information. I never received a penny, nor paid a penny.

36,144. We know that you had a bill against Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray with regard to the expenses of the election?—I quite see the point you take.

36,145. That is a different matter?—Entirely. What you mean to say is, that this money being deposited for a specific purpose ought to be appropriated to that specific purpose, notwithstanding the fact that there was a double claim on him for other expenses.

(Mr. Price.) That is it.

36,146. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is much stronger than that, because it amounts to a false declaration; here is put down personal expenses 72*l.* odd?—Which have not been paid.

36,147. Which have not been paid; therefore in reality that money has not been honestly applied?—I see the point you take, and a proper one too. I never received nor paid a penny.

36,148. (Mr. Price.) We thought it right that you should have an opportunity of explaining it because it struck one as being a disgraceful imputation on the two candidates that they should have left their tavern bill unpaid, they being under the impression that it had already gone into the account?—Yes; in that account I should tell you when Mr. Leaker came to me I knew nothing of what was in it. I had the greatest confidence in the probity and honour of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

36,149. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know what these items were?—No.

36,150. Take them in your hand; you will find them charged to Mr. Leaker (handing it to the witness)?—Yes; it is the first time I have seen the paper.

36,151. (Mr. Price.) It struck me the time I first heard this, that personal expenses could only mean such a thing as a tavern bill?—Of course not.

36,152. Because there is nothing else?—There is nothing else. I quite see what you mean, and Mr. Trevor will be here to-morrow and will explain it.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake recalled.

36,153. (Mr. Anstey.) Tell me where I can find the state of the poll, not the true state, but as announced at the time at the "Clarence" hotel, at one o'clock of the polling day?—You will find it in the box of papers we handed to your secretary. I think Mr. Justice Blackburn had before him the return which was agreed on by the parties as being correct of the state of the poll. I think I saw it.

Mr. J. R. Smith.

Mr. Joseph Richard Smith recalled.

36,154. (Mr. Coleridge.) What year was it that your father died?—My father has been dead 12 or 13 years.

36,155. Then he was dead before 1859?—Yes; he must have died about 1856 or 1857.

36,156. (Mr. Anstey.) Who was the second person who signed the petition you got up, I suppose, as your name is first to it, in 1866—the 820; it is printed "Thomas Hatley"?—I have not an idea. I will tell you how that emanated. After the petition was presented asking for an inquiry by the Liberal party, a public meeting was called in the town, and held in the large room at the "Clarence" hotel. I was elected chairman. A resolution was moved by Mr. James Trevor, I think, that that petition should be adopted, and that it should be first signed by the chairman. It was either Mr. James or Mr. John Trevor, but I have not an idea which. I have tried to recollect, and I asked Mr. James Trevor, and he has not been able to recollect.

36,157. Were you consulted by Mr. Murlis in 1859?—Not that I am aware of in any shape or form.

36,158. About the payment of money?—Not that I am aware of in any shape or form. I should say no.

36,159. He has mentioned a Mr. Smith whom he consulted in 1852 was that you or your father?—1852; my father I should apprehend.

36,160. Your father died in 1856?—Or 1857; thereabouts.

36,161. Are you quite sure that Murlis had no communication with you about the payment of money to voters at any election that followed your father's death?—Certainly not.

Mr. W. Brice.

Mr. William Brice recalled.

36,162. (Mr. Price.) One letter was read yesterday, if not two, by Mr. Westropp, which Mr. Smith wrote to him saying there had been a meeting of the heads of the parties?—Yes, one was on the 25th July.

36,163. "Dear sir,—A meeting of the heads of the " party has been held to-day, and the subject of the " petition, as well as of your letter of the 23d instant, " has been brought under their consideration. They " have determined to fall in with your views, and no " petition will be presented. For your kind assu- " rances of assistance with reference to the justices " and the patronage of the Government, I am desired " to tender to you their warmest thanks. In these " matters the party throw themselves entirely upon " your kind consideration."

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

6 Oct. 1869.

Mr. JOSEPH RICHARD SMITH recalled. Mr. J. R. Smith.

36,163. (Mr. Price.) Was there any meeting of the party?—As to the date I will not speak. I will give you all I know of any meeting after the last. On Mr. Patton's election there was a meeting called at Mr. Lilly's office, at which I was present.

36,164. Who else?—Mr. Lilly, Mr. John and Mr. James Trevor, Mr. Brice, I think, old Mr. George Pain, and some others, at which the subject of a petition in reference to that election was talked over, and it was proposed amongst those present that a petition should be presented, and Mr. John Trevor said if I would sign a petition he would, and immediately on that Mr. Bealy Smith came in, he was not present at the previous conversation, and he said, "No, this must "not be done; the authorities in London will lend you "no assistance, and another thing is, that our own "hands are not clean," or words to that effect.

Mr. WILLIAM BRICE recalled. Mr. W. Brice.

36,165. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember that?—I do not remember anything at all of it, and I further say, that I do not think I was present, for I see in my diary of that day a perfect blank, as also in my office book. It is the 25th July, on a Wednesday.

(Mr. Price.) Then there is this letter:—"Bridg- "water, 19th July 1866.—Dear sir,—A meeting of the "heads of the party was held yesterday afternoon, "and it was unanimously resolved, that while on the "one hand every attention and respect should be paid "to the wishes of the Lord Advocate, yet on the "other, it was of great importance to keep up the "position of our party in the town. This can only "be done either by a diligent prosecution of the peti- "tion, or by making all our partizans quite satisfied, "so far as the recent contests are concerned, and by "obtaining assistance from the present Government "in appointing a sufficient number of new justices of "the peace to out-number those who have been "appointed by our opponents, and in the distribution "of some of the patronage in their hands in favour of "the Conservative party in the town."

Mr. JOSEPH RICHARD SMITH recalled. Mr. J. R. Smith.

36,166. (Mr. Price.) Was there any such meeting held on the 18th July?—Never any such conversation as that occurred.

36,167. Was there any such meeting held on the 18th July of the heads of the party?—There was but one meeting.

36,168. Were you ever present at a meeting on the 18th July of the heads of the party?—I was present at one meeting I have given you an account of at Mr. Lilly's. I do not know the date, but no such conversation as that took place.

"There is a very strong feeling in the town, "encouraged doubtless by the Lord Advocate's part- "ing address, that a petition should be presented. "The signatures thereto and recognizances have been "arranged, and I am quite satisfied that there would "be a liberal subscription to prosecute it to the utmost, "and evidence to support it would not be wanting. "Indeed, many people are in favour of an inquiry, and "a partial disfranchisement of the borough, rather "than allow the Liberal party to ride in tyranny over "the town. The meeting, however, desire to consult "the wishes of the Lord Advocate, and if I receive "your assurance that his lordship will use his utmost "exertions to cement the party here, by giving us "the means of making a liberal settlement with all "parties for the last two elections, and by obtaining "a sufficient number of justices appointed, and a fair "share of the patronage distributed, I think the party "generally will be satisfied, because they will then "believe that a fair opportunity is open of winning at "the next election both seats, and thereby maintaining "the status of the town."

Mr. WILLIAM BRICE recalled. Mr. W. Brice.

36,169. (Mr. Price.) Was there ever such a meeting to your knowledge when anything of the kind was suggested?—Certainly not, and I do not believe there ever was such a meeting.

Mr. JOSEPH RICHARD SMITH recalled. Mr. J. R. Smith.

36,170. (The witness.) I may be allowed to say there was no meeting at which such a conversation occurred.

36,171. (Mr. Price.) He says there was not?—Not when I was present.

36,172. That does not alter my view that he is a liar?—No; but no such conversation took place at any meeting.

36,173. You are one of the heads of the party?—Mr. Bealy Smith has assumed that.

36,174. You are one of the heads of the party?—I suppose I should be called so.

36,175. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would there be a meeting of the heads of the party at which you would not be present?—I should say not.

Mr. WILLIAM BRICE recalled. Mr. W. Brice.

(The witness.) There was no such meeting as that, and besides we never saw Mr. Patton's money.

36,176. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are quite sure. Mr. Bealy Smith made a claim of 900*l.* to clear up the accounts?—I am not surprised at it.

36,177. And got 500*l.* by agreement?—I am not surprised at it.

36,178. Nor are you surprised that he has gone to Australia?—Not in the least.

Mr. JOSEPH RICHARD SMITH recalled. Mr. J. R. Smith.

36,179. (Mr. Anstey.) You said that your nephew, the only member of his family with whom you are in communication, left this place in a disturbed state of mind; was that disturbed state of mind brought about by his apprehension of a criminal prosecution for obtaining money, or attempting to obtain money, under false pretences?—I have not the slightest conception. He was in a very serious state of mind for some time. I have not the slightest conception; I was not on visiting terms with him, and I cannot tell you.

(Mr. Anstey.) The misfortune seems to be that poor Mr. Patton died a calamitous end with his own hand, and all that is brought about by Mr. Bealy Smith.

(Mr. Price.) It is a most shocking affair. There is a letter in which the late Lord Advocate says, "I "have certainly had a more than ordinary share of "good fortune in reaching the safe haven in which I am "now moored"—being the Lord Justices Clerk's place; and then you find this poor old man when he heard these horrible revelations was quite overpowered by them.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

6 Oct. 1869.

Mr. JOHN PRIOR recalled.

36,180. (Mr. Price.) It has become a very serious matter indeed since you were here before to thoroughly get at the truth about what took place between you and Dr. Kinglake on the polling day. I do not hesitate to say that it is a matter of the last importance to yourself that you should impress us that you are giving us the thorough truth about the matter, because, if you do not, you must abide the consequences whatever they be. Now we had evidence given us by persons who are apparently impartial in the matter who certainly date a visit, I do not know what visit it was, but a visit of Dr. Kinglake to your bank at a period of time very much later, and very much more suspicious with regard to the events on that day, than either you or your son has spoken to; therefore it behoves you to consider very carefully indeed before you answer these questions as to all the results that may follow. Did Dr. Kinglake pay more than one visit to the bank that day to your knowledge?—He did not.

36,181. How long were you absent from the bank on that day during banking hours?—From one to two o'clock.

36,182. That you are perfectly certain?—That I am perfectly satisfied of.

36,183. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is your regular dinner hour?—It is my regular dinner hour.

36,184. (Mr. Price.) Therefore, if Dr. Kinglake were seen to drive in a fly to your bank and discharge the fly and go in at one, it would be at a time when you were absent from the bank?—Yes.

36,185. And when the persons then in the ordinary course of things present would be your partner, Mr. Sealy, and Mr. Beale the clerk?—Yes, that is so.

36,186. Now, having told you that, and the importance of all the events of that day—of course we must send for Mr. Sealy—I wish again to ask you whether you have told us the whole of what took place between you and Dr. Kinglake—whether you mean us to understand that Dr. Kinglake when he came on that day told you not only to destroy the cheque, but that the whole transaction of the night before was to be considered as if it had never happened, or whether it amounted to more than this, that he asked you to destroy the cheque which was the evidence, if it had ever come before the court, of what had taken place the night before?—He destroyed the cheque himself. He came into the bank about 12 or soon after. I did not look at the dial to see.

36,187. Did you understand my question; do you mean to convey to us that all that took place was the mere destruction of the cheque by Dr. Kinglake, or whether he went further and said, "Not only do I "destroy the cheque, but you are to consider that "what took place last night is to be as if it had never "happened"?—Well, he did say so.

36,188. Did say what?—That it was to be as though nothing had taken place between us, as though nothing had happened, or words to that effect. I cannot say exactly.

36,189. It makes a great deal of difference if it was the mere destruction of the cheque so as to get rid of the documentary evidence of his having anything to do with the advance, the destruction would be enough?—When he tore up the cheque he said, "as if nothing had taken place between us," or words to that effect.

36,190. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have told us that you would not have given the 500*l.* but for this conversation about the cheque?—I was thrown off my guard.

36,191. If the cheque was cancelled only, and not the transaction itself, it is perfectly natural that you must take the consequences of that inference, but if it was only the cheque that was cancelled, and not the transaction——?—The transaction was cancelled certainly.

36,192. Then how came you to give the 500*l.*?—Well, I did it unguardedly, as I told you in the first instance.

36,193. (Mr. Anstey.) You said just now that you did not look at the dial plate?—I did not.

36,194. Then what earthly means have you of giving the time you left the bank on that occasion?—I left the bank at one o'clock. I then looked at the dial, but I did not look at the dial to see what time Dr. Kinglake came in; but from the time Dr. Kinglake came into the bank to the time of my leaving I am sure made it very near 12 o'clock.

36,195. You see the difficulty is this, when you come to anything which fixes Dr. Kinglake with a very great crime, or seems to do so, then you say your spirits were so excited or depressed—I forget which—and your mind so much taken by surprise that you cannot say positively one way or the other, but whenever you come to anything which tends to screen Dr. Kinglake from the punishment which if he really has done this he will deserve, you undertake to speak positively to minutes, quarters of hours, half hours, and so on; how do you account for that?—Well, I do not know that I speak positively as to minutes.

36,196. You say you did not look at the dial plate, yet you will undertake to say the time he came was about 12?—About 12.

36,197. You said you could not say it was not a quarter past, perhaps you will not say it was not half-past, or a quarter to one?—I am positive; I cannot say more than that.

36,198. Why you say you were in a great state of excitement about this unhappy election?—Not at the time he came in.

36,199. (Mr. Price.) When did it come on?—Towards the close of the day. I am subject to an affliction, which Dr. Parsons could tell you of, and that affliction sometimes causes me to be very excited.

36,200. (Mr. Anstey.) Your son cannot say positively that it was not before one when you left the bank, and he too?—Well, perhaps it may be a few minutes before one.

36,201. Did not you leave the bank as soon as Mr. Sealy came into it?—Perhaps I may.

36,202. You did, that is——?—I may.

36,203. Did not you meet him at the door?—I did not meet Mr. Sealy at the door.

36,204. Did you see him before you left?—Well, I might have.

36,205. Then you and your son went away?—No, I went before my son.

36,206. Your son says he went away with you?—I do not know whether he did. I was under the impression that I went alone.

36,207. You must surely know whether you had anyone with you, when you said in the street, "Brown's "men will not come up, they expect to be paid"?—I did not say anything of that kind that I am aware of.

36,208. Oh, I thought it was your conversation. Was that Honeyball?—I had no conversation with Honeyball.

36,209. Or Mr. Mogg?—Or Mr. Mogg.

36,210. There was some you had in the street for I asked you about it?—As I was passing on I saw four or five who stood talking. I think young Mr. Carslake was one, and I told them, and whilst we were there talking Brown's man ran by waving his yellow handkerchief. One of the party said (I do not know who), "You are rather sanguine;" and I left and walked over to my house.

36,211. That was Honeyball?—That was Honeyball.

36,212. Then why contradict when I name a name?—I did not speak; I never opened my mouth.

36,213. But he spoke to the whole of you?—Yes.

36,214. (Mr. Coleridge.) Shouted something out?—Yes.

36,215. At that time was your son with you, or not?—He was not with me at the time I was talking to those persons.

36,216. How do you know?—I should have known if he was by my side.

36,217. He says he went from the bank, and you met Mr. Sealy as you were going out of the door?—

I would not swear so or not, but I would not have left if he was not on the premises.

36,218. (Mr. Anstey.) At what time did you return?—About two, or a few minutes before; it could not have been more.

36,219. Did you see Dr. Kinglake or Mr. Kinglake at the time they were said to have gone off by the railway station?—I did.

36,220. Did you hear they had gone off?—I heard when I came back they had gone.

36,221. Did you hear either had returned into the town?—I did not.

36,222. Did you hear of Dr. Kinglake having called at the bank in your absence?—I did not.

36,223. Or of a fly having come there and been dismissed?—I heard nothing of the kind.

36,224. Whom did you find there when you got back to the bank from your dinner?—Mr. Sealy, and Mr. Charles Bate was with him in his private room.

36,225. Who else?—Well, Beale, I think, was in the bank. I think my son went back before I did. I think they were all there. I will not be certain, but I think Mr. Beale was there.

36,226. Was there any conversation that evening or morning about Dr. Kinglake?—Nothing passed; his name was not even mentioned.

36,227. Nor Mr. Kinglake?—Nor Mr. Kinglake, except that it was reported they had left, one for London and the other for Taunton. That is all I know.

(Mr. Price.) You make the story more extraordinary every time you come. You came back to the bank, having seen Dr. Kinglake before you left. You say he told you the whole transaction was to be considered cancelled. You hear when you come back that Dr. Kinglake had gone away and his brother, and yet you get into a sudden flutter of excitement and forget all you have been told, and let him have 500*l.*

36,228. (Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps you did not believe the report, for you say it was only a report, that Dr. Kinglake had left the town?—Of course. I think Mr. Sealy told me they were gone.

36,229. Mr. Sealy must answer for himself, and every man in this borough?—Yes.

36,230. I ask if you believed that report that Dr. Kinglake had left the town?—I had no reason to disbelieve it.

36,231. That is no answer to my question?—I did believe it.

36,232. At the time you paid the 500*l.*?—At the time I paid the 500*l.* I never thought of Dr. Kinglake nor anybody else.

But you said you did think of Dr. Kinglake. You told us before; you told us this—Heaven knows if it be true when I came to ask you how you came to know that it was Dr. Kinglake, or on his credit or authority that this was done, as the paper was of the most meagre description, merely "500*l.* to Allan," not saying that you were pay it, you immediately associated that in your mind with the conversation the night before, and you remembered that, and thereupon you, in your excitement, paid it away. You did think of Dr. Kinglake.

36,233. (Mr. Price.) If you had not thought of Dr. Kinglake you would not have paid it?—It was very foolish of me.

36,234. (Mr. Anstey.) You said so. I am not talking about what was done, but you told me distinctly you associated it in your mind with Dr. Kinglake, now you say you never thought of him?—I might have been thrown off my guard by what passed.

36,235. Which is true?—At the moment I did not think of Dr. Kinglake nor anyone else. At the moment it passed from me.

You are making it still more incredible.

36,236. (Mr. Price.) Paid over the counter to a man not a customer, who presents no cheque, without that passing through your mind as to who authorized it or who was security to the bank——?—It was done in a moment.

36,237. Without thought who it was for or who was responsible?—It was.

36,238. (Mr. Anstey.) It is stronger even than that. If he had named Mr. Henry Lovibond that might have called up something to your recollection, but you are positive he never said a word to you, but he handed you the paper, having written it in your presence, and without any word handed it to you, and without a word on your side or on his side you received the paper and gave the necessary instructions, but he never spoke during the whole time he was in the bank, and yet, though the words were only "500*l.* to Allan," you paid away your partner's money and your customers' money to a person you only knew as a bribe agent, sending your own son out of the bank for that, and perhaps having not the feeble security in honour, which Mr. Lovibond's name being mentioned by Mogg might have been understood to give you. You say now you did not think of Dr. Kinglake or anybody else, consequently you did not think of Mr. Lovibond, you did not think of Allan, and you did not think of any person to whom you were to look for payment. Is that really what you mean to say?—Well, I hoped I should be repaid by some one, but I did not know whom to look to.

(Mr. Price.) You must not suppose you can make us believe such nonsense. You go deliberately down into the cash cellar, for it is not taken out of the counter. It takes you—I do not care what flutter of excitement you were in—I presume some time to go to the safe to take the bag of gold out and come back, having Mr. Mogg in your private parlour, which you concealed from us when you first gave evidence, and this is all done in this flutter of excitement, and you never think of anything connected with this 500*l.*

(Mr. Anstey.) And there is another thing. Your son made the statement, and I shall ask you about that statement, offered by him and very properly; it now appears that you did not give him the directions at the time you were in the pretended flutter of excitement.

36,239. You did not direct him to take the money to the bank until Dr. Kinglake had seen you, or been at the bank at half-past one, as I am inclined to believe he was, but two hours afterwards; if your statement is true, more than two or three hours after the transaction—I mean with Mr. Mogg. Mr. Mogg came in with this piece of paper, and handed it to you and left; I ask you more particularly when he made the statement whether he did not then and there receive his instructions, he says, "No, not till long afterwards," it being, he says, about half-past three?—Half-past three, that is a mistake.

36,240. At all events, long after the time he speaks of; the time of settling?—It was about three.

36,241. Do you mean to tell this large assembly and us, and expect to be believed, that your flurry and excitement had such dominion over you that during the whole of that time you were unable to recollect one prudential consideration to restrain you from handing over this money?—I believe from the time Mr. Mogg entered the bank, to the time the money was given out did not occupy three minutes.

Your son has been twice asked the question.

36,242. (Mr. Price.) How long was he in the bank parlour with you?—Whilst writing this memorandum.

36,243. What did you take him in there for?—The door was open. There are two doors leading into this room, one was opened when the other was closed. I do not know whether I was in there at the time he came in. I will not be certain.

36,244. All that makes it ten times more remarkable a transaction. If it be over the counter with an ordinary cheque there would be nothing in it, but here is private and mysterious business done in the bank parlour in a corner where the clerks cannot see, and yet you say you had no thought about it, but did it all in the moment and hurry of excitement.

(Mr. Anstey, addressing the shorthand writer.) I should like you to read the question which Mr. Prior, jun., intercepted, in order to make the statement about the time at which he took the money, and what Mr. Prior says about it. (The shorthand writer then found the question referred to.) Before it is read, let me draw your attention, Mr. Prior, to the evidence you have just given. You say deliberately, after your attention has been called to it by two questions, not three minutes elapsed between Mr. Mogg's departure and your son's departure with the money. Now listen to your son's evidence.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

The shorthand writer then read from his note the following extract from Mr. Edward Prior's evidence: "And immediately after that you were sent down "with the 500*l.* to Allan?—I went to Allan's after "3 o'clock. But you were told to go after Dr. "Kinglake had been there, immediately after?—No, "I was not told until after three."

(Mr. Anstey.) After three you see he says.

(The shorthand writer.) "When were you first told "to take the 500*l.*?—After 3 o'clock. By your "father?—By my father."

(The witness.) Well, it may be after three, as I said.

36,245. (Mr. Anstey.) But when I said half-past 3, you said, "Oh dear no"?—It was not so late as half-past 3. It is as stated there.

36,246. Then you recognize the truth of your son's statement?—I have no doubt it may be correct.

36,247. Is it true what your son also stated, which you contradicted by anticipation, that you took Dr. Kinglake into the bank parlour and shut the door, and conversed with him there, your son being in the bank room outside?—Dr. Kinglake naturally walked in there.

36,248. Did you do so, or not?—I walked in there with him.

36,249. You shut the door?—I believe I did.

36,250. Then why did you tell us in every examination we have subjected you to until to-day, that the conversation was over the table in the public room—I called it the "counting-house;" that you thought there were no clerks there except your son, if there were any they were outside, and in fact there was no conversation, because it consisted merely in handing in the papers; and again and again your attention was drawn to the point of its being or not being the front room. I called it the "counting-house," and asked you if that was the proper name, and you told me the proper name was the "bank room"?—The "bank room."

36,251. Why did you tell me that, if it was not true?—I am not aware that I have told you any untruth.

36,252. We were most pointed in our inquiries, and I referred to it myself particularly pointedly?—You are referring to Mr. Mogg's coming there?

36,253. Yes, to Mr. Mogg's coming there?—Mr. Mogg naturally walked into that room.

36,254. (Mr. Price.) You represented to us that it was done over the counter; that you have told us over and over again?—Not with Mr. Mogg.

(Mr. Anstey.) Yes, you did.

36,255. (Mr. Price.) You certainly said, over and over again, that Mr. Mogg walked into the public office, I will call it, and wrote down this on a slip of paper, "500*l.* to Andrew Allan;" that you then went down to the cash room, leaving him standing there in the public office; that you came back, and in the public office, having brought the money back, that this paper was handed up to you, and he went away, and your son took it down?—When Mr. Mogg first came in he asked for some paper, and he walked naturally into that room.

36,256. Naturally! You did not tell us so at the time you were examined about it before. You gave us to understand that it took place in the public room, and now you say he "walked naturally" into the private room. Why should he walk naturally in there; he is not a customer or a partner. Why should he "naturally" walk into the private room of a firm of bankers?—The door was open.

36,257. If the door of the safe was open he could not walk in naturally and take a bag of gold?—He could not have done that.

(Mr. Price.) Although after what I have heard, I do not say that anything could not be done in your bank, I do not see why Mogg should not have walked into your cash room and taken 500*l.*, and have said, "I have 500*l.* for Allan here."

36,258. (Mr. Anstey.) Now you have stated here again, as you stated on the first occasion, although entirely contradicted by your son, that Mogg said, "Give me some paper," and a piece of paper having been handed to him, he thereupon wrote something upon it; and then you say, what you never said before, that he walked "naturally" into the bank parlour. Your son says he did not say a word in the bank room, that he did not take a piece of paper, that he did not write a single word in that room; that if he wrote anything he must have written it in your bank parlour, that the door must have been closed upon him, and you say that your son could not see what took place. Is that true or false?—That is true.

36,259. Then what you have said just now is utterly false?—No, as I understand you.

(Mr. Price.) This is utterly inconsistent.

36,260. (Mr. Anstey.) You this moment said that he came and wrote on a bit of paper, and walked naturally into the private room?—He wrote the words in the room.

36,261. (Mr. Price.) All that seems to have made it a very much more remarkable transaction, and it ought to have removed any excitement from your mind, and have made you calmly consider what you were doing. His naturally walking into the bank parlour, which I suppose he never did in his life before, and asking for paper, all that ought to have given you some little time to reflect, and yet you say you did not say a word about it. I repeat again, that looking at the flutter of excitement you were in, that Allan, or anybody else, might have walked into your safe and have taken out of it as much gold as he liked, and have walked off with it?—The safe is underground.

(Mr. Price.) No matter. The flutter of excitement you were in was so great during the time of the election that you do not seem to have known what you were doing, or what anybody else was doing.

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not believe your statement about the flutter of excitement you were in. You have voluntarily come here and made a statement, and I have not seen you in a flurry for one single second, or for half a second. I do not believe in the flutter of excitement.

36,262. (Mr. Price.) We ask you again for the last time, just repeat deliberately to us, not so much what was the effect, because it is of great importance to know, as near as you can tell us, what passed between you and Dr. Kinglake, and whether you are prepared to abide by that, and take the consequences. Now, then, you have had lots of time to consider this matter?—Dr. Kinglake walked into the bank, and he said, "I want that cheque," or "order," I forget which he called it.

36,263. Where was this said?—He spoke to me in the banking room, and walked into the inner room.

36,264. Did he say that loud enough to be heard by anybody in the bank?—I do not know that he did.

36,265. Was nobody in the bank?—I think my son was there, I am not certain; and he walked into the inner room, and I got him the cheque.

36,266. Did you shut the door?—Well, the door was closed.

36,267. You shut it, I suppose?—I did; I have no doubt of that.

36,268. Good heavens! What is the use of saying "the door was shut," as if it shut by itself?—No; it is a glass door.

36,269. You shut the door?—I shut the door.

36,270. You are sure that Dr. Kinglake asked you to give him that cheque? Collect your recollection, and just tell us what took place?—Dr. Kinglake asked me to give him that cheque. I gave it to him, and he tore it up.

36,271. (Mr. Coleridge.) But what cheque? You say "that" cheque. What did he say?—The cheque for 1,000*l.*, which he gave me the night before.

36,272. (Mr. Price.) Well, what then?—He says, "No use has been made of this" and he tore it up; and threw it in the fire, and he said, "Now, this is as though nothing had taken place between us," or something to that effect.

36,273. That is what you wish to stand by?—That is what I wish to stand by.

36,274. (Mr. Anstey.) What else did he say?—"It "is as though nothing else had taken place between "us."

36,275. That you have said already. What did he say besides that?—I do not know that he said anything particular.

36,276. Oh yes, you do. Now, come; you can recollect?—He walked out into the banking room.

36,277. But before he walked out in the bank room, what else took place; I must have everything he said?—I cannot recollect at this distance of time that he made use of anything else. All I know is, that he said, "This is as though nothing took place between us."

36,278. What did you say to that?—I cannot say. I cannot recollect.

36,279. (Mr. Price.) You were in no flutter of excitement then?—I cannot say that I was.

36,280. You were perfectly calm and collected, and you understood that not only the cheque was to be cancelled, which was the documentary evidence, but as to the whole transaction, as to the credit being opened, that it was to be at an end?—Oh yes. I understood it was to be at an end with Dr. Kinglake.

36,281. The whole thing was to be at an end?—Yes.

36,282. You thoroughly understood that?—Oh, I thoroughly understood that.

36,283. And gave him to understand that you understood it so?—Well, I did not make any reply to him. He walked in the private room, and he said, "I cannot do without some cash; will you cash me a "cheque for 10*l.*, I cannot leave the town without "it;" and while I was cashing that, I said, "Well, Mr. "Kinglake, I am very sorry we have lost your "brother;" because it was considered a lost election then.

36,284. That is a deliberate affair, and yet in about two hours after your memory is a complete blank, and you hand over 500*l.* in this haphazard way across the counter?—I did so.

36,285. That is what you wish to say?—And that is my loss.

36,286. Never mind your loss?—It is.

36,287. The loss is a very unimportant thing to us in a transaction of this kind. You mean to say, that in your flutter of excitement that all recollection of Dr. Kinglake's solemn act accompanying his words—the solemn act of tearing up the cheque accompanying his words, and your implied assent to it, and your full understanding that the whole thing was to be cancelled, all that vanished from your mind at the time when Mr. Mogg came in, and no thought arose in your mind as to the 500*l.*; that is the way you wish it to stand?—That is the fact.

36,288. That is the way you wish it to stand?—Oh yes.

36,289. You say "Oh yes." Now I put it to you in this way: did not you really believe that when you handed that 500*l.* to Mr. Mogg that all that Dr. Kinglake had done was merely to destroy the cheque, but that his credit was still pledgod to your bank for any advance?—No, I did not believe anything of the kind.

36,290. (Mr. Anstey.) Nor his honour?—Nor his honour.

36,291. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you have told us you would not have advanced the money unless you had had the conversation with Dr. Kinglake as to the cheque?—It put me off my guard.

36,292. It ought to have put you on your guard instead of throwing you off your guard, and you have told us you would not have advanced the money but for that, and I suppose you did look to Dr. Kinglake as the eventual paymaster of that 500*l.*?—Well, I have no right to look to him.

36,293. I know that; but did you not think ten minutes after that, "Well, I have done a foolish "thing, but Dr. Kinglake is the person I must look "to"?—No, I did not think so.

36,294. When did you think he was the proper person to look to?—I have thought so from that time.

36,295. You thought Mr. Lovibond was the proper person, you have said?—If Dr. Kinglake had sent Mr. Lovibond to me I should have let him have the money.

36,296. You said you did it on the faith of Dr. Kinglake's cheque. Do you mean now to say that if Mr. Lovibond had sent Mogg to you in the way he did, you having had no conversation with Dr. Kinglake, and no cheque, you would have let him have the money?—I should, certainly.

36,297. In that same way, without a cheque?—In that same way, without a cheque, because he was a customer of ours.

36,298. Even if you had had no conversation with Dr. Kinglake at all?—Well, I may have been thrown off my guard.

36,299. (Mr. Anstey.) Who do you say was a customer of yours?—Mr. Lovibond.

36,300. Well, but Mr. Mogg was not?—No.

36,301. And Mogg, according to you, never mentioned Mr. Lovibond's name?—No, he did not.

36,302. Do you mean to say, if you had had no conversation with Dr. Kinglake over night, that you would have let Mogg have the money without Mr. Lovibond's name being mentioned?—I should have had to look to Mogg.

36,303. Do you mean to say you would have given it to Mogg, who was not a customer, without anybody else's name being mentioned to whom you could look for payment; do you mean to say you would have given it to him?—To Mr. Mogg?

36,304. Yes?—Well, Mr. Mogg was a man of responsibility.

(Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that if a person of responsibility came into your bank and asked for 500*l.* you would let him have it without a cheque or anything else?

36,305. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think I understood you to say you would not let the best customer in the world have a sum of 500*l.* unless you were in a flutter of excitement?—No, I do not think I said that.

36,306. Supposing a person came into your bank and said, "I want 500*l.* at once, I am going off by the train;" supposing it was Lady Taunton, or the richest person in the place, would you hand over the 500*l.* without a cheque or anything else?—No, certainly not, unless he gave me security.

36,307. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to give you another chance, if you have worldly wisdom enough to take advantage of it. You saw Dr. Kinglake over night, you say?—Yes.

36,308. And you were told by him enough, I shoukl have thought, to make you aware that this was not to be considered a regular business transaction; you were told that you were to keep the cheque out of the coffers, and the entry of it out of the books, were you not?—I was not told that of course.

36,309. You have sworn it, that is all?—In the regular course the cheque would not have been debited to Dr. Kinglake unless it was made use of.

36,310. I am not asking you what would be the regular course. Did not he tell you you were not to make an entry in your books, but to keep it as a private transaction in your box, or drawers, or coffers, or whatever they are?—No; I have never said anything of the kind.

36,311. Your evidence stands so in our shorthand writer's notes?—No.

36,312. (Mr. Price.) Then what did Dr. Kinglake say, in Heaven's name; I certainly understood it so myself?—When Dr. Kinglake asked me what he should give me, I said, "You cannot do better than give me your cheque," and he said, "Mr. Lovibond will tell you how you should draw that cheque," or at least something of that kind, "he will give you the instructions;" but he never said to me I was not to enter that cheque, or to debit him with it; but of course, if the cheque was not made use of, it would not be entered one way or the other; and consequently he called in about 12 o'clock or soon after, the next day, and he said, "You have not made any use of that cheque?" and I said, "No."

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

6 Oct. 1869.

36,313. Did you make any entry the first thing in the morning?—No, I did not.

36,314. Why not?—Because there was no call for the money.

36,315. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that cheque on Stuckey's?—Stuckey's, at Taunton.

36,316. Where he had been unable to raise the money before?—That I know nothing about.

36,317. (Mr. Anstey.) This is what you told the learned Chief Commissioner: "Where does Mr. "Kinglake live?—A. At Taunton; and he asked me "what he had better give me for the 1,000*l.* I told "him that he had better give me his cheque, which "he did. He gave me a cheque on Stuckey's Banking "Company, Taunton. This was the evening after "the nomination. Q. The evening of the nomina-"tion?—A. After the nomination. Next morning, "just before 12, he called on me at the bank and said, "'Have you made use of that cheque?' I said, 'I "have not.' He said, 'Please give it to me,' and I "returned it to him, and he put it in the fire; and he "said, 'Now this is just as if nothing had happened.' "Q. As if what?—Nothing had taken place between "us." Then Mr. Coleridge asks, "Where was the "money all the time?—A. It was a cheque on us—" that must be a mistake—"and I was to have disposed of the 1,000*l.* as Mr. Lovibond should direct." Then the Chief Commissioner says, "That is what he told "you?—A. That is what he told me. (Mr. Cole-"ridge.) Then he had no money?—Then he had no "money; he kept his account at Stuckey's, at "Taunton." Then I ask, "Was it to be drawn by "cheques, or did you authorize him to authorize Mr. "Lovibond to come for the money without cheque? "—A. There was nothing about his drawing cheques. "Q. That would not have been necessary, perhaps? "—A. No, it would not." Then Mr. Coleridge asks you, further on, "Do you mean this was kept from "Mr. Sealy?—A. Yes. When I came to think of it "the next day I thought, 'Well, I have not consulted "'Mr. Sealy upon this, for he was not in the bank, "'and therefore I must get this money back again in "'the best way I can.'" Then I ask, "What money "was this you were prepared to give out in this way, "without cheque: was it your own, or your de-"positors?—A. It is my own, because I make it "good if it is never forthcoming." Then the Chief Commissioner asks you, "It was your own you "advanced?—A. I am responsible for it. Q. It was not "any depositor's money?—A. It was not." Then the Chief Commissioner goes on to say, "What I want "particularly to know is, is there any understanding "or practice at your bank with regard to elections, by "which there shall be a certain fund considered to "be guaranteed or answered for by certain persons, "and then for anybody who is understood to be an "agent to go and get the money out of it?—A. No, "nothing of the kind. Q. Did you pay this 500*l.*, and "would you have paid the 1,000*l.* at the personal "risk of you, Mr. Prior?—A. No, I should not, "the 1,000*l.* Q. But you would have paid the 500*l.* "at your own personal risk?—A. I should." Then Mr. Coleridge asks, "And not have charged it to the "bank?—A. I should not have charged it to the "bank." Then the Chief Commissioner asks, "If "you had had an opportunity of consulting your "partner, and he had consented to the thing, then it "would have been mutual?—A. A bank transaction." Then I ask, "Was there ever any transaction of that "kind to which your partner was privy with your-"self?—A. Certainly not. Q. Neither at this elec-"tion nor the former one?—A. Well, I do not know "whether in the election when—— Q. For instance, "look at this with reference to the election of 1865," and so on; then you are asked about that. Well, then by-and-by I return to the question, thus, "The night "before, when Dr. Kinglake deposited the cheque, "did he tell you the money was to be asked for over "the counter?—A. No, he did not. Q. How did "you arrive at that understanding, that you were to "honour any demand though not made in writing?—"A. He did not say a word about writing. He said "Mr. Lovibond will order the disposition of it. "Q. Does not that generally mean order in the sense "of drawing a cheque or endorsing one?—A. No, "because I had his cheque, and it is just as if he "brought a cheque of our bank to get it cashed, or "lodged it there for me to cash it. When that "cheque was cashed, that cheque would then be "entered in our books. Q. But supposing it was "cashed in small sums of 100*l.*, 200*l.*, 250*l.*, and so "on?—A. Then I should have entered it. Q. But "you would have given up those sums to Mr. Lovi-"bond without a cheque?—A. Yes, I should have done "so. Q. Therefore there must have been some under-"standing between you and Dr. Kinglake as to that? "—A. He told me, when Mr. Lovibond made the dis-"position of it, whether he did it personally himself or "not, I was to supply that money." Then the Chief Commissioner asks, "Was it not an understood "thing that there should be no record of that kind in "your books, which there would have been if the "cheque had been drawn from time to time, of the "cheques? Was not it arranged that there should be "no record of that kind in your books, and therefore "simply Mr. Lovibond was to send down and say 50*l.*, "or 60*l.*, or 150*l.*, and you would have shovelled the "sovereigns over the counter?—A. Well, that is how "I understood it." Now, do you mean to deny it?—I do not deny it.

36,318. Then the Chief Commissioner goes on to say, "There was to be nothing to show for it after-"wards, if possible, in your books?—A. Yes. At "the close of the day I should have sent on his "cheque to Stuckey's, at Taunton." Then I ask, "That is deposited with you?—A. Yes." Then the Chief Commissioner says, "But no record in your "book?—A. No." Now, after giving us all this trouble, and also after wasting so much of our time, do you mean still to say, with the audacity with which you made your statement half an hour ago, that you told us nothing of the sort?—I was not aware that I gave you that answer.

36,319. (Mr. Price.) Can anything be more precise, because the all-importance of the matter was this, as anybody must have seen, to find out whether this was to be a secret transaction, so that it could not be traced in the event of such an inquiry as this, and you saw the object of the question, and you say you so under-stood it. There would have been nothing to show the transaction?—There would have been Dr. Kinglake's transaction.

36,320. But it would have shown nothing?—Yes, it would.

36,321. How could it; because if you had given that money out in sums of 50*l.*, 60*l.*, 100*l.*, or 150*l.*, and made no record or entry of it at the time, what would there have been to trace it by?—Directly that cheque was drawn upon I should have debited it.

36,322. (Mr. Anstey.) We have learnt from Mr. Sealy that when you told him in a formal business way of what you had done (I daresay he had learnt it before), he did not blame you for it in the least; is that true?—Well, Mr. Sealy said nothing to me about it.

36,323. But you told him about it?—Yes.

36,324. After some time it was wrung from you; you said you told him of it, and he did not blame you in the least?—He did not make any remark.

36,325. Is it not all a sham and hypocrisy on your part and on the part of your partner? Was it not understood in 1868, as in 1865, that all this work was to be done by you, but that you were to take care that Mr. Sealy was not told formally of it, although fully prepared to warrant and adopt it?—Oh no.

36,326. You say it was done in 1865, and that when you told him of it he said, "Why the devil did you mention that to me;" and you were asked whether you understood by that that he disapproved of the thing itself, or disapproved of your having made him privy to it, and you said, Certainly not, that he disapproved of the thing itself; you told us so distinctly?—Certainly.

36,327. And was not the same shocking piece of hypocrisy gone through with regard to this pretended concealment of the 500*l.* in 1868; was not the same decent formula gone through as in 1865?—In 1865, or 1866 rather I should say, the cheques were regularly entered in our books and sent on.

(Mr. Price.) But you said you spoke to Mr. Sealy and he said, "Why the devil do you talk to "me about it." And then I asked you distinctly, "Did "you understand from that that Mr. Sealy disapproved "of your letting the money go for bribery purposes, "or that you were merely to keep it from him," and you said, "I was merely to keep it from him. I "understood the money was for bribery purposes, and "he did not want to hear anything more about that." Now, Mr. Prior, you may go.

(Mr. Anstey.) Stop one moment. I have not finished with him yet. I have another question to ask him.

36,328. I ask you distinctly with reference to a question I put to you before; you are answerable for the digression, because you denied the statement you made before, and I was obliged to read all these notes over to you. When Dr. Kinglake came to you, sir, the night that you speak of, now that your memory is refreshed, if it needed refreshing, did it not occur to you that a transaction which was to be kept out of your books, and which was to be conducted in this wholly irregular fashion, was a very special transaction indeed, involving unusual risks, and exposing you and your partner to possibly unpleasant consequences, did it not?—It did not occur to me but what it was a regular transaction.

36,329. You have already sworn over and over again that it was a most irregular transaction, and you were very sorry for it?—Well, the 500*l.*——

36,329*a*. But the other thing?

36,330. (Mr. Anstey.) The keeping the cheques out of the books, sir, the transacting business out of business hours, I think at your private residence, but at all events out of business hours. It was at your private residence?—No, it was not.

36,331. But at all events out of business hours, and the keeping it out of your books; I ask you, was not that an irregular transaction, something very unusual?—It did not occur to me in that way, because when Dr. Kinglake gave me the cheque——

36,332. I have not come to his giving you the cheque; I have come to his proposing it. When it was first proposed to you, did it not strike you as something unusual?—It struck me as an election affair, of course.

36,333. And something out of the ordinary course of business; so you have told us already?—Well, it was certainly not so regular as it should have been.

36,334. Was Dr. Kinglake of such notoriously prosperous circumstances as to make it safe for you to rely upon his credit to back you up upon so unusual a transaction?—I think I said before, that if he had asked for 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.* I should have cashed his cheque.

36,335. I daresay you would, and that is the reason why I do not believe your statement that you would rely upon his credit. Is it not the fact that Dr. Kinglake is by repute in anything but prosperous circumstances?—I do not know that he is not in prosperous circumstances.

36,336. Do not you know that he in vain attempted to raise 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.* at Taunton on this very occasion?—I have not heard of it.

36,337. Do you mean to say you have not heard of it to this day?—No.

36,338. Not heard of it?—No; except something that Mr. Lovibond stated here, that Dr. Kinglake had tried to raise it elsewhere. That is all I have heard.

36,339. Mr. Lovibond stated "something," as you say; but what he stated was this, that Dr. Kinglake told him himself that he had in vain attempted to raise the money at Taunton, where his own bankers are?—That is all I know about it.

36,340. Do you mean to say you did not know he was in notoriously embarrassed circumstances when he came to you?—I did not know it.

36,341. Then under what circumstances would you have advanced him 3,000*l.* if he had required it?—Because I understood him to be a responsible man.

36,342. Do you mean to say you believed him at that time to be a man in prosperous circumstances?—I had no reason to believe otherwise.

36,343. Do you really mean to pledge your oath, that Dr. Kinglake was at that time believed by you to be in such prosperous circumstances that he could have paid you the 3,000*l.* on demand if you had asked him?—Well, I believed he was in good circumstances.

36,344. What! when he leaves his own bankers, Stuckey's Bank, behind him in Taunton, and comes to you in Bridgwater, not approaching you in the light of day, but coming to you under the cloud of night, and asking you for an advance of that kind. Do you mean to say that you then believed him to be, not in good circumstances, but in circumstances so good as to ensure your being able to recover the 3,000*l.* from him on demand, whenever you chose to ask for it? That is my question?—I believed so at the time, and I have no reason to disbelieve it now.

36,345. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that you would have been able to justify to your creditors your letting him have 3,000*l.* if in consequence of anything like a panic having taken place in the ensuing month your bank would have been obliged to close its doors? Had you any reason for supposing in your then state of knowledge of Dr. Kinglake, that you could have justified your conduct to your creditors in letting him have 3,000*l.* of their money, because it was their money and not yours; what was your state of knowledge of Dr. Kinglake, that if your bank had stopped a month afterwards, that you could have justified to your creditors the letting him have 3,000*l.* of their money; I say of their money?—It would not be their money.

36,346. Why not?—Because Mr. Sealy has ample means.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We are merely putting an hypothesis.

36,347. (Mr. Price.) We do not want to be told about "ample means." Supposing the worst came to the worst, and that your bank was obliged to close its doors, what justification could you have held out to your creditors if you had let Dr. Kinglake have 3,000*l.* of their money; because I maintain it is their money, it is entrusted to the bank. You could not get on without the depositors' money, could you?—I think we could.

36,348. What would you do?—I think we could get on without.

36,349. Then why do you take money every day?—Because we make a profit by it.

36,350. Of course you do. Then what justification could you have given to your creditors?—That, of course, I never thought of.

36,351. But you say it was a regular transaction?—As to the 1,000*l.*

36,352. But you said you would go even to the extent of 3,000*l.*?—Yes, if he asked for it. If he had asked for 3,000*l.* I should have consulted Mr. Sealy upon it.

36,353. Then what was your state of knowledge of Dr. Kinglake, who is a practising physician at Taunton, and nothing more that anybody ever heard of; what was your state of knowledge of Dr. Kinglake that justified you in telling him that you would honour his cheque to the amount of 1,000*l.* without asking your partner, Mr. Sealy, about it?—I had no doubt upon it in my mind.

36,354. What did you know about him?—I always understood him to be a responsible person.

36,355. I do not know what you mean by his being "a responsible person." I may be a responsible person, but you would not give me credit for 1,000*l.* If it was a regular transaction why did you not tell Mr. Sealy?—I should have told him if the cheque had been drawn upon.

36,356. (Mr. Anstey.) Why was it not drawn upon?—Because it was not wanted.

36,357. (Mr. Price.) But up to 12 o'clock the next day you were under peril every minute, because the moment your doors were open you were under a pledge to Dr. Kinglake that that cheque should be drawn out, if circumstances required it, at a quarter past 10?—Yes.

36,358. Do you mean to say that it was not important you should tell your partner that at a quarter past 10 it was likely that 1,000*l.* would be abstracted from your coffers?—I did not see Mr. Sealy that morning; he was very unwell that morning, and I sent the keys of the coffer to him.

36,359. But he came down to the bank in the course of the day?—Yes.

36,360. He was not too ill to attend to business?—He was suffering from neuralgia.

Neuralgia does not prevent a man from being communicated with about 1,000*l.*

(Mr. Anstey.) That is not the reason you gave nearly two months ago. You have left us now for nearly two months under this impression, that the real reason was this, that you were (to use your own language) entrusted with the cashier's department of the bank, and that Mr. Sealy had nothing to do with that. That is one reason you gave us; and, not satisfied with that, you gave us another reason, which was, that it occurred to your own mind that when in 1866 you dabbled in another bribery transaction you were distinctly told by Mr. Sealy to keep it from him, and that that was the meaning of his language, and that therefore you thought you would do the same then; you now forget what you have said, as all men do who give false evidence upon matters of this kind, and you give a third reason, wholly inconsistent with those which you have given before, and that is, that you should have told him all this, and would have told him this, if he had not had neuralgia. Which of of those three reasons is the real reason, because they cannot co-exist you see; which was the right one?

36,361. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it neuralgia, fear, or prudence, which made you keep it from him?—I was not subject to neuralgia.

36,362. No, I do not ask you that. Was it neuralgia, or fear of telling him, or your prudence in not telling him, that you kept it from him; which of the three was it? Was it his being ill, was it your fear of telling him after what he had said to you in 1866, or was it your prudential reticence that made you keep it from him?—I certainly kept it from him.

36,363. Do answer the question at once. Was it Mr. Sealy's illness, or was it the fear of what Mr. Sealy would say if you told him, bearing in mind what he told you in 1865, or was it your prudential reticence which made you keep it from him?—Well, it was the latter.

36,364. (Mr. Anstey.) The way in which you have answered our questions is really disgraceful, more especially as you are in the commission of the peace, and having perhaps by-and-by to pass judgment on some poor man brought up before you for false swearing.—I am not in the commission of the peace.

(Mr. Price.) I trust you see now that the result of what you did under the flutter of excitement is this, that if bankers in all boroughs were to act as you did there never could be a stop put to bribery, because, whether a man is solvent or not, or can pay 20*s.* in the pound, or only 10*s.*, or nothing at all, you let him have money without inquiring anything about him.

36,365. (Mr. Anstey.) You not only misappropriated in this manner your depositors' money, but what would have prevented them from regaining easily the possession of it, had your bank stopped payment within a few weeks afterwards; you deliberately omitted all mention of this in your books, consequently if your bank had stopped a few weeks afterwards, as suggested, your books would have shown that your assets were 500*l.* short, and you would have been brought under the lash of the bankruptcy law, which visits with severe punishment bankers and merchants who do not keep their books truly and accurately. Now, why did you for the space of 10 months, not just at that moment, but for 10 months, allow that state of things to exist, no trace whatever in your books of the deductions which had been made from the assets of the bank, to the extent of 500*l.* why did you do that?—As I told you before, I put my memorandum for the 500*l.* in the adjoining bag, and I had likewise kept in my private drawer that memorandum which Mr. Mogg gave me, besides which, my son could have explained the circumstances in case of my death.

36,366. (Mr. Price.) He could not. How could he explain what took place between you and Mr. Mogg?—Because he had seen the memorandum.

36,367. He could not have told what passed between you and Mogg, because he did not hear it.

(Mr. Anstey.) How could a memorandum, as I asked you once before, merely containing the words "500*l.* to Allan," on a certain date, and put, not into the empty bag, because the empty bag was parted with to Allan, as well as the money, but into another bag which contained another 500*l.*, how could that have explained or accounted for the absence of the other 500*l.*?—Well, when that bag came to be opened my memorandum would have been seen.

36,368. And then it would have been found that the bag would have contained, besides your memorandum, the sum of 500*l.*?—Yes.

36,369. Would not that show equally that that sum which was in the bag with the memorandum had been handed back by Mr. Allan or Mr. Lovibond, as well as to show that the 500*l.* which was not there had been handed over to Allan?—That memorandum would have gone to show I had paid 500*l.*

36,370. (Mr. Price.) It could not have done so at your death. You might have been able to explain it, but how, in the name of heaven, if you had died the next morning, could anybody, if he had found this memorandum of 500*l.*, have unravelled this mystery?—My son could have done so.

36,371. How?—Because he knew of the transaction.

36,372. (Mr. Anstey.) He has sworn distinctly he did not. He swore that the door was between him and you. He swore you never mentioned to him a syllable about it. He swore that all he knew about the money was, that after three, you stated most untruthfully in your former evidence before three, he was sent down with the money in the bag to Allan, and that he received no other information on the subject, but that he was to take this money to Allan?—I showed him the memorandum which Mogg had written, where it was written "500*l.* to Allan."

36,373. That was only "500*l.* to Allan"?—Yes.

36,374. But it did not state what it was for?—No.

36,375. Or on whose credit it was advanced?—Of course I made myself the debtor.

36,376. Why did you keep it out of your books, not even debiting yourself or your private account, to which you say it was to go; why did you keep it out of your books for the long period of 10 months, in which space of time almost any disaster might have happened to your bank?—Because I hoped the money would be paid by somebody or other.

36,377. By somebody or other for ten months. Then I want to know why, if you kept it out of your books for that reason, why you have entered it in your books now, under a false date, namely, the date of your examination in court before us?—Because it was made public then, and it was no use for me to keep it a secret any longer from Mr. Sealy.

36,378. You knew you were safe from any censure if you had told him; you knew you were perfectly safe; that you would not have had any censure from him at all?—No, I was not aware of that.

36,379. Do you mean to say you feared anything more from him than this censure if you told him, because you knew you were violating his direction to keep him out of it and not let him know of it; is not that what you were afraid of?

36,380. (Mr. Price.) You were not afraid of being dismissed?—No, I was not afraid of being dismissed.

(Mr. Price.) No, I should think not.

36,381. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you a partner at that time?—Yes, I was; and I was a partner for nearly five years.

36,381*a*. (Mr. Price.) Did you anticipate for a single moment that it would have made the slightest difference, considering what took place in 1866, in your relations with Mr. Sealy? Because, if you did, nobody else would have done so?—No. I do not think there is any difference between Mr. Sealy and myself.

36,382. You merely kept it from Mr. Sealy, because he said to you, "Why the devil do you tell me of such things?"—I had forgotten he had spoken to me in such a way, until he said so here.

36,383. (Mr. Anstey.) On a former occasion you told us distinctly the contrary, that that was why you kept it from him. The misfortune is, that on every appearance of yourself here in the witness box, what you say one day you contradict on another. Now, have you spoken to Mr. Sealy on the subject since his last examination here?—No, I do not know that I have.

36,384. Has he told you that he considers himself and his firm at liberty to keep the books in the bank in any way they like, that is, to omit true entries and insert entries under false dates, or do anything that he or they please, and to shut up the bank to-morrow, which I suppose would be the natural result of that state of things? Has he told you that?—He has mentioned it here in court, but he has not said a word to me upon that.

36,385. Do you concur with him that this is the way the business of Sealy and Prior is carried on; on the assumption that they are at perfect liberty to keep their books in any way they like; to omit any entries they please, or insert them under false dates if they choose, because nobody has a right to prevent them shutting up their bank to-morrow; is that the way you think it right to conduct the business and duties of Sealy and Prior?—No, I think not.

36,386. (Mr. Price.) I have only one more remark to make to you, and that is, if you, from anything which occurred in your examination, have been under any impression from the beginning to the end of it—I am sorry to say that the very great inconsistency of your evidence obliges me to say this, to use the mildest term—that you are sheltering Dr. Kinglake from the consequence of what he did, or that you are sheltering Mr. Sealy, you are under a very wrong impression indeed. They must stand or fall by the acts they themselves were guilty of; and if you from any feeling—I do not care what it is, be it the best or most amiable feeling in the world—think you are sheltering Dr. Kinglake or Mr. Sealy by anything you have said, you are quite mistaken, because it will not shelter them at all?—I have not said the least word in the world here to shelter Dr. Kinglake, or Mr. Sealy, or anybody else.

36,387. You know best; but if you fancy, or if Dr. Kinglake or anybody else thinks you are to be a buffer to keep off anything from them, you and he are quite mistaken?—I am quite aware of that.

(Mr. Anstey.) And you should also know Mr. Prior—I think I have had the painful duty of telling you before—that in order to constitute an indemnity of yourself from the Commissioners against criminal prosecution for anything done by you in the course of this election, every Commissioner must sign a certificate, and that I, for one, shall remember your mode of making answers when the time comes for considering that. And, further, you should know that even a certificate, when complete and signed by three Commissioners, does not protect you against an indictment for perjury.

A short adjournment here took place.

Mr. Richard Axford sworn.

Mr. R. Axford.

36,388. (Mr. Price.) Now, Dr. Axford, you are a medical man practising here?—I am.

36,389. In this town?—Yes.

36,390. The first matter we want to inquire of you is this: On the day of the poll at the last election, was your attention called in any way to Dr. Kinglake during that day in any part of the town?—Yes, I think about the middle of the day.

36,391. As near as you can, try and fix a time?—It was between half-past twelve and one, I think.

36,392. Just tell us the circumstances under which your attention was called to him?—I was walking down the town with Mr. Hayward, timber merchant, of Wellington, and just as we got outside the West of England Bank we saw Dr. Kinglake tripping lightly across the road, and he went into Sealy's bank. Mr. Hayward says to me "There, that looks rather suspi-" cious! I think by the time we come back again" (we went down through the street and over the bridge into Eastover) "we shall find the state of the " poll much altered." Those were just the circumstances, and between half-past one and two, when we came back, we did find that the state of the poll was altered, and we also heard the report that Mr. Kinglake had retired, gone away.

36,393. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you quite sure it was Dr. Kinglake?—Quite sure; I know Dr. Kinglake very well. I have frequently met him in consultation.

36,394. (Mr. Anstey.) You have met him in consultation?—Oh, yes.

36,395. (Mr. Price.) There is no mistake about it at all?—Not the slightest.

36,396. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see him get out of the fly?—No, I did not. I simply saw him cross the road and go into Sealy's bank. I saw nothing more of him.

36,397. You did not observe whether a fly was drawn up the other side of the road?—No.

36,398. It might have been?—It might have been. I did not see it.

36,399. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you say whether it was nearer twelve or one?—Nearer one; between half-past twelve and one. I think about half-past twelve.

36,400. (Mr. Price.) How soon after that did you go to see the state of the poll?—Between half-past one and two.

36,401. Then, at a quarter to two we find (that was perhaps rather after the time you saw the state of the poll) the majority had got down so low (the majority against Kinglake and Vanderbyl) that it had been reduced by a quarter to two from 240 to 79?—Yes.

36,402. Now, at 12.30 the majority was, respectively, over Kinglake 240, and over Vanderbyl 249. That is the 12.30. Can you give us any intermediate state of the poll?—I think I can fix about the time; between half-past 12 and 1. Because I recollect at that time the majority was so great; 240, I think.

36,403. When was the next state of the poll that you remember seeing afterwards?—I think about two o'clock.

36,404. A quarter to two?—About two or a quarter to two.

36,405. That would be the return which showed the majority reduced to 79?—The majority was dwindling away very fast indeed.

36,406. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see any what are called "runners" going about?—No, I did not.

36,407. You know what I mean?—Yes.

36,408. (Mr. Price.) Men who go and look after——?—I quite understand what you mean. I did not see any.

36,409. (Mr. Anstey.) I have the official state of the poll ascertained at one o'clock. At that time the majorities were respectively 142 and 129. Do you remember whether you had seen any statement of the majority of anything like that number as you passed the "Clarence" at about that time?—No. The largest majority that I recollect was 240.

36,410. That was the largest?—That was the largest. I do not know exactly what time that was.

36,411. Do you remember seeing (you know you had probably seen) the state of the poll announced at the "Clarence" either when you were with Hayward or just before you saw Hayward?—Yes.

36,412. Well, do you remember seeing posted there that the majorities over Kinglake and Vanderbyl were respectively 142 and 129?—No, I cannot recollect it.

36,413. Mr. Hayward is distinct in recollecting that the majority which he had seen just before he spoke to you about Dr. Kinglake was 143, he thinks something like that, and some other number. That would tally with the largest majority, tally with the official statement within one?—I cannot recollect; I do not recollect the numbers. I won't pretend to recollect them.

36,414. Now, did you see Dr. Kinglake come out?—No, I did not.

36,415. You passed on, I think?—We passed on down through the street, over the bridge, and went down into Eastover. I did not see Dr. Kinglake afterwards.

36,416. You went to see a patient?—Yes, I did.

36,417. How long were you with him, do you think?—I should think about half an hour.

36,418. Mr. Hayward waited for you?—Yes.

36,419. He is a friend of yours?—Yes; we walked back together.

36,420. He is a friend of yours?—I know him very well. He was originally a clerk to my father.

36,421. (Mr. Price.) I want to know what part of Eastover you were in?—Nearly opposite the "Commercial Inn."

36,422. Were you in such a part of Eastover that if a person had been going to the train, to catch the 1.40, I think it is, to Taunton, or the 1.37 to London (they go very much about the same time), if a person were going about that time, you would in all probability have seen any fly going up?—I should not, because I was in the house, in the back part.

36,423. What time did you leave this house? If you left about one——?—I did not see any fly.

36,424. (Mr. Anstey.) You met no fly going up as you came back?—No.

36,425. And no fly passed you as you were going?—Not that I recollect.

36,426. Was it on the highway to the station where the house was?—Yes, exactly opposite the "Commercial Inn."

36,427. Before you went up to see the patient, did you hear from Mr. Hayward or from anybody that Mr. Kinglake (not Dr. Kinglake, but Mr. Kinglake) had already left?—No, it was only when I came back that I heard it.

36,428. You heard it then?—I heard it. I do not know when Mr. Hayward heard it.

36,429. Did you know the daughter, who is dead, of the witness Danger?—I knew her.

36,430. Did she ever speak to you on the subject?—No; I was not her medical attendant.

36,431. Can you give us, Dr. Axford, (it may be material, or it may not be,) but can you tell us the name of any person who saw the same as you saw, viz., Dr. Kinglake going into the bank?—Only from conversation that I have had since; Mr. Slocombe told me so.

36,432. That is one; we have had him. He swears distinctly to it.

36,432*a*. (Mr. Price.) Who else?—No person else, that I am aware of.

H. W. Batten.

HENRY WILLIAM BATTEN recalled.

(The witness.) I saw Dr. Kinglake. I had been down the other side of the station to see a voter, and I was riding up in the carriage with Dr. Farmer. Just before we came to the station gates I saw a fly going into the station yard, and Dr. Kinglake and, I believe, two other gentlemen were in that fly. That was just before the express was due I know.

36,433. (Mr. Price.) It was due about what time?—It is later now than it was then, about half-past one or twenty minutes to two.

36,434. (Mr. Anstey.) Which express, up or down?—Both. That fly was in time for both expresses.

36,435. Therefore it was in time for the up express?—It would be, for certain.

36,436. And the down express, at ten minutes later?—Yes, but it very often happens that both expresses meet at the station.

36,437. I know; but that does not matter. I am speaking as to the fixed time. Sometimes an express breaks down. You say you saw the fly arrive in time to enable a person to go by the up express?—Most certainly.

36,438. Therefore quite in time for a person who had come to see a friend off by the up express to leave the place again before the down express?—Yes, I should think so.

36,439. Did you see that fly afterwards return?—No, I did not, because I went up in the carriage. I looked particularly, and I said to Dr. Farmer, "Do you see that? there is Dr. Kinglake going into the station." It was just outside the station gates, before he got into the yard.

36,440. (Mr. Price.) You could not distinguish who the other was?—No, I was under the impression at the time, and I heard from Mr. Pope, the ticket clerk, afterwards, that it was Mr. Kinglake who was in the same fly, because I went into Fore Street afterwards and met him, and he said, "Dr. Kinglake is gone off; I gave him a ticket." I heard it before, but I would not believe it till Mr. Pope told me so himself. You will get it from him how he took the ticket, and everything about it.

J. Farthing.

JOHN FARTHING sworn.

36,441. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Farthing? Are you a fly driver here?—Yes.

36,442. Who for?—Mr. Ricks.

36,443. On the day of the polling was your fly hired to go to the station by anybody?—Yes.

36,444. Who by?—Mr. Kinglake, Dr. Kinglake, and Mr. Bate are the three gents who went down; and there was Mr. Kinglake's servant.

36,445. Where did you take them up?—I took them up at Mr. Allan's door, in George Street.

36,446. What time?—Soon enough to meet the express. I understood that Mr. Kinglake was going by the express, but whether Dr. Kinglake was going I could not say. I did not know anything about that. Whether he went away or not I do not know. I took them down to the station and left them at Mr. Hodges's hotel door.

36,448. They got out there?—They got out there, all four of them; and there I left them.

36,449. Did you see them go in at the door?—Yes; inside the door.

36,450. We have it in evidence that Mr. Bate left them in a private room?—I do not know. They went inside the outside door. That was all I saw.

36,451. (Mr. Price.) Was your fly dismissed then?—Yes.

36,452. Paid for and dismissed?—Yes.

36,453. You came away from the station then altogether?—I came away from the station altogether.

36,454. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember how long before the up express was due that was?—No, I could not say nothing at all about that, because I took them there (my orders were to take them there). I took them there; and I put them down and came away momentarily.

36,455. You were not told to take them to the station, then?—To the hotel door; that is where I put them down. That was my orders, and I did so.

26,456. Therefore, if they had something to do at the hotel, it must have been some time before the express was due?—I could not say anything at all about that.

36,457. Now what time did you take them up at Allan's?—Soon after one; I could not say.

36,457*a*. How long?

36,458. (Mr. Anstey.) Five minutes?—Something like that; I could not say to a few minutes.

36,459. Not more?—It was somewhere thereabouts. I could not say for five minutes or ten minutes, as far as that goes.

Mr. John Lovell Sealy recalled. Mr. J. L. Sealy.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Sealy, we see you are here; we shall not trouble you. You need not wait unless you like; we are not going to examine you.

(The witness.) I simply wish to say I have some information obtained a few minutes ago. I believe Mr. Davis's son drove up at the bank.

(Mr. Anstey.) We cannot have your "belief" here. I certainly shall object to take any "belief" from you. I do not get any information from you.

(The witness.) Would you allow me to state——

(Mr. Anstey.) You are not here as an advocate for anybody, you are here as a witness, and I shall certainly object to it, and I shall ask the Chief Commissioner to commit you if you interrupt the proceedings.

(The witness.) I only wish to explain——

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not want another word. If we have a desire to call you, we shall call you. You are not here to speak for other people.

Thomas Barratt sworn. T. Barratt.

36,460. (Mr. Price.) Where do you live?—In London.

36,461. What are you?—I am a draper by trade.

36,462. Where do you carry on business?—I am not in business now.

36,463. Where did you carry on business in 1865?—I was out of business. I am a clerk at the present time.

36,464. Where are you a clerk?—In London.

36,465. But where?—Must I give the address?

36,466. What is the reason not?—Simply because I am in the employ of a very large firm. I will give you the name on paper if you will allow me.

36,467. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you in a draper's firm?—No, I am not; I am in a large public company. I will give the name on paper, if that is satisfactory.

36,468. (Mr. Price.) Well, give the name. Were you in their employment also at that time?—I was at that time. (The witness wrote the name in question and handed it to the Court.)

36,469. (Mr. Price.) Very well, then; there is no occasion to say it. Now, did you come down here in 1865 with Mr. Tromp?—I came down about a week or eight days before the election.

36,470. Before the election of 1865?—I came as a commercial traveller, and stopped at the "Globe" hotel.

36,471. Were you the person who went by the name of Tom?—Yes.

36,472. Were you the person to whom Temblett was to give the signal; I think it was Temblett?—I have no doubt in my own mind that I was the person.

Frederick Charles Temblett recalled. F. C. Temblett.

36,473. (Mr. Price.) Is this the man you knew (pointing to the last witness)?—That is the man.

Thomas Barratt recalled. T. Barratt.

36,474. (Mr. Price.) You were known as "Tom"?—Yes.

36,475. And as "Matthews" also?—And "Matthews."

36,476. You were down here under Mr. Tromp's orders?—I was.

36,477. You were the person who went to the "Bull and Butcher"?—I went to the "Bull and Butcher."

36,478. Was yours the hand that was held out?—As near as possible, if you will allow me——

36,479. (Mr. Coleridge.) Give us an account of the whole thing?—I came down about a week previous to the election of 1865. I stopped at the "Globe" hotel.

36,480. That was the Liberal house?—That was then the head quarters of Sir John Shelley.

36,481. You were there to watch them?—I was there to watch them. I was to report to Tromp, who was part of the time staying at Weston-super-Mare and part in London. I stopped there three nights, and mixed as much as I possibly could with the company. I was sometimes in the commercial room, of course; I dined in the commercial room; I was in the commercial room in the morning, and in the smoking room in the evening. I got into conversation, and from what I gathered I have no doubt in my own mind that bribery would be resorted to on the other side, on the Liberal side. Of course I reported to that effect to Mr. Tromp.

36,482. (Mr. Price.) What made you understand that? because they represented to us that it would be a pure election?—I was a perfect stranger in the town; but from what I could gather there was never an election down here without bribery. They all seemed to expect it as a matter of course. Finding I could not remain at the hotel longer than two or three nights as a commercial man, I removed to private lodgings, which I believe were secured for me by Mr. Smith. I had nothing to do with bribery direct at that election.

36,483. You were merely to gain information and give it?—Merely to gain information and give it and assist Mr. Tromp. Of course I knew what was going on. At the next election I also came down and stopped at the "Globe" hotel again.

36,484. (Mr. Coleridge.) But what more did you do in that election?—Not anything more. I had nothing more to do with that election.

36,485. Had you anything to do with money yourself?—No; only saw money passed from Tromp to certain men.

36,486. Who to?—Harden, Temblett, Truman, and I believe a man of the name of Heal had some money.

36,487. Which he stuck to?—Yes.

36,488. Can you tell us anything about Truman?—No, I cannot. He was always a doubtful one.

36,489. Are you at all cognizant of what it was that Mr. Truman had done that made him distrusted on a future occasion?—I am not.

36,490. Still you mean that even on this first occasion Mr. Tromp seemed to doubt him?—I have it in my mind that he was misdoubted by Mr. Tromp.

36,491. Newton—he was "misdoubted" too?—I do not remember about Newton.

36,492. Do you remember they were obliged to trust Heal, although they knew he was a scoundrel, because they had got so deep with him?—Mr. Tromp was told to trust him?

36,493. What did you get for your services on that occasion?—The first time,

36,494. Yes?—About 20*l.* and paid my own expenses.

36,495. They were about half that?—Quite that.

36,496. Did you get a free pass?—I had taken my holiday from the firm.

36,497. Did you get a pass?—I should get it as a right.

36,498. Where were you taking your holiday?—I was stopping at Weston-super-Mare. I left my wife there.

36,499. Go on.—In the election of 1866 I came down, and stopped at the "Globe" again that year. Late in the afternoon I had understood from Mr. Tromp and one or two of his men that he was losing the election for want of some money. A message was sent, I believe, to the "Globe," and I was told to go in the churchyard and there I should meet, I believe, Mr. Neale. As I understood, he was a clerk in Mr. Smith's office.

36,500. Yes. Have you seen him here to-day?—I have seen him here yesterday and to-day. I saw him, and he gave me a matter of 300*l.* to the best of my recollection. I dropped it in my coat pocket. I had to take that money to a man named Bussell where Mr. Tromp was stopping. The money was tied up in packets of 10*l.* I was told to go to the "Bull and Butcher," and give 10*l.* to each man who would put his hand inside, which I did. I believe I gave all except about two packets or something like that. Those I took back.

36,501. Then you gave about 28 packets away?—I believe I gave 28 packets away. I believe there was a matter of 30 men. I am not clear about it, but at any rate I believe that won the election.

36,502. Is that all you did then?—That is all I did then.

36,503. What did you get for that?—I got 25*l.*

36,504. Were you on your holiday then?—I was.

36,505. How did you first become acquainted wiih Mr. Tromp?—I had known him for some years.

36,506. Where had you known him? Are you a native of this place?—No. The first time I was ever in the place was in 1865.

36,507. Where had you known him?—I knew him in London.

36,508. (Mr. Price.) Connected with railway matters?—No.

36,509. Did you know him as connected with this sort of matter?—No, certainly not.

36,510. You believed this to be his first experience of this sort of thing?—As far as I have any knowledge It was the first time that I ever knew anything about it, or ever heard anything about it.

36,511. Between that election and the next one did he send you down to make some outstanding payments?—I am under the impression that I came down for one night, but I also think he came with me.

36,512. What did you do in the way of paying money on that one night that you came down?—I do not think I paid it; I think he paid it.

36,513. Do you recollect what he had with him?—400*l.* or 500*l.*

36,514. They were the outstanding debts for the former election?—They were the outstanding debts for the last election, which must be paid before another.

36,515. Then the next was Vanderbyl and Patton; were you down again?—I came down again.

36,516. What did you do on that occasion?—I went to Taunton in the afternoon, and came in here late at night.

36,517. Was Tromp with you?—Tromp, I think, was stopping in the town. I really do not remember the house he was stopping at.

36,518. Had you anything to do with bringing money down?—Well, I saw the money in the afternoon. I think, if I am right, the election was on a Thursday. On Wednesday afternoon I came in from Taunton to Mr. Tromp—on Wednesday morning at least—between 11 and 12 o'clock, I think. He followed me. I was told to wait down by the river and watch a certain house which he pointed out to me, where I saw the name of Lilly on the door; and when I saw him come out I was to walk down the street at a respectful distance from him him and see that nobody took the bag away from him.

36,519. Take what away?—A carpet bag or portmanteau that he had with a lot of money.

36,520. You had nothing to do with bringing money down from London?—No, nothing whatever. That money of course went to Taunton so tied up. On the following morning, at least the same night, I brought my assistants into the town. I placed one at Newton's and one at the "Bull and Butcher," and I myself early in the morning of the poll went to Pinn's at the "Golden Lion." I think we had a matter of 300*l.* each, and we distributed it.

36,521. Do you know the names of the persons to whom you gave it?—Not at all. I was merely to give it through a little hole which had been cut in the door, which was closed. There was some one outside to see that the proper parties had it.

36,522. What did you give away?—I gave away 270*l.*, I think.

36,523. In gold?—In gold.

36,524. 10*l.* each?—10*l.* each. 270*l.* I think it was.

36,525. Did your assistant who had been watching Newton's report anything suspicious about Newton's conduct?—No, he said that the men that he had paid did not vote.

36,526. Or rather that Newton had not paid them, and so they did not, I suppose?—Perhaps so. But he is here to answer for himself.

36,527. Not Newton?—No, no, but the man who paid him.

39,528. Which of your assistants is it that is not here?—Jones, the one that paid at the "Bull and Butcher."

36,529. Do you know where he is to be found?—I do not. I parted from him on the Bristol platform, going to Wales, and have not seen him since.

36,530. How did you engage this man? Where did you meet with him?—I knew Jones by living with him as a draper's assistant.

36,531. Have you never heard of him since?—Oh yes, I have. I had one letter from him, from Wales.

36,532. Do you know where he is living now?—No. I think I could tell you more than he knew himself. He was very nervous over the job. I put him in a small bedroom at the "Bull and Butcher," and there he stopped, or I kept him at work till after the poll closed. I then took him to the station and started him off to Bristol. I have never seen him since.

36,533. He told you that he had disposed of 300*l.*?—He did.

36,534. What did they get for their trouble?—They had 10*l.* each. I was money out of pocket.

36,535. You bribed about 30 yourself?—Yes.

36,536. And he did about the same?—Yes.

36,537. And your other assistant ought to have done about the same?—Yes.

36,538. He is here, is not he?—He is here.

36,539. What else did you do about the election?—I do not know of anything else.

36,540. Did you come down any time afterwards to pay up things after the last election?—No.

36,541. How many times have you been in Bridgwater altogether?—Four times.

36,542. Before this time?—Before this time.

36,543. You did not come down in 1868?—No.

36,544. What did you get the last time you were there?—I got 10*l.*, which left me money out of pocket.

36,545. Is that all you have to tell us?—That is all I have got to tell you.

36,546. And you cannot assist us to find Jones?—No.

36,547. You know we are very anxious to have the man who watched Newton?—Jones did not watch anybody. I believe he parted wiih all the money he had. I am satisfied.

36,548. And all this money you received from Mr. Tromp?—Yes.

36,549. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember the appearance of the men to whom you paid money?—Not the slightest, because as near as I can remember a little hole was cut in the door and the hand came out. Somebody was outside to see the proper men brought to me. I merely gave them the money.

36,550. I should like to know whether any of them were men who, to use a very misused phrase, belonged to the "respectable" class of society?—I think not.

36,551. (Mr. Price.) Why?—From the names given, I got familiar with the names (we had a list of the names) having been down once or twice before; and I understood they were not what was looked upon as respectable, although I understood that those that did consider themselves respectable did receive bribes.

36,552. (Mr. Anstey.) But not from you?—Not from me. I think I got the roughest ones.

Mr. John Parsons sworn. Mr. J. Parsons.

36,553. (Mr. Price.) You are a medical man practising in Bridgwater, and we understand you are attending a person who has been summoned before us of the name of Poole, of the Taunton Road?—Yes, I am.

36,554. Summoned last night?—I have the subpœna in my hand, and I have to inform you he that is suffering from a diseased condition of heart with considerable effusion into the chest, and he is quite unable to come here, but he will be very happy to be examined at his own house if you think his evidence material.

36,555. Do you, as a medical man, think it would be dangerous?—I do think it dangerous. I think he would be quite incapable of coming here.

36,556. (Mr. Anstey.) He would be able to manage the examination at his own house?—Yes.

36,557. (Mr. Price.) Then we may arrange for some time?—I think it would be quite immaterial what time; some time that might suit the pleasure of the Commission.

36,558. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Tunmer?—A printer.

36,559. Where are you carrying on business?—In Cannon Street.

36,560. In the city?—In the city.

36,561. In the employment of somebody else, I suppose?—Exactly.

36,562. When were you brought down to Bridgwater by Mr. Tromp?—Mr. Barratt came to me and requested me to meet him at Taunton.

36,563. (Mr. Coleridge.) What year?—That was in 1866.

36,564. (Mr. Price.) The early part of 1866?—It was in that election. I won't be sure about its being 1866. It was the only one election I was down. I was only down at one.

36,565. Do you remember the candidates, Patton and Bagehot?—No. Mr. Patton I think was alone.

36,566. (Mr. Coleridge.) There were two, you know; one on each side?—Yes, exactly. I think it Mr. Vanderbyl.

36,567. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Barratt came to you and asked you to come down?—He did.

36,568. To meet him at Taunton?—To meet him at Taunton.

36,569. Did you meet him at Taunton?—I met him at Taunton; I believe at the Railway Hotel.

36,570. How long before the election?—On the eve of the election.

36,571. The night before, you mean?—The night before.

36,572. Did he bring you on to Bridgwater?—He brought me on to Bridgwater.

36,573. Where did he place you?—At the "Three Crowns" I believe it is called; Newton's.

36,574. Were you to be there the next day?—I was to be there the next day.

36,575. Tell us what you did that day?—All I did in the morning was to get rid of a certain amount of money.

36,576. Tell us what amount of money, and where you got it from?—300*l.* I got it from Barratt.

36,577. How were you to dispose of it?—Ten pounds to each man. They were to be introduced by Mr. Newton, the landlord of the place. He brought them into the room, and as they came into the room I took their names and gave them 10*l.* each.

36,578. What did you do with the list of the names?—I gave it to Mr. Tromp.

36,579. Did you pay the whole of that away?—Every farthing.

36,580. What did you get for yourself?—Ten pounds.

36,581. (Mr. Coleridge.) And your travelling expenses, I suppose?—No, that is all I got.

36,582. Did you get a pass?—No.

36,583. (Mr. Price.) Then you went back to London, did not you?—Then I went back to London the same night.

36,584. Is that all you had to do with it?—That is all I had to do with it, and that is all I know about it.

36,585. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the only election you have been concerned in?—Oh no, because I was brought up in electioneering down at Ipswich.

36,586. Were you ever at Norwich?—Well, I have been to Norwich, but not electioneering.

36,587. Or to Yarmouth?—No.

Mr. George Bryant Sully recalled. Mr. G. B. Sully.

36,588. (Mr. Anstey.) It has come out in evidence, Mr. Mayor, that there is an office of trust and emolument in the gift of the corporation which has been kept very long vacant. I think it is called the water bailiffship. Is that so?—No, it is not vacant. The resignation was sent in by the present water bailiff,

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

but he was asked to retain his position until some arrangements which are now in contemplation by the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, in connecting the docks with the railway, and putting a bridge across the river, which would necessitate our present arrangements being reconsidered and varied. He has been asked to retain his position until that bridge was thrown over and he has agreed to do so.

36,589. When will that be?—The contract, I believe, is now let.

36,590. And how long will it be before he vacates it?—I should think the bridge would be over some time next year.

36,591. I wish to ask you has any promise of that office been made to Henry Chapman Bussell by the corporation?—Not to my knowledge.

36,592. Have you promised your vote and influence on his behalf?—Certainly not.

36,593. Are you aware he is a candidate for it?—I know that 12 months ago he applied for it.

36,594. As a matter of fact, will he be appointed under the present state of things, that is, assuming that the Liberals continue to have a majority in the town council?—I do not know that I can answer as a matter of fact. I should think not as a matter of opinion and impression.

Mr. J. Woodland.

Mr. JOHN WOODLAND sworn.

36,595. What are you now, Mr. Woodland, and where are you living?—I am living at Minehead at present.

36,596. Have you anything to do with a bank there?—Nothing whatever; I am entirely out of business; entirely retired altogether.

36,597. Were you manager of Stuckey's bank here in the year—— ?—1859.

36,598. 1859?—Yes, I was.

36,599. Can you tell us anything about a transaction in which an I O U was given by Murlis, and a sum of money was drawn out of your bank, 500*l.*?—Yes, I think I can. I am sorry to tell you that I have had a very long continuous illness, and I cannot recollect the circumstances as well as I could wish to have done.

36,600. Can I refresh your memory?—Well, I will tell you what took place as far as I recollect.

36,601. (Mr. Coleridge.) Give us the best you can?—I will, indeed I will, and truthfully too. The only thing Murlis was wrong about was the day on which he received the money. I fancy myself it was on the nomination. I met Mr. Richard Smith in the street, who had a large account with us, and always a considerable sum of money in our hands. He said, "Mr. "Woodland, I shall want 500*l.* to-day, and I should "like it in gold. I cannot get up to the bank in time "before business hours are closed; do you think you "could arrange for me to have it after hours?" Knowing him to be a good customer, and always having money in our hands, I really considered he was only asking for his own, and could do what he liked with it. I, of course, suspected what it was wanted for.

36,602. (Mr. Price.) Had he an ample account at that time to cover such a sum?—Oh yes, three times such a sum; if he had brought in a cheque for 2,000*l.* I should have cashed it without hesitation. I took home 500*l.* I had told him that if he would come down in the evening, I would take home 500*l.* and let him have it. I thought until I read Murlis's evidence that Bealy Smith, his son, came, and that I handed the money to him; and I have no doubt that the hesitation that Murlis speaks of on my part was on account that he had not been mixed up in the transaction, as far as I can recollect, at all, and therefore I did hesitate, because of course I should not give any man who had no account with us 500*l.* on an I O U; it is not likely.

36,603. Murlis's account is that he got it on his I O U?—And I have no doubt that he is right in that. I have no recollection at all of it.

36,604. I think you said just now that on no account would you have allowed a person like Murlis to have 500*l.* on his I O U?—But then I had Mr. Smith's instructions.

36,605. You have not told us that he said Murlis was to come for it?—As well as I can recollect Murlis's name was never mentioned.

36,606. When Mr. Smith said he should want 500*l.*, and when you offered to have it at your house for him, did he say that he would send anybody for it?—I cannot recollect at all; I cannot recollect. My impression was, until I saw Murlis's evidence, that Bealy Smith fetched it, and knowing of course that Murlis was in Mr. Smith's confidence in all electioneering matters, he would have it. Perhaps I did hesitate a little; I do not recollect it.

36,607. You did know Murlis was in Mr. Smith's confidence?—Oh, dear me, yes.

36,608. Then you knew perfectly well what the money was for?—Oh, I had no doubt about it; not the slightest.

36,609. (Mr. Anstey.) You have no doubt if Murlis says so that he gave you an I O U for it?—I cannot recollect having an I O U for it.

36,610. But if he says he did?—I have no doubt of it.

36,611. Would not the fact of his giving an I O U show that he brought no other voucher?—I do not know whether he brought any other voucher; I cannot remember it.

36,612. (Mr. Price.) You would not want an I O U if you had a regular and proper cheque?—No.

36,613. (Mr. Anstey.) Then does not that show that he got the money in the way he mentioned, and whatever may have been your inducement to give the money, probably as you say the request of Mr. Bealy Smith—— ?—Not Bealy Smith, Richard Smith.

36,614. Well, Richard Smith. Murlis, at all events, brought no voucher?—Not that I can recollect.

36,615. (Mr. Coleridge.) At that time had Bealy Smith any account with you?—No; I do not think he had ever an account with us.

36,616. How long did you remain manager?—Several years; I left the bank six years ago.

36,617. Did Mr. Bealy Smith ever have an account in your recollection?—No, no private account.

36,618. He had not?—No, I am sure of it.

36,619. (Mr. Anstey) Where did he bank?—I do not think he had any account.

36,620. Probably nowhere?—No, I think not.

36,621. Did he keep his money in a bank? We have it in evidence that he was the only member of his family who is on speaking terms with Joseph Richard Smith. Did he keep his money, do you know, in the hands of Joseph Richard Smith?—I have not the least idea; I knew very little of Mr. Bealy Smith.

36,622. (Mr. Price.) At all events you parted with the money, and parted with it under the idea, or at all events fully alive to the conversation you had with Mr. Richard Smith?—Entirely on that account; no other.

36,623. If there had been any fuss about it, I should simply have put the I O U (if it was an I O U), I really do not recollect, put it into his account and charged it off.

36,624. (Mr. Anstey.) I presume that no bank, or officer of a bank, unless he had had some very explicit understanding beforehand with the person to whom he looked in honour to make good such an amount, would answer such a demand as that?—Oh, certainly I should not.

36,625. We have had an example of that to-day?—Oh no, I should not without a conversation with Mr. Smith have advanced Murlis money. I had been a very short time in the town; I had not the means of knowing the great majority of the people. Although I was manager for two years, I had been living at Taunton.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. W. Ford recalled.

Mr. J. W. Ford.

6 Oct. 1869.

36,626. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Ford, did Mr. Bealy Smith have an account with you?—Never, sir.

36,627. Do you know where he did bank?—I do not know at all. I do not remember that I ever saw a cheque of his.

Frederick Charles Temblett recalled.

F.C.Temblett.

(The witness.) I know where Bealy Smith banked. It was at Stuckey's, after Mr. Woodland left.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then we must have Mr. Salmon here?

Walter William Neale sworn.

W. W. Neale.

36,628. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An articled clerk.

36,629. Whom to?—Mr. Thomas Dewes of Coventry.

36,630. Were you ever articled clerk to anybody in this town?—To Mr. Richard Smith.

36,631. How long ago?—I think in June I went away from him. My articles were assigned in October two years this month.

36,632. Two years ago?—Yes, two years ago.

36,633. Before that time had you been in Mr. Smith's office as an articled clerk?—Yes.

36,634. For how long?—For a year and a half or two years. In May I was articled, in May 1865.

36,635. May 1865?—May 1864 it was.

36,636. We are now in 1869?—It was May 1864.

36,637. You have served your articles then, have not you?—My articles expire in May, next May.

36,638. Then you were with him in 1864, 1865, and 1866?—Yes.

36,639. And part of 1867?—Part of 1867.

36,640. Well, now what can you tell us about the election in 1865?

36,641. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you lodge at that election?—At Trinity College, on the Taunton Road.

36,642. Do you recollect any stranger coming there to lodge at the time of the election?—I do not recollect whether it was at that election, but at one of the elections, I think for one or two nights Mr. Barratt stayed there. I think it was Mr. Bealy Smith asked me to speak to Mrs. Hayward for him to have some rooms, as far as I remember it. Whether I took a note from Mr. Smith to Mrs. Hayward, or whether I spoke to her, I do not know. He stayed there, and I think I took two notes to him; one or two notes to him from Mr. Bealy Smith.

36,643. (Mr. Price.) To Mr. Barratt?—I think it was Mr. Barratt. I did not know his name at the time. Once before that election Mr. Smith asked me to go to Weston-super-Mare, to meet a gentleman at the station. He described him to me and said I should perceive he would come up by a certain train to Weston, and I was to give him a note which I did.

36,644. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was that gentleman?—I did not know his name at the time. I believe it was Tromp from what I have heard since.

36,645. (Mr. Price.) Did you give him the note?—Yes, I gave him the note. I had no reply to that I believe, and I fancy at that election I several times took notes from Mr. Smith to Mr. Tromp; but not there, I met him in different parts of the town.

36,646. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you carry any money at that election?—No.

36,647. What election was it you carried some money?—That was Mr. Patton's last election.

36,648. Oh, Vanderbyl's?—No; Mr. Patton's first election.

36,649. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you can tell us about the election of 1865; about your carrying the notes to Tromp and other people?—That is all I believe I did except work in the office in connexion with it. I copied some names for Mr. Smith. He asked me to copy them, and I did.

36,650. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure that you know nothing about the election of 1865 beyond what you have said. Recollect, Mr. Boys was employed in bribing voters?—I knew nothing whatever about that.

36,651. He was a clerk in your office?—I knew nothing whatever about it.

36,652. You recollect Boys going up to London to give evidence?—On the election petition? Yes, I do.

36,653. You recollect his going up to London after that election about the petition, to give evidence about what he did?—Yes, I do.

36,654. After the election of 1865, do you recollect a conversation between him and your master, Mr. Bealy Smith?—I do not remember any particular conversation.

36,655. Had you any conversation, particular or general, with Mr. Smith, in your recollection?—None, that I recollect.

36,656. Do you remember that Mr. Boys was told that he was to go up and ignore everything that he knew?—Certainly not. I do not think any such thing was told him, and if it was it would not have been said in my presence.

36,657. We shall form our own opinion; we do not want your opinion. I ask if you know it?—Certainly not.

36,658. Are you sure about that?—Yes.

36,659. Were you served with a Speaker's warrant?—No; I served many.

36,660. Did you receive a Speaker's warrant?—No. Do you mean a Speaker's warrant served upon myself or to serve upon others?

36,661. (Mr. Price.) Did you receive a Speaker's warrant for yourself?—No.

36,662. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there an intention that you should go up and give evidence?—Not that I am aware of.

36,663. Do you mean that no intention to that effect was ever communicated to you either by Mr. Richard Smith, Bealy Smith, or Boys?—No, I think not; Mr. Smith once said to me, Mr. Bealy Smith, he was talking about my doing extra work in the office on account of the election, and he said, "I "should like you to go to London if it would be a "treat to you. I would do it if I could do it; if "my employers would allow me to do it." I never went to London, and never heard any more about it.

36,664. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you to say when you got to London?—Nothing. I was not to go as a witness. I had no evidence to give.

36,665. Very likely you had, but do you mean that neither of the Smiths said anything to you about giving evidence?—No, I am perfectly confident that——

36,666. Do not run ahead of my question. I am not asking you whether you made any reply to such a proposal, but whether such a proposal was made to you?—I certainly do not recollect such a proposal.

36,667. Are you quite sure?—I am quite sure I do not recollect it. If I did——

36,668. (Mr. Price.) Then you had nothing to do with the petition at all?—Yes, I had with the petition. I copied some names for those briefs, I believe, and I served the Speaker's warrants and notifications of time, and so on.

36,669. Had you anything to do with the preparation of the briefs, copying out the proofs, or anything of that kind?—No, I think not.

36,670. (Mr. Anstey.) You said just now you did?—I copied some lists of names which I believe were for the briefs and were to be copied again, but no evidence.

36,671. (Mr. Price.) Did you draft any evidence, or if not draft, did you brief any evidence? brief it or draft it?—I might possibly have copied evidence, but I do not recollect it.

36,672. (Mr. Anstey.) You said just now that you copied briefs?—No, I said I copied some lists of names.

36,673. Yes, before that you said you were employed in writing out briefs. You know what a brief is?—Of course I do.

36,674. Do you mean to say that you never put pen to write in fair manuscript the part of the brief which is called "the stating part," the statement of the case?—I think the only part of the brief, if I copied any at all. I remember copying some lists of names whilst in the office on draft paper, not on brief paper. Whether those lists of names were used in the brief or not I do not know.

36,675. Do you mean that you never saw, or if you saw that you never copied any part of the "case" as it is called which is found in a brief?—I say I copied some lists of names; I do not remember whether I copied evidence.

36,676. You know perfectly well that names of witnesses or proofs of witnesses are one thing, and you know perfectly well, or else you know nothing of the practice of your profession that the "case" itself is another thing. I am asking you about the "case," and you are talking of proofs. Yes or no, did you copy, either on draft paper or brief paper or any other paper, any portion of that part of the brief that is called "the case"?—I do not recollect doing so, in fact I believe I did not. That is my opinion.

36,677. Then did you copy any portion of that part of the brief which is called the "proofs"?—I believe not. I would not undertake to swear that I did not.

36,678. They pray what did you copy?—Mr. Bealy Smith brought to me in the room I was sitting in lists of names, I believe of men residing in Bridgwater, and asked me to make a list similar to those, which I did.

36,679. What from?—From the copy he gave me.

36,680. Then the first statement you made to-day, which you volunteered when you were asked "Had you anything to do with the petition?" was, "I copied some briefs"?—I do not recollect saying that.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then we will have it read. (The portion of the evidence referred to was read by the shorthand writer from the notes.)

36,681. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you did say so, afterwards you cut it down to copying lists of names?—Fair copies of the names. They were on draft paper. I certainly never made any fair copies of the briefs or any part of them.

36,682. Do you mean to say you never read the briefs?—I did not say that. I believe I examined the briefs.

36,683. Then you must add that to what you did. You examined the briefs with the drafts, the fair copies of briefs will be drafts?—I believe I did. I do not even know where those copies of the brief were made, whether they were made in the office or not.

36,684. Then you corrected the briefs from the drafts?—I think I did. I think I examined some parts of the briefs with the drafts.

36,685. Was that all you did in the petition?—I served Speaker's warrants and notifications of time whilst the petition was going on, many of them, nearly all of them.

36,686. Do you remember any of the statements that were made in the briefs that would throw light on what was done at that election?—I do not remember a single statement.

36,687. Not a single word?—Not a single word.

36,688. Do you remember it being admitted in the brief that there was no getting over the cases of Cooze and Staples?—No, I do not.

36,689. Do you remember a statement of this kind, "There is no doubt that bribery to a very considerable extent was practised on our side"?—I do not recollect. I had not been long then in a solicitor's office, and I should not have taken notice.

36,690. Not of such statements as that?—If I did at the time I certainly do not recollect it now.

36,691. (Mr. Price.) What age were you then?—Eighteen.

39,692. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you see those briefs last?

36,693. (Mr. Price.) Were they still in the office when you left?—I am sure I could not tell. I saw them about the time of the petition, but never afterwards to my knowledge.

36,694. (Mr. Anstey.) What petition?—The petition against Mr. Westropp.

36,695. Do you mean to say you have never seen those briefs since 1866?—No, I do not think I have.

36,696. Were you in the office when the business was sold before Bealy Smith's sudden departure to Australia?—No, I do not think my articles had been assigned, but I was not here. I was at home at the time.

36,697. (Mr. Price.) You never heard anything about him?—No, except what I have seen in the papers. I know nothing at all about it.

36,698. (Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence that Mrs. Smith was in the habit of coming to the office and looking over the papers. Was she in the habit of coming to the office and looking over the papers at the time when Richard Smith and Bealy Smith were carrying on business together?—No.

36,699. Then when she came to examine the papers it must have been after your departure?—Yes, but I could explain to you. Mrs. Smith did come to the office while it was the firm of Smith and Son, while Mr. Richard Smith and Mr. Bealy Smith were away ill. She did come and see one of the clerks and state that her husband was ill and made some arrangements about Mr. Boys coming down to manage the business.

36,700. Did she do anything about papers?—Not to my knowledge.

36,701. Therefore if she did anything about papers at a subsequent period, it was something new and unknown in your time?—Yes.

36,702. (Mr. Price.) Now in 1866 what part did you take in Mr. Patton's first election? Had you anything to do with the conveyance of money in any way?—Yes.

36,703. Tell us what it was?—I conveyed some money from the "Clarence" hotel to Barratt, I think, the witness Barratt.

36,704. What time of the day was that?—It was in the afternoon.

36,705. Were you present at the "Clarence"? It may throw some light upon it. Were you present at the "Clarence" hotel when Mr. Westropp was there, and when any note was brought to your employer Mr. Smith? Do you know Robert Bussell?—Yes, I know him.

36,706. Did you see Robert Bussell at all that day at the "Clarence" hotel with any note which he brought to Mr. Westropp?—I do not recollect seeing Robert Bussell at the "Clarence" at any particular time. I think I saw him about in the election at different times during the day.

36,707. Now tell us about this money you had to take. How do you know about how that money was procured, or where it came from?—It was collected, I believe, from different Conservatives about the town.

36,708. And in the room?—I do not know whether any in the room, but I think it was all brought to the "Clarence."

36,709. Did you hear any conversation take place before you went with this money between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Smith, or anybody else, in which he said anything about being guaranteed, though he could not draw a cheque himself?—No.

36,710. Did anything of that kind take place to your recollection?—I remember saying to Mr. Smith myself that we ought to get enough money. I heard it said by some one that 300*l.* was wanted to win the election, and I said to Mr. Smith they ought to get enough for that. Mr. Smith said, "Oh, my dear "fellow, I cannot get it." I said, "Well, but I "should think we could get enough out of the bank "for it," and he said, "I could not draw a cheque for "it myself," or something of that sort.

36,711. That was Mr. Smith?—Mr. Bealy Smith.

36,712. You did not hear Mr. Westropp say, "I cannot draw, but I will guarantee"?—No.

36,713. Was Mr. Westropp present when you had this conversation with Mr. Smith?—I think not. I think I and Mr. Smith were walking along the passage of the "Clarence."

36,714. How were you told to get this money?—I did not get it.

36,715. But you took it there?—Yes; I took it from Mr. Westropp.

36,716. It had been brought to the "Clarence"?—Yes, it had been brought to the "Clarence" by some tradesman of the town who had given the money towards the election, or lent it.

36,717. Then Mr. Westropp gave it to you?—Mr. Westropp, and I counted it, and he gave it to me.

36,718. How much?—Whether it was 300*l.* or 400*l.* I cannot say.

36,719. Then you counted it with Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

36,720. And took it down?—I took it down and met Mr. Smith. I do not know how I came, but I was told that I should meet him in the passage by the side of the churchyard. I had this money in the bag, and I gave it to him.

36,721. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were Mr. Tromp's assistants lodging with you at that time?—They were not lodging with me at any time.

36,722. One was in the same house?—No, I think not. I think he lodged there one or two nights, but I cannot tell which election. Twice he stayed there. I took one or two notes from him to Mr. Smith. What the notes contained I do not know.

36,723. Is that all the part you took at that election?—Yes, I think it is.

36,724. Are you sure?—I do not recollect taking anything except these notes.

36,725. Can you tell us at all at that election from what you know in the office in any way, what amount of money Mr. Smith got himself?—No, I never knew at all what Mr. Smith had.

36,726. You have no idea?—Not the slightest.

36,727. Were you at all intimate with Mr. Bealy Smith?—Yes, intimate, he being the junior partner of the firm.

36,728. (Mr. Price.) He was about the same age as you were?—No, older. He was admitted before I was articled.

36,729. Mr. Coleridge.) Have you heard from since he has been away?—No; we were never very friendly.

36,730. (Mr. Anstey.) Where did Mr. Bealy Smith bank?—At Stuckey's, I think, the firm's account and the private account as well.

36,731. But Mr. Bealy Smith?—At Stuckey's; if he had a private account it would be at Stuckey's.

36,732. Can you tell us anything about the next election of 1866?—Vanderbyl's election?

36,733. Yes?—I did much the same thing, being a messenger with these notes for Mr. Smith.

36,734. (Mr. Coleridge.) Anything about money at that election?—No; I think I had nothing to do with money on that occasion.

36,735. (Mr. Price.) Before the next election you had gone?—Yes, I took the notes to Mr. Tromp for Mr. Smith, but had nothing to do with money at all.

36,736. Is there anything else you have to tell us that will throw light on the matter?—I believe not.

36,737. Or any evidence at all to give us with regard to any money Mr. Bealy Smith got for himself?—I never knew that he got any. I suppose he would be paid for his work, but I do not know the fact.

36,738. Did you hear of his writing to Mr. Patton from time to time?—No.

36,739. None of that correspondence passed through your hands?—No, certainly not.

36,740. Did he and his father seem to manage, so far as you could judge, the whole affairs of the party?—Mr. Smith, senior, did not seem to have much to do with it whilst I was in the office.

36,741. Did Mr. Bealy Smith seem to have the management?—Yes, principally.

36,742. Managed the whole thing?—Yes. I always had an idea that he did the whole thing in connexion with the other solicitors. I never knew until I saw the evidence here. I have seen them consulting about it.

36,743. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you never hear that it was not until there had been a positive row or quarrel that Mr. Bealy Smith was allowed to have anything to do with it at all?—I never head that.

36,744. Do you not know that Mr. Westropp, your firm's client, gave evidence to that effect before the House of Commons?—I read his evidence at the time, but I cannot remember now. I have not read it recently.

36,745. Now consider what you have just been saying. Do you mean, from the imperfect recollection you must have as an articled clerk, to contradict the positive testimony of honourable men like the Trevors, or Mr. Brice, or Mr. Poole, and the others, who state distinctly that they had nothing to do with Mr. Bealy Smith and his works?—I am not attempting to do so.

36,746. You say you always understood they had? From the impression of seeing them talking together at the election, nothing besides. I have seen solicitors and all of the same politics talking together.

36,747. (Mr. Price.) You have seen them, so far as the public are concerned, apparently acting together?—Certainly.

36,748. But you never saw them come to Mr. Smith's for consultation or anything of that kind?—I would not say I have not. I do not recollect distinct times.

36,749. Mr. Veysey you saw perhaps in close and intimate consultation?—No, rather the other way.

36,750. What?—I have not. I think Mr. Smith rather avoided him. I do not think Mr. Smith and Mr. Veysey were very friendly at the time.

36,751. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Bealy Smith ever insane whilst you were in the office?—Well, it was said he was insane. He was very ill; he went away ill.

36,752. Was Mr. Bealy Smith ever insane at the time you were at the office?—I cannot tell whether it was insanity, or what was the matter with him. I knew he went away from the office. I am not in a position to say it was insanity. It was always said he was insane. Whilst conducting the business I did not see anything which permitted the belief that he was insane. He was a member of the firm some time afterwards.

36,753. What was the date of the attack of paralysis from which we have been informed Mr. Richard Smith continues to suffer; was not it in the middle of the preparations of the inquiry before the House of Commons committee in 1866?—It was about the time there was some political excitement in the town, but I cannot tell whether it was during the time of the petition.

36,754. It must be after the election, we know; had the petition been then disposed of, or was it being tried before the committee at the time when he got the alleged attack of paralysis?—I do not think the petition had come on before the committee of the House of Commons.

36,755. At all events it had been presented?—It had been presented, I believe.

36,756. And the evidence got up before he was stricken?—I do not know whether it was got up or not; it was during the time the petition had been presented, I believe; I know it had, in fact.

36,757. Do you know of his expressing his anxiety about the probable consequence to him, Mr. Smith, and the other getters up of the evidence on that occasion?—No, I think Mr. Bealy Smith got up the evidence more than the other.

36,758. The other did not?—I fancy Mr. Bealy Smith principally.

36,759. But they were both in for it, were not they?—Well, Mr. Bealy Smith had the management

36,760. He afterwards showed signs of distressed mind?—Yes.

36,761. How soon after the result of the trial before the committee of the House of Commons?—It was not until after Mr. Patton's second election.

36,762. And did you hear anything of his writing that letter in the name of the heads of the Conservative party here, for the purpose of screwing money from Mr. Patton under false pretences?—I never heard anything but what I saw in evidence here.

36,763. But it was that period that he betrayed signs of perturbed mind, which you said was generally understood to mean insanity?—Yes, it was after Mr. Patton's election.

Mr. W. Guernsey.

Mr. Wellington Guernsey sworn.

36,764. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—At present I am in no occupation.

36,765. In 1865, were you concerned with Mr. Edwards?—I was.

36,766. Who, at one time in 1865, had an idea of being candidate for Barnstaple?—He was a candidate for Barnstaple.

36,767. Were you an intimate friend of his?—I was.

36,768. For some time?—For some time.

36,769. By his instructions did you come here to Bridgwater?—I did come down, after seeing Mr. Spofforth.

36,770. In London?—Yes.

36,771. How long before the election of 1865 had you seen Mr. Spofforth?—I never saw him until the election of 1865.

36,772. How long before the eleetion did you see him?—About a month. I will give you the reason of my seeing him. Mr. Frank Edwards went down to Barnstaple and wanted to be returned member there, and Mr. Spofforth interfered. Mr. Howell Gwynne and Mr. Stuckley wrote up to Mr. Spofforth what a pity it was to divide the Conservative interest there; in fact Mr. Spofforth said if Mr. Edwards would resign he would pay all his expenses down there, and find a borough for him, and recommended him to come to this borough, and Mr. Edwards came here and I came here.

36,773. How long before the election did you come here?—A very short time, about a fortnight.

36,774. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you go to Barnstaple?—I was at Barnstaple a month or six weeks.

36,775. (Mr. Price.) And then you came on here?—Yes.

36,776. Where did you stop with him?—At the "Clarence."

36,777. You were here a fortnight before Mr. Edwards came?—No, I was here about a fortnight before the election. Mr. Edwards came here and went away again; he was to come back, but did not return.

36,778. Did he leave you here?—He did.

36,779. Did you come with him?—No, I came by myself, at his request.

36,780. How long before the election did you take up your abode here?—About a fortnight.

36,781. Were you alone when you first came here?—Yes.

36,782. Where did you take up your abode?—At the "Clarence."

36,783. Tell us what you came here for?—Mr. Spofforth gave me a letter, and gave Mr. Edwards a letter, to see Mr. Smith. I saw Mr. Smith and his son, and had several interviews with them; I saw Mr. Westropp at the "Clarence," and Mr. Westropp told me that Mr. Edwards would have to find 1,200*l.* Mr. Smith said he would have to find 2,000*l.*, from that to 2,500*l.*

36,784. Who said so?—Mr. Smith, the solicitor. I sent word to Mr. Edwards, and he came up here, and he went away intending to return the following week, but did not come, and he would not stand any more. I wrote a letter to him telling him the circumstances.

36,785. What other conversation did you have with Mr. Westropp?—Mr. Westropp told me that it was a moral certainty of his being returned if the 1,200*l.* was found.

36,786. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did Mr. Edwards go away and not return?—Well, his friends advised him, and I advised him not to.

36,787. You thought he had not a good chance?—I am certain he had not a good chance, from the state of affairs.

36,788. (Mr. Price.) Did anything more pass between you and Mr. Westropp?—No; they made a demand on Mr. Edwards for some money for the expenses incurred.

36,789. Who did?—Mr. Smith.

36,790. I am asking you about Mr. Westropp. You have made very serious charges—if you will not understand I will tell you—very serious charges against Mr. Westropp, which he entirely denies. Are you prepared to support them?—I swear I made no charge against Westropp.

36,791. Yes, you did, of this kind: That he discussed with you deliberately, in the presence of Mr. Smith, the price that was to be paid for voters?—No.

36,792. You did say so?—At the "Clarence" hotel——

36,793. Did you never make that statement?—I certainly did, and I make it again, and I am prepared to swear it, that the election was sure if 1,200*l.* was found.

36,794. You made a deliberate statement that you discussed the price to be paid for voters?—No, I did not; he said 1,200*l.* was to be found; that is what I stated.

36,795. You tell one thing on which you are brought down here; when Mr. Westropp is examined he denies it, and you come and do not support the thing?—I never had any interest; I never had a shilling in it.

36,796. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your story; let us hear it?—I met Mr. Westropp at the hotel and had a conversation with him, after seeing Mr. Smith. He told me that if 1,200*l.* was found there was no doubt in the world of Mr. Edwards being returned member of parliament for this town.

36,797. Did he say what was to be done with the 1,200*l.*?—Yes, he said there were a certain lot of voters here who had to be bribed.

36,798. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Edwards pay anything here?—No.

36,799. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long had you known Mr. Edwards before you went to Barnstaple with him?—He was solicitor for me. I had known him before for five years before that.

36,800. He had acted as your solicitor?—He had done law business for me.

36,801. How came you to be mixed up in electioneering matters with him?—Mr. Edwards asked me if I knew any borough he would be likely to be returned for, he said he would like to be returned and was anxious to get into Parliament, and asked me to make inquiries.

36,802. Who sent you to Barnstaple?—One or two people there in the town.

36,803. Had you any connexion with Barnstaple?—None whatever.

36,804. How came you to get hold of Barnstaple, that was not Mr. Spofforth?—No.

36,805. How came you to go there?—Mr. Edwards asked me to go down there. I was never at Barnstaple before.

36,806. (Mr. Price.) What was your connexion with Mr. Edwards?—As a friend.

36,807. Are you a client of his?—No, not now.

36,808. You call yourself a major?—I have been.

36,809. What in?—The army.

36,810. The Queen's service?—I served in the Crimean campaign.

36,811. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you go down merely as a friend, or as a paid agent of Mr. Edwards?—As a friend; I never had a shilling.

36,812. Do you mean you spent six weeks, and never got anything?—I got nothing for it.

36,813. It was out of your own pocket?—No.

36,814. Then who paid it?—Mr. Edwards paid a portion of it. When he came down he paid the hotel bill, and that is all he paid; while I was there I paid my own hotel bill.

36,815. (Mr. Anstey.) What did Mr. Westropp say when that remark was made about 1,200*l.* being wanted to secure a certain class of voters?—He told me distinctly there was a lot of voters in this town who would not vote without being paid.

36,816. It was Mr. Westropp who said so?—Yes, and Mr. Smith told me the same.

36,817. Did you hear Mr. Westropp say whether he did or did not mean himself to secure those voters?—No, he did not; he said he was in the hands of Mr. Smith, the solicitor, and I brought a letter down from Mr. Spofforth to Mr. Smith, and that is how I became acquainted with him. I saw Mr. Spofforth twice in London.

36,818. What did he say to you?—He told me that it was a pity that Mr. Edwards should divide the Conservative interest at Barnstaple, and he would find a borough for him, and said, "If you go to Bridgwater," he would give me a letter, and give Mr. Edwards a letter, to Mr. Smith. Accordingly I come on.

36,819. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you read the letter which he wrote to Mr. Smith?—I did not.

36,820. It was not open?—No.

36,821. Do you recollect what was on the outside of it, was it "Favoured by Major Wellington Guernsey," or anything of that kind?—I cannot recollect now.

36,822. Did you give your name to Mr. Spofforth?—No, I did not.

36,823. What name did you give him?—I said I was the friend of Mr. Edwards.

36,824. What was the letter to do, to introduce you or Mr. Edwards?—To introduce Mr. Edwards.

36,825. Your name was not known to Mr. Spofforth?—No. Mr. Edwards had just at that time got into the Carlton Club, I think.

36,826. Listen to this. I will read it. Are you quite sure that the name of Edwards was mentioned to Mr. Spofforth?—I am quite sure.

36,827. In connexion with Bridgwater?—Certainly.

36,828. Now this is Mr. Spofforth's evidence. Mr. Anstey asks, "Do you know the name of Mr. Wel- "lington Guernsey?—A. I do not. Q. Or the name "of Edwards?—A. I never heard of it." Then, amending that answer, he says, "Edwards is a com- "mon name." On which Mr. Coleridge asks, "Mr. "Francis Edwards, of Delahay Street?—A. I have "seen him." Mr. Coleridge asks again, "He came "down here once for a day?—A. Yes." Do you think that those answers of Mr. Spofforth to the questions put, fully disclose the nature of the connexion between Mr. Spofforth and Mr. Edwards?—I cannot say.

36,829. You know what you recollect yourself?—I know I saw Mr. Spofforth certainly twice, and I recollect very well his asking me what Mr. Edwards it was, and I told him distinctly of Eaton Place, and of 8, Delahay Street, and of Slough, near Windsor.

36,830. Surely you can answer my question?—What is that?

36,831. If your recollection is so lively about what occurred between Mr. Spofforth and you, whether those answers to the questions put to Mr. Spofforth fully disclose the nature of the connexion between Mr. Spofforth and Mr. Edwards?—There is no answer to it at all.

36,832. Do they sufficiently disclose?—Certainly not.

36,833. Then the Chief Commissioner follows them up with this question immediately following Mr. Coleridge's, "There is no sort of information you can "give?—A. If anything more occurs to me I shall "be most happy to appear before you in London." I infer from those answers that he had never seen you, or at all events that he had nothing to do with Mr. Edwards coming down here for the day?—I swear I saw him twice on the subject.

36,834. And he gave you a letter?—Certainly; which I brought to Mr. Smith.

36,835. He gave a letter of introduction of Mr. Edwards to Mr. Smith, and made you the bearer of it?—Yes.

36,836. Telling you at the same time that it was a letter of introduction?—Yes.

36,837. Did he?—He did, and he has written since to Mr. Edwards, and stated whatever expenses, at the time I should say, had been incurred at Barnstaple by Mr. Edwards, he would undertake to see they were paid, and they have been paid since.

36,838. (Mr. Price.) Have you seen that letter?—I have seen it, and Mr. Edwards mentioned it to me two or three times.

36,839. Have you seen the letter yourself?—I have.

36,840. In Mr. Spofforth's handwriting?—I could not swear to his handwriting.

36,841. Signed by Mr. Spofforth?—Signed by Mr. Spofforth.

36,842. When?—Some years ago.

36,843. (Mr. Anstey.) At the time?—Yes.

36,844. (Mr. Price.) I should like to know something more about your history, if you will forgive me. Tell me whether you know that handwriting (handing a letter to the witness). You need not read it?—I do not.

35,845. The signature I wanted you to look at (handing it to the witness again)?—I do not.

35,846. What?—I cannot say.

36,847. Look at the number of W's and Ll's, and things in it, are there not?—There may be, but I do not know.

36,848. Who is there you know who would be so wonderfully acquainted with your affairs, who would pretend to write from the Reform Club, to say you were in the whole secret of the Bridgwater election?—I cannot say I am sure.

36,849. Have you any friend at the Reform Club who would interest himself so much about you?—I certainly know two or three members of it, but not more.

36,850. Who would know you could give us the whole history? You are Major Wellington Guernsey?—I know no history but what I have told you.

36,851. And you were the private agent of Mr. Edwards?—So far as that I was.

35,852. What do you mean by it, friend or paid agent?—I was not the paid agent.

36,853. What do you mean by calling yourself agent?—I do not know I am sure, I went down as his friend to Bridgwater with him.

36,854. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there anybody else with him?—Yes.

36,855. How long have you been his friend?—Eight or ten years, I think.

36,856. Who else was with him?—There was a Mr. Reed.

36,857. Who is he?—He was a paid agent, I think.

36,858. Who is he?—A Barnstaple man, an attorney I think.

36,859. Did he come on here?—No.

36,860. Anybody else?—No.

36,861. Nobody?—Nobody.

36,862. Nobody came on here with him?—Nobody came on here with him but me.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. W. Guernsey.

6 Oct. 1869.

36,863. Nobody ?—Nobody.

36,864. We have been told that his daughter came ?—Oh yes, his daughter, certainly, his daughter came.

36,865. (Mr. Price.) Who is the man who interests himself so much about you as to get you a journey to Bridgwater ?—At a great deal of pains I came here, I had no idea of coming.

36,866. He said you can tell us, and you have told us ; and you have told us very little at present ?—I have told you all I know about the affair.

36,867. This man tells us, and he must have got it from you, that you can disclose more of the villany of Bridgwater elections than any other man, but you have not disclosed any great amount yet.

36,868. (Mr. Coleridge.) And we have heard a great deal disclosed ?—I know nothing at all.

36,869. (Mr. Price.) There is a gentlemen writes to us, and if you take the trouble to look at your own signature, which I will ask you to do, it strikes me that there is a very considerable similarity between them (handing two letters to the witness)?—Yes, that is my writing.

36,870. Look again. There are a great number of "Ll's" in that mysterious signature, which it is impossible to decipher, but the letter is from the Reform Club ?—I swear distinctly this is my writing, and that not. I do not know anything about it. I did not want to come down.

36,871. It is a strange thing that a gentleman should write who will not give his real name, and who seems to be so much in your confidence to say if we could only get hold of you you can disclose more of the villany of Bridgwater than any other man ?—I do not know anything about it. I was just telling you what occurred between Mr. Edwards and myself, and I know nothing more.

36,872. You tried to claim acquaintance with Mr. Westropp, did not you ?—No, I did not.

36,873. As having known him somewhere ?—In Ireland.

36,874. (Mr. Anstey.) Been at school with him ?—I daresay at the time I might.

36,875. Where was that ?—At Cork.

36,876. Are you an Irishman ?—I am.

36,877. Were you staying at the "Clarence" for a whole fortnight ?—I stopped there.

36,878. Answer the question ; were you staying at the "Clarence" for a fortnight ?—Not for a fortnight, I do not think it was a fortnight ; certainly not.

36,879. You said a fortnight ?—Before the election I said.

36,880. How long ?—Several days I was here, and I stopped at the "Clarence" during the time I was in the town.

36,881. Did you make a statement to our clerk in London who served the subpœna upon you, that you stayed a fortnight at the "Clarence"—No, I did not ; certainly not a fortnight.

36,882. Be careful, for he has been sworn ?—I might have said so. All I say is while in Bridgwater I stayed at the "Clarence."

36,883. Did you state to the person who served the summons on you that you stayed at the "Clarence" at Bridgwater for a fortnight ?—I have no recollection.

36,884. Did you stay there a fortnight ?—I do not think I did.

36,885. How long did you stay there ?—I stopped several days there, certainly not a fortnight.

36,886. (Mr. Anstey.) You were a fortnight in Bridgwater altogether ?—No I was not.

36,887. I thought you said you were ?—A fortnight before the election.

36,888. (Mr. Price.) It is not true you said you were in Bridgwater a fortnight and stayed at the "Clarence" ?—Certainly not. I stopped at the "Clarence" for the several days I was here, but certainly I was not a fortnight here.

36,889. Who paid the bill at the "Clarence" ?—I paid the bill myself.

36,890. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Edwards repay you ?—He has not.

36,891. Did he promise you ?—He said that any money I was out of pocket, but I never made an application for it.

36,892. (Mr. Price.) What do you do going about touting at elections, what do you get by it ?—I got nothing.

36,893. What were you to get, how do you gain your livelihood at present ?—I am living on my private means.

36,894. Your half-pay ?—No, I have not half-pay.

36,895. Not half-pay ?—No, I sold it.

36,896. Then have you private means enough allow you to go about staying at hotels like the "Clarence," and making inquiries ?—But for a friend I do anything.

36,897. You represent yourself as a sufficient friend of Mr. Edwards to do all this ?—No, he asked me ; he said he should feel very much obliged if I would. I am sure he would not ask me to be money out of my pocket.

36,898. But you have a bill at the "Clarence" ?—Yes, I have.

36,899. This was in 1865, and now it is 1869, and Mr. Edwards has let you be out of pocket all that time ?—He has, and I swear distinctly now that he owes me the money.

36,900. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you last see him ?—I have not seen him for the last 12 months.

36,902. Besides the bill at the "Clarence"?—Besides the bill at the "Clarence."

36,903. And besides what you paid at Barnstaple ?—And besides what I paid at Barnstaple.

36,904. And your travelling expenses to and fro ?—And my travelling expenses to and fro.

36,905. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you anything to do with getting up public companies, with promoting companies ?—Yes, I have.

36,906. (Mr. Price.) What companies have you promoted, may I ask ?—The Mercantile.

36,907. (Mr. Coleridge.) The Imperial Mercantile Credit ?—Yes.

36,908. And the Credit Foncier ?—No.

36,909. (Mr. Price.) What are you of the Imperial Mercantile ? a director ?—Nothing in the world.

36,910. City Offices ?—No, but there is another.

36,911. The Humber Iron ?—No, not the Humber Iron.

36,912. The Viskonsky ?—Yes, that is a Russian company.

36,913. Give the name of any solvent company with which you are concerned ?—I am concerned with none of them.

36,914. Give the name of any solvent company of which you are a promoter, and have taken any part in getting up ?—I have only one or two.

36,915. (Mr. Coleridge.) The Contract Corporation ?—The Contract Corporation.

36,916. But that has gone to smash, the Mercantile Credit has gone to smash, the Credit Foncier has gone to smash, the Humber Iron Company has gone to smash, and the Viskonsky has gone to smash.

36,917. (Mr. Price.) I want a solvent company which you had anything to do with the promotion of.

36,918. (Mr. Coleridge.) The Millwall Docks ?—No, nothing to do with those two companies.

36,919. (Mr. Price.) They are both gone ?—Both gone. It cost me money. I had to pay severely for it.

36,920. I must put it to you again : you made these statements on the faith of which you were brought down here, that you were confidential friend to Mr. Edwards, that you were present in the room of the "Clarence" hotel with Mr. Westropp and Mr. Smith when the bargain took place between Mr. Westropp, Mr. Guernsey, and Mr. Smith as to the price to be given for votes, and were at Bridgwater a fortnight, and stayed at the "Clarence," and you also said that the man at Baxter, Rose, and Norton's knew all about it, and was the real man behind the scenes, and that Bridgwater was the most corrupt, venal, and blackguard place you ever set your foot in?—I have had nothing to do with it. I was never at Bridgwater.

36,921. Now what do you know of Bridgwater to enable you to say that?—I do not say so.

36,922. Is that a correct version of what you stated in London to the person who served you with the summons?—I only go——

36,923. Is that the correct version?—I read the journals, and form my opinion on that.

36,924. Is that a correct version?—It was from what I read in the papers.

36,925. Now what part of that is true according to your evidence to-day?—My evidence—I am just giving what I read in the public journals.

36,926. (Mr. Coleridge.) We did not want you down here to do that. Your friend writes to say that you can give us most important evidence?—Who my friend is I do not know, and I do not know anything about it.

36,927. Do you know anything more about the Bridgwater election?—I know nothing more than I have stated.

Mr. William Hodges sworn.

Mr. W. Hodges.

36,928. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—The manager of the "Railway" hotel for my mother.

36,929. Now I will draw your attention to the day of the polling at the last election. Were you at your hotel on that afternoon at any time from half-past 12 to 2?—I was.

36,930. Do you remember Dr. Kinglake, Mr. Kinglake, and Mr. Bate, coming to your hotel?—I do.

36,931. What time was it when they came?—I should think it was about one, or perhaps five minutes after.

36,932. Where did they go?—They went to Mr. Kinglake's private room.

36,933. (Mr. Anstey.) The two Kinglakes?—And Mr. Bate.

36,934. (Mr. Price.) How long were they there?—Perhaps some five or ten minutes, and Mr. Kinglake retired to his bedroom to get his things packed, as he was going up by the express.

36,935. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Bate remain?—He remained.

36,936. Are you sure that he did not leave them both, he says he did?—If he did, he must have returned again after the train left.

36,937. I will read his evidence. He says he left them, and not that they him, in a private room, and did not see them again?—He was in the private room with them, but I am not quite sure whether he remained the whole time or not.

36,938. At all events the two Kinglakes remained about five minutes?—Ten minutes, and Mr. Alexander William Kinglake went to his bedroom to get his things packed.

36,939. Did you see where they went to?—They stayed talking to several of their supporters.

36,940. Who were they?—There was Bunter, a plumber, and I think Gold, and Dyer, and Alway, and several men who were going to Taunton, who had given up the election as a hopeless case, and were going to Taunton. They stood in front of the house as Mr. Kinglake and his brother were going up to the station.

36,941. Did you see where they went?—They went to the station.

36,942. They went in?—They went in on the platform, and I saw Mr. Kinglake in the train.

36,943. But Dr. Kinglake?—I did not see Dr. Kinglake in the up express, but he went by the down express.

36,944. Did you see after he left your house he went to the station?—I saw him in the down train; he went to Taunton.

36,945. That was half an hour afterwards?—No, a few minutes apart.

36,946. Is not it?—They were both in on that occasion, within five minutes of each other.

36,947. Did you see him in the carriage?—I saw Dr. Kinglake in the down express train, and saw the late member of parliament in the up express.

36,948. You have timed this about one when they got there, and they spent ten minutes at the hotel?—They spent more than that, because Mr. Kinglake remained about ten minutes in his private sitting room, and then went with the servant to the bedroom to have his things packed, they were packed and the servant came down. In point of fact the servant was not in the way when he arrived. I had to go to look after his servant, and tell him he was going by that train.

36,949. Did Dr. Kinglake leave the hotel before his brother?—They both went out together, to see him off by the up express.

36,950. In the meantime, had he left to come back again?—No, he had not.

36,951. Are you sure of that?—Quite sure. The only time his brother left him was to go to his bedroom to see about his luggage being packed with his servant, because there was not sufficient time. It was about five minutes past one, I believe, when they arrived in a fly. I paid the fly driver. Mr. Kinglake desired me to do so.

36,952. They stayed there five or ten minutes you say?—In the sitting room.

36,953. Then the up train starts?—Thirty-two minutes past one.

36,954. Then there is a difference between that and the down train. Was not there ample time for Dr. Kinglake to have taken a fly after leaving your hotel to drive down to Sealy's bank, or not?—Certainly not, because the fly left empty. I saw it start.

36,955. Was there ample time for it, supposing there was a fly there?—But there was not one there.

36,956. How do you know that?—I know very well there are no flys kept there except they are kept at the hotel, only you have to harness the horse and get it out, which would take some few minutes to do.

Jonas Bottomley recalled.

J. Bottomley.

(Mr. Price.) You have been detained here some time because your answers were so unsatisfactory before. We hope therefore to day that you will be able to give us clearer information than you did the other day, if not, you will have to stay here a little longer. Now give us your account yourself.

36,957–8. (Mr. Anstey.) You broke down on two occasions, where your memory absolutely failed you. You were sent for to Tiverton to vote for the election of a member of this borough?—Yes.

36,959. Did two different persons come on those two occasions to you?—Four different persons.

36,960. Give us their names?—The first was Dymond, I believe.

36,961. You have remembered him at last?—Yes, I did not remember him in Bridgwater.

36,962. Now the others. (The witness hesitated.) If you cannot, we will call another witness, and you can stay till this day week?—Dymond, Harden, Thomas Walkem, and Edgar Haviland.

36,963. You got 10*l.* on each occasion, did not you?

36,964. (Mr. Price.) Are you going to answer, did

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

6 Oct. 1869.

J. Bottomley.

you get 10*l.* on each occasion?—I got 10*l.* for voting.

36,965. Did you get 10*l.* for each occasion?—I only voted once in Bridgwater.

36,966. But how many 10*l.* did you get?—One 10*l.*

36,967. And no more; you mean to swear that?—I will swear that.

36,968. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you came up a second time, all those four men did not fetch you for one election?—Those were the men that waited upon me to come to vote.

(Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps you will remember it at this time to-morrow.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

36,969. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you know about this?—It was at Mr. Vanderbyl's first election. I saw Bottomley, it was about two in the day. He came to me here, and would not poll until he was paid. He wanted 30*l.* for his vote. I told him we had won the election, and I should not give him it, but if he voted I would give him 10*l.*, and he voted, and I gave him 10*l.*

36,970. (Mr Anstey.) How often has he been sent for at Tiverton; how many elections?—I do not know.

Mr. E. Haviland.

Mr. EDGAR HAVILAND recalled.

36,971. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you know about this man?—I went down for him on the nomination day at Mr. Vanderbyl's first election, and I stayed there the whole night, and I brought him by the half-past two on the polling day, and as I said before, Mr. William Hurman met me at the station, and I left Bottomley with Hurman; they went up in the omnibus, and I walked by myself.

36,972-3. During that time, did you make any bargain with him or promise him?—Not the slightest.

36,974. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he not say something to you, that he thought bribery very wrong, but that a person ought to be paid handsomely for his expenses?—Not a word. I think you will find he said that to Dymont the previous election of Bagehot.

36,975. He says he did not vote?—Yes, he did, because I have looked at the poll since. The only one he did not vote at was Shelley's.

36,976. Has he had money either time?—I have heard so.

36,977. (Mr. Anstey.) On this occasion do you know whether he got the money from anybody?—The last one?

36,978. The one you are speaking of?—Where I fetched him?

36,979. Yes?—I only heard so afterwards.

36,980. Whom did you hear he had got it from?—I heard he had had it at Allan's.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

36,981. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the election you are speaking of?—Yes, the same election.

J. Bottomley.

JONAS BOTTOMLEY recalled.

36,982. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often have you voted altogether?—Once in Bridgwater.

36,983. Will you swear it was not twice?—Not twice.

36,984. If your name appears as voting in the poll book it is false, is it?—I have only voted once to my recollection.

36,985. Before Mr. Vanderbyl's election, when Bagehot and Patton stood, did not Dymont bring you up from Tiverton, and did you not have a conversation to the effect that you thought bribery atrocious, or something of that sort, but people ought to be paid their expenses, and did you not get 2*l.* 10*s.* afterwards?—I did not get a farthing.

36,986. (Mr. Price.) Did he not offer you 2*l.* 10*s.*?—He did not offer me 2*l.* 10*s.*

36,987. Did you vote at that election?—No.

36,988. Not at all?—I do not remember voting at all.

36,989. Do not talk about not remembering. Will you swear you did not?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Have you the poll book?

(H. C. Bussell.) Bottomley voted at that election.

36,990. (Mr. Price.) I am sorry you interposed, because this man is a schoolmaster, and talks about not recollecting. I am sorry that you spoke, you stopped his deliberate perjury. Did you vote, or not?—I do not remember voting.

36,991. Will you swear you did not? and take care what you are about.—I did not vote; I have not the slightest recollection that I voted.

36,992. Will you swear you did not vote? Yes or no. We are not going to be kept here all day. You will swear you did not vote at that election?—I will swear I did not vote.

36,993. Now you stand by that?—I do not remember at all.

36,994. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have sworn you did not vote; you have sworn it. Do you swear that you did not vote at Bagehot's election?—I will swear I did not.

36,995. (Mr. Price.) Now you stand by that.

H. C. Bussell.

H. C. BUSSELL recalled.

36,996. (Mr. Coleridge.) What do you know about this? Be careful; it is Bagehot's election at that time?—Yes, I do not know that Bottomley voted, but I know he came back to our house after. I suppose he had been to poll, and there was a squabble between him and Dymont about his expenses; he would not take the 2*l.*

36,997. What did he ask?—I got into the room where he was, and I heard that Dymont was offering him 2*l.*, and he said he would not take it.

36,998. His expenses being about 2*s.*?—About 5*s.* or 6*s.* his expenses would be. I know Dymont took the money up and put it in his pocket a few minutes afterwards. I went out, because I was a little bit disgusted at the squabbling about this money.

36,999. (Mr. Price.) That would be after the poll was over?—No; about 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

37,000. He had had plenty of time to poll?—I believe he had polled at that time.

37,001. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you believe for Mr. Bagehot?—I am certain he did.

37,002. If he voted at all?—Yes, and I believe he did.

Mr. HENRY CLEMENT HEARD sworn. Mr. H. C. Heard.

37,003. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A chemist and druggist.

37,004. Carrying on business in Bridgwater?—Yes.

37,005. (Mr. Anstey.) You signed the petition to the House of Commons which was presented in 1859, I think?—I did.

37,006. Against the return of Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake?—I did.

37,007. You were also, I believe, the object of a prosecution for libel instituted by your opponents here, those of the opposite political party, about the same time that your petition was pending against them?—I was the publisher and proprietor of a newspaper at that time.

37,008 Was that so, that a rule for a criminal information had been obtained against you?—Yes.

37,009. We have it in evidence that the petition was withdrawn, and the rule for a criminal information dropped, and an action that was pending also, I believe, discontinued, all about the same time?—That is correct.

37,010. Are we correctly informed about that, that all that was the result of a compromise, one being set off against the other?—I cannot tell that personally, for I never went to London; at the time I understood that was so, but I do not knew it; I was not at the time in the lobby of the House.

37,011. Your belief, on the information of the lawyers, is that it was so?—That it was one part of the arrangement.

37,012. The other part of the arrangement is more important in my view, that is, as to the payment of certain money by the Tynte party or the Kinglake party, and the party of Westropp and Padwick?—That; I know nothing about it.

37,013. You have not heard that a sum of money was paid over by the Liberal party which was intended to indemnify the Tory party, and which Mr. Padwick put into his own pocket?—Not until this Commission has been sitting.

37,014. What was the other part of the arrangement made on that transaction?—I only know that the petition was withdrawn, and the lawsuit against me dropped.

37,015. Was Colonel Tynte to be at liberty, and Mr. Kinglake of course, to go to the House of Commons, and state there, without contradiction by Mr. Gore Langton or anyone else, that the petition was from the first a frivolous and vexatious one, and that there was no real intention to prosecute?—I know nothing about that; it was the heads of the party, the lawyers, who managed that.

37,016. Then you were only nominally the petitioner?—I was only nominally the petitioner.

37,017. (Mr. Price.) You were put in for the purposes of recognizances?—I do not know anything about that.

37,018. You would be put in as a responsible person?—Under the new Act.

37,019. In those days, and now also, recognizances are required, and responsible people, before the petition is allowed to go on?—I heard everything necessary was done.

37,020. And you would be the person put in as a responsible person?—I was petitioner with Mr. Reuben Bond.

JONAS BOTTOMLEY recalled. J. Bottomley.

37,021. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is your name Jonas?—Yes.

37,022. Were you a draper at this time?—Yes.

37,023. (Mr. Price.) Here you are, a draper, voting for Mr. Bagehot. You have sworn deliberately ten minutes ago that you did not vote at Bagehot's election. Now here is the poll sheet, with your name recorded as voting for Bagehot?—I really have no recollection of voting for Bagehot. I have not the most distant recollection.

37,024. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect refusing 2*l.* 10*s.* for your expenses?—Yes.

37,025. And wanting more?—I refused to take it.

37,026. (Mr. Price.) Then if you had not voted, what was the question about your expenses at all—refusing to take 2*l.* 10*s.*? Surely it was because you had voted and claimed more?

37,027. (Mr. Anstey.) How often is Mr. Coleridge's question to be put to you? You have not answered it up to this moment. Did you ask for more—yes or no, sir?—I do not recollect asking for more. I refused 2*l.* 10*s.*

37,028. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you say it was not enough?—Yes.

37,029. How much was enough?—I did not say anything.

37,030. How much did you ask for?—Not any price. I did not state any price.

37,031. What should you have taken? What do you think you ought to get for a 5*s.* journey to and from Tiverton?—5*l.*

37,032. (Mr. Anstey.) I must caution you as I have cautioned a man with the same degree of morality as yourself, though not a schoolmaster, one Hayward. Sure as your name is Bottomley, if you leave that box a manifestly perjured man, your name will be transmitted, if I have any influence, to Her Majesty's Attorney-General. This is what Mr. Justice Blackburn says to the fellow Hayward at the last election: "It is a very mistaken idea that you can avoid the "consequences of a falsehood by saying not to your "recollection; such a matter cannot be forgotten." Now, sir, do you mean to swear that you do not recollect having voted more than once for this borough, at more than one election?—I said honestly that I did not recollect it.

37,033. But do you, now your memory has been refreshed by the words of Mr. Justice Blackburn, recollect as disclosed on that poll paper that you voted at that election besides the one you had previously confessed to? Now do you remember?—I must according to that.

37,034. (Mr. Coleridge.) And must you have got money to induce you to do it? Now, what did you get, and who from?—I got 10*l.* from Allan, that is the only money I received.

37,035. I am talking of this other election, Bagehot's contest. What did you get at that time when you refused the 2*l.* from Dymont?—Nothing.

37,036. When you wanted 30*l.*?—Nothing.

37,037. Nothing at all?—It was Vanderbyl I voted for.

37,038. Vanderbyl you voted for, and got 10*l.* when you wanted 30*l.* At this election of Bagehot what did you get of Dymont?—I got nothing.

37,039. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

37,040. You swear that and stand by it?—I do not recollect.

37,041. Neither before nor after the election?—Neither before nor after the election.

37,042. At no time subsequent?—At no time subsequent.

37,043. You distinctly swear you got nothing, having refused 2*l.*?—I do not recollect receiving a farthing.

37,044. Will you swear you did not, or anyone on your behalf?—No, one on my behalf, I am certain.

37,045. Your wife?—No.

37,046. On behalf of your wife?—No.

37,047. Will you swear you did not receive a farthing for voting on that occasion, either before or after?—I received nothing before, I received nothing after, and I do not recollect receiving a farthing then.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

J. Bottomley.

6 Oct. 1869.

37,048. (Mr. Price.) How much do you say you asked, 5*l.*?—I did not receive 5*l.*

37,049. How much did you ask?—I did not ask any sum.

37,050. (Mr. Anstey.) You said just now 5*l.*?—I did not ask any sum at all.

37,051. (Mr. Price.) Did not you say 5*l.*?—No; that is what I would vote for.

37,052. Did not you name any sum as that which you expected to receive?—Yes.

37,053. You swear that?—I will; I do not recollect.

37,054. Will you swear positively that you did not ask for a specific sum of money?—(No answer.)

37,055. (Mr. Anstey.) Come, sir!

37,056. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes or no?—I have not the most distant recollection of asking any sum.

37,057. (Mr. Price.) Did not you say you could not be properly paid unless you had 10*l.*?—I have not the most distant idea of saying such a thing.

37,058. Will you swear you did not say so?

37,059. (Mr. Anstey.) Why do not you speak?—I should not like to swear, I do not know it to be true.

37,060. And did not the man to whom you said it turn round in disgust and say that he would have nothing to do with you?—I do not remember such words.

37,061. Will you swear nothing of the kind took place?—I do not remember such words spoken by me in the world.

37,062. What words?—That I wanted 10*l.*, and he turned round in disgust at my asking for it.

37,063. I am not asking that; that was a gesture, and possibly a fitting one. Did he say he would have nothing to do with you?—I do not remember it.

37,064. (Mr. Anstey.) In whose service are you now a schoolmaster? Are you a dissenter, a Church of England man, or a Roman Catholic, or what religion has the benefit of your morality and science?—Church of England.

37,065. (Mr. Price.) Are you appointed by anybody?—No.

37,066. (Mr. Anstey.) It is your own school?—Yes.

37,067. (Mr. Price.) No foundation attached to it?—No.

37,068. Any salary attached to it?—No.

37,069. Did you start it yourself?—Yes.

37,070. How many scholars have you?—Twenty-seven to thirty.

37,071. What is the name of the street?—Ashsted Road.

37,072. What parish?—I think, Nichels.

37,073. If you are a Church of England man, you must know what parish your school is in?—Ashted.

37,074. Is that in Birmingham?—Yes.

37,075. Is it a suburb?—It is close adjoining it.

37,076. What is the name of the clergyman of the church to which you belong? Do you ever go to church?—Yes.

37,077. What church?—Ashted church.

37,078. Who is the clergyman?—Mr. —— I have not been many times to the place.

37,079. Have you ever been there in your life?—Yes.

37,080. When?—Half a dozen times in the last few months.

37,081. Then you can give us the name of the clergyman?—(No answer.)

37,082. Do you mean to say you cannot give us the name of the clergyman whose church you attended half a dozen times the last two months where you have a Church of England school?—It is not a Church of England school. It is a private school.

37,083. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you take your pupils there?—No, it is a private school.

37,084. Where do your pupils go?—I do not know, it is a day school.

37,085. (Mr. Price.) What is the name of the clergyman whose service you attend?—My memory is at fault this morning. Wilkins, I think it is.

37,086. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you do anything there besides keeping a day school?—No.

37,087. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long have you been a Church of England man?—I was brought up one.

37,088. (Mr. Anstey.) Were not you a dissenter when in Bridgwater?—Yes.

37,089. A preacher?—No.

37,090. Do you mean to say you never preached?—Never.

37,091. Your name has been mentioned by a witness as of a dissenting preacher?—I never was in this world.

37,092. Or a lecturer?—Or a lecturer.

37,093. (Mr. Price.) What place of worship did you ever attend at Bridgwater?—I attended the Independent chapel.

37,094. What is the name of the person who officiated there in your time?—Jones.

37,095. Is he here now?—I do not know.

37,096. Did any single person in Bridgwater ever see you in a place of worship in your life?—I should think there are many persons.

37,097. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you doing at Tiverton?—Keeping a draper's shop.

37,098. And when did you give up drapery and become a schoolmaster?—About two years ago.

37,099. Had you previously passed through the Bankruptcy Court?—Yes; no, I compromised.

37,100. Then you took to the scholastic line?—Yes.

37,101–7. You have followed it ever since?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) You will not be able to leave the town, because we shall have to consider by looking through all this evidence what is to be done with you. You will have to remain till Dymont returns.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Thursday, 7th October 1869.

PRESENT :

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. GEORGE THOMPSON sworn.

37,108. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am an independent gentleman ; I have no profession.

37,109. (Mr. Coleridge.) No profession or trade?—I was bred to the Scotch bar, but never practised.

37,110. (Mr. Price.) Do you reside in London or in Edinburgh?—I really have no fixed residence. I live in the season a good deal in London, and at my own pleasure.

37,111. You are a member of the Carlton Club?—I am a member of the Carlton Club.

37,112. And I presume, therefore, are Conservative in politics?—A very strong one, and have always been.

37,113. Were you acquainted with the Lord Justice Clerk?—Most intimately.

37,114. And had been so during a great part of his professional career?—Since I was a very young man.

37,115. When did you first become acquainted with his intention to come down and stand for Bridgwater?—I arrived from Italy about the middle of May 1866. I looked it up; I think it was about the 15th. I arrived in London a day or two after I left him. I had then spoken to Mr. Patton on the propriety of his coming into Parliament, and when I met him he told me that he had been recommended by Mr. Spofforth to stand for Bridgwater.

37,116. Was he at that time Solicitor-General for Scotland?—No, the Liberal Government were then in power, but he had been Solicitor-General before. He told me he had been to Bridgwater, and had thoroughly canvassed the constituency, and was very much elated by the reception he had met with. He was obliged to go to Scotland, and he then asked me, as a very old friend, if I would meet Mr. Bealy Smith, who was his agent, and make any arrangement that I thought right for him; he would think it a great favour. I very unwillingly agreed to do it, and have never ceased to regret it.

37,117. (Mr. Anstey.) Why unwillingly?—I thought it a disagreeable thing.

37,118. And I suppose you also knew the reputation which Bridgwater had enjoyed for a century past?—I cannot say I did much. I may have heard it was a place one could not wish to go to, but I had no definite knowledge.

37,119. But you had a general notion?—Well, I daresay I had.

37,120. (Mr. Price.) Did you put yourself in communication with Mr. Smith?—Mr. Smith very shortly afterwards came to London, and I had an interview with him. He mentioned to me that Bridgwater was a very expensive place to contest, that there were a great number of legal gentlemen in it, and that they always expected to be very well paid. He also mentioned to me, as a particular demand that would be made on that occasion, that there had been large expenses incurred in connexion with the petition; that a great number of those—himself and other gentlemen—had been in London, and had remained a long time, and had been put to great expense, and they would not act cordially if that was not paid.

37,121. (Mr. Anstey.) By "other gentlemen," did he mean professional gentlemen?—I understood so.

37,122. Would you be very much surprised to hear that none of them were paid for being in London, except their expenses?—Well, he made a demand upon that subject for 750*l.*, and there was also a smaller demand of some other kind, which I have forgotten, for 150*l.* I cannot say what it was, but a smaller demand for 150*l.* more ; but he wanted 600*l.* to conduct the election and maintain the interest, and therefore he made a demand for 1,500*l.*

37,123. Did it strike you as a very curious way of making up the round sum of 1,500*l.*?—I cannot say that t did.

37,124. Did it strike you as very strange that it should be exactly 750*l.* for past expenses, and exactly 750*l.* for the current expenses of the election?—Well, I think the other 150*l.* was for something that had gone by.

37,125. Also back?—Also back.

37,126. But nothing to do with the petition?—I really could not say. I would not swear to it positively.

37,127. I do not say that so wary a man told you so, but did not it flash across your mind that some of those past expenses were illegal expenses?—I cannot say that it did. I was not aware that it was. I may say that the thing that flashed through my mind was that he wanted to pocket a little money. Mr. Patton being a stranger, and having no connexion with them, they thought they were entitled to something to put in their own pocket.

37,128. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever stood for any place yourself?—Never in my life.

37,129. Or had any experience of elections?—Never in my life before.

37,130. (Mr. Anstey.) Nor Mr. Patton?—Nor Mr. Patton.

37,131. And did he tell you that he had circulated, or that anybody had circulated, in the borough a report that, though not a rich man himself, Mr. Patton was the brother of a wealthy Glasgow merchant, or some one who had made a large fortune by commerce?—His brother was a wealthy man.

37,132. Did he tell you that he had circulated that notion?—I cannot say that he did.

37,133. Did Mr. Smith tell you that that notion had been circulated in the borough?—No, I do not know that he did ; at least if he did I do not recollect it. He had a brother who was a very wealthy man, and who died very shortly before, and left the Lord Justice Clerk his whole fortune. Well, I had not 1,500*l.* at the time, and I told Mr. Smith if he would come up in a few days I would let him have the

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Thompson.

7 Oct. 1869.

1,500*l.* He said he could not come himself, and that Mr. Westropp was quite the same thing, whom I might have perfect confidence in, and would be there, and would receive the money, and I accordingly, a few days afterwards, paid it to Mr. Westropp.

37,134. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you get the money from, from your own banker?—From my own banker.

37,135. In gold?—Not in gold.

37,136. In notes?—In notes.

37,137. Then what occurred? Did you communicate that to Mr. Patton?—No, I did not; Mr. Patton was in Scotland at the time; he had left there, and I do not think I saw him until just the eve of the election. I had had frequent demands from Mr. Smith for different sums of money, and at the first election the whole he got, including the 600*l.*, not the 900*l.*, was 2,000*l.* I paid him the 2,000*l.*

37,138. (Mr. Price.) Before the election?—No; I think 1,450*l.* before the election, and 650*l.* after.

37,139. Besides this 1,500*l.*?—No, including the 600*l.*, not the 900*l.*, which I looked upon as a preliminary expense.

37,140. 600*l.*?—I think 750*l.* and 650*l.*; that is how I make it. I would not be prepared to swear that those were the exact identical sums.

37,141. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did you see on the matter besides Mr. Smith?—Nobody besides Mr. Smith and Mr. Westropp.

37,142. Did you ever see Mr. Spofforth?—I have seen him.

37,143. But about Bridgwater?—No; I do not mean to say I never spoke to him about Bridgwater.

37,144. What was the conversation?—I had none. I think he introduced me to Mr. Bealy Smith as a most excellent and respectable agent, whom I met in perfect confidence.

37,145. A most excellent what?

37,146. (Mr. Anstey.) Gentleman?—A most respectable agent I might have confidence in.

37,147. (Mr. Coleridge.) I should think it was the only time in his life he had been considered so?—I had every reason to suppose it. I do not think I had any other conversation with Mr. Spofforth.

37,148. Probably what you have read as having occurred here has altered your opinion?—It has, most decidedly, on this subject.

37,149. (Mr. Anstey.) How much money for back expenses, and the future expenses, was it you paid Mr. Smith?—If you like I will give you a small note of it; I do not pretend that it is strictly correct.

37,150. (Mr. Price.) Just give it, so that we can have it on the notes?—I may mention that the first election was 2,000*l.*; 1,350*l.* before the election, and there was a demand for 650*l.* after the election, which I paid whenever that was paid. There was another demand for 750*l.*, which I positively refused to pay.

37,151. That would be with what you paid before?—I am sorry to say that was not persevered in after the second election came on.

37,152. Tell us, up to that moment, how much you had spent with what you gave in the first instance for back purposes, and what you gave in respect of that election?—3,500*l.*

37,153. (Mr. Price.) That is exclusive of the last demand made on you, which you did not settle until after the second election?—I said before the second election it was 3,500*l.*

37,154. (Mr. Anstey.) How much was demanded of you or him, over and above that?—750*l.*

37,155. Did you, when these demands for past expenses were made upon you, not object to him that Mr. Westropp, or those who had come before Mr. Patton, ought to be the persons to bear it?—They said that there was nothing paid except, I suppose—— I do not know on what account it was paid.

37,156. You see there was a counter petition against Mr. Kinglake?—It was in connexion with the two petitions.

37,157. Just so; both the petition and the cross petition preceded nearly 12 months Mr. Patton's first coming here. He had had nothing to do with the borough whatever?—Nothing in the world.

37,158. Did you, or did you not, on his behalf object, when asked for these expenses, "Pray what has "Mr. Patton to do with petitions which he was never "connected with, and a trial in which he took no "part"?—Well, I cannot say I did.

37,159. You did not?—I did not.

37,160. Then was not it an understanding that the condition was that Mr. Westropp was to give him the benefit of what he is pleased to call his popularity?—No, not at all; there was no conditon at all; no condition of the kind.

37,161. Was not it the understanding?—I think not. I do not think I had ever communicated with Mr. Westropp, or heard.

37,162. Not between you and Mr. Westropp?—Or between me and Mr. Bealy Smith. I do not think there was any such understanding, not on my part. I never thought of it.

37,163. I will tell you what has been said by a very respectable person who has been examined here, Mr. Trevor, who being asked why Mr. Patton, who had a just horror of bribery, put himself in the hands of such a man as Mr. Westropp—those are the very words of the question—said, that he might have the benefit of Mr. Westropp's popularity. Mr. Westropp was a very popular man?—Well, it may have been so.

37,164. You do not know anything about it?—I never thought of it. It did not occur to me in that point of view.

37,165. At all events, you can tell me, as I suppose, if that was not the reason, you cannot suggest any other?—My suggestion was simply this, I thought it was a cadeau to the legal gentlemen of Bridgwater.

37,166. What?—A present to the legal gentlemen of Bridgwater.

37,167. That would account for the 600*l.*?—No, that accounted for the whole 600*l.* I understood to go to the expenses.

37,168. That would not account for the 150*l.*?—Well, I cannot account for the 150*l.* I think Mr. Westropp will be able, perhaps.

37,169. I am asking you whether this point was present to Mr. Patton's mind, or his friend; can you suggest any reason why Mr. Patton should be asked and advised by his friend to submit to the preposterous extortion of 150*l.*, not going to the lawyers, but relating to past matters, unless it were that on those terms Mr. Westropp's friends would give him support?—Well, it did not occur to me. I paid the money, and did not really think of it.

37,170. I am asking you, cannot you suggest any reason?—I cannot.

37,171. (Mr. Price.) As I understand, Mr. Patton was never put in communication with Mr. Westropp, was he?—I think so.

37,172. Excepting at the dinner at the Carlton Club?—I think the dinner at the Carlton Club; but it was long before I came home.

37,173. But, so far as you know from Mr. Patton, did you understand that he was to pay anything in respect of getting Mr. Westropp's popularity?—No, I do not think that; I am not at all sure that Mr. Westropp ever knew what it was for.

37,174. (Mr. Anstey.) We have had a great deal of evidence about the Liberal proceedings, and we have taken it for granted hitherto that Liberal candidates do not pay expenses of former candidates without incurring the guilt of bribery?—I was not aware of it.

37,175. That is the conclusion we have come to with regard to Hurman's bill for 33*l.*, and others. Can you see anything to distinguish the case of the 750*l.* payable in respect of past expenses, and the case I was just alluding to of the draper's bill?—I do not think there is any moral distinction. I was not in the least aware that it was illegal, I must say.

37,176. (Mr. Price.) You were never informed that there was any outstanding debts beyond this liability with regard to the expenses of the petition? —Oh, there is 150*l.*, but I really can give no explanation of it; I do not remember anything about it; I paid it, and asked no questions.

37,177. With reference to the outstanding debts of Mr. Westropp?—I did not consider it as an outstanding debt of Mr. Westropp.

37,178. (Mr. Anstey.) Why not?—I do not know, I am sure.

37,179. Was not it outstanding to Mr. Patton?—No.

37,180. If it was not for the election petition, what could it be for but for some vile election bill that Mr. Westropp and his friends had not settled?—I cannot clearly say.

37,181. It appears to me as plain as can be what the nature of the claim was; I see no distinction myself between that and Hurman's claim; one is Liberal and the other Conservative, that is all?—After the second election I had a conversation as to whether he ought to stand again. I represented to him that I had paid the whole amount that had been paid, but I did not make any suggestion as to whether it had been illegal expenditure, or anything about it; I told him the amount that had been paid, and he gave me a cheque for the amount.

37,182. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were a sufficient electioneerer not to mention those things to him?—I did not.

37,183. Purposely?—Purposely. I did not mention it; in point of fact I did not know it myself, and I purposely avoided mentioning anything about how any of the money was expended after the first. I admit at first I really had no suspicion of anything seriously for a long time, but when continued demands came in I considered it a very gross robbery.

37,184. In fact, in the first election you were as much taken in by Mr. Smith as anybody?—I believed he was a most excellent and trustworthy person.

37,185. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he tell you he was the mouthpiece of all the lawyers?—Yes, he did; he gave me to understand he was the leading man.

37,186. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did it not strike you that he was a very young man to have the entire lead?—He informed me I believe that he had succeeded his father, that he had been in the same position, bred up from his youth as legal electioneering lawyer.

37,187. As the legal corrupter of Bridgwater.

37,188. (Mr. Anstey.) You knew at this time, of course, that Mr. Westropp had been unseated for gross bribery at the election of 1865, did not you?—I suppose I knew; I know I did, I may say.

37,189. You know the name of your countryman, Mr. Baxter, the member for Montrose, I think?—I do.

37,190. You are aware that he was chairman of the committee which unseated Mr. Westropp?—I cannot say that I was; I was out of the country, I had been away.

37,191. You had not heard anything of the talk which had taken place in the House of Commons after Mr. Westropp was unseated?—No, I had no recollection of it; I was quite ignorant of it, but I knew Mr. Westropp had been unseated.

37,192. And you were aware that Mr. Westropp had been introduced to Mr. Patton by Mr. Spofforth; you were then aware when he asked you for the money?—I did not know about Mr. Spofforth, but I knew he had been.

37,193. Did you not—it is too late now, of course—but did you or not caution Mr. Patton against placing any confidence in the unsupported statement of a man like Mr. Westropp?—I certainly did not; I gave him no warning whatever.

37,194. (Mr. Price.) Had you any reason for doing so with regard to Mr. Westropp?—No, none whatever.

37,195. Had you any reason to suppose that Mr. Westropp was a dishonourable man, not to be trusted?—On the contrary, from what I saw of Mr. Westropp.

37,196. Or Mr. Patton?—Mr. Patton knew a great deal more than I did.

37,197. He was in the country during the whole time of the election petition, and would see it in the public prints, I suppose?—In all probability.

37,198. He was the candidate, and you came home not knowing anything at all of this; you only knew Mr. Westropp from what you had heard of Mr. Patton and Mr. Spofforth?—I heard it at the Carlton Club.

37,199. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not believe I said anything to you about Mr. Westropp being a dishonourable man, did I?—Oh, dear no.

37,200. Then I will pursue my question. Mr. Westropp made a statement as to his chances, on the faith of which Mr. Patton came down to the borough?—Yes.

37,201. And I understood you to say that Mr. Patton communicated to you, I forget the expression, his satisfaction?—It was his satisfaction.

37,202. At the way it had gone on?—He was delighted that he was a popular man.

37,203. Now observe this: a stranger going down to a place like Bridgwater, especially a Scotchman, or one not an Englishman I mean, would naturally inquire of persons immediately connected with the last election as to the place, and did not it occur to you at that time that he would naturally have consulted Mr. Westropp as to his chance?—I think so.

37,204. I then ask you, that is the meaning of my question which appears to have been misunderstood, as Mr. Westropp had been just unseated for gross bribery, did it or did it not occur to you to caution Mr. Patton against being led away by any statements of the prospects coming from a man like Mr. Westropp, who most likely had a very over-coloured notion in his own mind?—No, it certainly did not.

37,205. (Mr. Coleridge.) Must not Mr. Patton have known from the character of Bridgwater, and the fact of Mr. Westropp having been unseated for the grossest bribery here, that he had a corrupt constituency to deal with?—I do not believe Mr. Patton had the slightest notion; that he knew anything of Bridgwater more than about any other place.

37,206. I am sorry to ask any question about Mr. Patton, but it is very material here. Mr. Patton, instead of in a straightforward way paying the ordinary sum of 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.* into the hands of the agents for election purposes, gives you a carte blanche to pay whatever you like, must he not at that time have known that there was something more to pay for Bridgwater than for any ordinary and not corrupt borough, or else why did he leave it with you instead of paying his agents 300*l.* or 400*l.*, the ordinary expenses of a contest of this sort?—I cannot answer.

37,207. When Mr. Patton asked you to advance what money was necessary, did he do that without one word of conversation as to what amount was likely to be required? Supposing it had been 10,000*l.* should you have found it? Did Mr. Patton say to you, "I expect it to be 1,500*l.*," or leave it entirely to you?—He left it entirely to me.

37,208. Do you mean that he gave you no sort of limit above which you might go?—No, I do not think he did.

37,209. Try and recollect. Was nothing at all said about the amount, because it is an extraordinary thing that a gentleman going into office should not be careful about what he was doing, but left a complete carte blanche to commit any amount of bribery, for it amounts to that; if the sum is unlimited it can only be for bribery?—I do not think he contemplated the extent.

37,210. Did he contemplate anything like the extent you made it?—I cannot say.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Thompson.

7 Oct. 1869.

37,211. Or half of it ?—I cannot say; he may.

37,212. One half you say he may ?—I should think so.

37,213. That would be 2,000*l.* if you contemplated it. It must have been going for illegal purposes ; he could not suppose it was going in a direct manner, because it would be equally illegal if it was for the expenditure of a former election ?—I do not think he contemplated anything of the kind.

37,214. Probably Mr. Patton was too wide awake to attempt actual bribery?—I think he was a most simple-minded man when taken in thus easily.

37,215. I understand Scotch elections are very cheap ?—On the very contrary, we pay very large sums to agents, but no such thing as bribery.

37,216. In boroughs ?—In boroughs. Greenock cost about 3,000*l.*

37,217. (Mr. Anstey.) Greenock was an exceptional place ?—Very few contests.

37,218. (Mr. Coleridge.) And about 90,000 inhabitants ?—About half, 50,000 or 60,000.

37,219. (Mr. Anstey.) Surely 3,000*l.* expended in Greenock was considered by the legal gentlemen who advised Mr. Christy so enormous a sum to be spent in a Scotch borough election, that they relied mainly on that in support of a petition for corrupt practices ?—Yes.

37,220. And I believe it is the only petition tried in the memory of man, either before the House of Commons or the present tribunal, against an election in Scotland on the ground of bribery ?—Well, I believe so.

37,221. Bribery being a very uncommon offence there ?—Yes.

37,222. (Mr. Coleridge.) Either uncommon or undetected.

37,223. (Mr. Anstey.) You remember Lord Barcaple said in giving judgment that he had considerable difficulty on that point about the largeness of the expenses ?—The largeness of the expenses.

37,224. But on the whole he thought, standing alone, it was not sufficient evidence of corrupt practices to justify him in declaring the election void ?—Yes.

37,225. Therefore 3,000*l.* was spent at Greenock, having an inhabitancy of 60,000, and is considered by all those persons, and I believe the public generally, as an unprecedented expenditure for Scotland ?—I am not sure of that. I know nothing about Scotch elections, but I know the Falkirk burghs were closely contested.

37,226. (Mr. Coleridge.) The Falkirk burghs are almost a county.

37,257. (Mr. Price.) Now be good enough to tell me this, when did Mr. Patton know the whole extent of what you had spent for him at that contest?—It was immediately after the first election was over.

37,228. How soon afterwards ?—About the 1st of July ; from the last week of June.

37,229. Then he would know up to that time that you had paid everything except this last demand ?—Yes.

37,230. Which you had refused to pay ?—Which I had refused to pay.

37,231. Therefore you had spent for him in respect of back demands, and for the purposes of the then election, something over 3,000*l.* ?—Yes.

37,232. And that he knew about a month after ?—Yes, less than a month after.

37,233. (Mr. Anstey.) How much less ?—I do not remember exactly the day of the election.

37,234. (Mr. Price.) At all events, whether it be a fortnight or a month, it makes no difference to what I want to know. Mr. Pitman has told us that the late Lord Justice Clerk expected to spend about 1,500*l.* Mr. Pitman has named that as the sum. Mr. Patton mentioned to him as to what he thought it would cost him, and it did not strike Mr. Pitman and Lord Justice Clerk as a large sum, although if he knew much about English boroughs it would have struck him as being a large sum for legitimate expenses, because the legal expenses are about 200*l.* ; however, that is the idea Mr. Patton seems to have started with, that he would have to spend that amount. Then, a month or a fortnight after the election, whatever it was, you carry him the expenditure rather more than double that ?—Yes.

37,235. That being so, did not he then say anything to you about its being more than double what he expected, or anything of that kind ?—Oh, he certainly said it was very extravagant, but he seemed to think, his idea was, it was a robbery.

37,236. Was his idea that it was spent, not in bribery, but he had literally been robbed by his agents, or extortion ?

37,237. (Mr. Coleridge.) And he himself considered the expenses in the advantage of his office ?—I suppose so.

37,238. Because Mr. Spofforth has told us that it is not usual to assist Government candidates in any way, they are expected to pay it out of what they can get ?—Of course he paid it out of his own pocket, every farthing of it.

37,239. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Pitman has told us that as soon as he found out the whole expenses, whether at that time or when you had to tell him of the other large demand, he declared himself so disgusted with the thing that he made up his mind that he would not stand again, and it was only on being assured by Mr. Bealy Smith that the other side was sick of fighting, and that the thing was to be a certain walk over, that he consented, believing it would be a walk over, to come down ?—That, I am sure, is correct. Mr. Bealy Smith came to me, and assured me that he had seen the Liberal agents, that they were not going to oppose the Lord Advocate on this occasion ; there would be no opposition if he would only come forward.

37,240. But for that assurance conveyed to you and conveyed, as Mr. Pitman says, in the strongest manner to Mr. Patton, do you believe he was so disgusted with the expenditure he had been put to that he would have declined to come forward ?—He would not have come to Bridgwater after, I am sure.

37,241. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he tell you so ?—He told me so.

37,242. As the nature of the connexion between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Patton appears to be in some doubt, I must ask you to look at this letter, and say whether it is Mr. Patton's handwriting (handing a letter to the witness) ?—It is.

37,243. Then be so good as to read it out, so that it may come on the notes. It is directed to the Secretary of this Commission, and dated August 14th, 1869. —" Sir,—I have just received your letter addressed to " me at Edinburgh, on the subject of the Bridgwater " election, and have to acknowledge the courtesy of the " Commissioners in kindly consulting my convenience " as to the time of my attendance. I shall be ready to " attend on any day between the 26th August and the " 10th September that may be thought most suitable. " I shall again be free between the 29th September " and the 12th October. As to the questions you put " as to bankers and deposits, my bankers are and were " during the years mentioned the Union Bank of " Scotland. They were so for years before. There " was never any account kept except in my own name. " A deposit of 500*l.* was made before the first election " in the joint names of some nominee of the Bridge " or Bridgwater Conservative Committee, and of my " cousin, Major Malcolm, of the Royal Engineers, on " the other. I do not at this moment recollect in what " bank the sum was deposited ; in fact none of the de- " tails were managed by me ; but I shall ascertain the " fact if desired. I was paying a visit in Yorkshire " when a telegram reached me from my friend, Mr. " Frederick Pitman, that a seat at Bridgwater was " vacant, and was sure. Mr. Pitman is a writer to " the ' signet,' and consequently a professional man ; " but he acted in the election as a friend so entirely,

" that he refused to permit me to pay one farthing of " his travelling expenses. I went up to London, and " saw Mr. Westropp, Mr. Bealy Smith, Mr. Ruddock, " and I think several others of what was called the " Bridge Committee, and proceeded to Bridgwater, " where Mr. Westropp introduced me to the con- " stituency."

37,244. " Where Mr. Westropp introduced me to " the constituency " ?—Yes. " I believe that I visited, " along with that gentleman, almost every voter, or " some member of his family. I dined with the Bridge " Committee, and a large body of Conservative elec- " tors. Mr. J. Trevor was my parliamentary agent. " I found, after the election was over, that various " gentlemen, members of the committee, claimed to " have been agents whose services I had thought were " to have been rendered simply as committee-men. The " second election was conducted by the Bridge Com- " mittee, or Bridgwater Conservative Committee ; my " liability being restricted contributing to a sum which " was fixed "—thatis quite a mistake—" beforehand by " Mr. Bealy Smith and Mr. Pitman as a proper amount. " I may mention that the contest was to me quite un- " expected, as the previous election was so recent, and " nothing had occurred to alter the position of parties, " except what I considered favourable to the Conser- " vative party. My first information as to a contest " reached me on the railway platform at Bridgwater, " arriving there on the eve of the election."

37,245. (Mr. Price.) That is the second election he is speaking of?—The second election.

37,246. (Mr. Anstey.) Now tell me about the 500*l.*; what part of the sum raised by you is represented by the 500*l.*?—That I had nothing to do with.

37,247. Which he says in that letter he deposited in the joint names of a member of the Bridge or Bridgwater Committee and Major Malcolm?—That I had nothing to do with; never heard of it until long after.

37,248. What did you hear about it?—I merely heard what that letter contained.

37,249. What was the object of depositing 500*l.* in that way?—I suppose Mr. Bealy Smith wanted it. I know nothing of it, and can give you no information on that 500*l.*

37,250. There was some laughter, not only on your part but elsewhere, when I asked why the 500*l.* was deposited in that particular form in the names of two persons. You see that would be a security against Mr. Bealy Smith?—I really cannot tell you about that ; I have no information.

37,251. Was the 500*l.* intended to provide for the legal expenses, and the remaining sum of money left out in Mr. Bealy Smith's hands ; is that it?—I cannot tell you anything about that.

37,252. (Mr. Price.) I understand you to have said a little time ago that you knew nothing about this 500*l.* at the time in any way whatever?—In no way whatever. I never heard of it until long after.

37,253. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is natural; because if the 500*l.* was for legal, and what you advanced for illegal, expenses, they would not have troubled you with the legal?—I suppose not.

37,254. The 500*l.* was for legal expenses, and what you advanced was for extras?—I am afraid so. At the second election, when Mr. Bealy Smith came to me and told me that there would be no contest, that if I would pay for Mr. Patton that 750*l.*, he could assure me positively——

37,255. (Mr. Price.) This last demand?—This last demand, that there would be no further claim.

37,256. That there would be no contest?—That there would be no contest.

37,257. And upon that assurance did you pay this further sum?—I did.

37,258. (Mr. Anstey.) Now about the difficulty of raising the money which came to Mr. Bealy Smith's and Mr. Lilly's hands in cash, which was deposited in their hands at the Carlton Club by Mr. Westropp himself, were you aware of the manner in which that money was to be brought into their possession, the particular mode of transport, namely, the Carlton Club?—I gave the money to Mr. Westropp, with the direction to give it to them.

37,259. (Mr. Price.) But you gave it for a cheque?—No.

37,260. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you a party to the operation by which it was conveyed to the Carlton Club on its way to their hands ; the story is that he got the notes somewhere?—I gave him the notes.

37,261. That he changed them into gold at his own bank, and then carried them in a parcel to the Carlton Club to one of the dressing rooms there, and kept it there until the appointed hour, when he gave it to two persons at the door in a cab. Were you aware that was going to be done?—I was aware it had been done.

37,262. How soon after were you made aware?—It was in the course of the day.

37,263. What reason did Mr. Westropp give you for taking it to the Carlton Club?—None at all ; none in the world.

37,264. He did not say anything to you about his fear of being seen from the windows of the Union Club?—No, he gave me no reason whatever.

37,265. Were you at the Carlton Club at the time the money was so handed over?—I do not know whether I was ; I think I was.

37,266. Were any of the leading men of the Carlton Club aware of it?—No human being except those immediately concerned.

37,267. Had those persons who are supposed to manage the Conservative interest at the Carlton Club anything to do with it?—No, nothing in the world ; no connexion with it whatever.

37,268. (Mr. Price.) I do not know whether you were going to tell us anything before you got to that period of time?—No, there is nothing.

37,269. Did you remain in just the same ignorance as Mr. Patton until he arrived at the platform?—The day before the election, when this demand came out ; and I am afraid I was quite reckless at the time.

37,270. (Mr. Coleridge.) You would have advanced money to any extent, I suppose, to secure Mr. Patton's election?—No, not that ; I said to Mr. Bealy Smith that nothing would induce me to go further than that, and on no condition.

37,271. You had given 4,000*l.* the first time ; why restrict yourself to 2,000*l.* the second time?—I always looked on the 900*l.* as totally unconnected with the election.

37,272. That was merely goodwill?—I understood it was a sop to the agents.

37,273. For the goodwill?—I understood it was a sop to the agents.

37,274. A retaining fee to the agents?—A retaining fee ; I believed it to be that.

37,275. (Mr. Coleridge.) They charged their fees afterwards, did not they?—I have no doubt about that.

37,276. Who did by name?—I know nothing ; I never saw the account.

37,277. Did any agent charge after this his fee?—I never saw the account.

37,278. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Bealy Smith took what he liked?—Mr. Bealy Smith took what he liked.

37,279. And gave what he liked?—And gave what he liked.

37,280. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think that your conduct at this election shows that you have never been in business?—I never have; I was as solicitous as possible ; it was the first time I had ever had to do with any election, and I hope the last.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Thompson.

7 Oct. 1869.

37,281. (Mr. Anstey.) At all events with an English election?—At all events with an English election. I do not mean to say that I would not vote in my own country.

37,282. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us?—I think so. If there is any question you would like to ask me——

37,283. When the Lord Advocate was defeated and this money was found, how soon after his defeat did you make the representation to him as to the money you found?—Well, he gave me before the election, I think——

37,284. He had repaid you 4,000*l.* Mr. Pitman says?—I think I can tell you exactly how that is. I paid 1,900*l.* of my own at the first election, which he repaid me for the legitimate expenses, or for the retaining agents, or whatever it was; about 600*l.* more for the second, between the first and the second, and I employed the 1,900*l.* which he repaid me again in paying the second.

37,285. For the second?—For the second, but I afterwards received it.

37,286. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us the whole amount the Lord Advocate received through your hands?—6,150*l.*

37,287. And 500*l.* of his own besides?—500*l.* of his own besides, and I think 350*l.* by Mr. Pitman.

37,288. (Mr. Anstey.) Was any portion of that money repaid through his brother or out of his brother's money?—I should think not.

37,289. Was it out of his own money?—I should say it was entirely paid out of his own pocket.

37,290. Do you know whether he received any contribution towards it from any source?—Not the least that I am aware of 37,291. (Mr. Price.) There is some misapprehension as to his position; he had a patrimony independent of what his brother left him?—Yes, he had amassed money.

37,292. 2,000*l.* a year independent of professional income?—2,000*l.* a year independent of professional income.

37,293. And a large professional income?—Yes; he did not marry till late in life, and must have been a rich man.

37,294. He was a man without family?—Without family.

37,295. And kept a very inexpensive household?—He lived in a most gentlemanlike manner, but not an expensive manner; a kind, simple-hearted man. I was with him a few days before I saw this, and I have never recovered from it.

37,296. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you party in any way to the arrangement by which Mr. Bealy Smith received his last payment, somewhere in the early part of 1867, and gave a receipt in full as a protection both to Mr. Pitman and Mr. Patton against further extortion?—I was not. I may mention, by-the-bye, one thing, that Mr. Bealy Smith came to me after the second election most anxious that there should be a petition, that he assured me that the other election had been lost by bribery on the other side; that we were perfectly pure.

37,297. (Mr. Price.) He assured you that you were perfectly pure?—Yes. I did not believe that statement.

37,298. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the reason why Mr. Patton did not pursue his purpose as announced from the hustings, or his hotel, on taking his farewell, of presenting a petition against Mr. Vanderbyl's return?—I think Mr. Patton had had quite enough of Bridgwater then.

37,299. Was it because he had spent money, or because he knew their hands were not clean?—Well, I believe it was that he had spent money; that he really did not know, and had no idea as to the extent.

37,300. I understood you to say a little while ago "less than a month"—you were going to tell me how much less when another question was interposed—less than a month he had been aware that money had been spent corruptly?—He never was made aware of it.

37,301. What then?—Of the amount that had been spent.

37,302. The amount?—The amount spent he was made aware of.

37,303. Was that before his second election?—Before his second election.

37,304. With the knowledge of the bad faith of Bealy Smith and the people who had involved him in that large expenditure, do you think he went to the second election with that in his mind, that his agents were going to conduct the contest on purity principles?—I know I was fully impressed with the idea, and I believed there was to be no contest.

37,305. But I am speaking of the time when he was informed there was to be a contest?—He never was informed until on the platform.

37,306. I am bringing you to your last answer, which was that you do not think that Mr. Patton was influenced when he changed his determination about presenting a petition by any thought excepting this: that he had not spent much money, or did not think there had been corrupt practices?—I do not say that he might not suspect it, but I do not think he had any idea of the extent.

37,307. But I mean as to the extent of it?—I think he must have been rather suspicious.

37,308. That is one reason at least why he did not present the petition?—I think, perhaps, it may be.

37,309. You have mentioned Mr. Bealy Smith coming to you, but I will bring you still further down; after Mr. Bealy Smith had obtained his final payment, and I daresay most unwillingly given a receipt in full to Mr. Pitman, which was somewhere about the beginning of the parliamentary session of 1867, did you receive any importunate letters from Mr. Bealy Smith?—None. I got various importunate letters before he went to Mr. Patton. He tried me in every way, and I absolutely refused to have anything to do with it, and then he took to attacking Mr. Pitman and Mr. Patton, but I never heard from him afterwards.

37,310. After he had silenced them by paying that last enormous sum he demanded he did not renew his importunities to you?—No.

37,311. And of course you never wrote to such a man yourself?—I never had anything to do with him.

37,312. You know nothing of his subsequent movements?—No; nothing whatever.

37,313. (Mr. Price.) I do not want to say anything to hurt the feelings of relatives or friends, but Mr. Pitman was asked it, and therefore I will ask you, do you agree with him; was not it till he noticed these proceedings were going on, and was looking over his papers as to any evidence he might have to give, that he fully realized the position he stood in and the mode in which he won his contest?—Well I believe so.

37,313*a*. And that Mr. Pitman said was the reason he broke down?—That is my belief.

37,314. He did not realize the effect of a large expenditure and having to account for it?—Yes; and I think that is what preyed on his mind, that he really had not considered it before. I saw him a very short time before. I went to see him and found him in a very great state of excitement, and I thought it was very likely he would resign his seat on the bench in consequence, but never for a moment fancied that such a thing would have happened as has.

37,315–6. (Mr. Price.) You have nothing else to tell us?—I do not think so.

JONAS BOTTOMLEY recalled.

37,317. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect any more this morning?—(The witness hesitated.)

37,318. (Mr. Price.) About that first election of Mr. Bagehot's; did you get any money then?—The first?

37,319. Do you recollect, at Bagehot's election, about the 2*l.* 10*s.* being offered to you, and saying you ought to have 10*l.*? (A pause.) You said yesterday that you offered to take 5*l.* I ask you whether you did not say to Dyment that you ought to have had 10*l.*?—I do not remember having used such words.

37,320. Did you say you would take 5*l.*?—No.

37,321. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us 5*l.* yesterday?—It was suggested, "Would I take 5*l.*?" I said "Yes."

37,322. Who suggested it?—I think it was you.

37,323. No, no. I asked you what was the least you would take, and you put the 5*l.* upon me; I did not put it upon you?—I do not think I named 5*l.*; it was only suggested, sir.

37,324. Yes, you did. Have you made up your mind as to whether you voted at that election or not?—I must have done so.

37,325. You have sworn about ten times over that you did not do so?—I do not recollect the circumstance.

37,326. But you have withdrawn that, and you say you did do it?—I recollect being taken by Dyment into Bussell's parlour.

36,327. You were brought up by Dyment and offered 2*l.* 10*s.* Surely you must recollect whether you did or did not vote, having come from Tiverton to vote?—I was brought up by Dyment, and brought into Bussell's; and I believe he did offer me 2*l.* 10*s.*, which I refused.

37,328. Why?—I thought it was not enough.

37,329. For coming here your fare was about 3*s.* 10*d.*, or some such thing, with a return ticket. You expected to be bribed for your vote, and because you were not bribed you imagine you did not vote, when you did; is not that it?—I believe I did vote now.

37,330. You have sworn pretty often you did not vote?—Yes, I did vote.

37,331. Did you get 10*l.* afterwards?—No.

37,332. What did you get?—I do not know that I ever got a penny.

37,333. Who paid your fare?—No one.

37,334. Did you pay it yourself?—I think so.

37,335. Will you swear it?—(No answer.)

37,336. Did not Dyment pay it?—I do not know that he did.

37,337. Well, will you swear that you did?—(No answer.) Well, now, if you really do not try and give us some satisfactory evidence, you must stay here till the Commission has finished; that is the only thing, if you cannot recollect who paid your fare, and so forth?—I had so little to do with elections; I never interfered with them in any shape or form.

37,338. (Mr. Price.) That is not the question, whether you interfered with them or not. The question is, whether you will give us truthful answers or not?—I will give it as near as I can.

37,339. No, you do not give it even near?—I will give it as truthfully as I can.

37,340. Who paid your fare from Tiverton?—I think I paid it myself; I will not be sure.

37,341. Where did you get the money from?—From my own pocket, of course.

37,342. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have committed the grossest perjury. You swore one thing yesterday, and you have sworn another thing to-day; and you swear to-day you voted, only because I show you the poll-sheet?—I really was not aware at the time that I voted for Mr. Bagehot.

37,343. Were you aware that you voted at all?—I was brought up from Tiverton.

37,344. (Mr. Price.) For Bagehot?—For Bagehot.

37,345. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you imagine that you voted the other way, for Mr. Patton?—No. I did not recollect I had voted for Bagehot.

37,346. Did you tell anyone, that unless you were paid more than the 2*l.* you would go and vote for Mr. Patton, or you would not vote at all?—I never uttered the words.

37,347. That you would go and vote for Mr. Patton, or you would not vote at all?—I do not know that I ever said so.

37,348. What time in the day did you vote?—I think it was in the forenoon.

37,349. Then you recollect all about it now?—I recollect the time, now I am reminded of it.

(Mr. Price.) You had better stand down now.

37,350. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you go, what do you say you recollect now?—I recollect the time when he took me into Bussell's parlour and offered me this 2*l.* 10*s.*; but that I went to give a vote, that is the part I do not recollect.

37,351. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say that you voted in the forenoon?—That is the part I do not recollect.

37,351*a*. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, go on?—I must have voted; I must have——

37,352. You were going to say something else?—I must have confounded the two elections together.

37,353. After he offered you the 2*l.* 10*s.* you went and gave your vote. What happened after that?—Well, I went away.

(Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps when you come up again you will recollect a little more. You seem only to recollect by driblets.

WILLIAM MOORE sworn.

W. Moore.

37,354. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A draper.

37,355. Do you carry on business here?—Yes.

37,356. Are you one of the persons who subscribed at the election of 1866?—I was.

37,357. Some money towards the Conservative side?—I was.

37,358. How much?—I do not exactly recollect what the exact amount was, but I think it was somewhere about 30*l.* or 37*l.*; something like that.

37,359. Were you afterwards repaid?—I was afterwards repaid, the next morning.

37,360. Did you receive anything for yourself?—Not a farthing, and never have.

37,361. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you had anything to do with other elections?—Never.

37,362. Never given anybody anything?—Only voted.

37,363. Never given anybody anything?—Never gave anything.

37,364. Nor promised anything?—Nor promised.

37,365. Or ever received anything yourself?—Never received anything myself.

37,366. Before or after?—Before or after. I had some bills.

37,367. What were those?—But they have always been paid me; at the first election of Westropp my bill was 12*l.*

37,368. What for?—For flags.

37,369. (Mr. Price.) When was it paid?—It was paid about two months after. It was settled by a cheque from London; a bank post bill I think it was.

37,370. (Mr. Coleridge.) From whom; from Mr. Tromp?—No, from a party who signed his name "Academicus;" and I sent the receipt for it to a post office.

37,371. Parliament Street?—No, at Hackney, I think. At Patton's first election I had another bill for 25*l.*

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

W. Moore.

7 Oct. 1869.

37,372. What was that for?—Ribbons and flags.

37,373. At election prices?—No. I can show you the bill, and you will find that I only charged 2¼*d.* a yard, the ordinary prices.

37,374. At the next election, had you another bill?—No. Mr. Bealy Smith sent to me after the second election, and he said to me, "Well, Mr. Moore, I have "called about your bill. Mr. Patton does not choose "to pay the whole of the accounts, and he has sent "down a certain amount of money, divide it amongst "yourselves as well as you can." I said, "I think it "is very hard; I have not charged you more than "anybody else; the goods were sent out to you in "plain figures"—as I always do send out goods marked in plain figures—"and I said it is very "hard; I have not charged you more than anybody "else." And he said, "You can have 15*l.*, or have nothing."

37,375. Instead of 25*l.*?—Instead of 25*l.* I said "I am not rich enough to lose the money, but if you "give me 15*l.* I will give you a receipt in full." At the last election I said I would not have anything to do with ribbons, flags, or anything else. Hobbs, I think it was, the shoemaker, came to me on the morning of the last election, and he said, "I want a flag;" and I said, "You cannot have one unless you pay for it." He said, "Oh, very well, I want to fly it on my ship;" I think he is a shipowner; and he said, "I will pay you for it."

37,376. And did he have it?—Yes.

37,377. (Mr. Anstey.) How did you happen to get only 25*l.* at Westropp's election instead of 50*l.* that you got at Patton's election?—Westropp's bill was 12*l.* 8*s.*

37,378. And how much was Mr. Patton's bill, the two elections?—25*l.*

37,379. I thought you said it was 50*l.*?—Oh no.

J. Temblett.

JAMES TEMBLETT, senior, sworn.

37,380. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am not doing anything now.

37,381. What did you ever do here?—I used to keep an inn.

37,382. What inn?—The "Bull and Butcher."

37,383. Are you one of those who subscribed any money at Patton and Bagehot's election?—No.

37,384. Then what have you come here to prove?—Well, until the gentleman puts the questions to me I do not know what I am going to prove.

37,385. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the first election you ever voted?—Well, about 30 years ago.

37,386. What were you then?—I voted for the two Conservatives.

37,387. What did you get for it?—I believe it was Broadwood and Forman.

37,388. What did you get for it?—I got 10*l.*

37,389. Thirty years ago, in Broadwood and somebody else's election, you got 10*l.*; whose election was it? Broadwood and Leader?—Broadwood and Forman.

37,390. Who gave you the 10*l.*?—A man named Oliver.

37,391. Is he alive?—No.

37,392. Then the next election: what was the next election at which you voted?—Who was the candidate, sir, at that time?

37,393. The next one to Broadwood and Forman?—That would be Broadwood and Tynte.

37,394. Yes, Broadwood and Tynte; how did you vote then: for Mr. Broadwood?—Then I voted for Broadwood and Tynte.

37,395. One and one?—I split my vote.

37,396. What did you get then?—Nothing.

37,397. On neither side?—On neither side.

37,398. Before or after?—No.

37,399. Then the next time was in 1852: Follett, Mansell, Tynte, Lord Henley, and Kinglake; for whom did you vote then?—I voted for the Conservatives and Mr. Follett.

37,400. Follett and Mansell you voted for?—Yes.

37,401. Not for Tynte?—For Tynte; I did vote for him.

37,402. You voted for Tynte and Follett?—For Tynte and Follett.

37,403. What did you get that time?—I got nothing.

37,404. No promise?—No promise.

37,405. Nothing at all?—Not until three weeks after the election.

37,406. What did you get then?—Then a man came and shook hands with me, and dropped a 5*l.* note in my hand; and I said, "Here is something you have left behind." He said, "Never mind about that; that is something for yourself."

37,407. Then the next election in 1857: Follett, Tynte, and Kinglake; for whom did you vote then?—I split my vote twice.

37,408. For Tynte and Follett?—For Tynte and Follett.

37,409. What did you get then?—Nothing at all.

37,410. Nothing at all?—No.

37,411. No promise?—No.

37,412. Then we come to the notorious election of Padwick, Westropp, Tynte, and Kinglake; whom did you vote for then?—Padwick and Westropp.

37,413. What did you get then?—10*l.*

37,414. From whom?—Murlis.

37,415. What was the reason you let Tynte drop out that time?—The reason is this: he came in to solicit my vote, and I said to him, "The other day you voted for the ballot;" he said, "Yes." I said, "I don't, and I don't support you."

37,416. And that, coupled with the 10*l.*, made you vote for Padwick, of whom you knew nothing, and Mr. Westropp, of whom you knew less?—I promised Mr. Westropp I would vote for him, and I always voted for the Conservatives.

37,417. In 1865, Westropp, Kinglake, and Shelley; whom did you vote for then?—I voted for Mr. Westropp.

37,418. What did you get then?—Nothing at all.

37,419. Nothing at all?—No.

37,420. After the election?—Nothing at all.

37,421. Did you get anything for your expenses?—I kept an inn.

37,422. There was treating at your house?—There were a good many people there, certainly.

37,423. What did your bill amount to?—It amounted to about 20*l.*

37,424. To whom did you send it?—To the lawyers.

37,425. Mr. Smith?—Mr. Smith.

37,426. And he paid it?—No, he did not pay it.

37,427. Who did pay it?—One of the strangers.

37,428. Did he pay you the whole of it?—I think the bill was 22*l.*, and he paid me 20*l.*

37,429. (Mr. Anstey.) You were not employed at that election to distribute money?—No, sir, I never was.

37,430. Come! it was a very important house, the "Bull and Butcher." Do you remember Mr. Lilly being there?—No, I never saw him there.

37,431. Not at your house?—Not at all.

37,432. Do you remember Heal being there, and Veysey, that day?—No, neither one of them.

37,433. Hayward?—No.

37,434. You must be very careful, you know?—Well, at election time I was busy in my bar. I had got very little to do with the business, more than attending to my bar.

37,435. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then he might have been there without your seeing him?—He might; the house was full.

37,436. (Mr. Anstey.) You are the father of the baker?—I am.

37,437. And your name is very frequently mentioned, and your inn, too, in the proceedings before the House of Commons, and we have had it very frequently mentioned here?—Well, the men were polled therefrom.

37,438. Just so; a great number were polled therefrom. How did they go from your house; a large number together?—No, they went away as they chose.

37,439. You do not say they went up without somebody to show them the way?—No; I suppose they went away as they chose.

37,440. Some of them were drunk, were they not?—No, not that I know of.

37,441. You must know, as you were in the bar?—There was one man I know, who was paid, and he was lopping about after he was paid; something of that kind, and Bussell said, "Why do not you go to poll?"

37,442. Robert Bussell?—Robert Bussell; and he said, "Why do not you go to poll?" and the man began to swear awfully.

37,443. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was his name?—Thomas Gane, at the "Cock."

37,444. (Mr. Anstey.) Did anybody send him up to poll?—No, he did not go to poll; he would not go.

37,445. Did not your party take care that the men who had had their money should go up to poll at once?—He went away, and after that I heard he had been to poll for the Radicals.

37,446. I am not asking you about that. I want to know, when your party saw that man was playing them false, did not they take care that the others who had had the money went up to the poll?—No.

37,447. Some kept their promise, and some did not?—Yes, and some kept lopping about.

37,448. How many were paid in your house on that day?—I cannot say.

37,449. They went upstairs?—Yes.

37,450. (Mr. Coleridge.) And none of them returned empty handed that went up?—There was victuals and drink for them.

37,451. And money?—I never saw them have money.

37,452. (Mr. Anstey.) How many were in your inn drunk that day?—Well, everybody has customers who get drunk, as far as that goes. I do not know.

37,453. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the first election in 1866, when Patton and Bagehot were the candidates there, for whom did you vote?—For Patton.

37,454. What did you get?—Nothing at all.

37,455. Something between that and the next election?—Nothing at all.

37,456. Nothing at all?—From neither of them.

37,457. At the second election in 1866, for whom did you vote?—For Patton.

37,458. And what did you get then?—Nothing at all.

37,459. Nor afterwards?—No.

37,460. No bill?—Oh, yes, a bill.

37,461. How much was your bill at Patton and Bagehot's election?—Over 20*l.*

37,462. Who paid it?—It was not paid till after the last election.

37,463. Of Mr. Vanderbyl's?—Not for nine months after that.

37,464. Who paid it?—Mr. Smith's clerk.

37,465. How much was your bill in Vanderbyl's election?—Well, about 25*l.*

37,466. That was paid, too?—That was paid about nine months afterwards.

37,467. Of course you felt bound to vote the way your bill was paid?—I was always a Conservative, only I split my vote. It was for Tynte, he being a neighbouring gentleman.

37,468. For whom did you vote at the last election?—I voted for the Conservatives.

37,469. What did you get then?—Nothing at all.

37,470. What was your bill?—At the last election?

37,471. Yes.—That was in 1868, was it not?

37,472. Yes. What did you get then?—I was not in a public-house then. I had been out of a public-house 18 months.

37,473. Did you not get anything else?—Nothing at all.

37,474. Nothing at all?—No.

37,475. Besides these bills for treating, how much have you received altogether for your vote in your lifetime?—25*l.*

37,476. Are you related to the Bussells?—That is my son-in-law.

37,477. Who is?—Robert Bussell. I wish to state one word. There was 10*l.* which was paid to a man named John Webber at Mr. Patton's last election, and at about 5 or 6 o'clock in the evening he came back to me, and said, "I have not voted for your party." I said, "How is that?" Then he said, "I was obliged "to vote on the other side, or else I should have been "turned out of my land that I rent under Mr. "Thompson, and I will return you the money again."

37,478. (Mr. Price.) Is that Mr. Thompson, the ironmonger, the Quaker?—Yes, I suppose so; I did not ask him the question. He said it was Mr. Thompson, and he returned me the 10*l.*, and when my son came in I said, "Here is Webber brought back the 10*l.*, and gave it to me." He said, "You had better "mention that to the committee, and keep that, as "they have not paid your first bill. You had better "keep that in part of the bill." I kept that as part of the bill, and it was deducted out of the bill when they paid me.

37,479. (Mr. Price.) What is the christian name of that Webber?—John Webber.

37,480. Where does he live?—John's Gate.

(Mr. Price.) He ought to be known; when a man voted under undue influence, and gets a bribe on the other side for his vote and returns that bribe, his name ought to be published to the world.

ELIAB CANN sworn.

E. Cann.

37,481. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A millwright by trade.

37,482. Are you a voter?—Yes.

37,483. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

37,484. How did you vote?—For the Conservatives.

37,485. Did you get anything for it?—No.

37,486. Had you any bill or any expenses paid you?—No, never.

37,487. (Mr. Coleridge.) Any promise?—No.

37,488. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the election before, when Mr. Vanderbyl came down, in 1866?—I had better begin at the beginning.

37,489. Will you answer my question: did you vote at Patton and Vanderbyl's contest?—Yes.

37,490. How did you vote?—As a Conservative.

37,491. Did you get anything for it?—Yes.

37,492. How much?—10*l.*

37,493. Who from?—Jarvis. That is the second election of Patton's?

37,494. Yes. Did you vote at the first election of Patton's?—Yes.

37,495. How did you vote then?—Conservative.

37,496. What did you get then?—10*l.*

37,497. From whom?—I do not know; a stranger.

37,498. Where did you get it?—At the "Red Lion" inn.

37,499. Who keeps the house?—Pim kept it then.

37,500. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who told you to go there and get it?—Nobody.

37,501. Then how came you to go there?—Because I saw others going there, and I went with the stream.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

E. Cann.

7 Oct. 1869.

37,502. Did you ever get paid by both sides at any election?—No, never.

37,503. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for the Conservatives at the last election with the expectation of getting money, if there was money going after the election?—No.

37,504. (Mr. Coleridge.) If there had been money going at the "Red Lion" inn, I suppose you would have gone in for a part of the swag?—I cannot say anything about that.

37,505. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote on the promise that there would be money after the election?—Certainly not. I would not believe any man's promise.

37,506. In 1865 did you vote?—Whose election was that?

37,507. The second time Mr. Westropp came?—Yes.

37,508. How did you vote?—For Mr. Westropp.

37,509. Did you get anything then?—No; but there is a circumstance I shall have to mention to you.

37,510. Well, tell us the circumstance?—Some time before one of the elections, it is either Patton's first or second election, Mr. Temblett called on me, and said, "You have not been paid for the last election." I did not know him from Adam; but I was working at that time at Highbridge, and I only came to Bridgwater on Saturday nights, and went away Monday mornings. He said, "You were not paid for the last election." I said "No."

37,511. Did that mean the election of Mr. Westropp?—I understood it as much. I am not certain about that. I believe he gave me 10*l.*; 5*l.* or 10*l.*; either of those sums; I cannot be certain.

37,512. You got 10*l.*; therefore, if it was in respect of that election, you have had 10*l.* at each of the three elections except the last?—Yes.

37,513. Did you vote in 1859?—No; you have the list there.

37,514. Padwick and Westropp were the candidates?—No, I do not think you will find I voted then. I think the first time I voted was at Mr. Follett's first election.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Follett's was before that.

37,515. (Mr. Price.) Long before that. Did you get anything at Follett's election?—No.

37,516. What other money did you get at any other election?—I do not think I voted at any other election.

37,517. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much have you had altogether in your life for your vote?—30*l.*; 25*l.* or 30*l.*; no more than that.

(Mr. Coleridge) That is quite enough.

I. Drake.

ISAAC DRAKE sworn.

37,518. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a machine worker.

37,519. Who do you work for?—Hennett and Spink.

37,520. Are you a voter?—Yes.

37,521. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,522. For whom?—Westropp and Gray.

37,523. Did you get anything?—Not a farthing.

37,524. Did you vote under any expectation of getting money?—No, not at all.

37,525. Did you vote under any influence of Messrs. Hennett and Spink?—No.

37,526. Did they canvass you for your vote?—No.

37,527. Did they ask you how you were going to vote?—No.

37,528. Did you vote at any previous election?—Three times.

37,529. In the election in 1866, the one before that, whom did you vote for then?—Patton.

37,530. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,531. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,532. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you get it?—At the "Golden Lion."

37,533. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the first election, 1866?—Yes.

37,534. For Mr. Patton?—Yes.

37,535. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,536. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,537. Go back and tell us of any other election at which you voted, and what you were paid?—In 1865.

37,538. For whom did you vote?—Westropp.

37,539. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,540. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,541. 1859, had you a vote?—No, I had no vote.

37,542. How often have you been paid by both sides?—No, I was never paid by the other side.

37,543. Has nobody ever offered you money on the other side?—No.

37,544. Did Bussell never offer you money?—No.

T. Gardener.

THOMAS GARDENER sworn.

37,545. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

37,546. Are you a voter?—Yes.

37,547. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,548. How did you vote?—I voted for Mr. Westropp.

37,549. Mr. Westropp alone?—Yes.

37,550. How much did you get for it?—Nothing.

37,551. Had you any promise made to you by anybody?—No.

37,552. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you plump for Mr. Westropp, instead of voting for Westropp and Gray?—I did vote for both of them.

37,553. You told us you voted for Westropp only.

37,554. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the election before that of 1866?—Yes.

37,555. For whom did you vote?—Mr. Patton.

37,556. What did you get for it?—10*l.*

37,557. From whom?—Mr. Jarvis.

37,558. Did you vote at the early election in 1866, the first election?—Yes.

37,559. For whom did you vote then?—Patton.

37,560. What did you get then?—10*l.*

37,561. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,562. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

37,563. For whom?—Westropp.

37,564. What did you get then?—10*l.*

37,565. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,566. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1859?—No.

37,567. That is your first time?—My first time.

37,568. Have you never got any money from the other side too?—No; they never offered it to me.

H. Harris.

HENRY HARRIS sworn.

37,569. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tinman.

37,570. Carrying on business on your own account?—Yes.

37,571. In this place?—Yes; Eastover.

37,572. Are you a voter?—Yes.

37,573. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,574. How did you vote?—I voted for Westropp and Kinglake.

37,575. Did you get anything for your vote?—Nothing from neither side, nor no promise.

37,576. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you split your vote?—I think all through, you will find, from the first election in 1865, the first time I voted, that I have always split my vote, down to the last election.

37,577. (Mr. Price.) That is when there has been two candidates; but when there has been only one candidate, as in the elections of 1866, how did you vote?—At Patton's first election I gave him the preference; I voted for Mr. Patton.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

H. Harris.

7 Oct. 1869.

37,578. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for it?—10*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) That was the reason of the preference.

37,579. (Mr. Price.) From whom?—Frederick Jarman.

37,580. Did you vote for Mr. Patton in his second election?—For Mr. Vanderbyl.

37,581. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—I got 10*l.* from Charles Collins at the "Queen's Head."

37,582. You were paid on both sides then?—No.

37,583. When were you paid on both sides?—At neither one at all.

37,584. In 1865 how did you vote; did you split your vote then?—Westropp and Shelley.

37,585. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—Well, I got 5*l.* on Westropp's side, but nothing on the other. Sir John told me that I should not go unrewarded, but what he meant by that I cannot tell.

37,586. (Mr. Anstey.) When did he tell you that?—When he called and thanked me for my vote.

37,587. That was in his canvass?—No, that was after the defeat.

37,588. After the election?—Yes.

37,589. On the same day?—He called in.

37,590. Was that on the same day?—No, the day after the election. He was defeated of course.

37,591. (Mr. Price.) Did you say he called on you?—Yes, he did.

37,592. He took the trouble to call on you and thank you for your vote, and say you should not go unrewarded?—Yes; the meaning of it I cannot tell.

37,593. (Mr. Coleridge.) At that time you expected to be paid on both sides?—No.

37,594. But you had been paid on one side, and you thought that you would be paid by the other?—No.

37,595. (Mr. Anstey.) And you were paid 5*l.*, which was only half the price of the vote, and you looked to Sir John Shelley for the other half?—No. I was never told I should have anything. It was the evening after the election day that the 5*l.* was brought to my house.

37,596. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much have you received altogether in your life?—30*l.*

37,597. What have you received at other times after the election?—Nothing.

37,598. Were you not paid something after the election in 1866, some time after Mr. Patton's?—Oh, yes; Bussell gave me 5*l.*

37,599. Then why did you not recollect that before; that makes 35*l.*?—No, 30*l.*

37,600. (Mr. Anstey.) That makes up the 30*l.* you have just stated?—Yes.

37,601. (Mr. Price.) When Sir John Shelley came to tell you this, had you before that complained to the other side that you had not had any money?—No.

37,602. Then, as far as you know, he knew nothing about your expecting 5*l.* from the other side?—No, I do not believe that he did.

37,603. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you get the 5*l.* from the other side?—Which side?

37,604. Westropp's?—Why, the night after the election.

37,605. (Mr. Anstey.) When did Sir John Shelley call on you and tell you that you should not go unrewarded?—I think it was the day after the election.

37,606. Which took place first, his calling upon you, or your getting the money from the other side the same day; did they happen the same day?—Very like it might. Sir John Shelley might have called on me in the morning, and I might have had this in the morning.

37,607. Did the other side know that Sir John Shelley had told you you should not go unrewarded?—No.

37,608. Did you tell the other side?—No, I did not. I never mentioned it—never.

37,609. Did the other side ever hear that Sir John Shelley had told you you should not go unrewarded?—Not that I am aware of.

HENRY DUNN sworn.

H. Dunn.

37,610. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A foreman of the fitting department at Hennett and Spink's.

37,611. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,612. You voted for Westropp and Gray?—I did.

37,613. Did you get anything for it?—No.

37,614. Were you promised anything?—No.

37,615. Were you canvassed by your employers, or induced by them in any way to vote for their side?—No, I was not induced in any way at all.

37,616. Had they spoken to you about your vote?—No. There were placards stuck up, which told the men to vote which way they pleased.

37,617. Did you vote at the election before, Patton and Vanderbyl's election?—I did.

37,618. For whom did you vote then?—For Patton.

37,619. Did you get anything?—I did.

37,620. How much?—10*l.*

37,621. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,622. Did you vote at the other election of Patton in 1866?—Yes.

37,623. For Patton?—For Patton.

37,624. Did you get anything?—Yes.

37,625. How much?—10*l.*

37,626. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,627. In 1865 did you vote?—Yes.

37,628. For whom did you vote?—Westropp.

37,629. And what did you get?—5*l.*

37,630. How was it you only got 5*l.*?—I do not know.

37,631. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything more after the election?—No.

37,632. (Mr. Price.) Any promise or anything?—No.

37,633. Did you vote in 1859?—No, that was my first vote in 1865.

37,634. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you ever paid anything by the other side?—No; I never had anything to do with them.

THOMAS BRAWLEY sworn.

T. Brawley.

37,635. What are you?—Foreman of the smiths.

37,636. At Hennett and Spink's?—Yes.

37,637. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,638. For whom?—Westropp and Gray.

37,639. Did you get anything?—No.

37,640. Any promise?—No.

37,641. Did you vote freely?—Yes.

37,642. Did you vote at the second election of 1866, Patton's election?—Yes.

37,643. For whom did you vote?—Patton.

37,644. Did you get anything?—Yes.

37,645. How much?—10*l.*

37,646. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,647. Did you vote in the first election of that year?—Yes.

37,648. For whom?—Patton.

37,649. Tell us what you got then?—5*l.* from Jarvis, 10*l.* from Gough, and 5*l.* from Harden.

37,650. Then you had 20*l.*?—20*l.*

37,651. How was that?—Because I had it from the Liberals, and did not vote for them.

37,652. You kept the money?—I did, like a brick.

37,653. Do not talk in that way. "Like a brick," indeed?—They turned out Westropp for bribery, and that is why I did it.

(Mr. Anstey.) I think it is a very disrespectful expression to use in a case like the present.

(The witness said something in an undertone.)

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

T. Brawley.

7 Oct. 1869.

37,654. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you say?—I did not say anything. I do not say anything until I am asked.

37,655–6. You said something then?—No, I did not.

37,657. Did you vote in 1865?—I did.

37,658. For whom?—Westropp.

37,659. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,660. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,661. Did you get anything the other side then?—No.

37,662. In 1859, did you get anything then?—No, I had not a vote.

W. Sellar.

William Sellar sworn.

37,663. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

37,664. Where do you work?—Down at Hennett and Spinks's foundry.

37,665. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,666. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

37,667. Did you get anything for it?—No, not a farthing.

37,668. Were you promised anything?—No.

37,669. Did your masters canvass you for your vote?—No, neither one of them.

37,670. Or the foremen?—No.

37,671. At the second election in 1866, did you vote?—Yes.

37,672. How?—For Mr. Patton.

37,673. Did you get anything?—Yes.

37,674. How much did you get?—10*l.*

37,675. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,676. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes.

37,677. For whom?—I voted for Patton again, and got 10*l.* again from Jarvis.

37,678. Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

37,679. In 1865 did you vote?—Yes.

37,680. Go on, and tell us whom you voted for?—I voted for Westropp, and received 10*l.* from Edwin Bryant in Eastover.

37,681. Did you get anything from the other side then?—No.

37,682. In 1859 did you vote?—Yes.

37,683. For whom?—Padwick and Westropp.

37,684. Did you get anything?—I received 10*l.* from Mr. James Bryant, who is dead.

37,685. In 1857 did you vote?—No.

37,686. You had no vote before 1859?—No.

37,687. Have you ever had anything in your life from the Liberals?—No.

37,688. Never got paid on both sides, like the man who was in the box just now.

H. Green.

Henry Green sworn.

37,689. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A dairyman.

37,690. Where do you work?—Here in the town.

37,691. Are you a voter?—Yes.

37,692. Give us the history of your last vote?

37,693. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote last time?—Yes.

37,694. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

37,695. Whom did you vote for?—Westropp and Gray.

37,696. Were you promised anything?—Not a farthing.

37,697. In the election of 1866, Vanderbyl and Patton, what did you get?—15*l.*

37,698. How did you vote?—For Westropp and——

37,699. No, no, he was not a candidate then. There were only two in 1866. There was nobody but Patton and Vanderbyl. For whom did you vote?—Mr. Patton.

37,700. You got 15*l.*?—15*l.*

37,701. From whom?—I had it at the "Bull and Butcher."

37,702. Who gave it to you?—It was handed out of a room to me.

37,703. By a stranger?—Yes.

37,704. Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

37,705. At the first election, Patton and Bagehot, did you get anything?—Yes.

37,706. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,707. You voted for Mr. Patton?—Yes.

37,708. Who gave it to you?—That was at the "Bull and Butcher."

37,709. That was a stranger too?—Yes.

37,710. In 1865, whom did you vote for?—I had no vote.

37,711. 1866 was your first vote. You voted three times, and got 25*l.* for your vote?—I voted in 1852; I voted for Tynte and Lord Henley.

37,712. Did you get anything then?—Nothing.

37,713. From neither side?—No.

37,714. How came you afterwards to turn round from being a Liberal to being a Conservative?—At that time I kept a public-house, and Mr. Haslam and others came to me, and advised me to let go some drink.

37,715. You had a treating bill in Tynte and Lord Henley's election?—Yes.

37,716. How much did it amount to?—It ran about 8*l.* or 9*l.*

37,717. Who paid it?—I never had it.

37,718. Whom did you look to for it?—I thought Mr. Foister would have paid it.

37,719. How came you not to vote between 1852 and 1865?—I had no vote.

37,720. You had no vote?—My father-in-law at the time was the householder.

37,721. What is his name?—John Bryant.

37,722. Is he alive?—Yes, but very old.

37,723. He was paid instead of you at all those elections?—I cannot tell. He is very old.

37,724. (Mr. Price.) Is he the man who was called just now "John Bryant the elder, a seafaring man?"—Oh, no; that man is dead.

37,725. (Mr. Anstey.) Did they come to you about his vote?—No.

37,726. Had you anything to do with those elections when you had no vote?—No, nothing whatever.

37,727. As agent?—Oh, no. I was a labouring man at that time.

R. Saunders.

Robert Saunders sworn.

37,728. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A blacksmith.

37,729. Do you work for yourself?—No.

37,730. For whom do you work?—Hennett and Spink.

37,731. Are you a voter?—Yes.

37,732. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

37,733. How did you vote?—I voted for the Liberals.

37,734. What did you get?—Not a farthing.

37,735. Did you vote at the second election in 1866?—Yes, I voted.

37,736. For whom did you vote?—Mr. Patton.

37,737. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,738. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you change from a Conservative to a Liberal on the occasion of the last election?—I will tell you. As soon as the placard was issued down at our works, I went with goodwill; I went according to my principles.

37,739. You mean your principles were Liberal?—Yes.

37,740. How was it you were compelled to go against your principles before?—I received 10*l.*

37,741. You say this last time you went with your will?—Yes.

37,742. Before that you went against your principles for 10*l.*?—I will tell you. I did not do it from selfish motives, as I may call it, but it is what you may call a "blue" yard, or at least all the voters were Conservatives, or nearly so; and that was the reason I voted the same way as they did, and no other reason at all.

37,743. And the 10*l.* too?—Well, I daresay.

37,744. If you had been offered 10*l.* with your will, should you have gone with your will?—(No answer.)

37,745. Did the Liberals offer you anything?—No.

37,746. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at Mr. Patton's first election?—Yes.

37,747. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—10*l.*

37,748. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,749. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

37,750. For whom?—For Mr. Westropp.

37,751. What did you get then?—10*l.*

37,752. From whom?—From Jarvis.

37,753. Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

37,754. Did you ever vote at any election before that?—No, I had no vote.

37,755. You got three 10*l.*?—Yes.

37,756. You got three tens for voting against your principles, and nothing when you voted with your goodwill?—Yes.

37,756*a*. (Mr. Anstey.) You voted Conservative at three elections previous to the last?—Yes.

37,757. And you say at the last election you went for the Liberals?—I did.

37,758. Had your employers said anything about that?—No, not a word, never.

37,759. Did they ask you to vote for the Conservatives?—Never in their lives.

GEORGE HOLLAND sworn. G. Holland.

37,760. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A smith.

37,761. Where do you work?—I work for myself. I am my own master at present.

37,762. Are you a voter?—Yes.

37,763. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,764. How?—For Westropp and Gray.

37,765. Did you get anything?—Not at all.

37,766. Promises or anything?—Not at all.

37,767. Employment in any way whatever?—No.

37,768. Were you employed in any way whatever?—No.

37,769. Did you vote at the second contest in 1866?—Yes.

37,770. How?—I voted for Mr. Patton.

37,771. How much did you get?—10*l.*

37,772. From whom?—From Jarvis.

37,773. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything from the other side in that election?—No.

37,774. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the first election in 1866?—Yes.

37,775. How?—For Mr. Patton.

37,776. Were you paid anything?—Yes.

37,777. How much?—10*l.*

37,778. From whom?—Heal.

37,779. (Mr. Anstey.) William Heal?—Yes.

37,780. Did you get anything from the other side on that occasion?—Never.

37,781. (Mr. Price.) In 1865 did you vote?—Yes.

37,782. For whom?—Mr. Westropp.

37,783. Did you get anything?—Yes.

37,784. How much?—10*l.*

37,785. From whom?—Temblett.

37,786. (Mr. Anstey.) The innkeeper, or the baker?—Yes.

37,787. Which of them?—The baker.

37,788. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1859?—Yes.

37,789. How?—Westropp and Gray.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No. That was Padwick, Westropp, Tynte, and Kinglake.

(Mr. Price.) Padwick and Westropp were the two Conservative candidates.

37,790. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had no vote in 1859, had you?—Yes.

37,791. When Padwick and Westropp were the Conservatives?—At least I had no vote at that time.

37,792. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever vote before 1865?—That was the first vote.

JOHN JOBSON sworn. J. Jobson.

37,793. What are you?—A railway labourer.

37,794. Do you work at the railway works here?—Yes.

37,795. Are you a voter?—Yes.

37,796. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

37,797. Did you get anything for it?—Nothing at all.

37,798. Did you get any promise?—Nothing whatever.

37,799. Was anything said to you about your vote who employed you at the railway, by any of those whom you work under?—Not at the last election.

37,800. Did you vote at the second election of 1866?—Yes.

37,801. For whom?—Mr. Vanderbyl.

37,802. How was it you voted for Mr. Vanderbyl?—I was persuaded through my inspector, Mr. Robert Garrett, to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl.

37,803. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did Garrett say to you?—He kept on canvassing me day after day, every time he came near me, a week before the election.

37,804. Did he say he would discharge you if you did not?—Oh no, nothing of the kind.

37,805. You had some other inducement of the kind, had you not?—15*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) I thought so.

37,806. (Mr. Price.) Did he tell you he would get you money if you voted for Mr. Vanderbyl?—He said he would get what he could for me if I would vote for Mr. Vanderbyl.

37,807. He said he would get what he could for you?—Yes.

37,808. What did he get for you?—15*l.* He got it from Mr. Andrew Allan.

(Mr. Anstey.) How did you know he got it from Mr. Andrew Allan?—(No answer.)

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

37,809. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything about Garrett?—Yes. Garrett paid this witness 10*l.* at Vanderbyl's election.

JOHN JOBSON recalled. J. Jobson.

37,810. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at Patton's first election in 1866?—Yes.

37,811. For whom did you vote?—I voted for Mr. Patton.

37,812. Did you get anything?—Yes.

37,813. From whom?—Frederick Jarman, Barclay Street.

37,814. Did you get anything from the other side?—Nothing.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

J. Jobson.

7 Oct. 1869.

37,815. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

37,816. For whom?—Mr. Westropp.

37,817. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,818. From whom?—I did not know the man. I had it from the "Goldon Lion," in St. John Street.

37,819. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get anything from the other side at that election?—Nothing.

37,820. Did you vote in 1859?—No. That was my first vote.

37,821. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you ever paid by both sides at any election?—Never.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

37,822. (Mr. Price.) Is that the Garrett we have had here, the inspector of platelayers?—Yes, that is the man. I do not know whether the witness did get the money, but Garrett had the money from me to pay him with.

C. Dyer.

CHARLES DYER sworn.

37,823. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I do not do anything.

37,824. What used you to be?—I used to be a dairyman.

37,825. How did you vote at the last election?—For Westropp and Gray.

37,826. Did you get anything for it?—No.

37,827. Any promise?—No.

37,828. Did you vote at the second election in 1866?—Yes.

37,829. How did you vote?—For Mr. Patton.

37,830. How much did you get?—10*l.*

37,831. Did you vote for Mr. Patton?—Yes.

37,832. Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

37,833. (Mr. Anstey.) Who gave you the 10*l.*?—I do not know.

37,834. (Mr. Price.) Where did you get it?—The "Bull and Butcher."

37,835. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

37,836. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the first contest of Mr. Patton's in 1866?—Yes.

37,837. How did you vote?—For Mr. Patton.

37,838. How much did you get?—10*l.*

37,839. From whom?—The same as I had it from before.

37,840. Did you vote in 1865?—I did not have a vote in 1865.

37,841. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever have a vote before?—No.

37,842. Then the first time you had a vote was in 1866?—No.

37,843. (Mr. Anstey.) What relation are you to Ambrose Dyer?—No relation at all.

R. Prole.

ROBERT PROLE sworn.

37,844. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I keep an inn.

37,845. What inn?—The "Sheep Market" inn, Fryern Street.

37,846. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,847. How?—For Westropp and Gray.

37,848. Did you get anything?—No.

37,849. Had you any bill for treating?—No; in no shape nor form.

37,850. Had you any oustanding bill at a former election?—No. At a former election?

37,851. Yes. Had you any outstanding bill last time, for any former election, unpaid?—Not at all.

37,852. (Mr. Anstey.) Was your house open for treating at the last election?—No.

37,853. (Mr. Price.) How did you vote at the second contest of Mr. Patton's in 1866?—I voted for Mr. Patton.

37,854. What did you get?—10*l.* at each election.

37,855. From whom?—Jarvis.

37,856. Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

37,857. Did you keep an inn at the time of those elections?—I did.

37,858. Was it open for treating?—A band was sent to play outside my house, and I supplied them with drink. My bill came to 1*l.* 15*s.*; that was the second election.

37,859. 1*l.* 15*s.*?—I believe it was 1*l.* 15*s.* They did not come into the house; they stopped at the door.

37,860. Did you get it paid?—Yes.

37,861. Was the 1*l.* 15*s.* for the band?—Yes, for drink. They stopped at the door; they did not come into the house.

37,862. Did they consume 1*l.* 15*s.* worth of drink?—Yes. They did not come in.

37,863. Did you vote in 1865?—No, I did not. That was my first vote at the election of Patton's.

37,864. Had you ever anything from the other side?—No, sir, I never have.

C. Jefferies.

CHARLES JEFFERIES sworn.

37,865. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a baker by trade.

37,866. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,867. How did you vote?—I voted for Westropp and Gray.

37,868. Did you get anything?—Nothing at all.

37,869. Any promise?—No promise.

37,870. Did you vote at the second contest of 1866?—Yes.

37,871. How did you vote?—For Mr. Patton.

37,872. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,873. From whom?—I think it was at the "Bull and Butcher;" but I did not see anyone. The door was open.

37,874. Did you vote at the first contest in 1866?—Yes.

37,875. Tell us about it?—I got 10*l.* then.

37,876. Whom did you vote for then?—I voted for Westropp and——

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, 1866.

37,877. (Mr. Price.) Patton and Bagehot?—No, I did not vote for Bagehot.

37,878. For Patton?—Yes.

37,879. Whom did you get the 10*l.* from then?—I got it at the same place.

37,880. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get any money at either of those elections from the other side?—I did not.

37,881. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

37,882. How?—For the Conservatives.

37,883. How much did you get?—I had 5*l.*

37,884. From whom?—I think it was from Mr. Smith.

37,885. How was it you only had 5*l.*?—It was brought to me, and I willingly took it.

37,886. (Mr. Coleridge.) What Mr. Smith is that?—It was brought from Mr. Smith to my house.

37,887. Who brought it?—I think it was old Mr. Smith.

37,888. What, the attorney?—Richard Smith.

37,889. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1859?—I did.

37,890. For Padwick and Westropp?—I did.

37,891. What did you get then?—10*l.*

37,892. From whom?—From old John Murlis.

37,892*a*. Did you vote in 1857?—No. I do not recollect anything about it. I do not think I did.

37,893. Did you ever vote before 1859 at any election?—I have no recollection whatever.

37,894. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you did vote, did you get anything for it?—Never.

37,895. How much have you got in all?—I think I have had 35*l.* in all amongst the lot.

37,896. You have told us of more than that?—I have told you exactly what I have had.

37,897. (Mr. Price.) Three tens and a five?—Certainly; that is it.

WILLIAM BAKER sworn. W. Baker.

37,898. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A shoemaker.

37,899. Do you work for yourself?—Yes.

37,900. A master man?—Yes.

37,901. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

37,902. Did you get anything?—No.

37,903. Had you any bill for anything?—No.

37,904. How did you vote the election before?—For Mr. Patton.

37,905. What did you get?—10*l.*

37,906. From whom?—Mr. Jarman, the baker.

37,907. Did you get anything from the other side then?—No.

37,908. Did you vote at the other election?—Yes.

37,909. For whom?—Mr. Patton.

37,910. How much?—10*l.*

37,911. From whom?—Mr. Jarman.

37,912. Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

37,913. Did you vote at the previous election in 1865?—Yes.

37,914. For whom?—Westropp.

37,915. What did you get?—10*l.*, from William Heal.

37,916. In 1859 did you vote?—Yes.

37,917. For whom?—Padwick and Westropp.

37,918. Did you get anything?—I had 10*l.* from John Murlis.

37,919. Did you vote in 1857?—Yes, for Tynte and Follett.

37,920. Did you get anything?—Not a farthing.

37,921. How did you vote then; for the Conservatives?—No. My landlord was living in the house, and he was a Liberal, and he asked me to vote for his party, and I did so.

37,922. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not he give you anything?—No, not a farthing.

HENRY COOKSLEY sworn. H. Cooksley.

37,923. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

37,924. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

37,925. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

37,926. What did you get?—Nothing.

37,927. Any promise?—No.

37,928. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes.

37,929. For whom did you vote?—For Mr. Patton.

37,930. How much did you get?—10*l.*

37,931. Where from?—Mr. Frederick Jarman.

37,932. The election before that?—The same, from Mr. Jarman.

37,933. You voted the same?—Yes.

37,934. Did you get anything from the other side at either of those elections?—No.

37,935. In 1865 did you vote?—Yes.

37,936. For whom?—For Mr. Westropp.

37,937. How much did you get?—10*l.*

37,938. Where did you get it from?—From the "Red Lion."

37,939. Did you vote in 1859?—No. That was my first vote.

HENRY MAIDMENT sworn. H. Maidment.

37,940. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A dairyman.

37,941. How did you vote at the last election?—For Westropp and Gray.

37,942. Did you get anything?—No.

37,943. Any promise?—No.

37,944. How did you vote at the election before that?—Mr. Patton, both times.

37,945. How much each time?—10*l.*

37,946. (Mr. Coleridge.) From whom?—Jarman.

37,947. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything from the other side either time?—Never.

37,948. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

37,949. How?—Mr. Westropp.

37,950. How much?—Nothing.

37,951. No promise?—No.

37,952. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to get nothing?—I had 10*l.* for voting the time before.

37,953. At Padwick's election?—Yes.

37,954. How came you to get nothing in 1865?—I thought it was due to him to vote for him again.

37,955. Did they never offer you anything?—No; they never asked me.

37,956. Did the other side?—No.

37,957. Who gave you the 10*l.* in Padwick's election?—Old Mr. Bussell.

37,958. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean that old Mr. Bussell gave you the money in 1859?—In 1859; yes, sir.

37,959. Then had he by that time gone over to the Conservative side?—I do not know.

(Mr. Anstey.) I suppose he had.

37,960. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever vote before that?—No.

THOMAS CLAXTON sworn. T. Claxton.

37,961. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A confectioner.

37,962. How did you vote at the last election?—I voted for Westropp and Gray at that election. I neither received nor gave a bribe nor promise.

37,963. At the election before that how did you vote?—I voted for Patton at Vanderbyl's election. At that election I received a sum of 10*l.* from a hand behind the door at the "Bull and Butcher." At the first election of Patton's I received a sum of 5*l.* on the morning of the election, and Mr. Temblett paid me 5*l.* some time after that. At the election of 1865, Mr. Westropp's, I received a sum of 10*l.* That was given me by a person of the name of Henry Harwood, in the kitchen of the "Bull and Butcher."

37,964. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you vote?—For Mr. Westropp. That was the only other time I voted.

37,965. (Mr. Price.) Have you ever had any money from the other side?—I never have from any of the party, and never have been offered anything by the party.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

7 Oct. 1869.

William Hodges sworn.

W. Hodges.

37,966. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a farmer and dealer.

37,967. Did you vote at the last election?—I voted for Westropp and Padwick the last election.

37,968. (Mr. Coleridge.) No, Westropp and Gray?—Westropp and Gray.

37,969. (Mr. Price.) What did you get for it?—Nothing.

37,970. Any promise of any kind?—No.

37,971. Or any consideration for your vote?—No, not at all.

37,972. How did you vote at the election before that?—I did not vote at all.

37,973. How did you vote at the first contest in 1866?—I voted then for Westropp.

37,974. No. When Bagehot and Patton stood?—I voted for Patton.

37,975. Why did you not vote at those two elections in 1866?—Why did not I vote?

37,976. Yes?—Because they said I was not wanted; I was of no use.

37,977. (Mr. Coleridge.) In Vanderbyl's election did you vote?—At the last election I voted.

37,978. (Mr. Price.) What do you call the "last" election?—Yes.

37,979. I ask you what you mean by the "last" election; the last election was Westropp and Gray's?—Very good; and then I voted for them.

37,980. Did you vote in 1866, when Vanderbyl stood against Patton, when Vanderbyl was returned?—I did not vote at all.

37,981. Well, I understood you so. Did you vote when Bagehot stood against Patton?—No, I did not.

37,982. Why did you not vote at either of those elections?—Because I was not wanted they said.

37,983. Who said so?—Why, the party that were in.

37,984. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us something about it; what was this party you were in?—At the "Clarence Hotel."

37,985. You were one of the "bottled" men?—No, I was not.

37,986. Were you not kept in a room there?—There was nothing of that sort. We came there, and they gave up the election in the forepart of the day.

37,987. Do try and let us understand this. Do you know that in 1866 there were two elections?—Yes.

37,988. Did you vote at either of those two elections?—At the first of the two.

37,989. And you voted at the time of Patton against Bagehot?—Yes.

37,990. Whom did you vote for?—Westropp.

37,991. Westropp did not stand then. It was Patton on the one side, Conservative, and Bagehot on the other side, Liberal?—That was the one I did not vote at at all.

37,992–3. No. The one you did not vote at at all was the one of Vanderbyl against Patton. At how many elections have you voted?—I have never voted more than those two times in my life, except for Tynte and Follett.

37,994. (Mr. Coleridge.) You voted at the last election for Westropp and Gray. The election before that was when Vanderbyl was returned against Mr. Patton. Do you recollect that?—Yes.

37,995. Did you vote then?—No, I did not.

37,996. About a month before that there was another election, in which Mr. Patton was returned against Mr. Bagehot. Did you vote then?—I cannot recollect anything about that.

37,997. At the election at which you did vote, did you get anything paid you?—Yes, I had 10*l.*

37,998. In 1865, when Westropp stood, did you vote for Westropp?—I voted for Westropp.

37,999. What did you get then?—That was the election I got the 10*l.* at.

38,000. At how many elections did you get anything?—Only one 10*l.* At one election I voted, and the other I did not vote at all, and at the other election I had 10*l.*

38,001. Is 10*l.* the only sum that you ever received for your valuable franchise in this place?—No. When I voted for Follett and Tynte I had 10*l.*

38,002. Who gave it to you?—The man is dead. He is called Hodge. He gave me 10*l.*, and I had 5*l.* five or six weeks afterwards.

38,003. Do you mean to swear you have only had altogether 25*l.* for your vote?—Yes, 25*l.*

38,004. You were paid 10*l.* in Follett and Tynte's election, and 10*l.* in Westropp's; and when was the other 5*l.*?—I cannot recollect.

38,005. You have had 25*l.* in the whole?—Yes.

38,006. And you have been paid on both sides?—In Follett and Tynte's election I was paid 10*l.*, and I voted for Charles Tynte and Follett.

George Faulkner sworn.

G. Faulkner.

38,007. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A saddler.

38,008. How did you vote at the last election?—I voted for Vanderbyl.

38,009. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not for Vanderbyl. Did you not split with Kinglake?—Oh, yes, Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then why did you not say so?

38,010. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything?—No.

38,011. How did you vote at the election before then?—I voted for Vanderbyl.

38,012. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

38,013. How much?—8*l.*

38,014. Who from?—Cook, a brewer.

38,015. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to get only 8*l.* instead of 10*l.*?—I do not know.

38,016. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Cook keep back 2*l.*?—I do not know.

38,017. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you expect to get 10*l.*?—No.

38,018. You always had got it?—No.

38,019. What did you get at the election before?—10*l.*

38,020. Whom did you vote for then?—The same parties.

38,021. You could not have done so, because he did not stand. Did you vote for Bagehot?—Yes.

38,022. In 1865, the time before, whom did you vote for?—The Liberals.

38,023. What did you get then?—Nothing.

38,024. How was that?—I do not know.

38,025. Nothing afterwards?—Nothing afterwards.

38,026. Nothing before?—No, nothing at all.

38,027. In 1859, Padwick's election, what did you get?—Nothing.

38,028. Nothing at all?—Who were the Liberals then?

38,029. Tynte and Kinglake?—I had nothing.

38,030. In 1857 did you get anything?—Tell me their names.

38,031. Tynte and Kinglake again?—No.

38,032. What have you received in your life for all your votes?—18*l.*

38,033. 10*l.* and 8*l.*?—Yes.

38,034. That is all?—That is all.

38,035. Nothing at any of the earlier elections?—No.

38,036. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to ask you a question about the 8*l.* you got from Cook, the brewer?—He let me have it.

38,037. You had had 10*l.*, you know, the election before?—Yes.

38,038. Did it not strike you as very odd that you did not get 10*l.* the next time?—No, it did not.

38,039. Did you owe any money to Cook?—No.

38,040. Were you in his employment?—No, not at all. I have never done anything for him.

38,041. How came he to give you the 8*l.*?—Haslam saw me and told me Mr. Cook wanted me, and I went up, and there was a man there gave me this 8*l.*

38,042. Did you say, "It ought to be 10*l.*"?—No.

38,043. Nothing was said?—No, nothing at all.

38,044. Had you promised to vote for 8*l.*?—I came away directly, and went to poll.

38,045. But before that had you said anything about 8*l.*?—No, nothing at all.

38,046. This Henry Cook is the partner of William Heal, is he not?—Yes.

38,047. Was he in partnership with William Heal then?—I suppose he was. I do not know.

38,048. They are not in partnership now?—Not now.

GEORGE BARTRAM sworn. G. Bartram.

38,049. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A stone-mason.

38,050. Where do you work?—At Bridgwater.

38,051. For whom?—For myself.

38,052. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

38,053. What did you get?—Nothing.

38,054. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

38,055. Any promise?—No.

38,056. How did you vote at the election before?—For Mr. Patton.

38,057. How much did you get?—10*l.*

38,058. From whom?—The "Bull and Butcher;" the stranger, I suppose.

38,059. Did you vote at the first contest in 1866?—Yes.

38,060. How much did you get?—10*l.*

38,061. The same party?—Yes.

38,062. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

38,063. For whom?—Westropp.

38,064. How much?—10*l.*

38,065. From whom?—Temblett.

38,066. 1859?—I had not got a vote then, or at the other elections.

38,067. Did you ever get anything from the other side?—Never.

38,068. You voted at no other election?—No.

HENRY JEFFERIES sworn. H. Jefferies.

38,069. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A baker.

38,070. Did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

38,071. What did you get?—Nothing.

38,072. For whom did you vote at the election before?—Mr Patton.

38,073. How much did you get?—10*l.*

38,074. From whom?—The stranger.

38,075. Where?—The "Bull and Butcher."

38,076. The election before?—Patton, 10*l.*

38,077. From whom?—Harden.

38,078. 1865?—Westropp.

38,079. How much?—10*l.*

38,080. From whom?—Temblett.

38,081. 1859?—That is all.

38,082. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever been paid by the other side?—No.

38,083. Thirty pounds altogether?—Yes.

WILLIAM CHORLEY sworn. W. Chorley.

38,084. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A shoemaker.

38,085. Do you work on your own account?—Partly.

38,086. And for whom else?—Mr. Henry Hobbs, Eastover.

38,087. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

38,088. Did you get anything for it?—Not a farthing.

38,089. Is your employer a Conservative also?—He is.

38,090. Did he get you to vote for them?—No.

38,091. For whom did you vote the election before?—Mr. Patton.

38,092. How much did you get?—10*l.*

38,093. From whom?—Temblett.

38,094. How much the election before?—Patton, 10*l.*

38,095. From whom?—Temblett; a hand came out from the door. It was in the "Bull and Butcher."

38,096. Did you vote in 1865?—I did.

38,097. How much did you get?—10*l.*

38,098. From whom?—It was a hand came out from the door in the same way; I do not know the party.

38,099. 1859?—No; I had no vote then.

38,100. Did yot get anything from the other side?—No; I never tried.

38,101. Thirty pounds altogether?—Yes.

ROBERT COLES sworn. R. Coles.

38,102. (Mr. Price.) Are you the Eastover Coles?—Yes.

38,103. What are you?—A pattern maker.

38,104. How did you vote at the last election?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

38,105. Did you get anything?—Nothing.

38,106. No promise?—No promise.

38,107. What time in the day did you vote?—I cannot say exactly to a minute or two, but just after one; I believe between one and two.

38,108. Did you vote at the election before?—No; I had no vote.

38,109. At any other election have you voted?—Never.

38,110. Never had any money in your life?—Never had any money in my life.

(Mr. Anstey.) You were called by mistake for the other Robert Coles, I suppose.

38,111. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you one of the unlucky ones who never received anything for your vote in Bridgwater?—I never had a vote before.

VINCENT CASE sworn. V. Case.

38,112. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A baker.

38,113. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

38,114. What did you get for it?—I never got anything.

38,115. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you promised anything?—No, not a farthing.

38,116. (Mr. Price.) What did you do the election before that?—That was Patton?

38,117. Yes?—Voted for Patton.

38,118. How much did you get?—10*l.*

38,119. Where did you get it from?—I think Frederick Jarman.

38,120. The election before that?—I voted for Patton.

38,121. How much?—10*l.*

38,122. Where from?—I think Mr. Frederick Jarman gave it to me.

38,123. 1865?—I voted for Westropp.

38,124. How much?—10*l.*

38,125. Did you ever get anything from the other side at that election?—I never voted for the other side.

38,126. That does not matter at all. People here take money on both sides without voting.—Oh, no.

38,127. (Mr. Coleridge.) In those last three elections did you ever get anything from the Liberal side?—Not a farthing.

38,128. 1859, Padwick and Westropp?—I voted for Padwick.

38,129. How much?—10*l.*

38,130. From whom?—Upon my word I cannot say.

38,131. In 1857 what did you get? Kinglake, Tynte, and Follett?—I voted for Kinglake and Tynte.

38,132. You were a Liberal at that time?—Yes.

38,133. How was that?—I was a Liberal at that time.

38,134. How much did you get?—10*l.*

38,135. I suppose that was the reason of your Liberalism?—No it was not.

38,136. (Mr. Price.) Why did you change?—I had something to do with two lawyers here in the town, and both of them cheated me; and when they came round I showed them to the door, and I said I would have nothing to do with them.

38,137. Who were the lawyers?—Why, old Lovibond was one of them, and old Bate the t'other.

38,138. (Mr. Coleridge.) 1852, Lord Henley's time, did you vote?—No.

38,139. What have you received altogether?—I do not know.

38,140. Fifty pounds?—No, not so much as that.

38,141. If you have told us the truth it is.

38,142. (Mr. Price.) 1857, 1859, 1865, and the two elections of 1866?—That is right.

38,143. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have had the satisfaction of quarrelling with the lawyers, changing your politics, and getting 50*l.*?—No, I quarrelled with them on account of their bad behaviour.

38,144. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not want to know the particulars of the cheatery, especially if it is not connected with the election; but I ask you, was the money which "old Lovibond and old Bate," as you call them, cheated you out of, money which was owing to you, or which you fancied was owing to you, in respect of your services at elections?—No, not at all. I quarrelled with them——

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not want to know anything more.

38,145. (Mr. Price.) You had a private quarrel with them?—No, it was about some quarrel at one time——

W. Webb.

WILLIAM WEBB sworn.

38,146. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

38,147. Where do you work, or are you a master tailor?—No.

38,148. For whom do you work?—I work for nobody at present.

38,149. How did you vote at the last election?—Mr. Padwick, was it not?

38,150. (Mr. Coleridge.) No; that is 10 years ago.—Westropp and Gray.

38,151. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

48,152. Before or after?—Nothing before nor after.

38,153. (Mr. Price.) How did you vote at the election before that, when Patton and Vanderbyl stood?—I voted for Mr. Patton.

38,154. How much did you get?—I got 10*l.* From whom?—From Mr. Temblett.

38,155. How did you vote at the election when Patton and Bagehot stood?—5*l.* I got from Mr. Jarman.

38,156. (Mr. Anstey.) From the Liberal side?—No.

38,157. Which Jarman?—Mr. Frederick Jarman.

38,158. (Mr. Price.) How did you vote when Patton and Bagehot stood?—Bagehot.

38,159. When Patton and Bagehot stood what did you get?—15*l.*

38,160. From whom did you get the 10*l.*?—10*l.* from Temblett, and 5*l.* from Jarman.

38,161. (Mr. Anstey.) Let us see that there is no confusion here. There were two elections at which Mr. Patton stood?—Yes.

38,162. How much did you get at the first election?—Mr. Bagehot's?

38,163. Yes?—10*l.*

38,164. You said just now, 15*l.*?—That is the second.

38,165. How much did you get at the first election of Mr. Patton's in 1866, when he was elected?—Mr. Bagehot's?

38,166. Mr. Patton's, when Mr. Bagehot stood against him?—10*l.*

38,167. Did you get anything at the second election, when Patton was defeated by Vanderbyl?—15*l.*

38,168. (Mr. Price.) How was it you got 15*l.* then?—10*l.* from Mr. Temblett.

38,169. How was it you got 15*l.*?—And 5*l.* from Mr. Jarman.

38,170. Did Jarman know you had 10*l.* from Temblett?—No.

38,171. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you cheated them out of 5*l.* or 10*l.*?

38,172. (Mr. Price.) In 1865 did you vote?—Yes.

38,173. How did you vote then?—Westropp.

38,174. What did you get?—10*l.*

38,175. From whom?—Temblett.

38,176. Did you get anything from the other side then?—No.

38,177. Did you vote in 1859?—Yes.

38,178. For whom did you vote then?—Mr. Westropp.

38,179. Padwick and Westropp?—I voted for those.

38,180. How much did you get?—10*l.*

38,181. From whom?—From Mr. Murlis.

38,182. In 1857, Kinglake, Tynte, and Follett, did you vote then?—I voted once before.

38,183. Did you ever vote for Mr. Follett?—Well, I dare say I did.

38,184. Well, I dare say you did too. Did you get anything for it?—Yes, 10*l.* at that election.

38,185. How much have you had altogether for voting at the different elections? Fifteen pounds and three tens, have you not?—55*l.*

J. Tottle

JOSEPH TOTTLE sworn.

38,186. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Well, I have no occupation at present.

38,187. Are you a voter?—Yes.

38,188. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

38,189. For whom?—Westropp and Gray.

35,190. Did you get anything for it?—Nothing.

38,191. No promise of any kind?—Nothing whatever.

38,192. Did you vote at the election before that?—I did.

38,193. How did you vote?—Conservative.

38,194. For Mr. Patton?—Yes.

38,195. What did you get?—10*l.*

38,196. From whom?—Newton.

38,197. Did you vote in the election of Patton and Bagehot?—Yes.

38,198. For whom?—Mr. Patton.

38,199. How much?—10*l.*

38,200. From whom?—The "Bull and Butcher."

38,201. Did you vote in 1865?—No.

38,202. You had no vote then?—No.

38,203. Those were the only times you voted?—That is all.

38,204. And you have been paid twice. Were you ever paid anything on the other side?—Nothing.

A short adjournment here took place.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

W. Herbert.

7 Oct. 1869.

WILLIAM HERBERT sworn.

38,205. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Herbert?—A coal merchant.

38,206. Are you a voter?—Yes.

38,207. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

38,208. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

38,209. Did you get anything?—No.

38,210. Any promise of any kind?—No.

38,211. Did you vote at the election before that, Vanderbyl and Patton?—I voted at six before that.

38,212. Vanderbyl and Patton, how did you vote?—Patton.

38,213. How much did you get?—Nothing.

38,214. Any promise?—No promise.

38,215. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

38,216. Did you vote when Patton and Bagehot stood?—I voted for Patton.

38,217. Did you get anything then?—No.

38,218. Any promise?—No.

38,219. No money of any kind?—No money of any kind.

38,220. Nor any inducement?—No inducement of any kind.

38,221. Were you offered anything?—No.

38,222. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has anybody said here that they bribed you?—Not that I am aware of.

38,223. (Mr. Price.) What have you come for?—I am subpœnaed to come.

38,224. In 1865 did you vote?—Yes.

38,225. How did you vote then?—Conservative.

38,226. Westropp?—Yes.

38,227. What did you get?—Nothing.

38,228. Any promise?—No, not of any kind.

38,229. Did you ever get anything for any of the elections?—No, nothing.

38,230. Had you ever any contract for coals or anything?—Nothing at all of any sort.

38,231. In 1859 did you vote?—Yes.

38,232. For Padwick and Westropp?—Padwick and Westropp, yes.

38,233. Did you get anything then?—No.

38,234. (Mr. Coleridge.) But how came you never to have got anything when everybody else did?—Because I never wanted it. I was not so avaricious after money. I voted from principle.

38,235. Was nothing ever offered you?—Nothing was ever offered to me; I was never aware that anything was going.

38,236. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1857?—Yes.

38,237. How did you vote? There were Tynte, Kinglake, and Follett?—Follett and Mansell.

38,238. Did you get anything?—No.

38,239. In 1852 did you vote?—Yes; that was Follett and Mansell.

38,240. Did you get anything?—No.

38,241. Did you vote in 1847?—The first time of my voting was Follett and Mansell.

38,242. Have you ever had anything?—No.

38,243. Any promise of any sort at all, or any influence?—No, no influence at all.

38,244. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your christian name?—William.

38,245. Is there any other person of your name here?—Oh yes, several in the town.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Murlis or Mr. Temblett here?

(Superindent Lear.) No.

38,246. (Mr. Price.) We must have got hold of the wrong man. Mr. Herbert, you have had an opportunity, which must be a gratifying thing to you or anybody in Bridgwater, to be able to come and say this?—Well, I can, sir, with a clear conscience.

(Mr. Price.) I am sorry you have been troubled, except for that reason. It is evidently a mistake.

38,247. (Mr. Coleridge.) I should think your examination must have created more astonishment than that of anybody who has been examined here?—Well, I give it you correct.

38,248. (Mr. Price.) You have always voted consistently on one side?—Always on one side.

W. Evans.

WILLIAM EVANS sworn.

38,249. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Evans?—No business at all.

38,250. How did you vote at the last election?—I did not vote for anyone.

38,251. Did you vote at the election of 1866?—1866, for Mr. Patton.

38,252. The second election; the second contest?—No, never but once.

38,253. Was that the time when Mr. Patton was returned, or when he was beaten by Mr. Vanderbyl?—Only once.

38,254. Once, you know, he was beaten by Mr. Vanderbyl; did you vote then; do you remember that?—No, I never voted but once.

38,255. But do you remember whether you voted at that time when Mr. Patton was thrown out by Mr. Vanderbyl?—Mr. Patton?

38,256. Yes, he stood against Vanderbyl, and Mr. Vanderbyl was elected?—I never voted for Mr. Vanderbyl at all.

38,257. No, no; but did you vote for Patton at that time?—Yes, Patton.

38,258. Did you get anything for it?—Yes.

38,259. How much?—10*l.*, I suppose it was. I never examined the money, and never saw it.

38,260, Who from?—Mr. Cole. I had it in a piece of paper. I never untied it.

38,261. You kept it, I suppose?—No, I did not; I returned it.

38,262. Whom did you return it to?—Mr. Cole.

38,263. Who is Cole? What is he?—A carpenter and wheelwright.

38,264. Had you been promised any money?—No.

38,265. Did you return it?—Yes, I did. I was never promised any.

38,266. And you returned it?—Yes, I did.

38,267. Very well; did you vote at the election when Mr. Patton was elected, when Mr. Bagehot stood against him?—No, I never voted but once for Mr. Patton.

38,268. That was the only time you ever voted?—It was the first time I ever voted in this borough.

38,269. How long have you been in Bridgwater; you are an old man?—Eight or ten years.

38,270. Had you never exercised your vote before?—No.

38,271. How came you to vote at that particular time?—I do not know. I did vote then.

38,272. Have you been a voter for Bridgwater at other elections?—No, not at Bridgwater; county elections.

38,273. Then you had no vote for the borough till 1866?—No, not till 1866.

38,274. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your christian name?—William.

38,275. (Mr. Price.) What were you, Mr. Evans, then, a farmer?—A farmer.

38,276. When you retired from farming you came to live in Bridgwater?—Yes, I lived in the parish before.

(Mr. Price.) You lived in the parish, but that would not give you a vote.

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not know why you are called.

38,277. (Mr. Price.) Were you summoned to come here?—I received a summons since I have been here, but I came forward voluntarily without any summons.

38,278. (Mr. Coleridge.) What have you come to tell us?—I took the summons since I have been here.

38,279. Oh, John Cole says, "William Evans, 10*l.*" You are quite sure you returned the 10*l.* to Cole?—Yes.

38,280. The reason you are sent for is no doubt

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

W. Evans.

because Cole had returned your name to Jarman as a man who received 10*l.* Whether Cole stuck to it or not we do not know.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Cole in court?

(Superintendent Lear.) No.

(Mr. Price.) Well, you may go, Mr. Evans. It was necessary that you should come, because we may find out now whether Cole returned it or not.

7 Oct. 1869.

GEORGE HILL sworn.

G. Hill.

38,281. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Hill?—A journeyman blacksmith.

38,282. Whom do you work for?—I am not working at present.

38,283. How did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

38,284. Did you get any money for it?—Not at all.

38,285. Any promise?—Not at all.

38,286. How did you vote at the election before that?—That was my first election. I belonged to the new constituency.

38,287. Did you receive any offer from the other side?—Not at all.

38,288. Did you receive any promise of any kind from anybody?—Not at all.

38,289. For your vote at the last election?—Not in way whatever.

38,290. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your name?—H—i—ll.

38,291. (Mr. Price.) Were you summoned here?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Well, it is a mistake. I do not know why you are summoned.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Allan in court.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

(Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of Cole, Allan?

(Mr. Anstey.) Of Hill?

(Mr. Price.) Hill or Cole?

38,292. (Mr. Anstey.) Cole is the other side. Do you know how George Hill's name came to be mentioned?—No, I do not.

(Mr. Price.) Is Henry Bussell in court?

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

38,293. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of this man, George Hill?—No, nothing. I do not know him.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

38,294. (Mr. Price.) Did anybody ever return his name? Do you know, Allan, whether anybody ever returned his name? He says he voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl, and he is a new voter. Did anybody ever return George Hill's name to you as a person who received money?—No, I made my own return the last election, and he is not returned by me. (To Henry Chapman Bussell.) Is not a man returned by Murlis of the name of Hill.

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

38,295. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever hear of the man having received any money?—No.

38,296. Or did anybody ever return him as supposed to have money?—Not that I know of. He is not in my list.

38,297. (Mr. Anstey.) Or anybody of the name of George Hill?—No.

G. Hill.

GEORGE HILL recalled.

38,298. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever hear that you had been spoken of as a man who had received bribes?—No, I have not seen it or heard of it at all.

38,299. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you come here merely because you were summoned?—I was summoned on the second day of your inquiry. I sent the summons back once.

38,300. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you sign the petition?—Not at all.

38,301. (Mr. Anstey.) You were not an elector till last year?—Not at all.

38,302. You were summoned on the second day that we met down here.

(Andrew Allan.) I have one of the name of John Hill, Polden Street.

(Witness.) Mine is Wellington Road.

(Andrew Allan.) I have John Hill, Polden Street.

(Mr. Anstey.) We have got the wrong George Hill.

(Mr. Price to Andrew Allan.) It is John Hill, you say?

(Andrew Allan.) John Hill.

38,303. (Mr. Coleridge to witness.) What is your name?—George Hill.

W. Sheppard.

WILLIAM SHEPPARD sworn.

38,304. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Sheppard?—A baker.

38,305. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp.

38,306. Westropp, or Westropp and Gray?—Westropp and Gray.

38,307. Then why do you not tell us so? Did you get anything for it?—No, nothing whatever.

38,308. Any promise?—No.

38,309. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes.

38,310. Tell us about it?—At the first election of Patton I voted——

38,311. No, no; the second contest of 1866.

38,312. (Mr. Coleridge.) Vanderbyl and Patton; whom did you vote for?—Patton.

38,313. What did you get?—10*l.*

38,314. Who from?—Temblett.

38,315. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the one before that?—Yes.

38,316. What did you get then?—10*l.*

38,317. Who from?—Harden, at the "Bull and Butcher's."

38,318. Did you vote for Patton?—Yes.

38,319. Did you vote in 1865?—No; I had no vote then.

38,320. Then you had two tens?—Yes.

38,321. Did you get anything from the other side?—No, nothing whatever.

Mr. HENRY WESTROPP recalled.

38,322. (Mr. Price.) Is Mrs. Westropp here?—Yes.

38,323. Then we will call her now. There is a great deal you have yet to tell us, I think. We will take Mrs. Westropp in the meantime.

(The witness.) If you will allow me, there is a statement which I wish to make with regard to a portion of my evidence. You may recollect that I said I confided 1,250*l.* to my sister-in-law to take to Mr. Tromp, and I also swore that it was in notes. I find that there was a thousand pounds of that in gold. I certainly received only notes from Mr. Thompson, and therefore that transmutation must have taken place whilst the money was in my possession; but at the same time I have tried, and really tried hard, to recollect it, where in the universe I could get it. I cannot tell you how, when, or where it was done; but I am quite willing to accept the responsibility of it.

38,324. (Mr. Price.) Was that 1,250*l.* part of the sum you took to the "Carlton"?—No, it was Mr. Patton's first election. The fact remains unaltered as to the sum of money having gone, but I thought for my own veracity's sake I was bound to mention it to you. I think you will find that my sister-in-law will tell you that there was 1,000*l.* of it in gold. Of course it makes more against myself.

(Mr. Price.) Very well; we will take that explanation.

Mrs. MARIANNE WESTROPP sworn.

38,325. (Mr. Price.) You are the wife of Mr. Westropp, whom we have examined here?—Yes.

38,326. Do you remember the election of 1865?—Perfectly.

38,327. When Mr. Westropp was a candidate for Bridgwater?—Yes.

38,328. Were you his wife at that time?—Yes.

38,329. Do you remember his coming down here in 1859 with Mr. Padwick?—Yes.

38,330. Now then, in 1865 will you tell us what induced you first to put yourself in communication in any way with Mr. Tromp?—I can scarcely say that I was in communication. It was my sister.

38,331. If you were not in communication with Mr. Tromp, tell us how it was that you first took a part in the election at all; about the finding of the money?—Because I wished Mr. Westropp to be returned.

38,332. Was it in consequence of any communication you had received from Mr. Westropp?—Decidedly not.

38,333. Was it in consequence of any communication you had received from anybody else?—I scarcely know how the impression would be produced.

38,334. Well, had you any communication with any friend of Mr. Westropp with respect to his chances of getting in at Bridgwater?—No.

38,335. None?—None.

38,336. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you seen Mr. Bealy Smith?—I had seen Mr. Bealy Smith.

38,337. When did you see Mr. Bealy Smith?—I saw him repeatedly. He dined at our house.

38,338. Between 1859 and 1865?—Yes.

38,339. Several times?—Several times.

38,340. Has he ever spoken to you on those occasions about Mr. Westropp's coming forward again, and what he would have to spend?—We often spoke of it. We did not decidedly talk about the money, but we quite came to the understanding that money would be required. Mr. Westropp was not to know it.

38,341. Did Mr. Bealy Smith give you any reason why Mr. Westropp was not to know it?—Not in words. I quite understood it.

38,342. Well, now then go on, tell us as the time came on in the 1865 contest, we want to know about the 1,500*l.*, you will save us a great deal of trouble if you will tell us exactly how this came about?—No one misled me——

38,343. Who mentioned the sum of 1,500*l.* to you?—It was all I had, with the exception of some loose money I had in the house.

38,344. Had it been named to you as a sum that would be sufficient to start with?—No, they would have liked to have more if I had got it.

38,345. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Smith ask you to get more?—We did not really speak of it openly.

38,346. (Mr. Price.) But a sum of money must have been spoken of. Did Mr. Smith know that you had 1,500*l.* at command?—He did.

38,347. Had you told him that?—Yes.

38,348. Had you said that you were willing to spend that?—Yes, he quite understood that.

38,349. It could only have been understood from what you said to him. Did you tell him you would find that 1,500*l.*?—Yes.

38,350. Did he tell you that he would arrange in any way to whom you should give it?—He was to send a letter of instructions when it was required.

38,351. How long before the election of 1865?—Oh, some months before. I really do not recollect accurately.

38,352. You had then told him that you had a sum of 1,500*l.* of your own which you were willing to spend?—Yes, I would have spent double if I had got it.

38,353. Did you tell him that was all you had, and did he say he would take that as far as it would go?—Yes.

38,354. He did say so; as far as it would go he would take it?—At least, he did not. Mr. Tromp when he got it said that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And do the best he could with it?

38,355. (Mr. Price.) Tell us how you were put into communication with Mr. Tromp?—By a letter from Mr. Smith to my sister.

38,356. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your sister was cognizant of all these proceedings?—For the last few months. She did not at first know very much about it.

38,357. You let her know before the election came on?—Yes, she was more prominent then than I was.

38,358. (Mr. Price.) And in that letter was the address of Mr. Tromp given at Bayswater?—I believe so. I never saw it.

38,359. Was it in consequence of what your sister said that you sold out that 1,500*l.*?—I had sold out before that.

38,360. Who sold it out? Who was the broker?—Mr. Harris.

38,361. Then you had got that 1,500*l.* ready when Mr. Smith should send instructions?—Yes.

38,362. When the instructions came did you give the 1,500*l.* to your sister?—Yes.

38,363. In notes or gold?—In gold.

38,364. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Harris give you the money in gold when he gave it to you?—We went to the bank to get it changed.

38,365. What did he give it to you in; in notes or a cheque?—A cheque on the bank.

38,366. (Mr. Price.) Then you took that to the Bank of England?—Yes. They were unwilling to give us so much gold.

38,367. Were you and your sister alone?—Quite alone.

38,368. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Harris present?—Oh yes, Mr. Harris went to the bank.

38,369. (Mr. Price.) To identify you, I suppose?—Yes, he was very kind.

38,370. They said it was unusual to give so much in gold?—Yes.

38,371. How did you take it away?—In two bags.

38,372. Canvas bags? Did you have anything else afterwards to put it in?—Then it was put into a black bag.

38,373. It was a long way. Who carried it ?—Mr. Harris kindly put it into the cab, at least he offered to, but we said we could take it ourselves.

38,374. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Harris know what the purpose of it was ?—Decidedly not.

38,375. Where did you go in the cab ?—To the door of the bank.

38,376. (Mr. Price.) Where did you go in the cab then ?—We went home.

38,377. (Mr. Coleridge.) What, all the way to Norwood in the cab ?—We were not living at Norwood then.

38,378. Where were you living then ?—At Chiswick, near Chiswick.

38,379. You took it home ?—Yes.

38,380. What became of that money afterwards ?—We took it down to Weston.

38,381. In the meantime had your sister seen Mr. Tromp at Bayswater ?—Decidedly.

38,382. And had given him information that you were going to Weston ?—Yes, he wished to have it then. He thought he would take it, but we preferred taking it down.

38,383. Then you came down to Weston, and you lodged at the "Royal" hotel, Rogers's ?—Yes.

38,384. And then Mr. Tromp came ?—On Sunday morning, when he came in he took it away.

38,385. Was anything said ?—Nothing in connexion with that. I think there were some few remarks made.

38,386. Was it you who expressed a desire to come over to the election and see what was going on ?—Yes, I always intended to come.

38,387. And he advised you not ?—I do not know that he did. We did come.

38,388. You did come. Were you at the "Clarence"?—Yes.

38,389. Were you at the nomination ?—Yes.

38,390. Did you hear all that took place ?—Yes, all.

38,391. Did you stay there the whole day ?—Yes, until the day after the polling.

38,392. But at the "Clarence" ?—Yes.

38,393. Mr. Westropp, of course, was down here ?—Yes, but he did not——

38,394. Did he express any surprise at finding you here ?—He was rather surprised to find us here.

38,395. Did he know you had come to Weston ?—He did not know we had come to Weston.

38,396. You took him by surprise entirely when you came over here ?—Yes, decidedly, when we came to the "Clarence."

38,397. Did he blow you up ?—Oh no.

38,398. (Mr. Anstey.) Did his friends at the "Clarence" know that you and your sister had come down ?—No one knew who we were.

38,399. No one knew it ?—Not even the landlord.

38,400. Then you were not in the same room. The room from which you witnessed the proceedings of the nomination was not the room used by Mr. Westropp ?—Oh dear no.

38,401. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you go to in the "Clarence," because it was all engaged on that day ?—We went into the public room with a lot of other ladies. We wished to have a private room in front and there was not one disengaged. The next morning there was one. We went into a small room at the side of the committee room.

38,402. You stayed there that night ?—Two nights.

38,403. The people at the "Clarence" found out by that time——?—They did not know at all.

38,404. Did you and your sister sleep together ?—Yes.

38,405. Then you preserved your incognito entirely when you were here ?—Yes.

38,406. Then did you go back to Weston ?—Oh dear no. I went home.

38,407. Went to London ?—Yes.

38,408. Is there anything more that you have got to tell us about that election ?—Not anything more that I remember.

38,409. That money has not been replaced to your account ?—Decidedly not.

38,410. That was money, we understand from Mr. Westropp, which had been invested in your name ?—Yes.

38,411. In your maiden name ?—Yes.

38,412. By the broker ?—Yes.

38,413. In the funds ?—Yes.

34,414. Now, Mrs. Westropp, are you quite certain therefore that up to that time (till after the election was over), are you quite certain that in no way whatever was Mr. Westropp cognizant of what you had done ?—Oh, quite certain.

38,415. After that election, you know, there was a petition ?—Yes.

38,416. And you know, of course, by the petition that he was going to be unseated, or at least that there was a petition against him on the ground of bribery ?—Yes.

38,417. Had you at any time conversations with Mr. Westropp to let him know that you had found part of the money ?—Decidedly not. I should be more particular then than before.

38,418. (Mr. Price.) When did you first let him know ?—Not very long ago; long after the petition.

38,419. Long after the petition ?—Oh, yes.

38,420. After 1866 ?—After 1866.

38,421. During the time that Mr. Patton was standing here, did he know it then ?—He did not. I do not think he knew it then. I am sure I do not quite remember when, but it was long after the petition.

38,422. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he never express any surprise how the money had come ?—It was decidedly my own.

38,423. Did Mr. Westropp never while the petition was going on express any surprise about where the money had come from that had caused his being unseated ?—Never; never expressed anything of the kind.

38,424. (Mr. Anstey.) If he did not know what you had done in 1865, was he not very much surprised when he found that you were in communication with Tromp, at Patton's election, in 1866 ?—I had nothing to do with that. It was my sister.

38,425. (Mr. Price.) Your sister ?—Yes.

38,426. Had you nothing whatever then at all to do with money being found for Mr. Tromp in 1866 ?—Decidedly not; nothing at all.

38,427. Nothing to do with the sum of money which was taken to the Carlton by Mr. Westropp, your husband ?—Not anything.

38,428. Did you ever hear of that from your husband ?—I do not recollect

38,429. You have heard of it now, you know ?—Yes.

38,430. Of a sum of 1,500*l.* ?—I think I may have heard of it.

38,431. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, but how came your sister to be employed in 1866, if Mr. Westropp was ignorant then that she had been already employed in 1865 ?—I suppose through Mr. Smith; Mr. Westropp may have thought then it was the first time she was put in communication with him.

38,432. Was not Mr. Westropp perfectly aware that your sister had been employed in 1865 ?—He was not aware of it at all.

38,433. But in 1866 was not he aware that she had been employed in 1865 ?—Not that I am aware.

38,434. He seems to have been aware of her being employed in 1866. How came he to permit her being employed in 1866 ?—I believe Mr. Bealy Smith gave Mr. Tromp a letter to be given to Mr. Westropp at that time.

38,435. (Mr. Price.) Just repeat that. You think he gave a letter ?—A letter to Mr. Tromp. My sister had then a letter from Mr. Bealy Smith,

38,436. Do you mean that communications passed between your sister and Mr. Bealy Smith between the 1865 election and the 1866 election, when Mr. Patton came ?—I should think it was in 1866.

38,437. Were you aware of those communications at the time ?—I never saw the letter.

38,438. Was your sister living with you ?—Yes.

38,439. (Mr. Anstey.) Your husband must have been aware of it too, then ?—No, never, because when a letter came we should not show it to him.

38,440. You say yourself he was aware of her being employed in 1866 by Bealy Smith ?—No, I believe she took whatever was given to her to Mr. Tromp.

38,441. (Mr. Price.) Were you aware that your husband did know of her communications with Mr. Tromp in 1866 ?—I do not remember anything about that; any further than that she took what was given to her.

38,442. Did you learn anything from your husband in 1866 as to his knowledge of your sister being in communication with Bealy Smith or Tromp ?—I think he quite knew that she was going to Mr. Tromp.

38,443. He quite knew she was going to Mr. Tromp ?—Yes.

38,444. But did you know of it ?—Oh yes, I knew it.

38,445. Then you had discussed it together ?—My sister and I had.

38,446. But not you and Mr. Westropp ?—Not Mr. Westropp; no, because it was given to her.

(Mr. Price.) There is nothing more, Mrs. Westropp, that we need ask you about, unless you have some further secrets to divulge.

38,447. (Mr. Anstey.) I am under the impression, and I can easily verify it, that Mr. Westropp said distinctly that between the election of 1865 and the election of 1866 he had become aware of what you had done in 1865. It had come out in conversation ?—It may be so. I am not quite sure when it did come out in conversation.

38,448. You said just now that it was long after 1866, you think, that he became acquainted with it.

38,449. (Mr. Price.) With what you had done ?—With what I had done ?

38,450. Yes ?—That was after the petition, I know.

38,451. (Mr. Anstey.) The petition you know was presented in 1865 and tried in 1866. Do you mean after the trial of the petition, or after the petition was presented ?—After the trial of the petition.

38,452. Well then that was all over in April 1866, and the election did not take place till June ?—No.

38,453. Now, might you not between April and June have told him what you had done ?—I may have.

38,454. He says it came out in conversation ?—I may have. I decidedly did not intend to say anything which was not quite true.

38,455. (Mr. Coleridge.) After the petition was over and Mr. Westropp was unseated, it was the natural time for you to have told him. Is not it probable that after the petition and before the next election would have been the time you told him ?—Yes.

38,456. You kept your secret till the petition was over, that Mr. Westropp might go into the box and say he knew nothing about it ?—Decidedly.

38,457. That would be the natural thing to do. Then you might have told him ?—Yes.

38,458. (Mr. Price.) That is all, Mrs. Westropp, unless you have any more secrets in connexion with the elections. This was your first essay in electioneering matters, I hope ?—And I think it will be the last.

38,459. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you received any promise from any person, or have you any expectation that at some future time, or upon some future contingency, the money which you spent for your husband's election will be replaced ?—Never.

Miss Maria Stockwood sworn.

38,460. (Mr. Price.) You are the sister of Mrs. Westropp ?—Yes.

38,461. She has informed us that she had communications with regard to the election of 1865 with Mr. Bealy Smith. Were you aware of the communications she had at that time with Mr. Bealy Smith ?—I should say nearly all, if not quite.

38,462. She went to the bank and you went with her and she drew this sum of money, this 1,500*l.*, in sovereigns ?—In sovereigns.

38,463. And that was taken down and eventually conveyed down to Weston-super-Mare and given up to Tromp ?—Yes.

38,464. Well, now then, so far for that election. Will you tell us, if you please, what communications you had after that election, when Mr. Westropp had been unseated and there was going to be a fresh election for Bridgwater. What communications did you have in any way with regard to the election from Mr. Bealy Smith or Mr. Tromp or Mr. Westropp ?—I took the money.

38,465. But before you took the money had you had any communication with Mr. Bealy Smith—letters ?—I had several letters, I cannot say when, from Mr. Bealy Smith.

38,466. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you got any of those letters now ?—Not any; I never kept them a day.

38,467. (Mr. Price.) Do you recollect whether they were in reference to the fresh election in 1866 ?—I do not think they were in reference to that.

38,468. You must tell us, if you please, how was it that you were employed in the first election of 1866, when Mr. Patton first came down here—that you were employed in this money transaction ?—From having done it before.

38,469. Well, but whom by ?—I took the money from Mr. Westropp.

38,470. Did Mr. Bealy Smith ask you to do the same thing again ? Was it Mr. Westropp who asked you ?—Mr. Westropp, I believe.

38,471. Well then, Mr. Westropp having asked you to do that, what did you do ?—I took the money to Mr. Tromp.

38,472. To Mr. Tromp ?—Yes.

38,473. To his house ?—To his house.

38,474. At Bayswater ?—At Bayswater.

38,475. Did you see him ?—Oh, yes.

38,476. Did anything pass about it at all ?—Nothing at all.

38,477. Did anything pass between you about it ?—About the money ?

38,478. Yes ?—Yes, I said it was to be conveyed to Bridgwater to be expended there. I think that was all.

38,479. (Mr. Price.) We shall have to put you down in the schedule as a briber ?—Shall you ? A very innocent one, I think.

(Mr. Price.) Well, I do not know about that.

38,480. (Mr. Coleridge.) Bealy Smith was at the bottom of the whole thing, I believe ?—He was at the bottom of the whole thing, and we thought him so able a man that I had every confidence in him.

Mr. Henry Westropp recalled.

38,481. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Westropp, before you continue your statement, I want to refer you to an answer you made just before the court rose. You said that you believed, that you still believe (so I understood you), that when Bealy Smith made those demands upon you for money, and indeed made communications to you generally upon the borough, he was, to use your own expression, the mouthpiece of the other Conservative lawyers. That was, I think, what you said ?—Yes.

38,482. Well now, is not it the fact, as stated by you in describing the circumstances under which Bealy

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

7 Oct. 1869.

Smith became your confidential agent at the election of 1865, or before that election, that Bealy Smith's becoming your confidential agent was owing to the circumstance that none of the other solicitors could agree upon a course of action, and as they separated in the "most admired confusion" you had to appeal to Bealy Smith to help you?—I think you mistake the date of that. When I say "They separated in the most admired confusion" was about three years previously. I always wished, as I knew Mr. Bealy Smith to be by far the most able man, and I have no hesitation in saying that he is the only man in this town of our party who had the slightest electioneering talent—I have no hesitation in saying it——

38,483. (Mr. Price.) Electioneering talent in Bridgwater means a very peculiar kind of talent?—Well, it is not alone that, because you may recollect Bolingbroke says that anybody may thrust a pound note into the greasy paw of a chambermaid.

38,484. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, go on?—The reason of that I take it was this, we all got together, and old Mr. Smith then said that neither directly nor indirectly would he ever again interfere with the electioneering or be an agent. He said he would not; and we were thinking of getting a man down from London. We had this meeting, and there was a good deal of words about it, and Mr. James Trevor then said to me, "You "have not the ghost of a chance." They all went away different ways. As a gentleman said to me they were "a regular covey of solicitors which I saw flying "out of the 'Clarence.'" Things then went on, and Mr. Bealy Smith became a solicitor, and I saw very clearly that he was a very clever young man. None of the others made the slightest overtures to me to take the conduct of the election, and in point of fact it was the party here, whoever guides them, that made him the solicitor at the head of it, and there was the reason that I took Mr. Bealy Smith. In fact I did not appeal to anybody else.

38,485. Very well, that is precisely what I suggested to you just now, that, far from being the mouthpiece of the other lawyers, he was chosen in preference to them, who would not communicate with you at all?—Well, it was not that they would not communicate, but they never said a word. There was nothing of the sort. In fact, from his ability there was not at that time I am perfectly certain in Bridgwater a man equal to him, and if I had employed any other man the party would have left me. The party generally would have rebelled. I do not mean to say the leaders of the party, but the lower part of the party.

(Mr. Price.) The men who wanted bribes no doubt would have rebelled.

38,486. (Mr. Anstey.) Then do not you now see the expediency of modifying your statement, that down to the last moment, when he was making these exactions upon you and Mr. Patton and Mr. Pitman, he was acting as the mouthpiece of the other lawyers?—I cannot say what took place after I left the borough. I am perfectly certain that he was a most active man, and when a meeting took place he was the scribe of it, and did all the official writing that there was. This I am perfectly certain of.

38,487. But the position you describe was rather antagonistic to the other solicitors than otherwise?—The elder Mr. Smith had been soured early in life by a very unfortunate circumstance, and the very idea of speaking to him about it drove him nearly frantic.

38,488. Well, they were antagonistic?—Their tempers were very decidedly different. I do not know whether that was the reason.

38,489. Therefore they were no mouthpiece?—They were the mouthpiece by necessity. There was nobody to do the work.

38,490. (Mr. Price.) It amounts to this, does not it, Mr. Westropp, that so far as you knew at that time if the other lawyers had had the conduct of the election the chances are they would not have had recourse to these practices. That is about it, is not it?—I certainly pass no opinion upon that.

Dr. Russell Reynolds sworn.

Dr. R. Reynolds.

38,491. (Mr Price.) You are a physician practising in London?—I am.

38,492. Where?—In Grosvenor Street.

38,493. Have you been in attendance upon Mr. Richard Smith lately?—I have seen him to-day and he has been more or less under my care since the summer of 1866. I think that was the first time. I saw him about June in 1866.

38,494. Where did you see him to-day?—At Bristol, Clifton.

38,495. Then he has moved from Exeter or Teignmouth, or wherever he was. When did he move?—I do not know.

38,496. The last account we had of him was that he was down at Exeter.

(Mr. Anstey.) No. He was afterwards at Teignmouth; then afterwards at Dawlish, and now he is at Bristol.

(The witness.) At Clifton I saw him.

38,497. (Mr. Price.) Then he is able to move, to travel?—Yes.

38,498. What is the present state of his health?—He is paralysed in the left arm and partly paralysed in the left leg.

38,499. Has that affected his brain?—It is the result of disease of the brain.

38,500. Has it enfeebled his memory or his intellect at the present time?—No; I do not think his intellect is affected at the present time. His memory was defective about a year and a half ago. He was slow in catching things that were said to him.

38,501. Is he in a condition in which, if he were examined cautiously, not in the public court, but examined cautiously in a room where there would be nobody but our own shorthand writer present and ourselves, you think him capable of undergoing such an examination, an examination cautiously administered to him, with regard to certain facts that we require to get from him?—I have no doubt that he would answer the questions, if you mean with regard to his intellectual capacity.

38,502. Is he in a state to understand the questions, to appreciate the nature of them, and to give us definite answers?—Oh, I think so, quite, but I think it would be attended with very great danger.

38,503. Tell us why you think it would be attended with very great danger?—Because of the disease that is at present existing in his brain. It does not quite at the present moment affect his intelligence, but it affects the movement of the left arm, but there are special symptoms in his case which make it a very grave one. He is better than he was, but I believe that any excitement would put him in danger either of his intellect or his life.

38,504. Supposing, for instance, we required your attendance. Supposing we went over to his place, or had him removed within a distance to which we could go, because we must have him within a certain distance, though we might not require his attendance actually in this town; suppose we had him at Burnham, and we were there to attend upon him, and you or his ordinary medical man were present, and the questions were put to him quietly and without any unnecessary excitement about the thing, do you think it would be attended with any very serious results?—I have not any question about it; it would be very dangerous indeed to him. I will tell you why I think so, because there are many occasions when anything in the shape of emotional excitement renders him hysterical very quickly.

38,505. Have you talked at all about election matters?—Oh no, I never knew anything about them.

38,506. Has he expressed any horror at the thought of being examined?—Not specially at that; I do not know that he would express horror at that, but on several occasions previously I have had to prevent him from doing things that he was rather wishful and anxious to do.

38,507. Are you aware that some time ago, a few days ago, he was seen in the presence of our secretary, and there evinced, as far as could be judged, no disinclination to answer questions, and did give us most valuable information?—I was informed of that by Mrs. Smith.

38,508. And without any apparent excitement resulting from it. Under those circumstances do you think if he was subjected to an examination of half an hour or three quarters of an hour of a very similar kind to that he went through the other day, for the purpose of giving us information respecting these matters, that that would be a matter you could not countenance as a medical man?—I could not, really.

38,509. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing it was done in this way, having regard to the strong opinion you have just expressed, suppose the Commissioners determined amongst themselves to put certain questions only, to be reduced to writing and to be read slowly and quietly by one of the Commissioners, understanding that no interruptions were to take place on the part of the others, and that he was to have his own time to answer them. And further that if the medical man present thought a respite or an adjournment necessary should take place, that that should be granted, would there be any danger in that, do you think, when you are informed by me that to our secretary the other day he stated not only that he was not disinclined but that he was fully prepared, supposing we exercised our compulsory powers, fully prepared to answer fully every question?—My deliberate judgment is that it would put Mr. Smith in very grave danger.

38,510. Even in that form?—Under that form.

38,511. Have you any suggestion to make, Dr. Reynolds, as to any mode which could be adopted. I may tell you that there is a very important fact which remains to be ascertained, which none but he (his son having chosen to leave the country), can inform us of. He says he is fully prepared to inform us of all the facts, and that amongst the others, I suppose. Have you any suggestion to make whereby without endangering his life or his reason, we may get, not second hand but from his own mouth, the fact which we desire?—I think that if it is one simple isolated fact that you wish to have from him, it may be obtained in the manner that some information was that you mentioned just now; but I think anything like a formal examination of Mr. Smith would put him in danger of another attack, which might be fatal to his life, or at all events to his reason.

38,512. Suppose two of the Commissioners were in the same room with folding doors, and only one Commissioner were actually speaking to him, that would not be formal you know?—It is so very difficult to understand different people's temperaments that I should imagine perhaps that that kind of formality would be as trying to him as any other.

38,513. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you think that it is being put on his oath that would try him so?—No, I should not think that, but if you commenced an examination like that it is so difficult to know when it would come to an end.

38,514. (Mr. Anstey.) But we do know what we want to get. This is not the commencement of our inquiry here, but it has almost come to an end, I hope, and we have much information we need, and putting it so—assuming that we only need information on certain points——?—I will just mention one fact, which will show you the difficulty of answering a question like that you propose. This morning, although Mr. Smith expressed his willingness, almost his anxiety, to come, yet in a few minutes afterwards he began to cry; his eyes filled up with tears, and he trembled all over. I do not think that a man that has paralysis of one side of the body, and that the result of serious disease of the brain, ought to be exposed to that danger. That is my feeling.

38,515. You have no further suggestion to make then beyond what you have said?—I really do not feel competent to make any suggestion beyond what I have said just now.

38,516. When does he return to Bridgwater?—I do not know.

38,517. When does he leave Bristol?—I do not know; I was not consulted upon that point. I was telegraphed for to come down the day before yesterday, but I could not come down then.

38,518. Did he come to Bristol to meet you?—I think he has been there for the last 10 days or a fortnight. Of course one's time was rather short there, and I simply examined him as to his present state of health.

38,519. What is his address at Bristol?—He was stopping at the hotel, "Clifton Down" hotel.

38,520. (Mr. Price.) Well, I think that will do, but I will ask you again, to get it formally on the notes, then is your medical opinion that you must leave upon us the risk of doing it, seeing that you cannot answer for the medical consequences?—I could not, indeed; I should think they might be very grave.

38,521. Having told us what you have, you leave upon us the risk and the hazard of examining him?—I must do so. I am much obliged to you for your courtesy in examining me so early.

Mr. Henry Westropp recalled.

Mr. H. Westropp.

38,522. (Mr. Price.) We will go on now with the history. I think you were beginning with the last election. You had got so far, I think, as to tell us about the compromise. I think you were beginning about the compromise. I am not quite sure whether you had got to that point?—I should wish, if you will allow me, to mention some facts connected with the man Palmer. I have read all the evidence, and Mr. Anstey addressed a question to Palmer as to which I should wish fully to satisfy his mind that there was no such arrangement between Palmer and me. I was at the "Clarence," as he says, and he went down and did various things. It has never been stated in evidence, either at the trial of the petition here, nor before you that the first thing that that man did was to throw all the sovereigns down on the table in the room where all the clerks were writing. I at the time was talking. It was about 3 o'clock; and I was talking to young Mr. Smith, who was looking at the gross accounts, seeing how the numbers were, and I heard the noise on the table, and looking round I saw some sovereigns on the table. He did not come to me, but he threw them down. "What is this?" said I. "Money from the opposite camp," said he. "Well," said I, "I promised "this morning that if I catch them tripping I will go "at them." That is what I said that morning. I said moreover, "Somebody had better go and take his deposition." I remained there some time, and then I went upstairs, and after I was in my room upstairs Palmer came in, and, as I said, received the money. It was 7*l.* I gave, and 3*l.* Mr. Hennett. That was the history of that transaction. There is something which, if you will allow me, I will explain to you, another thing, that is, about Mr. John Smith. This was before the election. Now it has been thought that I had some underhand dealings with Smith. In the first place, except Heal, he is the man that I should least of all trust in Bridgwater. He is too astute; he has been in America for a long time. The first communication (I believe Mr. Brice has given you my letters), the letters that he sent to me, I think you have. The first communication I had from Mr. Smith was (I dare say you will find it there): "Dear sir—Should you be in town," or, "are you in town," "can I see you?" something like that. The following day I came up. This was received (they marked it here) on the 3rd of February. It is marked "private," and it contained the papers relative to the loss of that ship of his, and also all Mr. Kinglake's letters to him. He says, "I enclose Mr. "Kinglake's letters to me on the subject which you

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

7 Oct. 1869.

" will return to me when in London. I merely let " you have them for your guidance." He also alleged that he did not know me till he came to see me when in London. There is actually in this, " Will be at your hotel " (the Union Club) " at half-past 10 o'clock on Thursday morning." You see, therefore, so far from not knowing me till he saw me in London, he made the appointment. " Please " (and he dashes it) " merely acknowledge the receipt of letters and papers " that I may have Tuesday morning." He came up and he told me the circumstances of the case. Oh, I must tell you, after that I went down, and I knew Mr. Peel, Lord Henry Lennox's secretary, and asked him——

38,523. (Mr. Price.) That was to the Admiralty, you mean?—Yes. Mr. John Smith simply asked to be allowed to plead his own cause; so I said, " Yes," and he said he would do it. And not only that, but Captain Walker who has something to do there——

38,524. Something to do in the department?—Yes; I do not know exactly what. However, when Mr. Smith was going down, I never shall forget it, he was skipping about by the Horse Guards and he said to me, " Mr. Westropp, I shall not forget this, so I pledge " you my word, that I shall never directly or indirectly " do anything against you;" and my answer was, " Mr. Smith, you are in a state of excitement now; " pray say no more. I do not want any promise, and " I do not want anything in the world from you; but " I am merely doing it as I should for any Bridg- " water man. I should be ready to do it for anybody." He went to the Admiralty, pleaded his cause there successfully, and he came back towards the " Union," and I asked him if he would have a glass of wine. (Perhaps you will allow me to say with regard to that money which I gave to my wife that I made a mistake as to the broker's name.)

(Mr. Price.) That is all set right.

(The witness.) He showed me the books, and I find it was a Mr. Harris. I saw the books yesterday.

(Mr. Price.) We agreed that Mr. Harris should not come down if we did not require him. We have telegraphed now to say that we shall not now require him.

(The witness.) Smith then took and tore up certainly two of, and I dare say all, Mr. Kinglake's letters, and he said, " He is a gross humbug, and no good." There is the man who said he would pawn his shirt for him. He told me also that Mr. Kinglake did not mean to stand again, and he said I was as right as the mail. Well, he said, " I am going to see " Mr. Kinglake," and he went and saw Mr. Kinglake, and he wrote me word to say that he was going to stand again. On February 12th I wrote to him, " My dear sir,—I feel much obliged by your setting " me right respecting A. W. K.'s intentions about " the borough. Of course the certainty of this " modifies to a great extent what you were good " enough to express as your ideas respecting my " chances of success. But the fact of Mr. K.'s " coming forward or not, however it may alter my " chances, does not in the least change what I have " determined upon, and indeed, than which in common " decency I could not do less, after having formally " taken leave of the electors, not again directly or " indirectly to bring myself forward and to stand " again solely on the manifested wish of a large pro- " portion of the constituency. This will be for the " electors to decide upon." And he also asked me to send down a sort of memorandum of the conversation which took place as well as I could recollect it, verbatim, " I shall only add that any little kindness " which I may have shown to you when in town will " be again at your command; and I only wish that I " had a few friends with your intense energy." There was my letter; and on February the 17th there is a letter that I never mentioned. He says that he took an active part in the last election, because I had broken my covenant with him. I made no covenant. I had never spoken of a compact. I never implied it either directly or indirectly.

38,525. (Mr. Price.) He gave as his excuse; his excuse I wont call it; but he gave as a reason for voting against you that he considered he was absolved from any understanding, or anything to be implied from anything he had written or said to you in consequence of your publication of a private conversation?—Well, so far from that, Mr. Joe Smith and Mr. Ruddock met me in the middle of August, I think it was, by appointment, and the moment Mr. Joe Smith saw me, he said, " Hallo," said he, " so John Smith " has been asking you to get his son into the Blue " Coat School?" I said, " How do you know?" He said, " Oh, we talked a great deal of that. He told " me himself on the platform as I was coming up " here."

38,526. Had you at that time, or before that, divulged in any way to anybody anything which could have reached Bridgwater, showing that he had asked, or what had taken place?—Never in any way directly or indirectly, so far from it, when I sent the letters down to Mr. Brice I withheld this letter:

" Dear sir,

" I suppose you don't know of a presentation to " the enclosed school. Got a boy just the age, and " oftentimes a thing of that sort goes begging.

" I am, dear sir, yours sincerely,

" JOHN SMITH."

I have never broken faith with anybody, and it rather took me by surprise when I heard this. I would not have troubled you with all these things.

(Mr. Price.) Oh, you are certainly entitled to have an opportunity afforded you of explaining.

(The witness.) Well, after the examination of him here I got a telegram from him: " John Smith, " York House, Bridgwater, to Henry Westropp, Esq., " Union Club, Charing Cross, London." Oh, he also said that in my conversation with him I had said I had been robbed by a great many of my own supporters. I never thought it, and therefore if I said it to him it must have been a falsehood, but I never told him either directly or indirectly. He told me a great deal of the way in which Bagehot's election was lost. He told me that in the middle part of the day he went down and found the solicitors and others eating lobster salad and drinking champagne down at the old hotel of Herbert's, the " Commercial." He said they were all crowing, and saying how grand the election was going, and somebody said, " No, it is not; I can tell " you it is not won yet. They have those men up at " the 'Bull and Butcher,'" and it was perfectly true, as it afterwards turned out. On that evening, September the 4th, on the day that he was here——

38,527. The evening of the day he was examined before us?—That same evening I had a telegram from him: " Dear sir,—Report here that when I saw you " in London I promised to vote for you. I did not. " Did I? Answer paid for." What I telegraphed back to him was, " Unasked, you said, 'I will never " act against you.' My reply, 'I do not want that or " any other promise.'" That was the telegram that I sent back. That evening I got a telegram (I think it was that evening; yes, it was) from Temblett. He says, " John Smith, of York House." (I think it was from Temblett. Oh no. This letter arrived an hour after that telegram from John Smith. I got this letter): " Sir,—Mr. John Smith, of York House, in " his evidence yesterday before Her Majesty's Com- " missioners, stated that in a conversation he once " had with you in London you said you had been " swindled very much by your own party in Bridg- " water, and that you gave the name of myself, " Robert Bussell, and others as having robbed you to " a great extent. I will thank you to say by return " whether you ever made such a statement to him, " and if so, what grounds or authority you had for " doing so. I will thank you to give this your imme- " diate attention, as I probably shall have to give " evidence early next week, when I shall probably be " asked questions relating to this matter. In conclu- " sion, I would beg to state I shrink from nothing. " On the contrary, I court inquiry into my conduct in " the election matters. If you have anything to urge " against me I hope you will bring it out, and give " me an opportunity of replying to it." I telegraphed back at half-past 9 o'clock at night that it was utterly false about my having said one word about these men, and that I would write to him the following morning. I wrote to him a letter, which I daresay he had. Now, sir, in regard to this negotiation with Mr. Fennelly himself, I am very anxious to put you on the right path, because it may have been thought I was trying to trip up the heels of my friend Mr. Gray, than whom a better man I do not think exists, or a more truthful. On the Friday before the election Mr. Vanderbyl was muffled up and speaking very hoarse. I said, "It is a bad thing for you, this weather." It was very bad weather. "You had better get a little cap and put on your head."

38,528. Was he bald?—Oh no. On the Saturday, not having concluded our canvass, not having called upon Mr. Spink, I said to Mr. Joe Smith, "I will go and see Mr. Spink." I went to go out to see Mr. Spink, and when I went out I knocked at the door. Mr. Smith remained in the cab, and I knocked at the door. The servant came, and I did not ask whether they were in or not, but I went in, and I think as you go in there is a little recess in the opposite end of the place, and there were two persons, and (I say it with consideration) they evidently were trying to hide something. What it was I do not know. I went into the room, and as I went into the room Mr. Spink called out to the servant, "Go and tell your mistress," said he, "Mr. Westropp is below, and a friend of mine." We went into the drawing room, and Mr. Fennelly looked at me and said, "That was good advice that you gave to Mr. Vanderbyl." I had not recognized him even when he sat down. "Oh," said I, "it was you, was it, that I met on the Cornhill?" "Yes," he said. We talked for a little time. He had been a clerk to one of the banks in Cork, and therefore he knew perfectly well all about me. After a time I got up and went out, and when I went out and got into the cab Mr. Smith said, "We are done; the money is down." There was a sort of feeling about me—I cannot tell you what it was, but I had a perfect conviction in my mind that there was money down at that time—and I believe that was the first lung that, as Mr. Cook said, was pumped out. I believe that was the first, and no one will make me believe that the number of 263 who polled and ran our majority down was ever got without that. What is more I have not a shadow of doubt about it, however it has been managed. However, on the following Sunday I went down to Mr. Brice in the evening; it was rather late when I went. When I say late, about half-past 5, and Mr. James Trevor was there, and after I was there I said, "I think I will go "in and tell Mr. Hennett not to say anything in "seconding me to-morrow more than the ordinary "topics—to say very little." He was not there, and I left word to say where I was. In a little time a knock came to the door, and there were Mr. Hennett and Mr. Spinks. "I want you," said Mr. Spinks. We went out into the street and he said, "I have a "proposition to make; it is my proposition altogether. "Mr. Vanderbyl knows nothing, in fact nobody does; "you know you have been doing dirty things." The moment he said that, knowing that I had not, I said, "There is a trap; we will see what is to come of it." "Now," said he, "I have come to propose that you "should keep back 100 men, and Mr. Vanderbyl will "keep back 100, and we will come in with a rush at "the end and return you and Mr. Vanderbyl." "But," said I, "Mr. Spinks, that is a sort of thing which I "should not entertain for a moment. Where is my "friend Mr. Gray to be?" He said, "Well, will you see Mr. Vanderbyl?" It was not Mr. Fennelly, but Mr. Vanderbyl. "Certainly not." I went back and told Mr. Brice and Mr. James Trevor what had occurred. "Well," they said, "you had just as well go there and see Mr. Vanderbyl." They proposed a meeting at Mr. Hennett's house that evening. "You may as well go and hear what they have to say." I went back and told Mr. Spinks, and he said. "Oh, very well; I will go down to the "'Globe,' and see and arrange about it." It was very late, and dinner had been kept back an exceedingly long time. I mentioned this fact only to tell you that this is the only part of the conversation which Mr. Gray was not made cognizant of five minutes afterwards. When I went back to the hotel, Mr. Toogood was staying there. I think he had come from London, and I did not wish to state anything at all about it in the state in which the matter then was. Mr. Spinks wrote me a letter from the "Globe" asking me to be at Mr. Hennett's house at 9. When I went up Mr. Fennelly was there. Said he, "Mr. "Vanderbyl from physical ability is unable to attend, "but I understand that he has desired me to come." I must tell you that Mr. Brice and Mr. James Trevor told me, "If they propose anything to you in the way "of compromise, do not you for one moment accept "anything, but refer them to us." When I went up Mr. Fennelly told me, "A quarrel with Reed and Cook you see," that they had taken the management entirely out of their hands. Well, this rather staggered me, because I thought if this man makes me any overture, and I am told by my two friends that I must refer them to the solicitors, what am I to do? We went on talking, and he said about the hundred men being kept back just as Mr. Spinks had said, and he also said that he had proposed it to Mr. Spinks whilst walking out somewhere that day. I told him, "I "cannot do that, there is nothing in the world can be "done." We talked for a considerable time on one thing and another. At last he got up. "Well," says he, "I will tell you what, we will meet you half way." Says I, "This is quite another turn of the affair." I immediately suspected there was something further, more than the hundred men. I said, "Mr. Fennelly, "excuse me, I cannot entertain the thing; you must "mention whatever it is. Allow me to call in Mr. "Hennett and Mr. Spinks." I rang the bell, and they came in. I mentioned to them what the heads were, and told them that they must communicate through my solicitors, and Mr. Fennelly said, "Shall it be Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook?" and I said, "I do not "care one wit. It is nothing to me; but you must "communicate with Mr. Trevor and Mr. Brice."

38,529. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were those you called in when you rang the bell?—Hennett and Spinks.

38,530. I asked each of them particularly, "Tell "me what took place when you and Mr. Fennelly "were present?" I could get nothing of this from them?—Well, I tell you exactly what occurred.

38,531. What were you and Mr. Fennelly speaking about particularly at that moment when you heard those words after getting up to the mark which you described, you said, "I will tell you what, I will meet you half way"—half way to what?—It was apropos to nothing, and is the extraordinary part. We had been speaking of Mr. Carnegie who lived somewhere near. I think you know him, and who he is.

38,532. Yes, but you had better state shortly what it was?—We were speaking about Mr. Carnegie, and it was a propos of nothing. He got up in rather a strange way, and said, "I will tell you what, I will meet you half way." I said, it immediately struck me there was some snake.

38,533. Was not a hundred against a hundred meeting you half way?—Yes, that could not have had any reference to that, because I put that aside altogether. In the early part, I told him that was a thing I had no control over.

38,534. What did you then understand from his words and manner?—I tell you candidly, I think he was prepared to spend money.

38,535. And that is what he meant by "half way"?—That is what he meant.

38,536. And if you withdrew Mr. Gray he was prepared to sacrifice Mr. Kinglake?—Yes, exactly, that was my impression; I may be wrong. I went back and told Mr. Brice and Mr. Trevor, and there was nothing more about the matter, and I went away. It was late at night, and we heard no more. After the petition was decided and the whole thing over, I was coming one night to my house on a Sunday and met

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

7 Oct. 1869.

Mr. Fennelly. This was not a private conversation. I was sitting in a compartment of the carriage in the train, and Mr. Fennelly passed by going from Victoria station.

38,537. Give us about the date of this?—Well, it was some short time before my poor brother-in-law died. I was returning about 12 o'clock, I think. I think it was about the 10th April this year, and Mr. Fennelly passed by. He came in, and I said, "Well, a pretty mess you have made at Bridgwater." "A pretty mess you made," said he. I said "It is no use bandying recriminations in this way," and we sat down. And there is a special case which I should call your attention to tried to be made about Wembdon——

38,538. I do not think it is necessary to go into that?—Perhaps there is a good deal you do not know about that, but I told him a good deal about this. I said "They tried to throw over Fennelly." "Damn them," said he, "I never heard a word about that."

38,539. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Kinglake's party tried to throw over Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

38,540. You said "Fennelly"?—"Vanderbyl, I tell "you what," said he, "they have been doing. They "tried to carry that on up to the day of the petition, "and the morning of the petition I had a telegram "at Calais. I was stopping at Calais, and got a "telegram to come across at once, and I did," said he, "and the morning of the petition being tried here, "when we found what was going on, Mr. Henry "Lovibond had a telegram put into his hand to tell "him if he attempted to sever the connexion between "Kinglake and Vanderbyl that I would be there. "Confound the fellow," said he, "I had a conversa- "tion with him before that would have knocked over "50 elections."

38,541. (Mr. Price.) He said he had had a conversation?—With Mr. Henry Lovibond that would have knocked over 50 elections. I got out of the carriage at Norwood, and he said, "You made me hotter than "ever I was in my life before." I have not seen him since.

38,542. (Mr. Anstey.) I did not like to stop you before, because you were in the midst of a narrative, and it greatly destroys the effect of it, but having paused a moment I want to ask you, was it to you, or was it to your professional advisers some communications, which we have only in the vague at present, were made on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl about money matters before the election, proposing to betray Mr. Kinglake into your hands if you would consent to coalesce with them?—I never knew anything about that further than this: I think it was about the time that Mr. James Trevor came up first, I am not very certain whether then or afterwards, I became aware that there had been some effort at coalition, but it could not be carried out.

38,543. When did you first become aware of it? How many months before the election?—Some time before. I cannot say.

38,544. Then it was not really the first attempt made by Mr. Vanderbyl?—Decidedly not.

38,545. Do you know of any corresponding attempts by Mr. Kinglake to betray Mr. Vanderbyl, besides that which you have spoken of just now?—No, nothing except when those attempts afterwards took place. There were four different ones.

38,546. You seem to have shown some great hesitation, I will say prudence, in declining to act on these overtures; did it occur to you that men who would betray one another were as likely to betray you?—Not the least; I never thought of that. I merely took it without any casuistic reference at all, but simply on what I thought.

38,547. (Mr. Price.) I ought to ask you this, up to that time, for you have said yourself it had been insinuated that you had tried to throw Mr. Gray over, I think you say he had been kept informed of everything that was going on?—Everything after that, and I must do justice to Mr. Brice and Mr. James Trevor also by saying when I came to them and told them about those overtures, they immediately said, "We "could not have entertained this a moment." Do not think those gentlemen were going to betray Mr. Gray, because Mr. Gray had been very uncomfortable about it; he had been very off and on, and on one occasion it required a great deal of difficulty to prevent him retiring as he wanted. I said, "If you do, my flag is "down at once, and I am fairly ruined." He is a very nervous man, and betrayed a great deal of nervousness in this chair the other day, or perhaps he could have explained many things.

38,548. You think it would not have taken any difficulty to persuade him to retire?—Not only that, but he expressed a wish openly to us all, and to Mr. Brice, and to Mr. James Trevor, and among others he told me himself yesterday I saw him he expressed a wish to Mr. Spofforth in London to retire, and Mr. Spofforth said, "Do not, you will ruin Mr. Westropp "if you do; it is too late now to get any man." Therefore I want you to be certain that those two gentlemen in acting as they did did not in any way act but in the most honourable way to Mr. Gray.

38,549. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Fennelly chosen as the medium of communication because he was known to you, or merely because he was Mr. Vanderbyl's partner?—I should imagine that he was proposed, not chosen, but my having met him at Mr. Spinks' house, and thereby became to a certain degree acquainted with him——

38,550. Was it in consequence of that?—I dare say it was.

38,551. The point of my question is, was Mr. Fennelly chosen with a view of conciliating you, or because Mr. Vanderbyl had confidence in him?—Well, I should say it was a mixture of both, because the first thing he did was to announce he had Mr. Vanderbyl's confidence in the fullest way, and whatever he proposed and accepted Mr. Vanderbyl would ratify.

38,552. You have had no previous dealing?—No.

38,553. Therefore it could not have been out of consideration for you?—No, I never knew Mr. Fennelly by name. In point of fact his history and his being in the bank I have since discovered, since my last visit to Ireland.

38,554. Did Mr. Vanderbyl recognize him in the fullest way as his friend or agent?—I have not seen Mr. Vanderbyl since.

39,555. But on that occasion, when you went to meet Mr. Vanderbyl?—He told me——

38,556. Mr. Vanderbyl told you?—No.

38,557. Only Mr. Fennelly?—I did not see Mr. Vanderbyl. Well, I think it was Mr. Brice and Mr. James Trevor came up the latter end of November. They were trying to effect a compromise, and there being four distinct efforts made at a compromise during the negociation, at the first they came up, and it was proposed that Mr. Vanderbyl gave up the following February, that is next February, and to tell the truth of the matter my health had broken down a good deal, and I was very willing that Mr. Gray should take the place, but I thought he would have a much better chance if any negociatton was carried in from me, and I did not say yes or no in fact to it, but Mr. James Trevor wrote me, and I wrote then a letter to Mr. James Trevor; what it was I do not know, but this letter came on the 29th November: "I have received "yours of yesterday, but could not write anything "definite yesterday by day mail. I have had long "conferences with Brice, Lilly, Ruddock, Joe Smith, "Boyle, my brother, Porter, Batten, and Hodges, and "I think all (except perhaps Hodges) approve of the "terms suggested;" that was that Mr. Vanderbyl was to give up the seat, and that Mr. Kinglake was to promise one of our people; promise, mind you, that is all, because it is a different thing from the next compromise, that he would give up in the event of Mr. Vanderbyl failing to fulfil his condition.

38,558. (Mr. Price.) Who was it made that proposition on the part of Mr. Kinglake?—It was Mr. Henry Lovibond. There was one besides up with him, who it was I do not know, one of the Liberal lawyers.

38,559. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Barham perhaps?—I do not think it was.

38,560. Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook?—I could not clearly say.

38,561. They were both in town at different times?—Decidedly. My impression is, if you ask me, that it was Mr. Reed; I am not sure; there were so many came up so often.

38,562. And the banker who advanced the 500*l.*, Mr. Sealy, who was anxious about the money, was there too?—Well, I say it here, and before all Bridgwater men, that the result of all these fightings was Mr. Sealy's personal antipathy to myself. I believe I was petitioned against the first time not so much out of political feeling as from his personal antipathy to myself, and he told gentlemen of this town that as long as he lived I should never represent the place.

38,563. (Mr. Anstey.) It is a matter of fact, is not it, that Mr. Sealy is the only layman, as we lawyers say, who come up on that occasion with the lawyers on the Liberal side?—I cannot say. I do not know any others. Mr. Sealy was there I know.

38,564. If he did not come to represent his 500*l.*, what did he come for?—Mr. Kinglake had known him personally for 10 years, and as a very intimate friend, and consequently he might without any 500*l.* have wished to set at rest Mr. Kinglake's difficulties. I must be just to him. "They will give their consent of "course after discussing the pros and cons very much. "Batten and Hodges however say that the Working "Men's Conservative Association will kick tre-"mendously, which of course I quite expected. "Lovibond called on me about 2 p.m. yesterday and "says that Kinglake is quite ready to do his part, "that Vanderbyl has confirmed the negociation of "Friday with Fennelly, and that Nicholls and "Reed and Cook agreed to it. Sealy is from home "and we cannot see him till Tuesday. He doubts "whether J. W. Sully would sign, he is so determined, "but Wilton he thinks would, and the mayor would "accede (he thinks), though not sign. I have "arranged with Lovibond to go London with him on "Wednesday evening (Tavistock at 11.30), and get the "guarantees completed. Will you be at the 'Union' "not later than 11 on Thursday morning, and con-"sider who is to be our friend, W. Hunt, G. Hardy, "S. Northcote, or who else; I do not fancy going to "Spofforth or Noel. I feel that we are embarked in a "delicate and difficult business, but if I do my best and "should get done I cannot help it. I think, however, "we may rely on such of our opponents as we propose "to rely on. Cold still bad, and I have been obliged "to go in for the doctor, who enjoins two or three "days' nursing. Consider and frame a letter from you "to Porter which he may read to the Conservative "Working Men's Association if the treaty should be "carried out, and in the meantime we have thought "it best to proceed with petition, for which we sent "up final instructions after my return." Well, that was on the 29th. I have here a letter, which is the last letter I ever received from my brother-in-law, on this subject, if you will allow me I will read it.

38,565. (Mr. Price.) If you think it is material for us?—It is only why I changed so much, you will know in a moment when he says, "I hope you have not "bound yourself to any compromise with such "desperate men." On the receipt of that I sent off a telegram down to Mr. John Trevor, in truth I sent two, but this is one I know, "The proposed compro-"mise perfectly impossible, because illegal; no com-"promise can be entertained; legal opinion goes by "post to-night." I enclosed that letter which I have just read to Mr. James Trevor.

38,566. Had a legal opinion been taken?—No, he was my brother-in-law.

38,567. Judge Dobbs had told you you would be acting illegally?—If I attempted to do anything of the sort in any way whatever. I knew the seat could only be vacated by accepting the Chiltern Hundreds, but I was not aware that there was anything of the sort.

38,568. When once a petition is presented it would have been illegal, but up to the time of its being presented I do not think so?—Well, that was my idea; that this had been presented. Then I got a letter on the 2nd of December from Mr. John Trevor: "My "dear Mr. Westropp—Your letter of 8 p.m. of yester-"day arrived by day mail, and, in my brother's "absence at Stowey, I answer it, giving my opinion, "but I will forward it to him, and you will get his "answer on Thursday morning. I do not think "there is any necessity for your coming here,"—because I had an intention of coming down and staying all night—"for your No. 1 telegram arrived "just in the nick of time, about a quarter of an "hour before a meeting of 20 influential malcon-"tents at my office, and we then fully concurred "in the propriety of going on with the petition, "and on your second telegram arriving before the "meeting broke up I read it to them and they left "fully satisfied with what was doing. My brother is "confined to the house at home, so that he was not at "the meeting yesterday. You will hear from him as "to the petition by this post." Then it was all broken off, and then I got a letter from Mr. James Trevor of the 1st of December. "I still think that the arrange-"ment was feasible, but as our friends (including "Hennett and lots of others) wont have it, I have "written to my agents, Vizard and Co., of 55, Lincoln's "Inn Fields, that you and Mr. Gray will call on them "to-morrow, Wednesday, at 12, to sign it, and I have "written Gray at Great St. Helens to do so. I do "not know his private address, but on a venture I "will send another letter to him, 19 Regent's Park "Road.

"Faithfully,
"James Trevor.

"Do not go to Ireland."

Then on the 4th of December I was very much astonished on Friday evening to find that Mr. John Trevor was in town singly, and I went to the "Tavistock" hotel, and he then asked me to meet Mr. Kinglake personally, and I said, "Really I do not fancy meeting "Mr. Kinglake, I do not want to have anything to do "with him; I would rather not meet him;" but says he, "Do come and see him." I went, and when we went into the place Mr. Kinglake began in a very verbose sort of way to talk nonsense indeed—about how people could be represented with the prime minister. I said, "In what way?" and he said that the lowest people in Bridgwater could talk to the prime minister. I said, "How so?" and he said, "You "know that every representative meets with the "ministers in the lobbies, and you know what private "confabs they have."

38,569. (Mr. Anstey.) What was that tending to?—It was merely to fill up; stuffing, just to carry on the conversation.

38,570. If I heard you rightly, what Mr. Kinglake said was this, he was vaunting of the poorest electors of Bridgwater having vicarously, through him, personal conversations with ministers?—I think not as a matter of brag, for something to say. The conversation was flagging, and at last I said, "Come, Mr. Kinglake, if "you want to put this thing to the test," and it was then offered that Mr. Vanderbyl was to go out—that Mr. Kinglake was to give a written engagement—I must tell you this; "Why," I said, "what do you "mean, when is Mr. Vanderbyl to go out?" He would go out so-and-so after Easter. "Well," I said, "Maunday Thursday is the last day. Will you put "down Maunday Thursday?" "Yes," said he "I "will give you a written engagement in the strongest "terms. I will give you a letter which shall be "placed in the hands of anybody you like, that I will "give up my seat in the event of Mr. Vanderbyl not "doing it."

38,571. In the event of Mr. Vanderbyl not having by the arrival of the day which Mr. Disraeli has made immortal, vacated his seat?—However, that is it, but Mr. Fennelly has since told me that was not the agreement made, but that either was to go out, and it was to be referred to Mr. Something Drake to decide which was to go out.

38,572. Sir William Drake?—He was Mr. Drake then, and he was to decide which was to go out, and which ever was to be borne harmless, the other was to pay the full expenses of the election. "We did that designedly" said Mr. Fennelly, "because we knew "Mr. Kinglake had not money to do it, and thought "it was practically putting Mr. Vanderbyl in." Now said I, "Was that told to our people, was that part of "the condition told?" "Well," said he, "I do not know, "Mr. John Trevor ought to have known it." I said, "It was never mentioned to me, nor did I believe Mr. "Trevor did know it." However, I said, "Come, "Mr. Kinglake, let us see the test. You know all "this can be thrown over." And I said, "Go down "to Mr. Glyn, and bring me an answer at half-past 4, "and what Mr. Glyn says and thinks I will take." We separated. At half-past 4 I went and said, "Have "you seen Mr. Glyn"?—"Yes, I have," he says; "What did he say to you." Well, said he, just in this manner, "He said, and I said, and I cannot tell you "what he said indeed, but it is perfectly satisfactory "to me." "Well," I said, "Mr. Kinglake, if that is "the thing there is no more about it."

38,573–4. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean that Mr. Kinglake used the words to you which you have just now said?—Directly, the very words.

38,575. "He said," and without filling up the blank "I said"?—Yes, that is just what he said, "Mr. "Glyn he said, and I said, and he said. In fact I "cannot tell you what he said, but it was perfectly "satisfactory to me." That is the conversation just as it occurred. Well, said I, "Come, this will never "do, it is getting late," and then they pressed me to say whether or not, if the working men were contented with this arrangement with Mr. Glyn, whether I would be contented, and I may add this, you will see upon a piece of the "Union" paper, and consequently it cannot have been written there; I wrote two copies, one I think I gave Mr. Lovibond, and one small bit of paper I took, and when I went to the "Union" I copied it off there straight: "December 4th. Mr. H. Lovi- "bond this day offered a plan for the arrangement of "the election petition. The present plan differs much "from the former one, and is much preferable, in fact "if faithfully fulfilled is not to be objected to. I offer "no opinion on any point connected with it and shall "be guided altogether by the determination of the "association." When I was writing that out, they may have it to show with this latter part, I wrote this down, but I am not very certain whether I added it to the bit of paper they had. "What they approve "I do. To what they say may I refuse my consent?" That was with regard to the compromise. I must tell you that one of the points of this compromise also to have been that the seat so vacated was not to be opposed afterwards whoever was to go in.

38,576. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean it was to be safe to a gentleman for that gentleman's life?—For one of us.

38,577. For that gentleman's life?—No, for the parliament; Mr. Gray was to go in, and we had no arrangement between us of money matters; but I was anxious that Mr. Gray should go in. Well, I have not the letters, but I mentioned this to Mr. John Trevor when he came to town. Mr. Barham immediately said, "Oh, that is all very well, that may be, but there will be the opposition," of course you know if there had been anything intended that would have settled the matter at once, because it was an understood thing, there was to be no opposition, and I understood it was not so much Mr. Barham's opinion, as that he represented the feelings of the outside party. I do not believe it was so much his opinion; although Mr. Barham is a fair opponent, he is a very bitter one. Then on the 6th of December I got a letter from Mr. James Trevor, which is very long.

38,578. (Mr. Price.) Give us the effect of it?—He says shortly, "We had a meeting at our office from "25 to 30 of the most zealous friends, when my brother "explained the fresh offer of compromise, and you left "themselves in their hands. The meeting agreed to "go on with the petition. That the offer of com- "promise was reasonable, and ought to have been "accepted, as thereby we should in all probability, "though not certainly, have obtained the fond object "of our wishes, to see you our representative, and that, "with good management, for many years to come." He goes on, "The petition must be a considerable expense, and so on," and he says, "That at the meeting it was determined they should go on in every possible way."

38,579. (Mr. Price.) Is that the letter acknowledging the receipt of your communication, which you read us a copy of, which you wrote off at the "Union" you said?—No.

38,580. You had sent it down to Mr. Trevor, you said?—Well, I daresay I wrote it then, I am not certain about that. Be that as it may, he knew I was not going to. Then on the memorable 6th of December, which will be always remembered here in Bridgwater, there were meetings and all sorts of things held, and the whole place was in commotion. Now this is the fourth and last attempt, "My brother and Mr. Brice "left here for town this afternoon, and they will be "glad if you could meet them at the Union Club "to-morrow morning (Monday), at 10 o'clock or soon "after, as time presses." With Mr. Brice, Mr. Joe Smith came, and I think Mr. Batten. I do not think they came together, they came up in the same train, and as I afterwards understood from them all the object of it was to try and cause this previous arrangement to be carried out. But on the Sunday the working men had all got together, and at 7 o'clock on the morning of the Monday I was called down stairs to my drawing room to meet, as I thought, only one person, and there were six, and they brought up this with them.

38,581. Who were they?—One gentleman, I am afraid almost to mention him, Mr. Hook. Then there were Mr. Heard, Mr. Best, Harden, and there were two more I know—the two Mr. Trevors were with them, and they brought this up to me, "Bridgwater, "6th December 1866. To Henry Westropp, Esq., "and Charles Gray, Esq. We, the undersigned, "electors of the borough of Bridgwater, hearing that "a compromise is intended to be effected, do hereby "pledge ourselves that in case of you or any other "Conservative putting up for this borough we intend, "and you may take it for granted that we shall not "support you. We do not intend this as a threat, "but we are earnest. Our watchwords are, 'No "compromise, no surrender,'" and that was signed. Mr. Brice afterwards wrote me word, I think, by 270.

38,582. (Mr. Price.) Did any of those who signed that happen to be some of the 37 of the Conservative Working Men's Association who voted dead against you?—I never looked over it, to tell you the truth. However, that put an end to the business; and we presented the petition.

38,583. That stopped in point of fact the last negotiation?—That stopped that part of it. We presented the petition, and on the 24th December I got a letter from Mr. Trevor to say: "My dear Mr. Westropp—I "have reason to believe it possible on a special case "for the opinion of the court on a point of law to cut "down enough votes to unseat V. and seat you, and "so gain one seat only. Let me hear by return of "post whether you would entertain such a proposition, "and if so, I would come to town on Monday even- "ing, and confer with you and counsel on Tuesday "morning on the feasibility and possibility of doing "this without prejudicing our other case in the " event of our failing on the special case. If it " succeeded——

38,584. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever learn what was their point of law ?—Well, I did.

38,585. What was it ?—I recollect that I am speaking to three legal gentlemen, therefore if I make a blunder, you will pardon me. It appears by the last Act of Parliament it is recited——

38,586. It was compounded, I understand ?—Yes, you are fully aware——

38,587. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you finish that sentence you were reading, "If it succeeded—— ?—"If it " succeeded, the proceeding with the petition would " not be worth while, so Mr. Gray must be consulted." That would not have suited me at all, for I wanted Mr. Gray to go in if there was to be but one, and I assure you it was not for money, there was no arrangement for money, and I was to receive no money or anything. Mr. James Trevor, indeed, long before told me that there had been an offer made, by Mr. Vanderbyl I suppose, to know whether or not the paying of money, legal expenses liberally, would at all turn me from my purpose. "I wish to hear from you by " return of post whether you entertain the idea that " your positive determination or conference with Mr. " Gray may be delayed till Saturday's post. Do not " mention the subject to anybody at Bridgwater and " address me here. Much haste. Yours truly, James " Trevor. It is important if this course is set about, " it should be done before the hearing of our case is " fixed." That is the 24th December. The petition would have to be filed long before that ?—Yes.

38,588. Did your professional advisers inform you to carry through a compromise after the filing of the petition it would be necessary for some one to make out that there was no condition with the other side ?—Yes, I heard it was necessary that some one should.

38,589. How did they suggest that difficulty should be got over ?—I know nothing about it ; I had no conversation on the subject in any way.

38,590. (Mr. Price.) I suppose the probability is that they thought they might get rid of the opposition if the bonâ fide decision of the Court of Common Pleas had been taken, and had been in your favour ?—This Wembdon business would never have carried off a sufficient number of voters to seat me, and it was to be supplemented by cases of bribery to be supplied us, and I said the moment I heard it, "It is all very well, but every one of those " men who is accused of bribery must have his " counsel and defend himself, and therefore, unless " the whole thing is decided on one point of law, this " case is impracticable." Then I went to see Mr. Gray, and this is dated from the place at St. Helen's. " My dear Mr. Trevor,—I have seen this morning Mr. " Gray. He and I am fearful that in the proposal " which you made some sort of compromise may lurk. " If so, we would not accede to it without a compro- " mise of our own honour with those who come up " to town, and to whom we feel pledged to prosecute " the petition, unless they be consenting parties. If " there be no idea of a compromise with the other " side. The argument as to the votes is worthy of " being entertained, and if such should be the case, we " must see if it can be brought before the court with- " out prejudice to our grand case. If you have no " objection, state to us in perfect confidence what the " actual meaning of your proposition is, to what it " would tend, and what, if anything, is expected from " us." I sent that down to Mr. James Trevor, and he wrote me back word on the 28th December : "My " dear Mr. Westropp,—As it seems from yours of " yesterday that you and Mr. Gray consider your- " selves bound to consult those who come to town on " any course to be adopted in reference to the petition, " it is useless for me to enter into the subject on " which I wrote to you, and I certainly could not " explain it except on a personal interview." I then wrote to him afterwards : " My dear Mr. Trevor,— " You know as well as I both the difficulties in any- " thing like a compromise, and the reasons why I " could not even entertain the idea of it without the " consent of the Working Men's Association. I think, " however, on the present proposition, it is a modus " operandi which may be fairly stated as attendant " on the petition, and as it leaves open the question of " the petition, which can be carried on still, certainly " cannot be in any manner called a compromise. I " therefore think that you had better run up on " Monday evening," and so on ; that is the sense of it, but the whole gist of it was, that I would not enter into it after having pledged my honour the morning after the election, that if I caught them tripping I would go at them, and after repeated promises I had made, no consideration on earth would have made me accept any proposition without the consent of the Conservative working men who supported me, for I am sorry to say there was some little idea before the election that I relied a great deal too much on the Conservative Working Men's Association, and that I overestimated my influence with them. I told both Mr. Trevor and Mr. Brice I thought they were deceived, and I believed the people would stick to me, and they did.

38,591. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the only conversation you had with Mr. Kinglake, the one you have spoken to a little while ago ?—The only one.

31,592. I wish to know before passing on, when he was holding that tall talk about the meanest man having vicariously an interview with the prime minister every time his representative talked to him in the lobby, and so forth, did he at the same time tell you that he felt he had not been guilty, either vicariously or purposely, of corrupt practices at the last election, and was under no fear that they were going to unseat him ?—He did not mention it.

38,593. Not a word ?—Not a word.

38,594. He stated nothing therefore to the effect of that which he stated before Mr. Justice Blackburn when he was examined ?—Oh, certainly not.

38,595. (Mr. Price.) That he had nothing to fear ?—No, he never said it.

38,596. It would be rather more germane to the question ?—When the whole thing broke up, I said to Mr. Henry Lovibond, " I do not care what the result " is, I will go on with it." And he said, " You will " sink the ship, sir."

38,597. What did he speak of ?—Carrying on the petition.

38,598. (Mr. Anstey.) Your own ship ?—No ; that I would sink the borough if I carried on the petition.

38,599. Was Mr. Kinglake present when that was said ?—No. Now I must mention to you something ; they were going on perfectly easily ; they were rather prosperous than otherwise. Mr. James Trevor walked in one morning to Mr. Gray, and brought in our brief, which had become opened in its transmission to London and had been delivered opened, or rather the pages put together. It appears that the large envelope in which it was had rubbed against something, and the brief had come out. I can only say that the brief coming out of that had the most extraordinary effect of anything I ever knew, because from that moment their tone altered very considerably, and I do not think Mr. Brice, but Mr. James Trevor, I think, told me that Mr. Lovibond had said to him, "Pooh, you have two cases of bribery, and " you cannot prove agency." Now at that time our cases of agency were very slight indeed—so much so that Mr. Gray and I had a very serious consultation if it would not be better to abandon the petition, and in consequence of finding it so very, very slight, and that there was perhaps not altogether so much zeal displayed in carrying on the petition as there ought to have been, I came down here, and in a couple of days satisfied myself we were drifting to leeward altogether, and Mr. Brice suggested to me, "I know," said he "a very good man in London. He is the " common law clerk of my correspondent, and if you

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Westropp.

7 Oct. 1869.

"get him down I think he will set the business right," and we did.

(Mr. Price.) Who was that?

(Mr. Brice.) The managing common law clerk, Mr. Feeland, of my agents, Messrs. Dynes and Harvey.

(The witness.) He mentioned the name of some person who communicated to me and told me exactly the way in which things were going on here. He told me how they were being neglected, and on that I came down here, and, as I told you, two or three days he set the matter right with Mr. Brice's help. I will say for Mr. Brice that no man in the world displayed greater zeal at the election petition than he. However, we got it right. Mr. Collins' opinion I have since read, two or three days ago, and it was in common phrase, if we did so and so the result would be so and so, but that is the case with which they in some mysterious way became acquainted.

38,600. Had the brief been put back again into the envelope?—Yes, and a piece of paper put over it.

38,601. (Mr. Coleridge.) It must have been tampered with at the post office?—I do not say it was tampered with.

(Mr. Price.) Evidently to some extent in the transmission it had become undone.

38,602. (Mr. Coleridge.) And its contents had become known?—I do not say it was in that way, but some bird of the air had carried it, there is not a shadow of a doubt of that; and mind you, as Mr. Brice can tell you, he had occasion subsequently to bring up the postmaster and speak very seriously to him about it, and in fact he made a talk about it. However, they changed in a moment.

38,603. (Mr. Price.) They took the high line?—Thep went the high horse altogether.

38,604. Have you any doubt that up to that time if you had been ready to accede to one or more of these negotiations upon the terms that were offered, that apart from whether there had been a contest got up contrary to their desire, you could have so settled the matter?—I think it is very likely indeed. It was a regular drawn blind.

38,605. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not understand the effect of the disclosures that come out from the contents of the briefs. Do you mean that whereas being before depressed they become elated?—Quite so.

38,606. Before they were depressed?—They were depressed before the accident took place at the post office.

38,607. What is there in this brief that should elate them? I should have thought the reverse?—Pardon me, the proofs of agency were so very weak.

38,608. Not certainly in the brief as delivered?—Certainly not, but that all came to be strengthened.

38,609. This was before Feeland came down?—Yes, after I had been down here, and with Mr. Brice and his friends they were got together.

38,610. Then after that it went on to the trial?—It went on. This letter (producing it) is merely to say Mr. Gray was quite willing to do everything.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then you got to trial. I hardly know but little of that, of course, by hearsay. I heard various rumours that they were only too anxious to give a case; but I know one case supposed to be a friendly case; whether it was or not, it came from the opposite party, and I know it was the toughest case Mr. Serjeant Parry had to manage; that is the ex-secretary of the Reform Association here, of the name of Bowden. I understood, how I really cannot tell you, that his was a sort of case that was done in order to allow us to win; in fact that it might give the man opportunity; but all I know is he was the toughest man Serjeant Parry had to deal with.

38,611. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say they wanted the thing done up so soon?—It was reported so. I was not communicated with by any person.

38,612. That is the opinion you entertained?—That is the opinion I entertain at this moment.

38,613. That there was a desire to get the thing as soon as possible over?—Yes.

38,614. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you present during the whole trial?—Except the opening part. I was not here on Tuesday, but on the Wednesday I was, to the end of it.

38,615. (Mr. Anstey.) How do you connect that with Bowden?—Because Bowden's was the case, and I rather think in some way there was—as I told you this is merely my own idea—but in some way it was suggested that he should be subpœnaed.

38,616. Suggested to your people?—Suggested to our people. I do not know any person.

38,617. And that was the object of so doing; it would have finished the thing at once?—Yes.

38,618. He appears to have been a very reluctant witness?—Yes.

38,619. I gather that from the intercallations to the effect that "the witness hesitated," and "made no answer," and so forth?—He was a very unwilling witness indeed.

38,620. (Mr. Price.) It was really calling a witness from the enemy's camp and taking the chance of what you could get out of him?—Yes, exactly; but I expected he would have said more.

38,621. (Mr. Coleridge.) That he would have fallen into the little arrangement made?—Well, perhaps so. Now this is a thing that may amuse you; when I was unseated, and let everybody in Bridgwater hear it, they were so very pure after turning me out, and mind you the reason that Shelley did not spend money was because he had not it, because before I came down a very intimate friend came up and says he, "Don't you be afraid."

38,622. (Mr. Price.) We all know he was represented as being a rich man, but was not?—But just a little before I was unseated the Liberals sent out a hand bill: "The time has come to break up the un-
"manly, the wicked practice of bribery that has been "carried on in Bridgewater; a practice full of evil,
"for the money you had for your votes did no good.
"It was dirty money, for it sold your peace of mind
"and your independence, and it was the means of "bringing many to dissipation and to idleness.

"Those who are implicated will have to appear
"before the Committee of the House of Commons.
"God will know if you speak the truth. Add not "the sin of perjury to the sin of bribery. Make a "clean breast of it, although those who bribed you
"and dragged you into the mess may tamper with
"you and beg you to shield them from the con-
"sequences of their wickedness." And yet with Mr.
"Bagehot and Mr. Vanderbyl it was within two months of that time that they published that; nay, more than that, there never would have been a shilling spent for Mr. Patton's first election had it not been given out in a manner not to be disputed about the intention that Mr. Bagehot had to spend money, and I have reason to believe—I will mention the source that you may take it for what you think it is worth—young Bealey Smith told me that a spy of his was in the same carriage with the men who brought the money from the bank. I forget where it is now, Bagehot's bank, and also that 4,000*l.* would cover that election.

38,623. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the name of the spy?—I do not know. He merely mentioned "the spy."

38,624. That reminds me again, I did not stop you when making a statement on another point, but incidentally you mentioned something I wish to ask you about; you said you knew, while these efforts at compromise were going on, Mr. Kinglake had no money. The question was about Mr. Vanderbyl applying for the Chiltern Hundreds, or Mr. Kinglake, and you said that one of the elements you had of forming a judgment was your knowledge that he had no money?—Pardon me, you misunderstood me. It was Mr. Vanderbyl who said we knew Mr. Kinglake had no money, and consequently it was practically seating Mr. Vanderbyl.

38,625. Was that in your presence?—He said it to me in the carriage that night.

38,626. I thought it was said at the meeting at which you were present?—No, it was afterwards; the effect of the compromise.

38,627. Do you know whether either Mr. Kinglake, the late member, against whom you petitioned, and who was unseated for very great bribery, or his family, had the means of raising a large sum of money, which was raised for the purpose of being spent here at the last election?—I am quite unacquainted with Mr. Kinglake's private resources.

38,628. Mr. Vanderbyl stated he knew he had no money?—Mr. Fennelly told me that he said when they made the offer he accompanied that with a rider that whichever gave up he was to be borne harmless, and the man who gained the seat was to pay all the costs of the past election, and he said that was practically seating Mr. Vanderbyl, because he knew that Mr. Kinglake had not money to do it.

38,629. I do not know whether you have anything further to say?—No. There are some letters. I hope I have cleared up what John Smith alleged, and two or three things affecting my character.

38,630. (Mr. Price.) There is no occasion to defend yourself against John Smith. In case anything should require explanation you will probably not be gone to-morrow?—No, I shall be here.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10 o'clock.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Friday, 8th October 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

HENRY WESTROPP, Esq., recalled.

(The witness.) I have a communication to make to you. I saw Mr. Gray on my return to town the day before yesterday, and he appeared very distressed at its being supposed that he had in any way, by writing or otherwise, given any sanction to money being spent on our side at the last election. If you will allow me to say so much for myself on the word "proclivity" which he used, he is very constantly in the habit of using it, and whenever I see him, which is very often, there is hardly a day that he does not make use of that word. I have often said to him, "Why bring in those wretched Yankeeisms." I drafted out for him his address.

38,631. (Mr. Coleridge.) Probably you agree, as you drafted it with what I put to him, that it might mean anything?—I drafted out the address, but I should not have known the production afterwards.

38,632. It was not the same that you drafted?—Certainly not.

38,633. Because his address as it appeared and was read out here might have meant either Whig, Radical, Tory, Socialist, or anything you like?—You see by the way I express myself in my address what it was, because it was the same with only a few words changed.

38,634. It must have struck you as rather remarkable that he should produce an address not only in itself inexplicable, but that he offered it to a man to alter in any way he thought would fit the proclivities of this borough?—He was very foolish in that. I have written a good many addresses for this town, and I never allowed a single word of my address to be altered without my permission.

38,635. Not only did he write this, which might mean anything or everything, or nothing, but that he should have sent it to a man like Mr. Lilly and told him to alter it to fit the proclivities of the town.

(Mr. Anstey.) Sent it to a mere auctioneer, and told him that he might put in any principles.

38,636. (Mr. Coleridge.) Anything to suit the place?—I do not know anything about that, and I cannot help thinking that he ought not to have entrusted anybody, because I never did in my life, or allowed anybody.

38,637. Mr. Gray cannot complain of the fact of there being rather strong comments made on that address?—I only wish to say what my own opinion is; and I also wish to state to you in the most unequivocal manner, that this letter has not been sent to me by any prearranged plan.

38,638. What is the letter?—Received by me this morning, and you may judge he was in a rather queer state of mind to put three stamps on when one would have done.

38,639. Perhaps his evidence was given in the same frame of mind when he was here the other day?—He is usually a clear, hard-headed man, and I was perfectly astounded with the evidence he gave.

38,640. (Mr. Coleridge.) You may read that letter—"My dear Mr. Westropp,—I do not like to trouble you "because you have enough to think of in your own "matters, but I find so much dissatisfaction among my "friends at the proceedings of Monday last, that "I must hit upon some plan to relieve myself of the "stigma——"

38,641. That is not a very collected expression, hitting on a plan to get out of what he has already sworn?—Then you see——

38,642. Well, go on (valeat quantum)?—"Two "courses suggest themselves, either to write an ex- "planation requesting the secretary to place it before "the Commissioners, or to write a letter requesting "them to interrogate G. Parker and some others who "heard me repeatedly express my determination to "fight only on pure principles, and to ask you whether "you did not know my intention to retire rather than "be committed to the contrary, and had not since "stated that it was chiefly owing to my firmness that "our hands were kept clean."

38,643. That does not say much for your part in the matter?—I only give you the letter as it is. Allow me to say this, that Mr. Gray was subjected very often to very great pressure about spending money. I cannot say that any individual person pressed him, but there was a sort of atmospheric pressure if I may say so—people say so-and-so—"Oh yes, promises are nothing, something more is needful," and all that sort of thing.

38,644. But, then, were there promises?—No; I say without actually saying promises were to be made or anything in that way. "I think in a case of this kind, "where character is attacked, one must not be over "nice in protecting themselves, but you may suggest "some other plan, perhaps by volunteering a state-"ment, which will answer the same purpose. I hope "to have good news of you to-morrow." I give you the letter; it came this morning.

38,645. I must say that Mr. Gray's evidence is eminently more satisfactory than this letter, which asks you to hit on a plan to explain away what he has sworn on oath?—It was not me.

38,646. Yes, he says you may suggest a plan?—I give you the letter just as it came this morning.

38,647. You are quite right, but I do not think it says much for his idea how evidence is to be given if he thinks it is to be explained away vicariously?—I only give you the letter.

38,648. Now there are one or two questions I want to ask about that transfer of money. Did it never occur to you (I was sorry I did not ask Mrs. Westropp) when she signed with her maiden name she was committing forgery?—I cannot say anything about that; it may be illegal, but it was invested originally in her own name.

38,649. It occurs to me as an extraordinary transaction that any stock broker of respectability should enter into an engagement of that sort, for in reality he was vouching a woman to be Miss Stockwood who was Mrs. Westropp?—He did not know anything about her.

38,650. He knew that Mrs. Westropp was a married woman?—No, not at that time.

38,651. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the bond in 1853 given her in her maiden name or her married name?—Her married name.

38,652. (Mr. Coleridge.) That makes it the more strange?—How was he to know of the bond? He did not know that bond was in existence.

38,653. (Mr. Price.) Is this the sort of way in which it was done (we must have the broker here): she should go and instruct the broker to invest a sum of money in her maiden name?—Yes.

38,654. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you say you gave her a bond for 150*l.* a year redeemable?—By paying 1,500*l.*

38,655. You bought it back by paying 1,500*l.*?—Yes.

38,656. How did you give her the 1,500*l.*?—I sent it from Ireland. I think it was by the Bank of Ireland.

38,657. Was it by bank post bill, or cheque, or what?—No, certainly not. I never had an account in Ireland.

38,658. Was it a bank post bill or not?—Bank post bill, I think, as near as I can recollect.

38,659. That would have to be endorsed by her?—That would have to be endorsed by her.

38,660. In her maiden or married name?—Certainly not her married name, because it was sent to her in her maiden name. The fact is, I wanted her to have the money that she might do what she liked with it without reference to electioneering.

38,661. You say the broker did not know that she was married?—No.

38,662. Do you know how she got introduced to him?—I know perfectly well.

38,663. How was that?—I wrote to my tailor in London if he would give me the name of a respectable stockbroker, and he gave me the name of his own, and a letter of introduction, not to any person by name, but to the bearer.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That accounts for it.

38,664. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to ask you a few questions about your part in the election of 1865. Did you go about with Mr. Bealy Smith in doing the election business at the time of the election; that is to say, go and occasionally look up a voter, and all that kind of thing?—Did Mr. Bealy Smith canvass with me?

38,665. Yes; but what they call canvassing here—a useless sort of thing it appears to me—when you all go in a body, but I mean more particularly as to election politics?—Certainly not, if you mean a private visit to any person, or anything in that way, I never did.

38,666. Was there a meeting held every night during the period of your stay here?—Certainly not every night; there were occasional meetings; there was one in this hall, at which there was a very great row, and I think there were two or three meetings, I am not very certain, at the "Clarence" rooms, but I do not think any other meeting that I am aware of; certainly not.

38,667. Not perhaps public meetings?—Or private meetings, directly or indirectly. I do not know of any private meetings.

38,668. Were you present at those two meetings you speak of?—At the public meetings?

38,669. Yes?—Yes.

38,670. And if there were any private meetings of a few score of voters?—Certainly not, that never took place; I never was at any of them.

38,671. Then you canvassed and attended these two meetings, and if voters came up to you, and spoke to you in the street when you were not engaged in that canvass, you, I suppose, allowed them to speak to you?—I merely spoke to them in the way of just saluting them, as I have been saluting every person for years. They may have said, "I shall support you," or something of that sort.

38,672. You had been for years nourishing the borough?—Well, it is a name that has been given to it.

38,673. I am quoting from your evidence?—Well, I do not recede from the word.

38,674. You know the class of persons who were the recipients of your bounty during those years?—All classes I assure you.

38,675. Except, I suppose, gentlemen in broadcloth; they did not receive money from you during those years in the street?—I never gave a fraction in the street.

38,676. One witness, who praised you for your liberality, says that you gave freely in the street, and he cautioned you not to?—He tells what is certainly not the fact.

38,677. How used you to give it, then?—They used to write that they were in great distress, and one thing and another, and it was generally cheques, and oftentimes through the post office. There never was any concealment; never.

38,678. No concealment; but it was done in such a way as to make you perfectly aware of the class of persons who were looking to your bounty and receiving it?—There were a great many persons applied to me for their charities, and that was as much as anything else.

38,679. During the—I will not call it your canvass, but the period preliminary to the election and immediately preceding it by some days and weeks, did any of those people you had been in the habit of relieving, or any of them, come up to you and speak to you in the street?—Really I cannot say whether they did or not, but in this way I can answer: there were persons in Bridgwater whom I was habitually in the habit of relieving, that is regularly, particular persons, with the exception of one man I gave a pension to, and that was subsequent to the election. He had been a pensioner, and had been induced by the Government to go to Canada, and they took away his pension, giving him land, and he found he could not work it.

38,680. You were during that period between 1859 and 1865 living at Bayswater, were you?—No, by Chiswick Mall.

38,681. It is not with a view of inquiring into your domestic expenditure, but is it not a fact that Bridgwater is the only borough you have favoured with your bounties?—Decidedly.

38,682. Then you have no hesitation, I suppose, in saying it was done for the purpose of creating and keeping alive your political interest in this borough?—Decidedly.

38,683. I ask you, because I wish to see whether you concur in the view which Mr. Brogden has taken of some liberality. I see you do not. You do not concur in this, do you: "It was not the mere giving "of money, for that was only a part of the duty; but "it was the continual anxiety and care that the "money should be well applied, that the objects "which they knew to be well deserving should be "recipients of the charity. He knew that this feeling "pervaded them, as was witnessed by the self-"devotion and self-denial which had already charac-"terized them. He felt no anxiety for the future of "the institution. They must remember that amidst "the many engagements, the many struggles, and "trials of life, they could only do a certain amount of "good in their own day; and it was better for them, "laying their hands to the work whilst they had "health and were permitted to do it, to let their "charity be widely spread, and their efforts for the "alleviation of the suffering and for the addition to "the comforts of their fellow-townsmen be experienced "now. He would conclude by saying:

> 'The hours that fly so fast—
> A burden and a curse when unemployed,
> But to the wise how precious! Every day
> A little life—a blank to be inscribed
> With gentle deeds—such as in after time
> Console, rejoice whene'er we turn the leaf
> To read them.'"

Mr. Brogden having given that account of his own charities since he was examined was sent up to London with a suitable reproof, I thought it due to you to ask you whether you concur in that mode of presenting it?—Certainly not. I can assure you that the money I gave in this town was given without any reference to my seat. It was given certainly to cause a favourable impression, but a very large portion of it went in the way of charities. I gave 25*l.* to the School of Art every year; I gave 25*l.* to the races; I gave 15*l.* to a literary institution, and I do not believe in that institution there were three men of my own party; they were everyone Radicals.

38,684. (Mr. Coleridge.) I believe it is the uniform custom for members to subscribe to races?—Certainly.

38,685. (Mr. Anstey.) But it is not the universal custom for persons who are not members?—Yes; but recollect I was a candidate.

38,686. You were not member?—No.

38,687. The universal custom suggested to you was no excuse in your case?—No; but this I feel certain, that fully a third of the money I expended every year, deducting from it those sums I have mentioned, went to persons who were not voters at all; they went to old women—widows.

38,688. (Mr. Price.) Godchildren?—No, I do not mean for one moment to deny it was as a sort of standard erected against the Tynte interest, which was very much carried on in that way; but to say it was done in specific cases, that those persons were afterwards to support me, I deny it fully.

38,689. It was done rather in anticipation of the contest. Colonel Tynte did the same sort of thing on a larger scale?—Exactly; he canvassed, as was said, from the 1st of January to the 31st of December.

38,690. (Mr. Anstey.) In the case of members do you mean to pledge your oath that it is the custom for persons to give subscriptions towards that depraved practice?—You will not ask me to give the name, but I know a Liberal member, a very good man, told me not very long ago that he spent a very large sum yearly in his borough, and he told me—I do not think anybody thinks that I attempt to and never gave a shilling in bribery.

38,691–4. (Mr. Price.) I am not aware of any boroughs, and I know a good many in which the members are not called upon to subscribe over and over again to all the charities, to concerts, balls, and every species of things by which his purse can be milked?—I am perfectly certain of it.

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not ask whether members are called upon to do it or not, but will you pledge your oath that every member is so corrupt as to answer such a call. If we are on personal status I never did, and never lost a single vote, and Mr. Roebuck never did, and never lost a single vote by not doing it, and many other honorable members.

38,695. (Witness.) If you mean to ask me whether I agree in the propriety of doing it, I am perfectly of your opinion that they ought not to be done, but I am simply speaking now as to what has been the custom. I assure you I am as fully opposed to corrupt practices or corrupt things as you are.

38,696. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think all members of Parliament would agree with you as fully as I do; the question is, could they do without it?—That is it, and I hope they may.

38,697. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that you hope members of Parliament may do without corrupt practices. If they do not they must submit to imprisonment and hard labour?—It was in answer to Mr. Coleridge's question.

38,698. (Mr. Coleridge.) My question was whether they could do without it?—And with regard to influencing voters I may take the opportunity of saying it before the people who, as I say, I look upon as my own townsmen, I believe that a firm of this town, where the least pressure is put upon them, and one to which belongs a gentleman who unfortunately fell under your displeasure, and I think he was not treated in any way more than his conduct deserved, and he ought to apologize to you, but I think Messrs. Symmons and Colthurst exercise less pressure than any firm in this town; the firm used that influence which an employer of labour, to say the least of it, possesses over his men. When our canvass was over this last time Mr. Gray and I were passing to take a walk along by the river, and there were two men at Barham's yard, and they said they would vote for us. I said "There are two votes gained that could hardly have been expected." And we went on, and going by Messrs. Symmons we were called in, and certainly four, and I think five, men unsolicited told us they were ready to vote. I said, "How can you do this?" I believe fully they are the least, I have no hesitation in saying, from all I heard in my canvass through the town, Mr. Sully is as tyrannical as any man; he uses the power that he has. I say it advisedly, because over and over again people have told me that they would vote but dare not do it. He does not directly say to them, "I will turn you out;" not a bit, but they know, as in the case of Luckes.

38,699. (Mr. Anstey.) I ask you about the meetings which you attended; were there meetings which you took good care not to attend, meetings of your friends?—Not to my knowledge.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

H. Westropp, Esq.

8 Oct. 1869.

38,700. That is what I mean?—Not to my knowledge.

38,701. Did you studiously avoid attending meetings, certain meetings?—I studiously avoided. Mr. Powell asked me whether I knew there were committee rooms I never attended, and studiously avoided them during my election in 1865.

38,702. Did you avoid attending any particular description of meetings of your friends?—Certainly not.

38,703. Did you studiously avoid attending any committees of your friends?—I studiously avoided going near any place where a flag was put out of the window.

38,704. Where there were meetings?—There might have been meetings.

38,705. Or committees?—I did not know there was a committee.

38,706. Never mind that. Why did you avoid them?—Because I saw the flags stuck up at the committee rooms, and of course I was warned. It is like putting the snare in sight of the bird. I said, "I will take care not to go inside of those places." I never acknowledged those places. I knew nothing about them, and I certainly would not know about any place where that insignia was put out.

38,707. I do not understand you. You attended a meeting here for instance, which you say was a noisy meeting?—It was a meeting of the general electors. It was a meeting not of our own party, but the electors.

38,708. You attended that meeting?—Yes.

38,709. Without considering whether you recognised it or not, I suppose, or whether you compromized yourself or not?—But it was a meeting of the electors.

38,710. And you attended another meeting at the "Clarence" hotel?—Of our own.

38,711. You did not consider that by going there you compromised yourself?—Certainly not.

38,712. Then why should you have compromised yourself by going to the houses taken by your friends, with your colors hung up?—I did not catch the question.

38,713. Why should you have compromised yourself by attending to your friends in houses taken by those in your interest, and who were, to your knowledge, men who were to be got together or instructed to vote?—For the very simple reason, that one was a general meeting; it was a general meeting in one case, where all my friends came to, and the other where the general townsmen came. If I had gone to a place where it was put up "Committee," and "Committee means a number of people who are your "particular friends, who meet, and who do certain "acts for you;" if I had gone to such a place I should have recognized their acts.

38,714. How was it you did not go to them?—How could I tell that they were doing anything for me.

38,715. In other words, you had reason to suspect that acts would be done by some of the people which might imperil your election?—I had no reason to fear or suspect it; to fear—yes, but to suspect it I did not. But of course no person of any care or prudence would go into any place where deeds might be done which afterwards would compromise him. I had no especial reason for supposing that they would be done, but we all know that when people get together in the heat of an election things are done and said which, perhaps, they would not do and say in cooler moments.

38,716. Did you not, in other words, take very good care to know nothing of what was done by people of that description at your election?—I took no especial care, but nobody ever came near me; and I believe truly that the reason of that was that Mr. Bealy Smith, as I said yesterday, was an exceedingly able man, and a very reticent man, and I believe in my heart that he did the whole work of that election single-handed.

38,717. This is what you told the committee, and you are led to it by your counsel, Mr. Sleigh: "During "the whole of the election did you engage or visit any "room which has been called a 'committee room' by "the witnesses here to-day?—On the contrary, I "studiously avoided going into any place of meeting "or of committee, or in any way connected with the "election"?—Oh, well, that was always understood in a private sense, for, as I told you, I was at public meetings, undoubtedly.

38,718. And places connected with the election?—They were not places connected with the election. They were not always connected with the election.

38,719. Then you are asked with reference to the flags, wherever it happened to you to see a flag, and your answer is, "I know there was a committee room, "for I have seen a flag there. I must have been blind "if I had not seen the flag. Did you immediately "order that flag to be taken down?—No, I had nothing "to do with it." Now, who had the conduct of the flag business, the hanging out the flags from the windows, and the taking of those rooms called "committee rooms"?—I know nothing of that whatever. I never had any communication with any person. At the time of the election Mr. Bealy Smith was my election agent, and he did the work rather in a mild sort of way, for he took the conduct of the election, I may say, more by inference than anything else; and the only time I had occasion to say anything to him was on the occasion of the address of Mr. Kinglake.

38,720. Did it never occur to you to inquire of him—in whose hands you had so placed yourself, or any other agent of yours, any other person who would fix you with "agency," as it is called—as to who was concerned either in the taking of these rooms, in the hanging out of the flags, or the transacting of the business which was transacted?—I never asked him about it. I never spoke a word to him on any subject during the election time (it was a very strange thing) except as to the affair with Mr. Edwards, and many other facts of this sort which are publicly known. I never had a private conference with him in my life.

38,721. You were continually in the streets?—Yes.

38,722. And you saw those flags very frequently?—No, not frequently. One was in St. Mary Street, and the other in St. John Street.

38,723. And there was a central committee room?—I am not aware that there were any flags flying anywhere else.

38,724. I will read to you what you say about it. You were asked about the great placard, with the words, "Westropp's Central Committee Room" on it; and then you answered thus: "I know there was a "committee room, for I have seen a flag there"?—Yes; there were two flags, because there was a flag in Eastover, and a flag in St. Mary Street.

38,725. What reason can you suggest for having studiously avoided asking such a necessary question (as it would appear to me, or to any person seeking to be elected on purity principles) of Mr. Bealy Smith as this: "Who are the people who are up in these "rooms, and call themselves my committee? Who "are the people who are acting for me, and under my "name—under the name of 'Westropp'? Are you "one of them? Is there anybody amongst them who "has actually involved me, according to the law of "principal and agent?" Do you mean to say you never asked any of those questions?—Really I never did.

38,726. Why did you not?—For the reason that I never asked any question about the election of anybody. I am certain you would never have done so, because you would have known the consequences.

38,727. I have already told you not to talk about myself. I have told you I never would have anything to do with a single committee room unless I was master of it. Is it true you never asked him nor anybody else as to who were the people who were concerned in any of the committees?—Certainly.

38,728. Then you were asked, "Did it occur to your "mind who the committees might be who were occu- "pying these committee rooms?—(Answer.) No; I "never troubled my head in the least degree about it." Is that true?—Quite. My sole business, as I imagined, was to go through what was necessary; that is to say, the (in my view) unmeaning and unnecessary process of the canvass. I was at it 12 or 14 days.

38,729. Then you are asked, and you do not answer it, "Perhaps you took care not to ask?" and you made no answer to it. I ask you now, and I expect you to answer the question, "Did you take care not to ask any of those questions I suggested?"—No, certainly not; I took no care in the business.

38,730. What do you mean by saying you avoided going into these places, if you took no care?—It was put up that it was a committee room, and I said, "Of "course if there should be a committee room, I am "not going in any way to interfere with them; I am "not going to identify myself with them in any "way."

38,731. That is what I am bringing you to. Is not this your reason, that nothing should take place which would give people afterwards the right to say they were your agents?—Oh, decidedly. I decidedly avoided going near any place that could in any way compromise me whatever.

(Mr. Price.) I understood you to say so before.

38,732. (Mr. Anstey.) I did not understand you to say so before?—What I said was this: I saw a flag up; that I was to infer from that that there were persons who met there, and I did not choose to identify myself in any way with any persons who took upon themselves to manage or do anything at an election. Supposing they were a self-constituted body—supposing there were even a committee appointed by me, and another committee chose to appoint themselves, and put this placard up, calling themselves a committee, was I obliged to go and identify myself with them?

38,733. (Mr. Coleridge.) In fact, you were looking at it in the light of your previous experience at elections?—Decidedly. I kept quite clear of everything of that sort.

38,734. When you were first introduced to this borough by Mr. Spofforth——?—I do not think it was Mr. Spofforth, but Sir Frederick Slade.

38,735. Well, Sir Frederick Slade. Did you have any conversation with Colonel Taylor about the borough?—I did not know Colonel Taylor at all then; I had no idea of him.

38,736. Before the last election, did you have any conversation with him?—This last election?

38,737. Yes?—Not the least in the world.

38,738. Or Mr. Gerald Noel?—I do not think I had. I should recollect it, I think, if I had.

38,739. Or Mr. Disraeli's private secretary, Mr. Corrie?—Certainly not. I do not know him. I have never identified myself with anybody.

38,740. Have you had any assistance from the party in the way of money at all?—Directly or indirectly, I never had a sixpence from anybody, with the exception of the 1,500*l.* my wife spent.

38,741. I mean you never had any money from Colonel Taylor, or Mr. Gerald Noel, or Mr. Corrie, or Mr. Spofforth, or anybody else?—Not a fraction.

38,742. (Mr. Anstey.) You told us so yesterday?—That is what I was just going to allude to yesterday, that Mr. Lovibond, in his statement, said that it was supposed I was the distributor of the money.

38,743. (Mr. Price.) Did anybody write down to you in this borough, as Mr. Travers Smith wrote down to the people on the Liberal side, a letter containing a list of rich and eligible candidates?—Never. Sir Frederick Slade sent me down here, and he told me he wished I would contest the borough.

38,744. Was any letter of that kind written to you by Mr. Spofforth, or any member of Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton's firm, or by anybody on behalf of the party in any way?—Certainly not.

38,745. Or on behalf of Mr. Gray, as far as you know?—Decidedly not on behalf of Mr. Gray.

38,746. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you always given to understand, from your earliest connexion with this borough, that as regarded your own party you must find the means to fight the battle yourself?—Decidedly.

38,747. Did you ever make an application for assistance to them?—In 1859.

38,748. When you were associated with Mr. Padwick?—When I was associated with Mr. Padwick. When I was with him, we were not Siamese twins, but when I was here with Mr. Padwick he told me, "You must go up, I think, to get some money."

38,749. Did he say where?—Yes; he told me to go to the Carlton, and I went up. I did not know so much about electioneering then as I do now. I went up, and when I went into the room I saw three or four gentlemen, I forget who they were now. I discussed the question with them, and told them that assistance would be required, and they said, "No, no, if you want that you had better go."

38,750. Do you know the names of those gentlemen who were present?—No.

38,751. Was Colonel Taylor one?—No.

38,752. Was Gerald Noel one?—No. I cannot tell you who they were. I can only say when I said we should require assistance, they said, No, no.

38,753. Where was it, at the Carlton?—No.

38,754. Then where was it?—At Mr. Spofforth's office—Baxter, Rose, and Norton's. The moment I came into the room I began by saying assistance would be required; they said, "You shall have any assistance we can give you by means of our influence." I said, "Oh yes, but——" I did not know exactly how to put it to them that I wanted money, and I hem'd and ha'd, and they, understanding what I meant, said, "If you want that you had better go away, and the sooner the better."

38,755. Did Mr. Padwick state that he had got assistance from them?—No, he did not.

38,756. Did you know anything about Mr. Padwick's speaking of 1,500*l.* that was paid to him in consideration of that petition of 1865 being withdrawn?—I knew nothing about it. When I found out Mr. Padwick's character I would have nothing to do with the matter.

38,757. You did not hear of it at all at the time?—Yes, I heard it.

38,758. Did you hear that 1,500*l.* was paid to Padwick in consideration of his withdrawing the petition against the other side?—1,200*l.*

38,759. Did you hear it stated by Padwick?—Yes.

38,760. Did you hear Padwick say, "I shall keep that money for what I have expended"?—No, I never did. I was on very intimate relations with Mr. Richard Smith for years, as I have stated, and I never heard him state that Mr. Padwick had done anything but behave in what he said was a very shabby, dirty way.

38,761. That might be what he alluded to?—I will tell you the words he used. He said he had very great difficulty in getting his money from Mr. Padwick, and that on one occasion Padwick had denied ever having sent down money at all.

38,762. Perhaps that was quite true, because, as we have heard, he brought it?—No, he did not; and I will tell you how I know he did not. On Sunday morning John Murlis walked into the "Clarence," and he turned round—and in reading John Murlis's evidence it immediately struck me—and he said, "I have got those samples of bottles and glass," or that something or another was sent. That is the way John Murlis said the money came down.

38,763. That was in 1859?—That was in 1859; and he said the only thing that made Padwick settle with him was, that he turned round and said to him, "Do you mean to say you did not send down money; "do you mean to say you did not send down the "cartridges for the rifle corps?"

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

H. Westropp, Esq.

8 Oct. 1869.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Can you give us any information at all upon a point which has fairly puzzled us, that is, how the great majority which the Conservatives had in the morning was turned later in the day? We have heard there was no money going at the last election until late in the afternoon.

38,764. (Mr. Price.) How that majority, which at a quarter past 12 was 240 and 239 respectively——? —245.

38,765. Got down at a quarter to 2 to 79 and 64? —Well, as to making me believe that majority was ever brought down by Mr. Kinglake's prestige, I do not believe it.

38,766. We have been told that the moment they heard he was gone they were smitten with grief, and they rushed to the poll in a body?—No, that could not be, because the express train does not leave until 1.37 here, and if you look at the poll sheets you will find that it was actually while he was in the town at half-past 12, going on to 1.37, that the greater portion of that large majority was pulled down.

38,767. And very coincidently, it is after the meeting at the "Globe," between Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Mogg, Mr. Kinglake, Dr. Kinglake, and somebody else, and coincidently with the visit to the bank?—As I said, he was in the town when the greater part of that majority was pulled down.

38,768. Not in the "Globe"?—No.

38,769. Just close by?—No, that is not my allegation.

38,770. (Mr. Coleridge.) I ask you this as a matter of opinion, taking into consideration that Mr. Kinglake afterwards took the very absurd point of law, that because he went away that therefore no corrupt practices committed by his agents would affect him, do you believe that he went away on purpose at that time in order that any money got at that time might be expended?—I should be very sorry, for the sake of Mr. Kinglake, to allege that. I should be very sorry in any way to impugn his testimony.

38,771. Do you know anything about any money being advanced by Messrs. Hennett and Spink?—What I told you was this: I went to see Mr. Spink and Mr. Fennelly, and when I went to see them, Mr. Spink and Mr. Fennelly were in the hall; and I found there was there either a number of cloaks, or that there was a recess in the place, but I evidently saw a sort of shrinking back as if they were determined to hide something.

38,772. Was that Mr. Spink or Mr. Hennett?—Mr. Spink.

38,773. And Mr. Fennelly?—And Mr. Fennelly; and I said, that putting that together with what I have stated in the first part of my examination, and what has been explained to me about the first lung being gone——

38,774. You mean what Mr. Cook said that one lung was gone?—Yes.

38,775. (Mr. Price.) It was not fair to bleed one lung?—Yes; that I believed he was there at 1 o'clock, at Mr. Spink's. I am certain of it.

(Mr. Price.) That is also consistent with the explanation of somebody here, Bussell or Allan, or somebody, that by way of complaint, either Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook said, "We have done all we can; where the devil is Lovibond?" and Mr. Lovibond was enjoying his cigar at that time at Nicholls's.

38,776. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know anything about it?—I do not know anything about it.

38,777. (Mr. Coleridge.) I asked you once, and I ask you again, and it may be valuable evidence, what time was this?—It was on the Saturday.

38,778. What time in the day?—I think it was about 2 o'clock, something about that time; and I was so convinced that there was something odd in it, that I told Mr. Smith, after I came out, "By Jove, the money is down; I am certain of it."

38,779. (Mr. Anstey.) About the Smiths again. Have you been under a liability of any kind to them, for monies raised for the purposes of your election?—Oh, certainly not.

38,780. Either to Joseph Smith, or to Joseph Richard Smith?—I have never been under a liability to any of them.

38,781. Did any of them advance any money, either Joseph Richard Smith, or Richard Smith, or Bealy Smith, to you for your election, or for either of the Patton elections, to your knowledge?—Certainly not. For myself, I will answer that they never did; but for Mr. Patton's election I will not answer; I believe they did not. They never did anything of the sort, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. J. Cook.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

38,782. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any recollection about some money being procured on the Saturday before the election, as well as that which was procured on the Monday?—I have not the slightest knowledge of it whatever. I never heard of any money being procured.

38,783. You know nothing of any money coming from Hennett and Spink?—Not a farthing.

38,784. Do you know that Mr. Fennelly was in constant communication with them?—I have no knowledge of it whatever.

38,785. (Mr. Price.) Does all that come by surprise upon you?—It does.

38,786. The part, the very active part, that Mr. Spink seems to have taken in trying to effect the compromise?—I had no knowledge of his taking any part beyond the communication that Mr. Fennelly made to me on the Sunday night. That was the first intimation I had of the part taken by him.

38,787. Had you any idea that Mr. Spink, who seems to have been trusted very much by Mr. Fennelly, and to have been very much in communication with him; had you any idea that Mr. Spink had supplied money, and which may have been disbursed without your knowledge?—I should say not.

38,788. You should say not?—I should say not.

38,789. Do you remember the incident spoken to by your partner, whom I did not examine, Mr. Reed, of the conversation between himself, Dr. Kinglake, and some others in the street, going up or down to the "Globe," shortly before Dr. Kinglake left?—Yes, I remember something.

38,790. Were you present?—I was not present at the conversation, but my partner returned to the "Globe" hotel; in fact I saw Mr. Reed leave with Mr. Lovibond and go downstairs, and in a few minutes they both returned, and then Mr. Reed told me in the presence and hearing of Mr. Lovibond what had taken place, or rather made some observation in the hearing of Mr. Lovibond.

38,791. Did you see what became of Dr. Kinglake after they separated?—No, I did not. It was before Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed went downstairs that I had seen Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Mogg through the windows of the large room, as I have before told you.

38,792. Do you happen to know whether Dr. Kinglake previously to the time when you last saw him that day had been to Sealy's bank?—No, I have no knowledge that he had.

38,793. Can you give pretty nearly the hour at which you last saw him that day?—I should think it would be about half-past 12, as far as I can now remember.

38,794. Nearer 12, or nearer 1, which?—I am unable really to fix the time with any degree of accuracy, because I did not notice it at the time.

38,795. It is in evidence before us, that after leaving the bank he went down the street, which I suppose was going in the direction of the railway station, but that before he went on further he stopped and spoke to some people in the street opposite the "Globe;" do you think that was the time you saw him?—It might have been.

38,796. At all events, you yourself were not in the street?—No, I was not in the street.

38,797. You were upstairs?—I was upstairs, and I saw him through the window.

38,798. Can you throw any light whatever upon the point I desire to know about; namely, as to whether he passed on on that occasion to the railway station, or whether he first of all came back and took up his brother at Allan's?—As, I believe, the time was about half-past 12, it would have been improbable that he should have gone from there to the railway station, for the reason that the down express would not leave for an hour after.

38,799. But we have had it in evidence that he went to the railway station hotel, and I believe it will be in evidence that at that hotel he took refreshment with Mr. Bate and the other Mr. Kinglake. You cannot speak further than as to the probability or improbability of his doing one thing or the other?—No, I cannot.

Mr. Joseph Travers Smith sworn.

Mr. J. T. Smith.

38,800. (Mr. Price.) You are a parliamentary agent?—I am.

38,801. I do not know whether you are a solicitor also?—I am a solicitor, but I have, generally speaking, practised as a parliamentary agent, excepting during a period as a political one. I do not think you would find me upon the list of parliamentary agents.

38,802. You are, in fact, what is called the political agent of the party?—I am not now.

38,803. You were?—Yes.

38,804. You were for an interval?—Yes.

38,805. Messrs. Wyatt and Hoskins are the political agents now?—I am not sure. Mr. Drake, who is an exceedingly busy man, asked me to join in that work for a period, and I undertook to do so prior to and during the fighting of the election petition after one general election.

38,806. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was in 1865?—That was in 1865; and I was working jointly with Mr. Drake, altogether for a period of something like three years, but after the general election of 1865 I gave it up, and never undertook to do any more.

38,807. In a certain sense you acted under the general supervision of Mr. Drake?—Yes; when I say "under the general supervision," we were continually in communication.

38,808. But he was still the responsible legal head and adviser of the Liberal party?—I do not know that he was more responsible than I was; each was responsible for the work he undertook. I did not exactly owe responsibility to him.

38,809. Mr. Drake, in 1865, took no active part in the election petitions?—No.

38,810. You did the whole of that work?—I believe the whole.

38,811. And he did the greater part of what may be called the advising work before the election?—Yes, the greater part.

38,812. Yes. I thought that was the sort of division of labour?—Yes. I am anxious to give you the fullest information in my power.

38,813. (Mr. Price.) Just so. We only wanted to know the relative position in which you stood with regard to Mr. Drake?—Mr. Drake took the principal part.

38,814. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you communicate the names of some persons in 1865 or 1866, or both years, to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond as being men of wealth and position, who would be willing to stand for Bridgwater?—Mr. Lovibond called on me, and several names were mentioned. One name was mentioned by me, and I think also one or two were mentioned by him.

38,815. Do you remember sending that paper to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond apropos of the election of 1865, then expected to come on (handing the list of rich and eligible candidates dated June 20th, 1865, to the witness). Is that in your handwriting?—No.

38,816. In one of your clerks?—No.

38,817. In whose handwriting is it then?—I do not recognize the handwriting at all; I never saw it before to my knowledge.

38,818. Do you mean to say you did not send that to Mr. Lovibond?—I certainly did not send this to him. May I read it?

38,819. (Mr. Price.) Certainly?—I mean read it to myself?

38,820. By all means?—The first name upon it is Sir John Villiers Shelley. I mentioned Sir John Villiers Shelley to Mr. Lovibond when he called upon me. There is a town address given. He is described as the "present M.P. for Westminster." He was certainly not the M.P. for Westminster when I gave his name to Mr. Lovibond.

38,821. (Mr. Anstey.) You will see if you read on?—I will do so. "Rich country baronet." Perhaps I had better mention before I answer upon this paper that I have been told that some such paper as this has been referred to in evidence.

38,822. (Mr. Price.) It has?—I then heard it with surprise, because I did not recollect sending such a paper, and I fancy that these might have been notes, or rather this paper in my hand might have been a copy of notes, made by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond as the result of his interview.

38,823. It was found amongst his papers?—I had no idea of it till it reached my hands.

38,824. (Mr. Anstey.) It is stated on some docket of his on another paper, if not on the back of that, what it is?—It is stated here, "Taken from bundle of papers handed in by the mayor."

(Mr. Price.) That is our note.

38,825. (Mr. Anstey.) It is stated on a docket in Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's handwriting on that paper, or some other document, "Correspondence with Mr. Travers Smith about the election"?—I do not think I ever corresponded with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond about the election. I saw him twice. He called on me one day, and I saw him again either the same day or within a day or two afterwards. I am not sure whether we ever met except upon that occasion, and I do not now recollect ever writing to him. I think all I communicated to him was the names of certain persons with whom he might communicate, and as the result I recommended him to see Sir John Shelley. He did see Sir John Shelley, and I had no occasion to see Mr. Lovibond again, and I do not think I ever saw him again, and I do not recollect writing to him. Sir John Shelley I mentioned.

38,826. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes. I suppose he was down on your list as a person wanting a seat?—Not down on my list. At the time I saw Mr. Lovibond, if my recollection is worth anything, and my memory is generally a good one—at the time I saw Mr. Lovibond Sir John Shelley had just lost his seat for Westminster, and being a very good friend of the party, and himself being a respectable man, I mentioned him to Mr. Lovibond as a gentleman wanting another seat.

38,827. Did you describe him as a rich baronet?—I do not remember describing him as a rich baronet; I described him as a country baronet, and as a man of position, and so on. I will tell you the reason I mentioned Sir John Shelley, and it was this: Mr. Lovibond told me something about the character of the place, which I will repeat, if you desire it at all.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. J. T. Smith.

8 Oct. 1869.

38,828. (Mr. Price.) Oh yes, if you please?—Shall I tell you, as near as I can, what passed at the interview?

38,829. (Mr. Coleridge.) Exactly?—Very well. I had never seen Mr. Benjamin Lovibond before; I knew Mr. Lovibond's name as being a local agent of the party. I was sitting in my room one day, when one of my clerks came in and said that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was waiting to see me. I told him to tell Mr. Lovibond to come in, and he did so, and he told me it was likely that they would want a candidate at Bridgwater. He stated to me that he had been told, by whom I do not know, that he had been told by a member of the Reform Club that I was the proper person to apply to. I asked him the character of Bridgwater, and so on, and so on; and what he told me was this: he premised his statement by saying that he came up determined to tell the precise truth with reference to the place; that he knew this was a matter of duty, and that he felt pledged, or felt himself bound, I would rather say, as a matter of honour, to speak with perfect frankness and candour on the subject; he added, not only as a matter of honour, but he felt bound to do so. He said, "It is a mere "matter of policy that I should do so, because unless "I tell you the real character of the place, and what "we really want, you will not be able to advise us." I said, "Certainly it would have been great folly if "you came up to ask me for my advice about it, if "you did not tell me what the character of the place "was." He said, "In former years Bridgwater had a bad reputation;" but he said that was owing to there being a large number of freemen on the register. Of course I do not want to attack anybody's character here, whether freemen or anybody else.

(Mr. Price.) They were scot and lot. I think they were.

38,830. (Mr. Coleridge.) There are no freemen here?—They were scot and lot voters.

38,831. (Mr. Price.) The old constituency were scot and lot men?—Very likely. He told me the number was greatly reduced, and he told me that the result of recent registration courts had been greatly to improve the constituency, improve it in his view—to make it more Liberal than it had been; and he said that the Liberals were then in possession of a very considerable and a safe majority, and he went on to say that he believed there was no chance of money being spent illegally in any future election. He said that it would not be necessary on the Liberal side, because they were in possession of this majority, and that it would not be worth the while of Conservatives to attempt it, because their chances of success, if they did, would be extremely small; and that if any expenditure were made on the other side, that is on the Liberal side, a very small expenditure on that side would counteract a very much larger expenditure on the Conservative side, and that, consequently, it would not be worth the while of the Conservatives to begin bribing, and of course the Liberals would not be fools enough to do so under such circumstances. I told him it was a very happy circumstance that the borough was becoming a much purer borough than it had been, and I asked him the sort of candidate he would require. "Well," he said, "you people in London may not "think much of the people of Bridgwater, but the "people of Bridgwater think a great deal of themselves;" and he said, "Though we may win if we "have a good candidate, and win as a pure election, "I do not know whether we should be equally secure "unless the candidate was a man of some mark."

38,832. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was assuming that Mr. Kinglake had consented to be one candidate, and he wanted a second?—I suppose so. He said, "What we want is a man well known in political life." "Well," I said, "there are not a great many men well known in political life who has not his own seat." I said, "I only know of one man who is well known, who has lost his seat;" and he said, "If he is not "very well known in political life, he must be a man "of good social position;" and I told him of Sir John Shelley. Sir John Shelley was the first person I mentioned; he was an old supporter of the party, and he was a very respectable man, and he had recently lost his seat for Westminster, and I thought he was just the man of the political character that they wanted; but I ought to mention that I did not suppose then, and do not suppose now, that Sir John Shelley was a man who would be guilty of corrupt practices, therefore I described him as a rich country baronet. It was not with any idea that he was coming down here to spend money corruptly, but merely to show that he was a man of well-known political character and of good social position.

38,833. You knew Mr. Benjamin Lovibond before then, down here?—No; I knew his local name. I knew he represented the party.

38,834. Did not you know the meaning of his expression, when he said "Bridgwater had been rather corrupt"?—No, he did not make use of that expression.

38,835. That is what struck me that you said?—I think his expression was, that Bridgwater had rather a bad reputation.

38,836. "Rather a bad reputation"?—I think that was the expression.

38,837. (Mr. Price.) Do not your party keep a register of the boroughs in England, so that your party may see which is a corrupt place, and where money is required to be spent or not?—There was no such register kept. I kept a register of the different places, which I will describe. It was ruled in four or five columns; the first column contained the name of the place—no, stop, the name of the place was at the head of the page. The first column contained the names of the members; the second column contained the names of the local agents, sometimes on the Liberal side only, and sometimes on both sides. It was a mere memorandum. The third column, if I recollect right, contained the names of intending candidates—people who would be likely to go down the next vacaney; and then there was one column for remarks. That column for remarks contained very little except the condition of the register from time to time, just the variation in the register that was produced by each year's registration, and even that was not at all accurately filled up. Sometimes it might contain reference to some family interest, or something of that kind, just the sort of information you might find in Dod's Peerage.

38,838. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you came to a place like Totnes or Yarmouth, was there not anything to denote that it was a corrupt place, and would require money?—I do not recollect it farther than that in some instances it may have been put down that it was a place where no particular personal interest had effect, and that money was believed to have been spent on former occasions, or a memorandum that it was a place to which it was better not to recommend any candidate to go. I may mention that I never sent a candidate to a place that I knew to be systematically corrupt.

38,839. (Mr. Price.) If I understand Sir William Drake's evidence in Totnes, all these places were always known; that nobody was ever known to win at some places without a certain sum of money being spent?—There are some places, but they are not mentioned in this book. The only places I know of I kept on a piece of paper which I made up from time to time; and whenever I heard of a corrupt borough I entered it down in my black list.

38,840. Did you mention Totnes?—No.

38,841. (Mr. Anstey.) Does your list show every borough in England?—Yes.

38,842. Did it also show the prevailing influences on either side; what used to be called in old days the patrons, who the patrons were?—No, only in a few instances.

38,843. How was Bridgwater set down in that respect?—I do not think there was anything about influence with respect to Bridgwater at all. I may mention that it was quite an exceptional case if the influence was put down, and if it was it would be the influence of some large family, or something of that kind, and not the influence of anybody in the borough having money.

38,844. Such as the influence of the lawyers?—Yes.

38,845. Would that be put down?—Yes.

38,846. (Mr. Coleridge.) In a place like Totnes, would the Duke of Somerset be put down?—Yes. You were asking about the influence of a class.

38,847. Yes?—I should make a memorandum to this effect, that at a former election the men would not vote for anybody except for a man professing certain opinions; that at such and such a place the dissenting question was strong, or the evangelical question was strong, or that they would not vote for men who were not strong on the question of the ballot; but it was a political question, not a question of money.

38,848. What other names were mentioned at this interview?—Some other names were mentioned, I think, but I cannot charge my memory with them. I have not read the rest of this paper, but a friend of mine told me, whom I met on the continent the other day, that it was stated I had sent down a list of candidates, and he told me Mr. Pender was amongst them.

38,849. (Mr. Anstey.) No, that is not so?—I do not know whether his name was in this paper at all.

38,850. (Mr. Price.) It was stated that you mentioned the name of Mr. Pender to Mr. Lovibond. I think that was stated?—I do not think I mentioned the name of Mr. Pender in any way.

38,851. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think it was stated Mr. Pender's name was mentioned on a subsequent occasion after he was unseated for Totnes, that you mentioned him on a subsequent occasion?—I do not remember mentioning his name; I am very clear I never did, and I will tell you why I could not have mentioned Mr. Pender's name. Before he was unseated, Edward Pleydel Bouverie was the chairman of our committee, and he moved for the usual commission, and I think it was the very night he took up the report of the committee; if not then, within a night or two. Consequently, within a day or two of Mr. Pender's being unseated, we knew that there was to be a commission for Totnes.

38,852. He was unseated for personal bribery, and therefore was ineligible?—Yes. I never dreamed of mentioning him to anybody.

38,853. He was not eligible for that Parliament?—No.

38,854. He was unseated for personal bribery, for having made a personal promise to give Harris a place?—I do not think that the committee thought it so.

38,855. Yes, they did; and I, as one of the commissioners at Totnes, on examining him, found he was not guilty of that personal bribery?—I beg your pardon; I did not know that you were one of the commissioners. I entirely agree with that finding as to his not having been guilty of personal bribery from what I know of the matter, and our committee would not believe one atom of it, that he was guilty of personal bribery. To go on with what passed with Mr. Lovibond, I mentioned Sir John Shelley, and I gave Mr. Lovibond an introduction to Sir John Shelley in some shape; I am not sure how. I may have given him a note to carry to Sir John Shelley, or have given him my card simply, and communicated with Sir John Shelley myself; but I mentioned Sir John Shelley's name to Mr. Lovibond, and Sir John Shelley came down here to fight the election. I have no doubt that some other names were mentioned; and very likely, if I look at the rest of his paper, it may revive my memory as to whom I did mention; because on glancing at this paper the idea suggests itself to my mind that the probability is that Mr. Lovibond noted down the effect of our conversation, but that I ever saw this paper before is quite a mistake, and this document does not come from me in any way.

38,856. Or from your office in any way?—Certainly not; it could not have emanated from my office. Of course I am only speaking to the best of my recollection. I do not think this document emanated from me, but probably it may be Mr. Lovibond's memorandum of what passed at our interview.

38,857. (Mr. Anstey) Read the other names on that paper?—Shall I take them now?

38,858. Yes?—"Sir F. Halliday, late Governor of "Bengal; able man and valuable Indian public servant; "good speaker; Palmerstonian; very moderate."

38,859. "Palmerstonian; very moderate;" you see that?—Yes; "very moderate; new to Parliament; "against ballot; for abolition of church rates; rich; "and good candidate."

38,860. (Mr. Price.) You see that is very specific?—It is.

38,861. (Mr. Anstey.) The same man who recommends Sir John Shelley, who is an advanced reformer, recommends the "Palmerstonian; very moderate;" who has ample means, or perhaps larger means than Sir John Shelley. Do you see that?—Well, what I am puzzled at is this, that I do not remember mentioning Sir F. Halliday's name.

38,862. (Mr. Price.) I think with all the varieties of candidates that Bridgwater had that they did not know what an East Indian Nabob was, so you have the name of one given there?—I do not remember Sir F. Halliday's name being mentioned at all.

38,863. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he on your list as a candidate?—I do not remember.

38,864. (Mr. Price.) Or on Sir William Drake's?—That I should not know.

38,865. (Mr. Anstey.) Look at the next one?—The next one was Mr. Walter Bagehot.

38,866. There you have advanced opinions again?—"An able man; editor, or part proprietor of 'Economist'; son-in-law of James Wilson, M.P.; a good candidate." I think it is very likely that I may have mentioned Mr. Bagehot, because Mr. Bagehot had some family connexion, or some connexion with Bridgwater. The next is "Lord Milton, eldest son of Earl Fitzwilliam; "age 26; intelligent young candidate, but not ex-"perienced; the highest social and family position."

38,867. (Mr. Coleridge.) Lord Milton had written a book?—That is all I know about it. Even if I did mention it, I confess upon looking through this document, which I have not seen before, I have some little doubt how far it was the result of some information received from me at all. I remember distinctly mentioning Sir John Shelley.

38,868. What is the next name after Lord Milton?—There is no other.

38,869. (Mr. Anstey.) There is a placitum?—The memorandum at the foot?

38,870. Yes?—"All the above are men of wealth "and position, who would do credit to almost any "constituency." I do not think it was any remark of mine. It may have been the general result of a remark made to Mr. Lovibond. I can see now the effect of your question; it is this, whether the candidates I recommended were wealthy men with a view to corruption; I say no.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Leave out the latter part "with a view to corruption."

38,871. (Mr. Price.) The better way will be for you to tell us the name of a man who is not a baronet, or not reputed in any way to be rich; any person who was a man, if you like, of good social position, or was a man of mark, if you like, but who had not any great means or property. Did you name any person of that sort? There must have been some young aspirants to fame among your party who were not rich, but who were quite capable of being, as Mr. Kinglake says, the grandest thing in the world, that of being the medium between the poorest man in the borough of Bridgwater and the Crown; therefore, we want to know whether you recommended any man of mark, or good social position, who did not happen to be a man of means and property, and a baronet?—I think Mr. Walter Bagehot is the man who would answer to that description.

(Mr. Anstey.) He brought here nearly 1,000*l.* at a moment's notice.

(Mr. Price.) It cost him that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Barham, probably you know that handwriting (referring to the list handed to the witness).

(Mr. Barham, referring to the document.) This is the handwriting of Mr. Fletcher, Mr. Lovibond's clerk?

(The witness.) I will not answer positively, but I do not think I ever saw it.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Fletcher in court?

(Mr. Barham.) He is dead.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know that handwriting, Mr. Carslake?

(Mr. Carslake.) Yes; I know his handwriting perfectly.

(Mr. Anstey.) You did suggest Sir John Shelley, but you cannot give us the name of any other member of the Liberal party who was then anxious for a seat in Parliament, who did not happen to be rich, or a baronet, or an earl's son, but who might be a man of mark and social position?

(The witness.) I think Mr. Bagehot might come under that description; at any rate, if he does not, I did not know anything about it at the time, and the explanation I give is a very simple one, that Mr. Lovibond put it to me, as I say, that they required a man who was either well known as a political man, or a man of good social position, to fill the place. I pressed Sir John Shelley upon him, and that was the only candidate I did press upon him, and Sir John Shelley came down; and I did not believe at that time, and I do not believe now, that Sir John Shelley was a man who would spend money in an illegal way at an election. I do not know that he did. I do not know what has been proved before you, but I certainly do not believe he would; and therefore I say, without hesitation, that the answer to such a question, a perfectly natural one, put by the Commissioners is perfectly obvious, that the man was a man who would not spend money corruptly. I say it with the greatest respect to the Commissioners, that it is a complete mistake to suppose, if they do suppose, that I had the slightest intention to recommend a man to come down here who was a rich man, to spend money corruptly.

38,871*a*. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your position is very much changed when we find that that document is in Fletcher's handwriting, the clerk of Mr. Lovibond?—"All the above are men of wealth and position, who would do credit to any constituency," is not my phrase. My idea is that this list may have been prepared to submit to some meeting of the heads of the party as the general result of what passed between Mr. Lovibond and me, garnished and improved by Mr. Lovibond himself.

38,872. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell us how soon Sir William Drake means to attend here, in obedience to the summons which has been served upon him?—I cannot tell you that. I had no idea till this morning that he had even been summoned; and I have not seen Sir William Drake probably for the last two or three months. He generally goes abroad in August for the long vacation, and generally returns late in October.

38,873. (Mr. Anstey.) He has not only been told that he was required here, but he has been summoned twice. We cannot do without him.—I have no idea where he is. As a matter of fact, I have not seen him since the month of June or July. I am quite sure he is not a man to avoid attending here.

38,874. (Mr. Price.) I think, with regard to that list, your explanation is very possible, that that is, as you say, an amplification. The only thing that remains is, that these names, excepting Mr. Bagehot's, which might have occurred to Mr. Lovibond from his local knowledge, are names which he must have got from someone or the other?—No doubt.

38,875. He would have known nothing of Lord Milton, for instance?—No doubt.

38,876. Or of Sir F. Halliday?—No doubt.

38,877. The question is, besides you, whether he saw the whips of the party; probably he did. It does not follow that it came from you?—I have no idea whether these names came from anybody else.

38,878. You have no idea whether he communicated with the heads of the party?—I have no idea at all. My impression is that he called upon me about 3 or 4 o'clock one day, and he probably called on me the next morning. I do not think he was more than 24 hours in town, and I do not think he had much opportunity of communicating with anybody else than me; and I know this, that as to any names I gave him, or any names which may have been discussed which may not even be upon this paper, I did not give him the name of any person who I thought would be accepted, except Sir John Shelley, because I wanted Sir John Shelley to be taken.

38,879. (Mr. Price.) There is no doubt, as regards public position, Sir John Shelley was the best man named, so far as his public career is concerned?—Undoubtedly. I asked Mr. Lovibond about the expense of a contest. He told me it was not a very cheap place; that it was necessary to employ several agents. I am not giving you that from my own experience; I am only telling you what Mr. Lovibond says; and he went on to say that the place would cost 600*l.*, a contested election. I am not criticising what Mr. Lovibond says; pray understand, I am only telling you what he said. He said it might cost something more; but he did say this, that I might tell any person intending to come down that in no case would it cost more, if properly conducted, than 800*l.* That was what Mr. Lovibond stated to me.

38,880. In no case?—In no case would it cost more than that; and he made that statement to me, having told me that he came up under the feeling that he was bound in honour to tell me the truth; and more than that, that, apart from his being bound in honour to tell me the truth, that it was on a lower consideration, but common good policy that he should do so, or I could not advise him; and I believed Mr. Lovibond, and I believed him for this reason, that in the course of my experience no such attempt to deceive me has been made. I thought no such attempt to deceive me was being made by Mr. Lovibond, after the solemn asservation that he made, that he was going to tell the truth, and his statement of why he was going to tell it; and Mr. Lovibond, who saw Sir John Shelley, must have equally deceived Sir John Shelley, with all his political experience, with all his knowledge of the House of Commons, an old political man as Sir John Shelley was—far older than I even, and with the best means of obtaining information, must have been as much deceived as I was by Mr. Lovibond's statement, as I venture to say any man would be, if any man asseverated as Mr. Lovibond asseverated to me.

38,881. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did it occur to you to ask Mr. Lovibond what the former elections had cost the Liberal members?—I do not think it did.

38,882. Because we have it in evidence that it cost Mr. Kinglake about 1,400*l.*, and what it cost Mr. Tynte we do not know?—Perhaps I ought to explain apropos of the time Mr. Lovibond came to me, that I was so much engaged, and saw such multitudes of people, that probably I had very few words to say to anybody. I took the statement as Mr. Lovibond gave it to me, and I do not think I stated anything to him beyond.

38,883. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you anything more to state?—As to this matter?

38,884. Yes?—Anything and everything you ask me.

38,885. Have you anything to offer, I ask you?—Yes.

38,886. What is it?—Not in reference to this matter.

38,887. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not with reference to that paper, but with reference to that election?—As the learned Commissioner put it to me with reference to that election, I thought I was confined to that.

38,888. (Mr. Coleridge.) I thought it best to keep them separate?—Quite so. I have nothing at all to add with reference to that election. There was a petition subsequently, as you know. I was not concerned with that petition in any way, and I never heard anything about it, except the verba disjecta of the lobby, which all the world might hear and know about.

38,889. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the other matter?—The other matter is this, as to Mr. Vanderbyl's coming down. Perhaps I ought to mention, that on my return from the continent the other day I found a newspaper at my office containing the evidence given on one of the days before this Commission, and two passages were marked in the paper, and one was with reference to this precious document which I have in my hand; the other was with reference, I think, to Mr. Vanderbyl being introduced to the party. I did not introduce Mr. Vanderbyl, but Mr. Vanderbyl was in communication with some of the parties of Bridgwater, and I understood that Mr. Vanderbyl referred to me as to his political opinions. In consequence of that two gentlemen from Bridgwater, Mr. Henry Lovibond and Mr. Barham, called upon me to know what I knew of Mr. Vanderbyl. I told them that I knew he was a member of the Reform Club; that I believed he was a Liberal. I mentioned, I believe, or they were all aware, I do not know which, that he had stood for Yarmouth; and that, as far as I knew, he would be a satisfactory candidate, as far as political views went, provided he were accepted by the party. That, as far as I recollect, is what passed with reference to Mr. Vanderbyl when Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham came to me with regard to Mr. Vanderbyl. He, I believe I may say, and quite positively, never spent any money illegally at any election until he came down to Bridgwater. I have no idea that he did.

38,890. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not at Yarmouth?—No.

38,891. (Mr. Price.) Vicariously, through Mr. Brogden?—No, I am not aware that he did.

38,892. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you not aware that he is reported by the Royal Commission, and is scheduled as a briber?—By the Royal Commission at Yarmouth?

38,893. Yes. Vanderbyl and Phillip, are on the register, which was read out in court the other day.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He had the benefit of Mr. Brogden's money.

38,894. (Mr. Price.) You knew that, surely?—I did not know it; I thought he had been reported as having had nothing to do with bribery.

38,895. The committee returned that he was an unsuccessful candidate?—Yes.

38,896. Therefore the committee would have nothing to do with him or Mr. Brogden?—No.

38,897. Therefore all that came out with regard to Mr. Vanderbyl would be very incidental, and what came out was on the Commission; and then it appeared, beyond all question, that Mr. Brogden had spent an enormous sum of money, which Mr. Vanderbyl had had the benefit of, and that he was put down as a briber?—I was not aware that he had been so put down, or so reported by the Commission.

38,898. I understood you to say that Mr. Vanderbyl was spoken of by you; but was not Mr. Brogden first mentioned by you?—No.

38,899. Then how did they get hold of Mr. Brogden's name?—I do not know, but I think Mr. Brogden introduced Mr. Vanderbyl to them.

38,900. That is what I wanted to know. Who mentioned Mr. Brogden's name?—That I do not know.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Brogden's was the first name put forward. He had been unsuccessful at Yarmouth, and was notoriously a very rich man, and he was the first person to whom they had recourse, and Mr. Brogden declined the honour, and thrust it upon his friend, Mr. Vanderbyl.

38,901. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood just now you were consulted about Mr. Vanderbyl and not about Mr. Brogden?—I am speaking as far as my recollection goes; I was consulted about Mr. Vanderbyl.

38,902. Therefore the Brogden affair had taken place before you were consulted about Vanderbyl at all; the proposal as to Brogden was over and gone before you were consulted about Vanderbyl?—Yes.

38,903. (Mr. Price.) I think there must be some misapprehension, because the evidence stands thus: they came to town, they saw you, and saw Mr. Brogden; they saw him, I think, twice; Mr. Brogden declined; they actually left London; at Bath they are stopped by a telegram; that they stayed there to refresh themselves; that in the train, when they resumed their journey, they find a gentleman, a Mr. Salmon, who has come down there, and who says, "I "have got a capital man for you; Mr. Vanderbyl will "stand, and here is his address ready cut and dried;" and they settled the address in the railway carriage, and they had it out, and Mr. Vanderbyl came down by the next train. That is their story.—All that is new to me.

(Mr. Price.) But this is the story stated to us, undoubtedly.

38,904. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not finish your sentence with respect to what you were stating about Mr. Vanderbyl?—As far as my recollection goes; but, as I said just now, I saw a vast multitude of people, and only gave a few seconds to each; but, as far as I recollect, Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham asked me about Mr. Vanderbyl. I think I am quite right about that.

38,905. But you told us you said a good deal about Mr. Vanderbyl, and you were going to state something more about Mr. Vanderbyl; what was that?—I was making a remark to this effect, when I was interrupted by one of the Commissioners, that I did not know Mr. Vanderbyl had spent any money illegally anywhere; certainly at that time I did not know it, because what I said was that I understood the arrangement with reference to Mr. Vanderbyl's going down there was, that he was to pay 100*l.* towards the legal expenses, and nothing else, and I thought that had been proved before the committee; I mean at Yarmouth.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I think at Yarmouth it was arranged that he was to pay 600*l.*

38,906. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you know of Mr. Vanderbyl personally?—Very little indeed.

38,907. Do you register these things in a book?—No; I have nothing relating to Mr. Vanderbyl in any book.

38,908. How did you know of these matters, about his being a sound Liberal, and all that?—What I told them was, that I knew he was a Liberal in politics, and that I had seen him at the Reform Club; but I know very little about him.

38,909. (Mr. Price.) I should like you to recollect this, because there is a great conflict about it. Was it Mr. Brogden whom you mentioned in the first instance?—Whom they mentioned?

38,910. Whom you mentioned to them.

38,911. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Brogden down on your list as a man wanting a seat?—I knew he wanted a seat.

38,912. Mr. Brogden's answer to them was that he considered himself pledged rather to Yarmouth?—That I have heard of before. Will you forgive me for a moment while I try and recollect? I had forgotten

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. J. T. Smith.

8 Oct. 1869.

it just now, but I am nearly sure that Mr. Brogden called upon me one day and told me that he had been invited to come down to Bridgwater, but he considered he was pledged to Yarmouth. I think Mr. Brogden called and told me that; if so, he had been invited to come down.

38,913. (Mr. Price.) I may be wrong (it is impossible to recollect all the details) in saying that they had an interview with Mr. Brogden apart from you; but I understood it was through you that Mr. Vanderbyl was introduced to them?—No; it was through Mr. Brogden. I did not introduce Mr. Vanderbyl in any way. I fancy it was through Mr. Brogden that Mr. Vanderbyl was mentioned, and that Mr. Vanderbyl referred them to me as to his being a Liberal. That is to the best of my recollection.

38,914. No, that could not be, if their story is correct that they left London, and that it was at Bath that they got this telegram. Am I right in that, Mr. Barham?

(Mr. Barham.) Yes. We never heard of Mr. Vanderbyl until we saw Mr. Salmon in the train at Bath. We got into the train at Bath with Mr. Salmon. That was only two days before the election.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Barham one of those who came to see you?

(The witness.) Yes, I think so. I saw so many people at that time that it is very difficult to remember who I saw.

38,915. (Mr. Price.) It makes really very little difference, Mr. Smith, only one does not want to get a confusion of the thing upon the notes?—I should be most anxious to avoid that, and really I am only telling you the perfectly sincere truth when I tell you that I saw so many hundreds of people at the time that my memory is not probably so accurate as that of the local gentlemen who had but one matter in hand.

(Mr. Barham.) It was Mr. Smith who introduced Mr. Brogden to us.

(The witness.) Was it?

(Mr. Barham.) Oh, there is no question about it. We never heard of Mr. Brogden in any other way.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Brogden in Mr. Smith's office?

(Mr. Barham.) Then Mr. Brogden declined, and we left London, and he afterwards thought of Mr. Vanderbyl. There is not the least question about it.

(Mr. Price to the witness.) I think you got into a confusion about it.

38,916. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know Mr. Brogden personally, don't you?—Yes.

38,917. Do you recollect his being at your office about this time?—I did not until the Chief Commissioner put a question to me just now, and then I said I think I had told Mr. Brogden, and I thought he had declined. It is rather an awkward thing, and not a very regular mode, for one witness to say to another, "I think you are in error;" but all I can say is that I do not recollect introducing Mr. Brogden. I am not quite certain, but if the gentlemen whose memory for the reason I mentioned is more likely to be accurate than mine say so, I think it is very likely.

38,918. (Mr. Price.) Very likely that is so, knowing that Mr. Vanderbyl afterwards was a candidate; and you may possibly have had a reference about it after he had come down and announced himself, and you may have said he was a Liberal and a reformer?—That is very likely.

38,919. Therefore you may have forgotten any anterior transaction about Mr. Brogden, but have got it fixed in your mind that you gave this recommendatory letter to Mr. Vanderbyl. That I think is the way in which it is reconcilable?—Most likely.

(Mr. Price.) It was all post factum, but you had probably seen Mr. Brogden before.

Mr. E. Barham.

Mr. Eustace Barham recalled.

38,920. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Barham, perhaps you will tell us whether any letter did pass afterwards between you and Mr. Smith asking him whether he knew anything about Mr. Vanderbyl?—I do not remember anything at all. Mr. Vanderbyl only came down about two days before the election. I do not think there would be time to correspond.

38,921. It would be quite at the last moment, you know?—I do not remember anything at all.

(Mr. Price.) It was all done in a great hurry, no doubt.

Mr. J. T. Smith.

Mr. Joseph Travers Smith recalled.

38,922. (Mr. Price.) What I want to ask you about is this: We understood rather that Mr. Bagehot had shrunk from coming forward again, partly to a certain extent because he thought it was hardly fair to Mr. Patton to oppose him when he had merely taken office, and was coming down for re-election—partly on that ground at all events. And then it was said, I think, that either you or Sir William Drake (I won't be quite sure which) had insisted that there must be a contest. I want you to tell us what you know about that—that it was insisted that there must be a contest. Whether it was you or Sir William Drake I cannot tell?—I certainly would not have insisted that there must be a contest, and I will mention this, that as a general rule in political life we do not encourage a contest where a gentleman offers himself for re-election only.

38,923. That is generally thought to be the comity of both parties, that there shall not be?—And my impression is that when I was consulted (whoever it was in reference to, whether Mr. Brogden or Mr. Vanderbyl), I rather discouraged the idea of a contest; but I cannot tell. At the same time, to speak perfectly frankly, I may mention that I do not know that the same rule would apply to a gentleman who was suspected at least of having come down to a borough with which he had no connexion, and having been returned by corrupt means. I do not know whether the same rule would be held to apply then.

38,924. Had you any knowledge at that time that Mr. Patton's first election, where he had succeeded over Mr. Bagehot, had been secured by corrupt means?—My impression certainly was that that was the mode in which the election had been secured, and for this reason, because I still believe that Mr. Lovibond's account of the matter was in the main correct. I was completely deceived by Mr. Lovibond.

38,925. You still trusted to Benjamin Lovibond?—Yes.

38,926. You had no idea then——?—I did not think that a stranger could come down to Bridgwater——

38,927. (Mr. Price.) A stranger is most liked in Bridgwater, I assure you?—I did not think that a stranger could come down and get in unless by corrupt means, and therefore I do not think, to speak à cœur ouvert, that I should have felt equally bound in the case of opposing Mr. Patton as I should in the case of another man, by the ordinary rule that you do not encourage opposition to a man offering himself for re-election.

38,928. Well, if you acted upon information that he had won his election by corrupt means you might be right in taking that view, or making that exception?

—I do not know that I did make that exception. I merely state that as my impression now.

(Mr. Price.) We have had no evidence before us that these gentlemen who went to London told you that Mr. Patton had got in by corrupt means. The evidence rather goes to show that there is a sort of detestation here in this place of any election being allowed to go over without the chance of money being spent.

(Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence that on the day of election one man was congratulating himself that the election might be set aside on petition, and then he was immediately confounded by the remark, "Mr. So-and-so, our hands are dirty too." That was at the time when Bagehot was defeated, so that it was the common talk of the town then that there had been bribery on both sides.

38,929–31. (Mr. Price.) They knew it here, there is no doubt, but whether they told you that in London as an inducement——?—I cannot say that they told me that in London. I merely gave that as an explanation. As I laid down before, the general rule is in political life that you would not oppose a man who is merely offering himself for re-election.

(Mr. Anstey.) The question is whether the last election was a fair criterion of the strength of the party. If it is, it is not fair to commence a new contest just afterwards.

38,932. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Bovill at Guildford, you know, was a strong instance?—I know a good deal about Mr. Bovill at Guildford.

(Mr. Price.) But, however, we need not go into that.

(Witness.) I may mention that two gentlemen came to me who wanted to go to Guildford, and I would not allow them.

38,933. (Mr. Coleridge.) As a regular rule you do not oppose?—No.

38,934. (Mr. Anstey.) You would not call it a corrupt practice to oppose, if you have a good chance?—Certainly not. Every constituency has a right to choose its own representative.

38,935. (Mr. Price.) But what do you think of a man coming, if it is for the keeping up of corrupt practices, if the gentleman comes down, as Mr. Vanderbyl, a man of an enormous amount of money came down, and floods the town with money? Would you not say then that those who brought him down had an idea not so much of strengthening the party as of flooding the town with money? You see they brought down an enormously rich stranger, and one not of any mark. I do not say it in disparagement of Mr. Vanderbyl, but he is not a man of mark?—Mr. Vanderbyl is a merchant.

38,936. I do not say it in disparagement of Mr. Vanderbyl, but he is a man of no such mark that he should be sent here?—His firm is a firm of very considerable standing.

38,937. Oh yes, no doubt?—And I believe he had some local interest in the borough.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He has got some place here.

38,938. (Mr. Price.) He has got some place?—There was something more than that, surely. He is interested in the trade of the borough.

(Mr. Price.) Well, he has got a ship called by his name, but he is utterly unknown in the borough.

38,939. (Mr. Anstey.) I presume that a man coming down to flood the town with money is a man coming down for corrupt practices, whether he violates the comity that has been spoken of, the rule of comity, or whether he does not. The corruption consists in the flooding, not in the breach of comity?—Certainly.

38,940. (Mr. Price.) And the question is why they bring down a man with money but a man of no mark, like Mr. Vanderbyl, but who has an enormous amount of money, and whose reputation is that of a man who will freely spend it for corrupting electors, and who is introduced by a Mr. Brogden, who is equally notorious for the same thing, and who brings the money down in a carpet bag. Perhaps you did not know of that?—I did not know of that. I have heard it said.

38,941. (Mr. Anstey.) You could not know it, it not having been committed when you were consulted by them?—No; and more than that, it is only fair to Mr. Vanderbyl to say that certainly my impression at the time was that he intended to fight this as a pure election.

(Mr. Price.) Yes, they all do. That is the common formula.

38,942. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, have you anything more to tell us?—I do not know that anything occurs to me particularly. I am prepared to give every information.

38,943. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had nothing to do with the last election, had you?—Not the slightest. I may mention this, though it may be a little irregular perhaps as a matter of evidence, but should there be any question upon which you wish information, if your secretary will have the goodness to send me a letter I will answer it at once, and I will attend in London for the confirmation of the information. I merely mention this for this reason, that you might want to take evidence here and act upon my information before you get at me again.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Well, if there is anything else that we want we could pursue that course in London.

(Witness.) I should like to say in explanation, I had nothing to do, either directly or indirectly, with either providing money, any corrupt practices, or in reference to this election in the slightest way in the world.

(Mr. Price.) I do not impute anything of the kind to you, Mr. Smith. I think there are idle rumours with regard to both sides, which are perfectly contemptible; and I should no more think of imputing that you were the means of getting money, by way of subscription, or anything else, for such a purpose than I should think of imputing it to any other gentleman of whom I know nothing.

(Witness.) I am very glad to hear you say it. You have done me only justice in saying it. The thought never entered my mind of any connivance, either direct or indirect, at any corrupt practices of any sort or kind. If Mr. Purcell will write to me I will assist you in any way that lies in my power. I do not know whether you allow any witness to have a copy of the shorthand writer's notes.

(Mr. Price.) No, we do not.

(Witness.) They will be printed, I suppose.

(Mr. Price.) They will be printed afterwards.

Mr. John Ruddock sworn.

Mr. J. Ruddock.

38,944. (Mr. Price.) Are you an attorney and solicitor, carrying on business in Bridgwater?—I am.

38,945. How long have you been in practice?—Since the early part of 1831.

38,946. You have been mixed up in electioneering matters during the whole of that time?—More or less.

38,947. I do not know whether it will be convenient for you to do as the other gentlemen have done, to begin and give us the whole history of what part you have taken, or shall we take you seriatim through them?—I cannot do better than read Mr. Trevor's account which he has already given you. I cannot recollect dates and names from memory in the way he has given them to you.

38,948. I will take you to the last election. Did you act in 1868 as one of the recognized agents of the

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. J. Ruddock.

8 Oct. 1869.

Conservative party?—Certainly not. I have never been an agent since 1859.

38,949. Had you anything to do with the practical working of the last election?—No.

38,950. Not in any way?—No. I did assist my friends occasionally in taking part in the canvass, but in no other way. I supplied places occasionally when business prevented them, or when they wanted to get away.

38,951. But in any professional way? You had no staff of clerks, and no charges to make, and made no charges?—Not in the least. I cannot say there were no clerks employed, because on the day of election it is usual for us to lend clerks for check clerks, and that sort of thing, and I believe one or two of them may have been engaged, but I have no charges in the matter at all.

38,952. Now we will go to Vanderbyl's election in 1866. Were you in the same position then?—Precisely.

38,953. You had nothing on earth to do with it?—Nothing on earth to do with it in any way whatever.

38,954. Were you in communication at all with Mr. Patton as to his prospects, or discussing the question?—No. The first time I saw Mr. Patton was in the committee room at the House of Commons during the trial of one of the petitions; and Mr. Bealy Smith then (I was in a different part of the room) came to me and asked me to come across to the other end of the room to be introduced to Mr. Patton, who was to be our future candidate.

38,955. Oh, that was the time of Mr. Westropp's petition?—Yes; and he told me then that Mr. Patton was expected to be the Lord Advocate if there was a change of Government, and that he was to be our candidate; and he further said (which I believe you have got from Mr. Spofforth), that Mr. Patton had engaged to bear a portion of the expenses of the petition. He did not say what petition, whether the petition against Mr. Westropp or against Mr. Kinglake.

38,956. You are rather anticipating. I first began with Vanderbyl's election. You say you had nothing to do with that?—Nothing at all.

38,957. Then Patton's first election, had you anything to do with that beyond what you have told us?—No.

38,958. You had become acquainted with Mr. Patton under the circumstances you have now related?—Exactly.

38,959. And you understood as a part of what had been done between Mr. Patton and the party here that he had agreed to pay a part of the expenses of the petition against Mr. Westropp?—Well, I cannot tell of which petition, whether the petition against Westropp or the petition against Kinglake, one of those, because the expression he used was "the petition."

38,960. Besides that was there any other communication as to money matters?—Not the least in the world.

38,961. Or what was to be spent?—Not the least.

38,962. Did you make Mr. Patton's acquaintance?—I did.

38,963. Did he consult you in any way, or have any communication with you, as to the probable expenditure at the place if he became a candidate?—Not a word passed on the subject, and I am not aware in any way whatever of any pecuniary arrangements with Mr. Patton as to either of his elections.

38,964. Now we will go to 1865. That was the time Mr. Westropp was elected, and unseated afterwards. Had you anything to do with that election?—Only in the same way I have mentioned.

38,965. In 1859 Mr. Westropp was first introduced with Mr. Padwick?—Then I was an acting agent in 1859.

38,966. Then, as you have got to that point, tell us what part you took in the matter?—Well, the part I took in the matter was simply I attended them in their canvass upon several occasions.

38,967. Will you give us the history of Mr. Padwick's introduction to the borough here?—Mr. Richard Smith went to London to bring down one or two candidates, and he came down by the express train in the evening, bringing with him Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp, who were introduced to us at the "Clarence" as our candidates. Then they issued their addresses, and of course proceeded with their canvass, and I assisted them in the canvass from time to time with others, as it happened to be convenient. Sometimes I went with them, sometimes others.

38,968. Had you anything to do with the manipulation of the money part?—Not the least.

38,969. Who managed all that at that time?—That was left for Mr. Smith, I think.

38,970. Mr. Richard Smith?—Mr. Richard Smith, I apprehend. I had nothing to do with it. I know nothing at all about it.

38,971. Did Mr. Richard Smith keep all these matters entirely to himself?—Well, I suppose he did. I do not know. I do not know that any arrangements he made were communicated to anybody else. I have no knowledge of it. I knew nothing about it.

38,972. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you receive for your services on that occasion?—I think it was about 65*l.* or 70*l.*, or something of that sort, with my partner. My partner was engaged also.

38,973. (Mr. Price.) Who was your partner?—Mr. Auber. He had very little to do with the election, and we received for our joint services, I think it was, a cheque for 65*l.* or 70*l.*, or something of that sort.

38,974. Did it ever come to your knowledge in any way whatever how much Mr. Richard Smith ever made out of these elections?—No, never in any way.

38,975. How much Mr. Bealy Smith ever made?—No.

38,976. I mean since you have known the borough?—No.

38,977. We have had such an enormous expenditure of money on the part of the Conservative candidates that is utterly unaccounted for. With regard to poor Mr. Patton, bribery does not account for the expenditure, because all the bribery we have had proved is 1,900*l.* at the first election, in 10*l.* notes or ten sovereigns, and 1,900*l.* at the second, very much the same amount, ten sovereigns a man, or five only in some instances, and yet we have it as the fact that he was fleeced to the extent of nearly 7,000*l.*?—Well, my own opinion is that Mr. Bealy Smith went away from Bridgwater a poor man.

38,978. Where did that money go to?—That I cannot tell you. I do not believe that——

38,979. There is no doubt about the money having gone?—Exactly.

38,980. Because we have had the gentleman who disbursed it, who found it in the first place, Mr. Thompson, who was repaid, and who says that he had not the slightest doubt had when the late Lord Justice Clerk went through the accounts for the purpose of coming before this Commission he was so horrified to find the large sums stated in the evidence that it broke him down.

38,981. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you concur in Mr. Westropp's opinion that Bealy Smith, when he made these demands for money, was the mouthpiece of all the Conservative lawyers in Bridgwater?—No, certainly not, because he was no mouthpiece at all with regard to these sums.

38,982. As far as your firm in particular is concerned, is it true or is it false?—He certainly was no mouthpiece of mine with regard to any money transactions whatever.

38,983. (Mr. Price.) It is a marvellous thing where this money has gone to. If the whole sum is added up that has been spent in Bridgwater within the last four years, from 1865 down to 1869, on both sides, it will come to over 20,000*l.*; I have no doubt considerably over 20,000*l.*?—I can only repeat what I have said before; that I think Bealy Smith when he went away from Bridgwater would be a poor man.

38,984. Perhaps that is to be accounted for on the old proverb, "that ill-gotten gains do not prosper," and that he got the money for his own purposes?—I do not think that was applicable to him, because I do not think he put the money in his pocket.

38,985. Where could it have gone?—I cannot tell you where it could have gone.

38,986. It is a strange thing?—That is my own belief; that he did not put it into his own pocket.

38,987. Is that all you have to tell us with regard to 1859?—Yes.

38,988. Now, 1857; did you have anything to do with that?—1857; I had nothing to do with that election at all. I was returning officer.

38,989. (Mr. Coleridge.) 1852; Lord Henley's election?—Oh, yes, I was interested in that, certainly.

38,990. (Mr. Price.) As an agent?—Yes.

38,991. For Mr. Follett, I believe?—For Mr. Follett; Follett and Mansell.

38,992. Do you know anything about the expenditure of money then on the part of Follett and Mansell?—No.

38,993. Was there any money spent?—I do not believe there was on the part of Follett and Mansell.

38,994. Richard Smith still had the management then?—Yes, certainly of the pecuniary part; undoubtedly.

38,995. Before that; the 1847 election?—Well, I cannot carry my mind back as to who would be candidates.

(Mr. Coleridge.) 1847; Broadwood, Tynte, and Gaselee.

38,996. (Mr. Price.) Serjeant Gaselee was brought down at the last moment?—Yes, I believe he was. I cannot tell you anything about that.

38,997. He polled 196 votes?

38,998. (Mr. Coleridge.) I do not suppose Broadwood ever contested an election without spending money?—I cannot tell at all. He was said to have spent money. It certainly was understood that he spent money.

38,999. When Leader was here he spent money. We know he spent an immense sum?—Leader did. That is the first time he came down. There is no doubt money was spent then. He came down with Captain Markham.

39,000. (Mr. Price.) Is there any information you can give us about that?—I can give you no more than you already have.

39,001. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you one of those who kept watch and ward over Mr. Bowen's house after the riot of 1832?—I was, one night.

39,002. Was that after the riot?—That was after the riot.

39,003. The same night?—No, it was not the same night, because Mr. Bowen, as I have learned, was called away from a meeting which he was attending. I was at that meeting, and I went straight home, and I heard nothing at all of the riot until the following morning; I knew nothing at all about it. Whether it was the next night or the night afterwards I cannot tell, but I was one of those who stayed up at Mr. Bowen's house, as you say, to "keep watch and ward."

39,004. I ask you in order to put this question to you. Did you at the time consider it so serious an affair as to make it necessary for the protection of Mr. Bowen's person and property that some ward should be kept?—It was looked at in that light.

39,005. And not as a farce or practical joke, as Mr. Wood Sully described it?—Oh no. I should not have had my night's rest broken by a practical joke, certainly, or anything of that kind.

William King sworn.

W. King.

39,006. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. King?—A house painter.

39,007. Whom do you work for?—I am working with Mr. Boulting at present.

39,008. Are you a voter?—Yes.

39,009. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

39,010. How did you vote?—I voted for Westropp and Gray.

39,011. Did you get anything for it?—No.

39,012. Any promise?—No, not the slightest.

39,013. Any employment in any way?—No.

39,014. Did you vote at the election of 1866, when Vanderbyl was elected?—I only voted at the last election. That was the first time I had a vote.

39,015. Were you offered anything by the other side?—No, not at all.

39,016. Were you summoned here?—Yes, I was.

39,017. Do you know whether your name has been returned on any list as having been bribed?—Not that I know of.

39,018. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your name?—William King.

39,019. (Mr. Price.) Have you taken any part in any of the elections besides voting at the last?—Not the slightest. I do not know what I am subpœnaed here for.

(Mr. Price.) Well, I do not know either. I am sorry you have had the trouble to come.

(Witness.) It has put me to a great deal of inconvenience. I have had the subpœna ever since Saturday, and I have had to keep in readiness ever since.

39,020. Has your name been put on the list?—Every day since. Saturday my name has been put on the list.

39,021. Have you been obliged to attend here from time to time?—Well, I could not go out of the town if I wanted to; certainly not.

39,022. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there another William King besides you in Bridgwater?—Yes, there is William King, a smith.

39,023. Well, that is probably the person meant. Is there another William King?—Yes, William King, a shoemaker, who lives in Fryern Street.

(Richard Hodges.) I think this is the man Mr. Joseph Richard Smith spoke of as being at the meeting at the "Lamb."

(Witness.) I was at the meeting at the "Lamb."

39,024. (Mr. Price.) You were at the meeting at the "Lamb"?—I was.

39,025. Did you hear Mr. Joseph Richard Smith make a speech?—I did.

39,026. Now, tell us what he said, as far as you can recollect, about money?—Do you mean about the "M. D."?

39,027. Yes.—Well, I will tell you as far as my recollection will allow me. He said, "There's a great many young voters here that never voted before." He said, "No doubt some of you may be tampered with by the other party. If you are, don't take promises." He said, "There is an old adage that the Americans "use when they transact this sort of business; two "letters, 'M. D.' Perhaps you do not know what "'M. D.' means?" Then there was a bit of a laugh through the meeting. "I will tell you," said he, "'M. D.' means 'money down.' Now, if any of you "should be tampered with by the other party, mind "the old American adage, 'M. D.'"

39,028. You are quite sure he said "If you are tampered with on the other side?"—Yes, as far as my recollection goes I am certain.

38,029. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he say anything about sugaring their plums?—Not that I know of. I never heard him mention that at all. I have only heard that come from one party, that is Beal in West Street. That is the only man I ever heard mention that thing.

(Mr. Price.) Very well, Mr. King. It was important you should tell us that.

Short adjournment.

William Rees sworn.

39,030. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Why, sir, I am a shipowner.

39,031. Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

39,032. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

39,033. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

39,034. Did you get anything for it?—I did not.

39,035. Did you get any promise, or anything of the kind?—No.

39,036. Or any employment?—Nothing.

39,037. Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl stood against Mr. Patton?—I did.

39,038. How did you vote then?—For Mr. Vanderbyl.

39,039. Vanderbyl?—Vanderbyl.

39,040. In 1866 there were two elections; one when Mr. Vanderbyl stood against Mr. Patton. You remember that?—Yes.

39,041. Vanderbyl was returned; how did you vote then?—For Vanderbyl.

39,042. What did you get for it?—15*l.*

39,043. Who from?—Bulpin.

39,044. Did you get anything from Jarman that time?—Yes, I had. The first time I voted was for Westropp, and then I had 10*l.*

39,045. In 1866 there were two elections; you remember that?—Yes.

39,046. Both times Mr. Patton stood?—Yes, I voted for him once.

39,047. Is that the first time he stood?—The first time.

39,048. The second time he stood you voted for Vanderbyl?—Vanderbyl.

39,049. And got 15*l.*?—I got 15*l.*

39,050. Did you get anything from the other side as well?—No, I did not.

39,051. Who did you get that 15*l.* from?—From Bulpin.

39,052. When Mr. Patton stood the first time in 1866, who did you vote for then?—Mr. Patton.

39,053. Mr. Patton stood against Mr. Bagehot?—I was not home at the time—oh yes, of course, to be sure I was. That was the time I voted for Mr. Westropp—no, Mr. Patton, to be sure it was.

39,054. Did you get any money then?—I got money from Mr. Patton.

39,055. How much—not from Mr. Patton, but who?—Well, at his election.

39,056. Who from?—I will tell you. I had first of all 10*l.* for Westropp's election.

39,057. Who from?—Heal. That was the first.

39,058. In 1866 you say you voted for Mr. Vanderbyl?—I voted for Westropp before that.

39,059. Will you stick to one thing at a time?—Yes.

39,060. Did you vote for Vanderbyl?—I did.

39,061. And got 15*l.* from Bulpin?—From Bulpin.

39,062. Did you vote at the election when Patton and Bagehot were the two candidates?—Yes, that is the time.

39,063. Who did you vote for then?—Patton.

39,064. What did you get then?—10*l.* I think it was.

39,065. Who did you get that from?—From Jarman.

39,066. Did you get anything for expenses besides?—No, I did not. I got 10*l.*, that is all.

39,067. Are you sure you did not get another 10*l.* from Jarman that year?—No, I did not.

39,068. In 1865 did you vote when Mr. Westropp stood?—Yes, when he got returned and unseated. That is the time; it was from Mr. Heal.

39,069. How much did you get then?—I had 10*l.* from him.

39,070. William Heal?—Yes.

39,071. Are you quite sure you never got 5*l.* for expenses from Jarman?—No, no money for expenses.

39,072. Did you get 5*l.* from Heal for expenses?—No. I got 5*l.* when I came home from Milford to vote for Westropp.

39,073. What year was that in?—That is when Westropp got in, and was unseated again.

39,074. Then you got 10*l.* and 5*l.*?—Yes, all the expenses I had.

39,075. 15*l.* you got?—15*l.*

39,076. And 15*l.* from Bulpin?—And 15*l.* from Bulpin.

39,077. That is 30*l.*?—30*l.*

39,078. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much besides?—Then I had 10*l.* from Jarman, you know.

39,079. (Mr. Price.) When did you get the 10*l.* from Jarman?—When I voted for Patton.

39,080. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were paid on both sides?—No, I was not paid on both sides. I had 10*l.* for voting for Patton. That was not both sides, was it?

39,081. (Mr. Price.) You voted for Patton one time, and the next time against him?—I did.

39,082. And you got 10*l.* for voting for him, and 15*l.* for voting against?—No, I had not 15*l.* for voting against him. You do not understand me.

39,083. (Mr. Coleridge.) I do not think anybody can?—You bother me so.

39,084. Tell your own story, then?—I came from Milford, and left the vessel at Milford.

39,085. When?—When Westropp came here. I cannot date the year back as you can. I left the vessel to come home, and I voted for Westropp, and he stood by himself and got in, and got unseated.

39,086. That was 1865?—Very well; then I had 15*l.*

39,087. Who from?—10*l.* from Heal, and 5*l.* from Mr. Trevor's office.

39,088. Mr. Trevor's office?—Yes.

39,089. Who gave it to you?—One of his clerks.

39,090. (Mr. Anstey.) What is his name?—Walford.

39,091. (Mr. Price.) Did you get paid at Mr. Trevor's office?—I got the 5*l.* at Mr. Trevor's office.

39,092. What was that for?—Because I left the vessel at Milford; expenses here and back. That was 15*l.* at that election.

39,093. Then came the next?—Yes, Mr. Patton came.

39,094. Patton and Bagehot?—I do not mind Bagehot, but my own man I voted for; that was Patton.

39,095. What did you get then?—10*l.*

39,096. No expenses?—Nothing.

39,097. Nothing afterwards?—Nothing but the 10*l.*

39,098. Then the next time?—Vanderbyl's; I got 15*l.*

39,099. How came you to desert your old love to go on with the new?—I will tell you how that was; there was a party working my vessel, and to please those two gents I voted that way.

39,100. (Mr. Price.) Who are those two gentlemen?—His worship the mayor, and Mr. George Wilton.

39,101. To please the mayor and Mr. Wilton you turned round?—Yes; but mind they did not ask me to do it, but I thought it would make the water a little smoother, you see, sir, because they were working the ship, and I went that side.

39,102. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it the 15*l.*, or the mayor, that induced you to do it?—I did not know there would have been any money.

39,103. You could have got money on the other side, I suppose?—I know.

39,104. You preferred going to your employer's side to the other?—No.

39,105. Was it to make the water run smooth, then?—Well, at this election I had no money—Westropp and Gray's. I would not go with Mr. Vanderbyl's side again.

39,106. You would not?—No.

39,107. Were you in the employment of those gentlemen?—No, I was not; the ship was my own.

39,108. (Mr. Price.) They were the freighters of the ship?—Yes.

39,109. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you vote the last time?—For Westropp and Gray.

39,110. That was your own way of thinking?—

Well, I thought they did not act right towards me, and I would not vote that side again.

39,111. How did they act not act rightly towards you?—I do not know.

39,112. But you must tell us?—You know all about them elections; that is Westropp and Patton's.

39,113. We want to know why Mr. Sully and Mr. Wilton did not behave well to you?—It was after Mr. George Wilton intimidated me at Mr. Westropp's election.

39,114. This is very important. You must be careful what you say.—He said it was no use coming to his office any more to see for a cargo, I would not have one.

39,115. Did he tell you why?—He did not tell me why, but he saw me going to the poll.

39,116. How soon after did he tell you?—There. I was going to give my vote.

39,117. Do you mean the very time?—Yes; just then.

39,118. (Mr. Price.) At Westropp and Gray's election?—No; that was Westropp's election he intimidated me.

39,119. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you voted for Vanderbyl?—At Westropp's election Mr. George Wilton intimidated me.

39,120. Do you mean the last election?—No, not the last election; it was the time when Mr. Westropp got unseated.

39,121. In 1865?—Yes; Mr. George Wilton intimidated me.

39,122. Mr. George Wilton is a Liberal?—Yes.

39,123. In 1866 when you voted Conservative, were you intimidated again?—No.

39,124. Your own story now is, because Mr. Wilton intimidated you in 1865 you would not vote for the Liberals again?—Then you do not understand me.

39,125. I do not, but I mean to before you leave that box?—Stay a bit; when I came first to vote for Mr. Westropp——

39,126. That was 1865?—Then I had to come from Milford.

39,127. You got 10*l.* then and voted for the Conservatives?—No, no such thing; it was the second time that Mr. Westropp came here, when he got in and was unseated again. That is the time, and then Mr. George Wilton intimidated me.

39,128. What did he do?—He told me if I came to his office again I should not have a cargo. I went to Milford, and brought my vessel home, and said to my wife, "I will sell this vessel now." I was the sole owner of that property, but the two elections were over then.

39,129. Westropp and Patton's?—No, stay a minute; I will tell you all about it, I will go as straight as a line. If you will listen to me I will tell you all about it. So he intimidated me, and I brought the vessel home. I was going to sell this vessel. I said, "I will sell this vessel, if I cannot get a cargo for her she is no use to me." Then it was on the eve of being sold, and Mr. Lilly was going to sell her for me.

39,130. What year was that in, was it 1865?—I suppose it was; it was four years ago.

39,131. Was it, or not, when Mr. Westropp was elected and subsequently unseated?—That is what I tell you; to be sure it was.

39,132. How long after the election were you going to sell the vessel?—I had only to go to Milford to fetch her back home.

39,133. That would take you a few days?—Two or three days, not long.

39,134. He had told you before that you never need come for a freight to him, so you thought you would sell the vessel?—Yes, that is it. Now you have my words right, have not you?

39,135. Now tell us about the sale of this vessel?—I sold this vessel; Mr. Lilly was going to sell her for me, he was my auctioneer to sell that vessel, and no man owned a rope in her but myself, and I worked hard to get her. So the eve came on to sell her, and who should pass by but Mr. Wilton, and he said to me, "Halloa, William, are you going to sell your vessel?" "Yes, sir"; says I. Mr. Wilton says, "What do you want to sell her for?" I says, "If I cannot get a cargo she is no good to me." "Pack of stuff about selling your vessel, why not come to me?" I said, "Sir, I do not want to come to anybody." "Pack of stuff," says he, "do you owe much money, William"? "No," I says, "not very much." He says, "How much do you think"? "Well," I said, "about 60*l.* or 70*l.*, perhaps." And if I had sold my vessel I could have paid all that. She was worth 250*l.* That was the reserved sum between me and Mr. Lilly. I listened to him; we went into the "Fountain," and he had a glass of whiskey and water, and I had a pint of half-and-half, and lots of people were there to buy the vessel. I said to stop the sale, "I shall not sell the vessel;" and the sale was over. Then he said, "You come to the Cornhill." The next morning I went down to see Mr. Wilton, and he said, "You shall have an agreement, you know." "Very well, sir," I said.

39,136. What was the agreement?—To work this vessel for him two years; so I went down the next day, and he says, "There must be some agreement, I suppose." I said, "Yes, sir." Mr. Sully got the agreement drawn up, and after he had it drawn up at his office, I was called in, and Mr. Sully read it to me.

39,137. Have you a copy?—I can get one.

39,138. We would rather have the agreement?—I can soon get it, and my statement is as near. I am telling you word for word. You can see the statement. I put this all in the attorney's hands, but they all served me out pretty well. I went to Mr. Sully's office a few days after; he read it over to me, and I took it.

39,139. What was the agreement?—To work her for two years; they were to work her if they were minded to.

39,140. What did they pay you?—14*s.* a week out of her earnings. I was to receive that.

39,141. Were you to be captain of her still?—No; but a young man was to go in the vessel. They said, "We shall be happy for you to be it." But I said, "I do not know, I do not care if I do not go to sea "any more. I have had a pretty good turn at it." He said, "How many years"? I said, "Forty-six out of "this port, and I cannot face the storm as I used to "when a young man. Well, the agreement was read "over. It is all right enough," I said, "I should like my "wife, who is outside, to come in and hear this agree-"ment read." She was called in, and when she came in Mr. Sully was not there, and one of his clerks read it over to me and my wife, the same thing. I said to my wife, "What do you say to that?" and she said, "I do not see anything against that, because in two "years, if we do not like their proceedings with the "vessel, we can have the vessel back again." I had to sign this agreement, and what do you think it was when I signed it? Why, a blank mortgage. I had no money from Mr. Sully or Mr. Wilton, and in less than ten minutes I was 70*l.* in their debt. What do you think of that?

39,142. Do you really mean that?—I do mean it.

39,143. Do you mean between the time the first agreement was read over to you?—In two minutes after my wife was in, not the first agreement.

39,144. Can you read yourself?—Yes.

39,145. Can your wife read?—Yes.

39,146. Do you mean between the time of your going out to fetch your wife and coming back they changed one agreement for the other?—No; it was read over to my wife the same as to me.

39,147. Do you mean they read what did not appear on the face of it?—They read one thing, and gave me another to sign; and I never knew it was a blank mortgage, or else do you think I would sign it? To be sure not.

39,148. When did you find out it was a blank mortgage?—Not till after they sold the vessel.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

W. Rees.

8 Oct. 1869.

39,149. When was that?—They sold it in about 10 months.

39,150. What did they return to you?—Nothing at all, not a farthing. I never saw anything of my vessel; she went out of my hand like a bird.

39,151. This is a serious matter; do you mean to say Mr. Sully and Mr. Wilton swindled you out of this vessel?—They did. Mr. Bealy Smith was my attorney, and he said it was a deliberate swindle.

39,152. Did you have an action at law about it?—I went to Mr. Bealy Smith, and went up day after day and said, "Well, sir, how do you get on?" He said, "They are doing it all on their own responsibility." He said to me like that. I went away again. The next day I went up again, and says, "Well, sir, how are you going on to-day?" He says, "Oh, they are doing it all on their own responsibility."

39,153. Whose responsibility?—Mr. Wilton and Mr. Sully were acting on their own responsibility, and they sold the vessel, and they showed no accounts; and when Mr. Bealy Smith sent down, they refused to show them, because they said, "We pay the accounts off, and have the vessel."

39,154. Did you have an action?—No, because I had not the tools, as they said to me, "We cannot go to work without tools," and I hold a bill of sale to this day. Who made out a bill of sale for her I cannot think, because I hold she was never transferred from me to that man who bought her.

39,155. They sold her as mortgagees in possession, I suppose?—That is it, and I never have had any money.

39,156. Do you mean they never paid anything for you?—No.

39,157. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you owe them anything?—No; there was an account between Mr. Sully and me, he was my shipbroker whilst I was here.

39,158. Has Mr. Sully anything to do with Mr. Wilton's firm?—I cannot say.

39,159. To Mr. Wilton's firm you owe no money?—Not a farthing.

39,160. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you owe Mr. Sully anything?—He was my shipbroker, and there was something behind as far as commission on freights.

39,161. How much?—I do not know.

39,162. As much as 70*l.*?—I should think 3*l.* or 4*l.*

39,163. 3*l.* or 4*l.* only?—Yes.

39,164. (Mr. Price.) When this transaction took place you had voted for Westropp and Patton, and this is what took place between you and them, and then you voted for Vanderbyl?—Yes, because they were working my vessel then.

39,165. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1866 you voted for Mr. Patton because they were employing your vessel. After voting for Mr. Patton they sold your vessel off, and between the two times, the second election in 1866, you voted for Vanderbyl?—When Vanderbyl came I thought to myself, if I vote against them it will not be so smooth as if I voted with them.

39,166. But they had sold your ship then?—No, they had not.

39,167. (Mr. Price.) When did they sell it?—I cannot say.

39,168. (Mr. Coleridge.) Because after this transaction, getting hold of you with this agreement, you voted for Mr. Patton in 1866?—Yes.

31,169. That was voting against them?—Yes.

39,170. Some time in 1866 they sold your vessel off, and you voted for Vanderbyl?—I voted for Vanderbyl.

39,171. Was that before or after they sold your vessel off?—I think it must have been before they sold the vessel.

39,172. Up to that time, had they been paying you your 14*s.* a week?—No, not since they sold her.

39,173. But up to the time they sold the vessel, from the time of your signing that agreement?—Yes.

39,174. Then you voted for Vanderbyl to keep the water smooth; and then at the next election, the ship being sold off and the 14*s.* a week stopped, you came back and voted for your old love?—Yes, I did, without any money and without any price.

39,175. Because there was no money going?—I do not know.

39,176. When was the first time you voted at all in your life?—Going on for 30 years ago, I should think.

39,177. Who for?—Broadwood and Forman.

39,178. What did you get then?—10*l.*

39,179. Who from?—James Gover, a sail maker.

39,180. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote anywhere between 1841 and 1865?—No, from the time I voted for Broadwood I did not give my vote here until Mr. Westropp came.

39,181. Why was that?—I was not at home.

39,182. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you vote for Mr. Westropp in 1859, when Mr. Padwick came down?—No, I was not at home. The first time was for Mr. Westropp.

39,183. What year do you say you received the 5*l.* from Mr. Trevor?—That was for Mr. Westropp's election; 10*l.* from Heal.

39,184. (Mr. Price.) And 5*l.* from Mr. Trevor's clerk, for expenses?—Yes.

39,185. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then, so far as your statement goes, which probably we shall have a deal to hear about, your ship was got away from you without your having a farthing in return?—Not a farthing; and they brought me in 4*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.* debt, and that stands to my account in their office now.

39,186. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you consult any lawyer?—I did, Mr. Bealy Smith.

39,187. (Mr. Coleridge.) And he told you that you had no tools, and he could not go to work for you?—It was not him—one of his clerks. If I had had plenty of money, I should have gone to war with Mr. Sully and Mr. Wilton.

39,188. What is the name of the clerk?—Chapman; and my receipt is in that office. I never had any bill shown me of what the vessel went for. They took the vessel away and sold her for what they liked, because I had no tools.

39,189. (Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure, now be careful about what you are saying, that you did not owe Mr. Wilton or Mr. Sully any money?—There was something to Mr. Sully, the shipbroker.

39,190. 3*l.* or 4*l.*?—Harbour dues, and commission on freight.

39,191. He is a shipbroker; that would be brokerage?—Yes, the broker; not one farthing to Mr. Wilton.

39,192. (Mr. Anstey.) Nor Mr. Brown?—No, nor Mr. Brown.

39,193. (Mr. Price.) And you mean now deliberately to say before us that you were swindled out of your ship?—A deliberate swindle. Mr. Bealy Smith said it. I said, "Cannot you do anything?" He said, "We cannot go to work," Mr. Chapman says, without the tools."

39,194. What did you understand by "tools"—money?—He meant money, to be sure; he saw I had not much money.

39,195. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you sure he did not msan facts by "tools"?—Hammer and chisel?

39,196. No, facts; when he said "no tools," did not he mean to say you had no facts to depend on?

39,197. (Mr. Price.) No case?—No, he told me it was a deliberate swindle. What could it be else? a blank mortgage put before me, which I never knew, but I signed what he read to me. I never knew it was a mortgage on the vessel.

39,198. Is your wife alive?—Yes.

39,199. We should like to have her here, because this is a black transaction charged against these people.

CHARLES SENDELL sworn. C. Sendell.

39,200. (Mr. Price.) You are called Charles Sendell the younger ?—Yes.

39,201. What are you ?—A plumber, painter, and glazier.

39,202. Where do you work ?—For myself.

39,203. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

39,204. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.

39,205. For whom ?—Westropp and Gray.

39,206. Did you get anything at all for voting ?—I got nothing for it.

39,207. Did you vote at the next election of 1866, when Vanderbyl was returned ?—Yes.

39,208. How did you vote ?—For Patton.

39,209. Did you get anything ?—Nothing at all.

39,210. Did you get any promise ?—No promise whatever.

39,211. Did you vote at the other election of 1866, when Patton was returned ?—I did.

39,212. Whom did you vote for ?—Patton.

39,213. Did you get anything then ?—Nothing at all.

39,214. Any promise of any kind ?—No promise whatever.

39,215. Were you never paid anything after the election ?—I was paid by Jarman to pay some money to my father after the election.

39,216. Then you received money for your father ?—I received 10*l.* from Frederick Jarman for my father.

39,217. When ?—At Patton's first election.

39,218. You paid your father that 10*l.* ?—I did.

39,219. And he voted for Mr. Patton ?—He did.

39,220. Did you vote at any other election besides ?—Yes, in 1865.

39,221. How did you vote then ?—For Westropp.

39,222. Did you get anything then ?—Nothing at all.

39,223. Did your father receive any money ?—I do not know. I had nothing to do with my father then. In fact, I never interfered with him.

39,224. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get anything after the election ?—No.

39,225. No promise ?—No promise whatever.

39,226. (Mr. Price.) The only money you have had in respect of any election is that which you handed over to your father ?—That which I handed over to my father.

39,227. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote in 1859 ?—I did.

39,228. Did you get any money then ?—No.

39,229. Or any promises ?—No.

39,230. Did you vote in 1852 ?—I was not in Bridgwater then.

39,231. (Mr. Price.) Have you ever been paid anything ?—No.

39,232. Or had any promise ?—No promise.

39,233. You have always voted one way ?—Always one way.

39,234. And never received any promise of employment ?—No, no appointment whatever.

39,235. But you have been the means of conveying this money to your father ?—I did, after the election. Jarman handed me 10*l.* at Patton's first election.

JAMES LONG sworn. J. Long.

39,236. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A bricklayer.

39,237. How do you work ?—I work on my own account.

39,238. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

39,239. Did you vote at the last election ?—The first time I ever took a bribe was in 1852.

39,240. We will go backwards ?—Well, I voted in 1868.

39,241. Who for ?—Westropp and Gray.

39,242. Did you get anything ?—No.

39,243. Any promise ?—No, not the slightest.

39,244. In 1866, when Vanderbyl was returned, did you get anything then ?—Yes.

39,245. Whom did you vote for ?—Patton.

39,246. What did you get ?—I voted for Patton twice ; it was the second time I voted, at least the first time I voted I did not get anything ; the second time I voted I had 10*l.*

39,247. From whom ?—Frederick Temblett.

39,248. Then you got 10*l.* for your two votes for Patton ?—Yes.

39,249. Did you get anything from the other side ?—No.

39,250. Or any promise of anything ?—No.

39,251. In 1865 did you vote ?—I did.

39,252. For whom ?—For Westropp.

39,253. What did you get then ?—Ten pounds.

39,254. Who from ?—Thomas Boys.

39,255. Is that all then ?—That is all I got then.

39,256. In 1859 did you vote, when Westropp and Padwick were here ?—Yes.

39,257. Whom did you vote for ?—Padwick and Westropp.

39,258. What did you get then ?—Ten pounds.

39,259. Who from ?—John Murlis.

39,260. In 1857 did you vote ?—No, I voted in 1852.

39,261. In 1857 you did not vote ?—I did not.

39,262. For whom in 1852 ?—I voted for the candidate who was up.

39,263. Follett and Mansell ?—I forget. I voted at every election the last 20 years.

39,264. You got nothing in 1857 ?—No.

39,265. Are you sure of that ?—I am sure.

39,266. No promise ?—No promise.

39,267. How is it you did not get anything then ?—Because they thought I was independent, that I would not receive any money.

39,268. In 1852 did you vote ?—Yes.

39,269. Who for ?—Tynte.

39,270. What did you get then ?—Ten pounds.

39,271. From whom ?—Haslam, who is dead now.

39,272. Was that the first election you voted ?—That was the first election I was bribed, not the first I voted. I voted several times at the elections, but I never received a bribe before 1852.

39,273. What was the first election you voted at ?—Well, I think that is almost the first election.

39,274. They gave you nothing ?—No.

39,275 In 1859 they found you were not so independent, and they have paid you since ?—A gentleman came up to me, and brought 10*l.*, and I thought I should have turned him out of the house. He asked me to receive 10*l.*, and I said he should not do it again.

39,276. For nothing ?—For nothing.

39,277. Have you ever got anything from the other side as well ?—No, that was the other side that first time, and the only time.

JOHN POLE sworn. J. Pole.

39,278. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A carpenter and wheelwright.

39,279. Where do you work ?—For myself.

39,280. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

39,281. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

39,282. How did you vote ?—Westropp and Gray.

39,283. Did you get anything ?—No.

39,284. Did you get any promise ?—No.

39,285. Did you go up and vote on any expectation of getting anything ?—I did not think of getting anything at all. I did not go to look for it.

39,286. Did you vote at the election of 1866 before that, when Vanderbyl was down ?—I voted at two elections for Patton.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

J. Pole.

8 Oct. 1869.

39,287. What did you get?—The last of Patton's elections I voted and had 10*l.* from Frederick Jarman.

39,288. But nothing at the first election of Patton?—I will tell you directly. Then Jarman gave me 10*l.* to carry down to Mr. William Hinam, a neighbour of mine; I said, "Here is something Jarman has sent you "down," and he took the money, opened the drawer of the sideboard, and put it in there, and closed the drawer again, and I went into the house, and before I had finished breakfast he came to the house and wanted me to go to poll, and we went out and came home together, and he was in our house nearly the whole of the day after that. Two or three days after that he came again, and said, "John, our people have found out "the money, and I cannot keep it, and I bring it back "to you." I refused to take the money. I said, "What "am I to do with it? I cannot keep it." "I will give "it to you freely. It is a thing I shall never ask you "for, and never say anything about it," and I took the money and gave it to my daughter directly. I thought it was a free gift until now, because the man took the money and kept it in his possession. I went to the poll, and it was two or three days after—whether on the Friday or the Saturday I do not know.

39,289. Then you got 20*l.* by the transaction altogether?—That was 20*l.* Then he gave it to me. Certainly, if he had not told me I should not have had the money; I should have taken it back directly. Then at the next election I voted for Padwick, and did not get anything. Then about a week or a fortnight after, I was sent for by a master of mine, Mr. Robert Wood, timber merchant, and he said a gentleman had left something for me, and he took me two parcels. I never opened it until I came home and found there was 10*l.*

39,290. That was 30*l.*

39,291. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he tell you who the gentleman was?—He did not. I asked him who the gentleman was, and he said a gentleman came in and left it for me, and I gave it him.

39,292. The next before that?—1865?

39,293. Yes?—I voted for Shelley and Kinglake. That is the first election I voted.

39,294. What did you get then?—Nothing.

39,295. No promise?—No promise.

39,296. What made you turn round?—When they came canvassing I gave my word, and after I give my word I turned from no one, not the best man that is, for nothing.

39,297. Why did you give your word?—I gave my word, and after that I found I was wrong in voting on that side.

39,298. (Mr. Anstey.) You voted for Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes, and I said I would never give a vote after.

39,299. You were a Conservative?—I was a Conservative, and I gave my word accidentally to them, and I would not run from my word.

39,300. Who canvassed you? Who got your word?—Well, Sir John Shelley was there, and I do not know which attorney with them—whether it was Mr. Reed or who it was—one of them, and some more gentlemen with them.

39,301. They did not tell you that Shelley and Kinglake were Conservatives, did they?—No, they did not.

39,302. How came you to think they were Conservatives?—No, they were Liberals, but I voted on the other side. I was always a Conservative, and when I gave them the word I was a stranger in the town.

39,303. You said just now that you voted with them because you gave your word?—Yes.

32,304. And because you thought they were Conservatives?—No, I did not. I was always Conservative. I did not think they were; I knew they were Liberal.

39,305. (Mr. Price.) Why did you give them your promise?—I was never promised anything, and never received it.

39,306. But why did you promise to vote for two Liberal candidates if you were Conservative?—Why, because the gentlemen came and asked me for my vote, and I gave it to them accidentally.

39,307. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it because you expected they would do something for you?—No, I did not expect that; I did not look for anything.

39,308. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had received plenty of money before, so you knew all about it?—I will tell you——

39,309. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you ever voted before?—No, it was the first time.

39,310. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean you promised because they happened to be the first that asked you?—They did; that is how it was.

J. Webber.

JOHN WEBBER sworn.

39,311. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A gardener.

39,312. (Mr. Anstey.) On your own account?—Partly on my own account. I garden for a great many gentlemen.

39,313. Are you a jobbing gardener?—I am.

39,314. What was the first election you voted at?—When Westropp and Shelley came here.

39,315. That was in 1865. How did you vote then?—For Westropp.

39,316. What did you get?—10*l.*

39,317. From whom?—I got it at Temblett's, at the "Bull and Butcher."

39,318. In 1866, when Patton came the first time, how did you vote?—I voted for Patton.

39,319. What did you get then?—I got 5*l.* then at the time out through a door, and some time after that Temblett brought round the other 5*l.*; I suppose a fortnight or three weeks after that.

39,320. (Mr. Coleridge.) He had bargained with you for your vote then. Who told you you should get 10*l.*?—I heard that money was being given away at Temblett's, and I went there.

39,321. You knew that 10*l.* was the price?—Yes.

39,322. How came you only to get 5*l.*?—I only got 5*l.* then; I think only fives were going then. I had 5*l.* afterwards.

39,323. Who promised the 5*l.*?—Temblett himself.

39,324. (Mr. Price.) At the second election, 1866, did you vote for Patton again?—I did not.

39,325. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote for Vanderbyl?—I did.

39,326. How much did you get?—30*l.*

39,327. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Gold, my landlord,

39,328. (Mr. Price.) In 1866, when Vanderbyl stood, did not you get 10*l.* from Patton?—I got 10*l.* at the "Bull and Butcher," and carried it back again.

39,329. And 30*l.* you got in gold for voting for Vanderbyl?—I did.

39,330. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the last election, in 1868?—Yes.

39,331. How did you vote?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

39,332. Did you get anything?—Yes.

39,333. How much?—10*l.* at the "New Inn;" Allan gave it to me. There is one thing I wish to mention, that is, my name was brought up here yesterday by Temblett to say when John Webber brought back the 10*l.*, I told him I was forced to vote for Vanderbyl, for Mr. Thompson threatened to turn me out of the ground; I did not say such a thing.

39,334. Had he ever in his life threatened you?—Never in his life; he is the wrong gentleman to do so.

39,335. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then what made you turn round?—After I received the 10*l.* I went home to breakfast, and while at breakfast Gold, who is next door to mine, said to me, "You, being my tenant, may as well vote for Vanderbyl; here is 30*l.* for you."

39,336. It was the 30*l.* made you do it?—It was.

39,337. (Mr. Price.) What I have to say to you, as I have said to other men, is that their word is not to be considered very much unless it is corroborated?—I took the 10*l.* back, and said to Temblett, "Here is the 10*l.*, for I do not intend to vote for you;" and I carried this money back about an hour or three parts of an hour afterwards. It was said yesterday it was the afternoon, but it was in the morning, and I said to Temblett, "I am renting under the Liberal party, therefore I must vote for them." I never mentioned Mr. Thompson's name.

(Temblett, junior.) He mentioned Thompson's name to me two or three days after. I saw him in Ham ward, and he told me the same tale as my father.

Mr. George Bryant Sully recalled.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

39,338. (Mr. Price.) A statement has been made here by a man of the name of William Rees. He gives an account, among other things, of his voting; that he voted, he says, once. You are not, perhaps, concerned in that, but it is better to tell you his whole story. No doubt he had voted once for the Conservatives, and then had been told by Mr. Wilton he need never look for a freight again; and he was the owner of a ship of his own, of course getting it freighted by persons who wanted a ship; and that he voted Conservative and for Mr. Patton; and then in the meantime he attempted to sell off his ship, in consequence of a threat of Mr. Wilton's, and you also, I believe, were concerned in the threat. However, he determined to sell off his ship, and he advertised it, and Mr. Lilly was the auctioneer employed to sell it; and then he had an interview with Mr. Wilton, who asked him what he was going to do, and he said he was going to sell his ship, and Mr. Wilton asked him if he owed any money, and he said 70*l.*, and he easily expected to get that, because the reserve bid for the vessel was 250*l.*, but he might at that time possibly owe for brokerage, he does not think, more than 3*l.* or 4*l.*; that he was then dissuaded by Mr. Wilton from going on with the sale of the ship; that he had had a kind of agreement that the ship was to be taken out of his hands, and worked by Mr. Wilton and yourself, and that a certain young man was to be captain, and that he (Rees) was to receive 14*s.* a week out of the earnings, and that he agreed to that for two years, becouse he and his wife thought at the end of the two years the ship would revert to him, and he would have his property back; that the agreement was then brought to him by Mr. Wilton, read over to him, and that that was what he understood it to be, but afterwards he found he had been induced to sign a document, which as he called it, was a blank mortgage, an out and out mortgage of the vessel; that he had for a certain time the 14*s.*, but in the end, he deliberately says, he lost his ship, and was completely swindled out of it, that is the expression he uses, by Mr. Wilton and yourself; that the ship passed away from him altogether, and that he owed you nothing except the 4*l.* for brokerage, and owed Mr. Wilton nothing in the world; and that is the history of his proceedings with regard to this vessel. That is a summary of it, and that he consulted Mr. Bealy Smith about bringing an action; that Mr. Chapman, Mr. Bealy Smith's clerk, said, "You have not got tools, and we cannot work;" by which he understands there was no money to be found, and of course no attorney will work without some prospect of being paid, and therefore he has never been able to bring the thing in proper form before a court of law?—I know the person well.

39,339. We sent for you because these things are grave, and if delayed for an hour we forget them or the witnesses are kept waiting in attendance from day to day?—I feel exceedingly obliged to you for sending while I suppose Rees is in court. I think if I followed your statement rightly it is of this kind, that he voted Conservative 1865, he voted Conservative at the first election of Patton, and then between the first election of Patton and the second election, we had done something, Mr. Wilton and myself, by which he was induced to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Exactly so.

(Mr. Price.) Hardly so much as that.

(Mr. Anstey.) No, he voted for Mr. Vanderbyl, and in consequence of doing something he went back to his former faith and voted Conservative.

39,340. (Mr. Price.) To keep the water smooth he voted for Mr. Vanderbyl, he said?—Precisely, but in Mr. Patton's election he voted Conservative.

39,341. The first time?—The first time, because I remember distinctly that the arrangement with Mr. Rees for the working of his vessel commenced some time in the month of October 1865, which would be seven or eight months before Mr. Patton came down the first time.

39,342. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now let me call attention to this: I examined him, and he told me the 14*s.* was being paid then?—It commenced in October 1865.

39,343. When he voted Conservative for Mr. Patton the 14*s.* was going on, therefore he had no terror.

(Mr. Rees.) It was going on then.

39,344. But before the time he voted for Mr. Vanderbyl something was said about the ship, and he voted for you to keep the water smooth.

39,345. (Mr. Anstey.) I think the better way for you will be to tell the story without reference to his story?—Yes.

39,346. (Mr. Price.) Only I give you that to give you a sort of notion of his accusation against you. Now let us have your story?—I will tell you as well as I can. Some time in the year 1865, I suppose somewhere about October, because the payments to him began then, Mr. Wilton came to me, and made a communication something to this effect: "Here is "Mr. Rees about to sell his vessel, he is a very poor "man, so cannot we do anything by managing the "vessel for him which will give him bread and "cheese?" I said "I do not know, Mr. Wilton. "I have heard that the vessel is much run out, and "in debt, but I have known him for many years as a "master mariner of this port, and anything I can "do I shall be glad to do." We had a conversation on the matter, and I believe it was in consequence of that conversation I either saw Mr. Rees alone or with Mr. Wilton. We went into the financial state of the vessel, and found, as I expected, that she was very considerably in debt, and had run herself very bad as regards stores and materials, that it was quite impossible in her condition to earn money, and that he was then not only very old, but somewhat infirm. We pointed out to him the position of matters; we knew the vessel was advertised for sale because it was a matter of public notoriety. I am not sure whether she went to auction, or was bought in or not, but I believe immediately after the auction this conversation took place, or whether it was before the vessel was advertised I am not clear, but I am clear that as the result of the negotiations Mr. Wilton advanced a sum of 10*l.* and I advanced the sum of 15*l.* to pay off the pressing claims then made on the vessel, and we did that, as we pointed out to Mr. Rees and his wife at the time, because we would not make out the arrangement until he had gone home and seen his wife. First of all we were to have the entire management, and secondly a mortgage, and we explained to him the purport and effect of a mortgage; we said the vessel was to work, we giving him 14*s.* a week, which he has given in evidence here; the summary is very correct. We went on paying that money week by week to him until we found that the vessel was in a worse condition than we expected it, and would take more money to put her right than we were disposed to advance. Instead of putting her to earn money and putting her under a young man we found that we were getting to leeward, as they say, and we brought it to Mr. Rees, and told him the condition of things, presented him the accounts, told him that we could not go on any longer, asked him if he had any friends to step in and raise the money so that he could gain the control of the vessel, as we wanted to give it up, and as a last resource the vessel was sold. He has now an account of all the voyages made during the time the vessel was managed in my office. He has also a statement of account showing every shilling advanced, how the account stood, and what has become of the money.

39,347. (Mr. Price.) Then when the vessel was sold, you had no lien upon her, but only this agreement?—I believe she was mortgaged, but I am not sure without referring.

39,348. Of course if there was a mortgage you would have a bill of sale?—Yes, certainly, the public records would show.

39,349. And of course accounts rendered when the sale took place?—Certainly.

39,350. If she was already under debt what became of those claims for the other debts on the vessel; had they bills of sale?—No, the other creditors had not a mortgage of the vessel, but they were paid out of the proceeds of the vessel.

39,351. You said the vessel was in debt?—Yes, but I think I observed that Mr. Wilton advanced 10*l.* and myself 15*l.* to pay off pressing claims.

39,352. When the ship was eventually sold was there any balance after paying you yourselves the advances you had made?—I cannot speak from memory, but the books will show.

39,353. Who has the books?—Rees has the account book.

(Rees.) No, I have no account.

(The witness.) Well, my books will show, my ledger. I know there is an account book, and I am speaking under correction. I believe a voyage book, that has the account of each separate voyage, and a particular account of the vessel was in Mr. Rees' possession, or the people he has given it to.

39,354. (Mr. Anstey.) At the time he mentioned, namely, the election of Vanderbyl, or about that time, was he asked by any one belonging to you for his vote?—Certainly not, so far as I am aware; I have never spoken to him on his vote; I believe he will say so.

39,355. Did anybody you are aware of?—Not that I have heard of. I have not heard it till now, and I do not think Rees will say I ever influenced his vote.

(Rees.) No.

39,356. (Mr Price.) The only person ho has mentioned as having influenced his vote at all is the man who made the original threat, Mr. Wilton?—So far as my knowledge goes, the original agreement was made entirely in Rees' interest, and I am only sorry that it did not turn out as satisfactory as Mr. Wilton and myself wished.

(Rees.) The vessel grossed in that time 360*l.*; what need had she to run into debt, and what has become of that money?

(The witness.) Perhaps the Commissioners will ask you whether she was in debt.

39,357. (Mr. Price.) I think if you can bring your books, and show all the transactions with regard to this vessel, it will be satisfactory. It is not merely with regard to our views; we do not wish to rake up every private quarrel between one individual and another in Bridgwater, of course; still when there is a matter of this kind charged against a man in your position, it is as well that you should clear it up by your books?—I am exceedingly obliged to you, and will cause my clerk to make a transcript of the ledger account.

39,358. If you could show us the proceeds of the sale, how they were applied, and how absorbed, that would be it?—I shall be able to trace the whole transaction, I am sure.

Mr. S. Chapman.

Mr. Samuel Chapman recalled.

39,359. (Mr. Price.) Tell us, if you please, what your knowledge of this transaction is?—I remember Mr. Rees consulting Mr. Bealy Smith when I was present, and he made a similar statement that you made to Mr. Sully as to the way Mr. Sully had acted with the vessel. He went to Mr. Sully, and he asked for an account on behalf of Mr. Rees, and that was supplied him, and he supplied us with copies of the whole documents, and we, after Mr. Sully's statement (he made a similar statement to that which he has made to you to-day), we considered the best thing to do was to allow the thing to go on. I believe the balance was paid, which we paid the creditors, some 5*s.* in the pound.

39,360. Rees' creditors?—Yes, I have the account here.

39,361. (Mr. Anstey.) Are the whole of Rees' accounts here?—Yes, there is a list of the creditors.

39,362. (Mr. Price.) Give us a summary of the creditors; you need not go through the items?—It is about 70*l.* altogether.

39,363. He said it is about 70*l.* Now, the vessel was sold for how much?

39,364. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say the thing went on; to what extent? Was a writ issued?—It was advertised for sale before we were consulted.

39,365. Was a writ issued against Mr. Sully?—No.

39,366. Or Mr. Wilton?—No. Perhaps this is the best thing to begin with: here is a copy of a memorandum of agreement entered into between Mr. Rees and the mayor as to the ship "Galleon."

39,367. Is that a mortgage?—No, only for the management of the ship by Mr. Sully as ship's husband. That is the 6th of October 1865, as the mayor said.

39,368. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there a mortgage or bond there?—There was on the vessel with full powers of sale, for I went to the Customs myself, and saw it registered.

39,369. When was it given; about the same time, in October?—About the same time, I believe. Rees made a written statement which he handed to Mr. Smith there, his own statement in his own handwriting.

39,370. (Mr Price.) Is that very much what he has told us?—Yes.

39,371. Did you investigate the thing?—Yes.

39,372. Very thoroughly?—Thoroughly.

39,373. Is it true that you said to him you would not go on unless he had tools?—No, I think it is very probable he told one tale, and they another, and on investigation I told him it was no good to attempt to frighten the mayor.

39,374. Did you investigate the matter with regard to the truth of his story?—No, we did the best we could for him, and took the balance

39,375. Having investigated the thing on his behalf by examination of the books which the mayor furnished and the accounts, did you satisfy yourself that he had really no bonâ fide claim?—We did.

39,376. And you think so now?—I think so now.

39,377. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it true that you said to him it is a swindling transaction?—I do not remember any such words, and I do not believe I used such words.

39,378. (Mr. Price.) You have all the documents there?—I have all the documents here. Here is a bill of sale, and I think I have a list, and I believe the accounts supplied by the mayor afterwards.

39,379. We have not yet got what the ship was sold for. There was the 70*l.*, and the advances made by Mr. Sully and Mr. Wilton. We want what the ship was sold for, because he seems to be under the impression that there was more?

39,380. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were Reed and Cook solicitors for the mortgagor?—Yes, for Mr. Wilton.

39,381. (Mr. Price.) What did it sell for?—That I cannot say without going through Reed and Cook's letters.

39,382. (Mr. Anstey.) When did the sale take place?—In September 1866.

39,383. Were Messrs. Reed and Cook acting for Mr. Wilton and Mr. Sully?—Yes.

39,384. Then Reed and Cook will be able to tell us what it sold for?

(H. C. Bussell.) 100*l.* I believe. It was sold at our house.

39,385. (Mr. Price.) Then it was sold for 100*l.* Take it that 70*l.* was owing before the ship was mortgaged, and the 10*l.* and 15*l.* which they advanced, to pay off pressing claims?—The 70*l.* was after all this, that was the amount of the debts we compromised after the vessel was sold. We paid 5*s.* in the pound with the balance produced by the sale of the vessel.

39,386. (Mr. Coleridge.) In addition to the 25*l.*?—Yes, that we knew nothing about, it was paid away under the directions of Mr. Wilton and Mr. Sully. Here is a bill of costs.

39,387. (Mr. Price.) In point of fact, there was no money to come to Mr. Rees at all?—No, there was a sum which he knew of, and which we paid to his creditors under his directions.

39,388. There was nothing more to come?—Certainly nothing more.

39,389. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you leave the box, I want to ask you about these briefs in the election trial of 1866. Did you examine those briefs or read them while they were in preparation, or after they were prepared at your office?—I do not believe the briefs were prepared in the office, we got up the proofs.

39,390. But not the briefs?—I think the briefs were got up in town.

39,391. At whose office?—The agent acting in the petition. I do not know.

39,392. Do you mean the solicitor's office, the town agents', or parliamentary?—The parliamentary agents, that is where I should conceive they were got up, we obtained the proofs here.

39,393. That would be Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton?—Yes, they were the agents.

39,394. Do you recollect what clerk of theirs was employed in the matter?—No, because it all happened in town. There is one thing I should like to mention: the learned Commissioners asked several times about an account of Mr. Bealy Smith's, as to some money outstanding; I can, I think, show by the books the whole expenditure of the 7,000*l.* which was received and entered to Mr. Patton.

39,395. (Mr. Price.) It is very important that you should?—I can do so in 10 minutes.

39,396. You have not it here?—The office is exactly opposite the road.

39,397. If you will do that we shall be glad, because it is an important matter, enormous sums of money are quite unaccounted for?—I can account for every penny of it.

39,398. (Mr. Anstey.) Had Mr. Henry Smith anything to do with that matter?—I do not know the name.

39,399. Was not there a brother of Richard Smith called Henry Smith?—I never saw him. I was in the office the whole time of the election of 1865, and he could not have had anything to do with it, or I should have seen him; I do not know such a man.

39,400. A man connected with the Welsh post office affair?—No; I think there is a Dr. Henry Smith who has been in America many years, before I came into the town.

Mr. George Wilton recalled.

Mr. G. Wilton.

39,401. (Mr. Price.) The only thing I intend to ask you about, because as to the ship matter it seems to me so far it is cleared up, is about this threat you held up that he should not have any more freights?—Well, I think I explained that to you on my examination.

39,402. Is this the man of whom you spoke?—This is the man.

39,403. You acknowledged that?—I did.

39,404. This is the man?—Yes; I am not quite sure it was in a precise form of words, but I admit having said in haste and anger foolishly what I said.

39,405. "When you want a freight you will find you cannot get one"?—I think I said, "He will want a freight another day."

39,406. (Mr. Anstey.) Then the other thing, about voting for Mr. Vanderbyl in order to keep the water smooth?—Well, I did not, until I saw the printed evidence, know that Rees had voted for Mr. Vanderbyl at that election; but this much it is right for me to say, that previous either to that election or Patton's, I do not know which, but I was standing one day in Salmon Lane with Thomas Duddridge and Phillip Headford, our two foremen, arranging some work with them, and Rees came from his garden to me and asked me if I should wish him to vote my way. My reply to Captain Rees instanter was this, "Captain Rees, do as "you like, but have the goodness not to mention "anything about voting to me." I turned straight from Rees to the men Duddridge and Headford, and told them the circumstances which transpired there and then, and that is the only time I spoke to Rees about voting one way or the other.

39,407. He got 15*l.* it is quite clear at that time, at least so he says, and I presume he did?—Yes.

39,408. Did you know anything at all of that?—Not the slightest, until I saw it in evidence here.

39,409. You do not connect that in any way with the threat held out?—No, most certainly not; I was sorry five minutes after for what I had said to Rees, and I have been ever since.

39,410. There is nothing you wish to add about this transaction of the ship?—There is nothing more I can explain than what his worship has told you.

William Rees recalled.

W. Rees.

39,411. (Mr. Price.) You have heard this statement, what do you say?—I never knew they ever advanced money on my vessel, neither did I ever ask them.

39,412. Do you intend to deny that when the ship was sold she was not sold for more money than would pay off the debts on the ship, and to say there was any balance due to you?—What has become of the money she grossed in that nine or ten months?

39,413. Because according to your own account they were to make what profit they liked for the ship, paying you 14*s.* a week. They were entitled to the whole profits of the ship.

(Mr. Wilton.) Allow me to say that Rees deposited the mortgage, and at the time of the arrangement the mayor produced it, and asked if it was his handwriting, and he admitted it.

(The witness.) I do not know of any mortgage on it. How could they when I had no money. If they advanced money on the vessel they received it again from the freights, 360*l.*, or something thereabouts, in less than 10 months. Where is that money? 70*l.* in debt and sold it for 100*l.*

39,414. (Mr. Price.) There were pressing debts?—Little trifling debts, they have never pressed on me, and nobody asked me for a shilling.

39,415. I do not understand why you did not sell the vessel out and out?—Could not I have gone in and sold that vessel? Could not I have mortgaged her and done what I liked?

39,416. Why did not you do it then?—Because Mr. Wilton came to me and said just as I told you just now, "Are you going to sell your vessel, William?" "Yes," I says. "What for?"

(Mr. Wilton.) And his reply to that question was this "I am pressed for the debts I owe."

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

W. Rees.

8 Oct. 1869.

(Mrs. Rees.) No.

(The witness.) It is wrong. You never paid that to us from that hour to this, the 30*l.* that was left.

(Mr. Price.) We have gone far enough into this matter, because we are not sitting here to investigate the quarrels between individuals, and have only done so now so far because of your mixing up with this quarrel the question of intimidation and influencing your vote. We cannot go further. The documents are here. We are not to pass judgment on the thing; if we are satisfied with it we say so. We have heard your story and the story on the other side. The story on the other side is to be corroborated by documents produced before us, and we have heard the evidence given by Mr. Wilton, who acknowledges the threat or intimidation he used, and that is all we have to do. We can hear no more about it.

Mr. S. Chapman.

Mr. Samuel Chapman recalled.

(The witness.) The first account in this book is in the name of M. Spofforth, Esq. It is for Mr. Patton's portion of the petition, in fact the whole of the costs of the petition against Mr. Kinglake in 1866. April, to cash on account of petition against Mr. Kinglake, 200*l.*, ditto, 100*l.*, ditto, 150*l.*; June 30th, cheque 365*l.*, making a total of 815*l.* Now April, by paid witnesses, 317*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*; paid witnesses for maintenance, 57*l.*; Mr. Ruddock's expenses, 10*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*; Mr. Boys' expenses, 8*l.*; our own expenses out of pocket, 37*l.* 16*s.*; paid Mr. Neale's expenses, 5*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*; Mr. Harden's expenses, 10*l.*; paid Newton a bill, 2*l.* 5*s.*; our fee 200 guineas; Mr. Ruddock's fee, 100 guineas.

39,417. What was Mr. Ruddock's fee? — Mr. Ruddock was in both petitions with Mr. Bealy Smith. July 17th, Hayward, 25*l.*; July 27th, R. Bussell, loan cancelled, 10 guineas.

39,418. What does that mean? — That Bussell required a loan before he went to London after he had given his proof. I should take it he asked for a loan, and when this account was settled he had a certain amount to take for costs, and Mr. Smith deducted his loan and carried into his ledger as cancelled.

39,419. (Mr. Anstey.) In other words paid out of Patton's money?—No, due to Bussell, who was a witness, as you will remember.

39,420. It says, "loan cancelled"?—Yes.

39,421. It was cancelled, no doubt, as soon as Mr. Bealy Smith, who made the loan, had got payment of the 10 guineas out of Mr. Patton's money?—No; it appears the money was received before then.

39,422. I understood you were going through the accounts to show how Mr. Patton's money was applied?—Yes, that is so.

39,423. And amongst others it was applied in respect of a cancelled loan to Robert Bussell, 10 guineas?—Yes.

39,424. Then that means of course, Bussell having got the loan long before Mr. Patton appeared on the stage, then this claim against him was cancelled or replaced on Mr. Patton's money being applied in liquidation of it?—Yes, it was paid on Smith and Son's account.

39,425. (Mr. Coleridge.) As I understand it was deducted from the costs Bussell ought to have received?—Yes. Then September 19th, James Harwood for witnesses, 8*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* 1867, April 4th, balance 7*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; that is the balance in hand. After that I paid an entry not posted up. 1868, January 22nd, paid Harden for services rendered during the petition, he was in London, 20*l.* So that on that account Mr. Bealy Smith has overpaid 12*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

39,426. But he received 4,000*l.*?—I will show you that. There is 827*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* of it. That Mr. Spofforth has given in evidence was paid out of Mr. Patton's money. Then on account of the election in 1866, May 7th, there was a cheque on account of the election expenses paid into the bank to the credit of R. B. Smith and Malcom, 501*l.* May 12th, a 10*l.* cheque in payment of a loan made the same day. I suppose the money was lent and repaid the same day by cheque; July 6th, cash, 135*l.*; July 17th, cash, 105*l.*; November 20th, balance in hand from June election, 41*l.* 13*s.* 0*d.*; balance in hand from July election, 195*l.* 1867, February 20th, Trevor balance, 24*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*; July 22nd, Pitman account, 509*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* Besides that we find in the banking account Malcom paid a cheque to our credit of 100*l.*, making a total with an overpaid balance of 28*l.* 6*s.* 0*d.* of 1,649*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.* Then 501*l.* was paid into Stuckey's to the credit of R. B. Smith and Malcom; on May 7th, to meet the regular expenses of the election Mr. Trevor drew on that account. Loan 10*l.* on the 12th. June 7th, fee for the election, 100 guineas; expenses during the election, 30*l.* July 17th, fee for the election, 100 guineas. Expenses of journeys to town during the election, 50*l.*; paid Gillow for pictures, 12*s.* 6*d.* I suppose they were portraits of Mr. Patton. Foresters' fête, 10*s.*; Mr. Brannan to disburse, 10 guineas. He is an auctioneer at Taunton, who brought some men here to watch the other side—strangers. Coles to disburse, 1*l.* 6*s.* 0*d.* 1867, July 5th, Joseph Rd. Smith to disburse, 158*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*; 23rd, Joseph Rich. Smith to disburse, 25*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.*; February 25th, Samuel Chapman to disburse, 62*l.*

39,427. (Mr. Anstey.) What in?—I paid a lot of bills. There were two or three cheques debited to me, and I paid a lot of bills Mr. Bealy Smith gave me a list of. I have not been able to find any account but one I found among my own private papers showing how I disbursed one of these cheques.

39,428. Without the others that would be of very little use?—It will only show how the amount given me was spent.

39,429. What was the large sum of 158*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* given to Joseph Richard Smith for?—I took him a cheque with a bundle of bills, pinned on to the corner of them for the amount, they were bills for bannermen, bandsmen, and such things as that which he paid.

39,430. Worthless expenses of that kind?—No doubt.

39,431. Bribery in another form?—Yes. Then February 26th, Veysey, solicitor, a fee; Samuel Chapman to disburse, 49*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* That is the account you have in hand; exactly the amount. November 5th, Brice, a solicitor, a fee, 45*l.*; 8th, Messrs. Trevor, solicitors, a fee, 50*l.*; Samuel Chapman to disburse, 17*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*; Coles for service, three guineas; March 9th, Pain, solicitor, a fee, 20*l.*

39,432. Is that the man who was examined here?—Yes. Lilly, auctioneer, &c., fee 60*l.*

39,433. What could he get a fee for?—For services, I suppose, he considered he was entitled to it, or Mr. Smith.

39,434. What services was it for?—Assisting at the election. He considered himself a lawyer.

39,435. In fact, again it was bribery in another form?—Yes. Then 20th March, Plowman for election lists, 1*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*; 25th, Galop for service, 5*l.*; 28th, treating bill at "Bull and Butcher," 40*l.* That I paid myself in cash.

39,436. How many days' treating?—I do not know; it was both elections those bills are for. It amounted to more than that, but as Mr. Smith explained he made a demand on Mr. Pitman to cover the whole amount, but as Mr. Pitman did not send sufficient he should have to take a portion from everyone's bill, and taking credit for 10*l.* from a man named Webber, that is 50*l.* besides what I knocked off. Then June 18th, Mr. Brannan to disburse at the second election, 17*l.*, that was for those men he brought from Taunton. Then, after Mr. Smith's illness he told me I was to pay Temblett, Harden, and Jarman 20*l.* each; he was taken ill before the whole was paid, and I told Mrs. Smith of what he had informed me, and she drew a cheque and I paid to Frederick Temblett 20*l.*; to Frederick Harden 20*l.*, and Jarman 20*l.* for services.

39,437. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Joseph Richard Smith also get a fee in 1866?—No; it was the amount of a bundle of bills.

39,438. Did he get a fee for himself?—I do not think he had a farthing. In February 1868, before Mr. Bealy Smith left the country, he found he was too ill to complete this matter, and he wished to be clear before all the world, and in fact to answer any inquiries that might arise; therefore he sent for Mr. Lilley and went into this account with him, told him there were bills outstanding and there was a balance still in his hands. He handed those bills to Mr. Lilley with a cheque for 206*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, the balance he considered remaining in his hands and asked Mr. Lilley to pay the bills as far as it would go. I was present at the meeting, and Mr. Smith asked me to assist Mr. Lilley in the payment if necessary. The whole of that makes the 1,649*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.*, and there was paid over and above what was received 28*l.* 6*s.* 0*d.* So you see Mr. Smith deducted from his own account as well as others.

39,439. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where is the other 5,000*l.*?—Mr. Tromp has accounted for the bribery money.

39,440. No, only between 3,000*l.* and 4,000*l.*?—If you look at his evidence I think you will find more. Mr. Tromp in his evidence said that the two elections cost Mr. Patton about 4,500*l.*, and if you add those together, as I have, assuming 4,500*l.* to have been spent by Mr. Tromp you will find that it amounts to 7,000*l.* all but about 20*l.*

39,441. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is a curious absence here, and I am sure neither of them would work without being paid; there is nothing for Mr. Spofforth himself, and nothing for counsel. Who paid Mr. Spofforth's bill and counsel's fees?—I think that is very likely to be in Mr. Westropp's account. You see we have another account of Mr. Westropp's for the defence of his seat.

39,442. You put the expenses of Mr. Westropp's defence petition into the 7,000*l.* Mr. Patton spent?—No, that is Mr. Kinglake's, not Mr. Westropp's at all, and Mr. Spofforth has given you evidence that Mr. Patton really did pay, although entered in Mr. Spofforth's name in our books, those expenses.

39,443. Although he had nothing to do with the election?—Although he had nothing to do with the election. That is an arrangement of course I know nothing about. I find here, Mr. Westropp's petition, cash 100*l.*, again 50*l.*, on account of payments 20*l.*, a cheque 240*l.* I have no doubt it was paid out of that.

39,444. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Joseph Richard Smith ever send in a detailed account of the application of that 158*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*?—He sent in a bundle of bills amounting to that sum, the total, because I carried in those bills with the cheque pinned to the corner.

39,445. Did anybody audit those bills?—I do not know. I suppose he did himself.

39,446. Did you or Bealy Smith?—I should think not.

39,447. It was all one family?—But I know they were at variance at the time.

39,448. No, Mr. Joseph Richard Smith has told us that the only one he was not at variance with was Mr. Bealy Smith?—Well, they used to keep up the public appearance, but Mr. Smith will not say he ever visited at his house, although uncle and nephew they were not sufficiently friendly.

39,449. Mr. Bealy Smith thought it not safe according to his father's opinion to come to his house; he attended there by deputy, namely by you, that you appeared in his stead, or Neale?—I have taken many messages, always formal matters. I have never done anything friendly there.

39,450. (Mr. Price.) Have you any reason to suppose those are not bonâ fide bills?—No, I believe they were.

39,451. Mr. Smith may have got the commission. I do not know how he managed that; but as far as you know they were bonâ fide?—They were, I believe.

39,452. (Mr. Anstey.) It is a very large sum surely to pay in one class of bills?—As you have seen from experience here, there is a great deal of that going on at elections.

39,453. Exactly. With reference to your saying you had no reason to believe that they were not bonâ fide?—No, you see I paid a great many of the same class myself.

39,454. And that makes it still more probable that they were mala fide?—I cannot form any opinion more than I tell you.

39,455. (Mr. Price.) When I say bonâ fide I do not say there were not actual bills got, but were they all bills made out by tradesmen?—They were bills that came in from different tradesmen.

39,456. Whether jobs or not you do not know?—I do not know.

39,457. At all events they were bills which they returned, and as far as you know were paid by Mr. Joseph Richard Smith?—Yes.

39,458. Not made out in collusion with him or by forgery, which would suppose collusion?—No, I should say not. Of course he has accounted for the sums he received, and except those I paid myself in cash all were paid by cheque.

39,459. The bills Mr. Smith paid were very much of the same kind as those paid by you?—What I have paid I should take it those having a more strictly legal appearance than those Mr. Smith paid. Mr. Bealy Smith would not send me to pay any but what appeared in the public accounts.

39,460. Then they were those accounts for banners, and that was a very large sum?—Yes.

39,461. In fact you do not mean to say they were paid more or less in making out their bills on your side than they were on the other side?—No, I have no doubt they charged election charges.

39,462. Then certainly I shall not draw any distinction of it myself.

39,463. (Mr. Price.) No, they take advantage of an election to make their money?—It is naturally supposed so.

39,464. There is no supposition that Mr. Joseph Richard Smith got anything out of those bills, and put it in his own pocket?—No, Mr. Bealy Smith sent in for him to disburse every penny, and having all the bills correct.

39,465. He did not stand in with the tradesmen?—I do not believe he did.

39,466. So as to put money in his own pocket?—I do not believe he did.

39,467. (Mr. Anstey.) As a matter of fact nobody audited these accounts except Mr. Joseph Richard Smith?—No one else.

39,468. (Mr. Price.) There is not much auditing in such accounts as these?—Well, you cannot very well audit at election times. There is one other remark, and that is the making of justices. I remember hearing of the meeting; and there is one fact which came under my own knowledge, that a list of gentlemen was prepared, recommending them to the Lord Chancellor, or whoever had the making of the justices, and was taken round. Those gentlemen's names were the heads of the party whom Mr. Bealy Smith referred to in his letter, and it was taken round to the most respectable inhabitants to be signed, saying a few words recommending them to the Lord Chancellor as fit and proper persons to be made justices, and I know this list was carried round to all or nearly all the respectable people in the party to sign, although they repudiate all knowledge of the thing now; and I believe Mr. Lilley obtained most of the signatures, as far as my mind carries me back. That is the fact.

39,469. (Mr. Anstey.) That is not the suggestion,

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. S. Chapman.

8 Oct. 1869.

the suggestion contained in the letter which seems to have taken all by surprise; it certainly surprised me that the heads of the party had authorized Mr. Bealy Smith to write that letter to extort a very large sum of money, some thousands of pounds, from Mr. Patton, and one after another as far as we have gone yet, every person who is considered or considers himself a leader of the party, declares it is a dangerous falsehood, he never heard of such a thing before, never authorized such a letter to be written, never heard the letter had been written, until it was produced in court by Mr. Westropp; that is the suggestion?—Yes. Then I say I heard the report at the time, I have no doubt many others in the town heard of this meeting, that those suggestions were to be made.

39,470. (Mr. Price.) Which meeting are you speaking of?—There had been a meeting of the heads of the party at which there was a condition that so many justices should be made, and I made out a list of the justices myself then on the bench.

(Mr. Anstey.) That has nothing to do with it; the question is, whether the heads of the party authorized him to address his demand for pecuniary indemnity to an untold amount, which certainly implied thousands of pounds, as the only condition on which he was likely to be permitted to retain his seat.

39,471. (Mr. Price.) Liberal settlement is the word used?—Yes, that is the claim, 500*l.* on Mr. Pitman.

39,472. (Mr. Anstey.) They all deny it?—So they deny the existence of corrupt practices and their participation in them, although they accept their fee for assisting themselves, and attempting to extort money by what amounts to a compromise, and the rest. I told you just now that a demand was made on Mr. Pitman to pay the bills in full, but as he only paid 500*l.* we had to deduct so much off each bill in paying it. Of course Mr. Bealy Smith is not here. I cannot explain it further than that.

39,473. (Mr. Price.) You have given us valuable information, because you have cleared up this question about the expenditure of the money; it appears all spent then as far as you can make out?—Yes, Mr. Salmon, his banker, can produce the cheques for the payments.

39,474. They can all be fetched?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) Showing the money spent, subject to very great reservation, which I make in my own mind.

T. Martin.

THOMAS MARTIN sworn.

39,475. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Martin?—A labourer.

39,476. Where do you work?—Browne & Co.

39,477. Are you a voter?—Yes.

39,478. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

39,479. Who for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

39,480. Did you get anything for it?—Nothing at all.

39,481. No promise?—Nothing at all.

39,482. Had you ever voted before?—No.

38,483. Never?—Never.

39,484. Is your name Thomas Martin?—Yes.

39,485. (Mr. Anstey.) You are one of the new voters?—Yes.

39,486. What did you vote in respect of? What qualification have you?—My masters were that side, and I thought it was my place to vote as my masters were.

39,487. (Mr. Price.) No, no; but were you a lodger, or what?—No, I rented a house.

39,488. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote as a householder who has paid his rates?—Yes.

39,489. (Mr. Price.) You say you voted as your master voted?—Well, I voted that side.

39,490. You thought it right—you thought it the best thing to do?—Well, my mind led me that way.

39,491. Your mind and your pocket?—No, not my pocket. I had only what I worked for.

39,492. (Mr. Anstey.) Who do you say your master is?—Browne & Co.

(Mr. Price.) There is another Thomas Martin, who seems to have been bribed. There is a mistake about your name.

T. Vearncombe.

THOMAS VEARNCOMBE sworn.

39,493. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am living upon my means, sir.

39,494. Are you a voter?—Oh yes, I am.

39,495. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

39,496. Who for?—Westropp and Gray.

39,497. Did you get anything for it?—Nothing at all.

39,498. Any promise?—No promise at all.

39,499. Did you vote at the election before that?—Mr. Patton's, I voted twice.

39,500. Did you get anything?—10*l.* from Mr. Harden.

39,501. Each time?—No.

39,502. Only once?—Only once.

39,503. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything the other time?—The first time I voted independent; the last time I had 10*l.*

39,504. Did you vote for Patton both times?—I I voted for Patton both times.

39,505. Did you get anything after having voted?—The last time I had 10*l.*

39,506. No, no; but the first time you voted for Patton, did you get money afterwards for having voted?—Not at all. But the last time I had 10*l.*

39,507. Two tens?—No, only one ten.

39,508. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Westropp in 1865?—I did.

39,509. Did you get 10*l.* then?—I had 10*l.* from Mr. Temblett then.

39,510. Did you vote in 1859?—I did so.

39,511. Who for?—For Padwick and Westropp.

39,512. Did you get anything then?—10*l.* from Mr. Murlis, John Murlis.

39,513. Did you vote in 1857?—I cannot tell. If you tell me whose election it was I will tell you who I voted for.

39,514. Follett and Mansell?—No sir, I never did.

39,515. Did you vote in 1852 for Shelley or Lord Henley?—I voted for Lord Henley and Tynte.

39,516. Then you were Liberal in those days?—Oh, I was, till I found out——

39,517. What did you get then?—I had nothing at all.

39,518. How was it you changed afterwards and went round?—Well, when I see persons in dirty actions it is time for me to get rid of them altogether.

39,519. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were the dirty actions that shocked you?—Well, I was town scavenger for five and thirty years.

39,520. Town scavenger?—I was.

39,521. (Mr. Price.) You know, there is a deal of dirt in this place?—And at last, in 1839, I voted for Padwick.

39,522. 1859 you mean?—Padwick and Tynte. And then owing to my voting for Padwick they cashiered me out of my work for three years.

39,523. What made you vote for Padwick; a 10*l.* note?—No.

39,524. What made you? You had voted Liberal before?—I will tell you exactly how it was. You know I always voted for Mr. Tynte and his father; well, when I see the dirty actions which they served me in turning me out of my work, I did not vote any more.

39,525. But they did not turn you out of work until after your voting for Mr. Padwick?—After I

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

T. Vearncombe.

8 Oct. 1869.

voted for Mr. Padwick, when the time expired, they turned me out of work.

39,526. I know. But why did you vote for Mr. Padwick?—Because I would not vote for Mr. Kinglake.

39,527. Why not?—Because I would not. I was always a Tynte man.

39,528. But Tynte and Kinglake were running in the same interest?—Yes, but I pleased my own fancy.

39,529. You pleased your own fancy, and got 10*l.* too?—Oh no.

39,530. You did not care to vote for Kinglake?—No, I never voted for Kinglake.

39,531. Then you voted for Padwick and Westropp?—No, I voted for Padwick and Charles Tynte.

39,532. You voted for Padwick and Tynte?—Just so.

39,533. Then Tynte dropped out altogether?—Eh?

39,534. Then Tynte never stood again?—No, he never did afterwards.

39,535. Now tell us about your being turned out, of this dirty job of yours?—Well, after I had voted for Mr. Padwick—if I had voted, you know, for Mr. Kinglake, of course I should not have been overthrown.

39,536. You would have been scavenger still?—I should still have kept on my work as scavenger. Well, after my time expired, when the three years were up—— Not only that, they objected to my vote, and wanted to cut my vote——

39,537. Yes?—I then went on, and I was determined I would not have anything more to do with them.

39,538. How did they turn you out of the scavenging?—Of course they could do it. My time was up, and of course——

39,539. Who had the appointment of it?—The market house trustees.

39,540. Who are the market house trustees?—Oh, there's a different lot; they are chosen in every year. The majority was in favour of it.

39,541. (Mr. Anstey.) It is a contract?—Yes.

39,542. (Mr. Price.) The majority was in favour of Mr. Kinglake?—Oh yes, they are, and Vanderbyl as well. I find them a dirty lot, and I would never have anything more to do with them.

Mr. Joseph Richard Smith recalled.

Mr. J. R. Smith.

(Mr. Price.) We understand you had 158*l.* entrusted to you to disburse in the shape of bills.

(Mr. Anstey.) At Mr. Patton's last election.

39,543. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which you never told us about before?—Mr. Batten has shown you one large sum that was paid. I think myself that was 70*l.* and 25*l.*; 25*l.* would be the cost of the band. And then there was a large sum which was paid, which Mr. Batten says was for the show of hands. In addition to that there would be the banners. The men were paid 5*s.* a day for two days, which would be 10*s.*, and I think that that amounted to something like 35*l.* Then there would be small refreshments for the band and banner men during the two days, and I think there would be a special cheque given for 25*l.*

39,544. (Mr. Price.) What I am drawing your attention to is this: There were a number of bills amounting to 158*l.* which were brought to you by Mr. Chapman, with a cheque?—Yes, there were.

39,545. Were those bills which you had incurred on behalf of the candidates?—I had not incurred them.

39,546. Well, then, how was it that those bills were rendered to you?—My nephew was the assistant in my shop at the time. I never paid a bill in my life with the exception of that one of Batten's.

39,547. Had you the disbursing of this cheque; the payment of these bills by this cheque?—The young person in my shop.

39,548. (Mr. Anstey.) What is his name?—Her name is Edith Hartnell; it is a young lady.

39,549. (Mr. Price.) Is she still in your employment?—She is still in the town.

39,550. (Mr. Austey.) Why did not you tell us about that before?—I did, sir, on my first examination say that there were bills.

39,551. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes, but you told us nothing of this large sum of 158*l.* sent to you to disburse, for no earthly reason that I can see?—Mr. Batten himself has pointed out to you that he had 95*l.* or 90*l.* out of that money.

39,552. But the question is, why did not you tell us that 158*l.* of bills, with which you had nothing to do, were nevertheless disbursed by you?—I had no object. I told you that bills were paid after that election.

39,553. You said you had nothing further to state than what you had stated?—You will find in my evidence I stated that bills were paid by an assistant in my employ.

39,554. You said nothing about 158*l.*, nor about your having anything to do with the bills, nor about your employing the young lady to do what for a very good reason you did not do yourself?—I beg your pardon; I think you will find I did state that bills were paid after the election by an assistant in my shop.

39,555. Well, I retain my mistake. That is all?—In addition to that I say for myself I have never been paid a single farthing for my assistance in any shape or form. I say that on my oath. This money was paid out of my pocket in July and never returned to me till the following February, and it was returned to me (what I had paid out of my pocket) without one shilling additional for interest or for any other purpose. The bundle of bills were sent in from Mr. Smith's office, and they were paid by the young person and returned again, and Mr. Smith's clerk would inform you that the whole of the money was accounted for to them. There is one other thing, sir, which has been brought forward in reference to a tenant of mine of the name of Tilly. It was asserted in the early part of this inquiry that I coerced him not to vote, that I had prevented Mr. Tilly from voting. Now I say here that I have never spoken to Mr. Tilly about electioneering matters in my life, neither have I authorized anyone, direct or indirect, to use any influence on Mr. Tilly. I think it is right to myself to state that to you.

39,556. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not remember the name of Tilly. I remember the name of John Pitman?—Well, sir, in reference to Mr. Pitman; that has been spoken of, and I will explain it to you. Mr. Pitman is a tenant of mine, and some years since I gave him notice that he was to leave my premises or pay an additional rent, and in giving the notice I wrote him a letter to say that if he felt disposed to give me an increased rental, which I considered the property worth, he would still be able to continue, and should have a lease of the property; and I gave him a certain time, either a fortnight or a month, to consider of it; and during the time he wrote back to say that he was prepared to give an additional rent.

39,557. When was that?—I have his letter at home. It was in 1864—1865, I think.

39,558. Just so. Now was not this the state of the case? Did not you tell him before the election of 1865, or some election, that if he did not vote according to your wishes, that is, according to your party, he must give up the property?—Did I tell him so?

39,559. Yes?—Never.

39,560. He did vote, I believe, against your Conservative side?—He has always voted. He occupies the premises now.

39,561. After he had voted, did you inform him that you were not going to turn him out of the property (to turn him out of possession), but that he must now pay 7*l.* additional rent?—I did not inform him anything of the kind. I gave him notice on quarter day to give up the premises, and at the same time I wrote him a letter to say that I did not wish him to give up the premises at all, but that I considered the premises were worth 35*l.* a year, and if he felt disposed to retain those premises, he could do so, and have a lease.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. J. R. Smith.

8 Oct. 1869.

39,562. That was 7*l.* additional rent ?—7*l.* additional rent.

39,563. I ask you again, was not this just after the election ?—Yes.

39,564. The election of 1865 ?—The reason the notice——

39,565. Was it just after the election of 1865 ?—I think since then.

39,566. Since 1866 ?—It must have been in September.

39,567. Then it was after the second election of 1866 ?—It must have been. The notice I gave was on the 29th of September. The notice would expire at the expiration of this year.

39,568. That is, it would be the first quarter day after the second election of 1866 ?—It was the only time I could give him notice.

39,569. Will you give me a fair answer; was it the first quarter day after the second election of 1866. I only want to have the date ?—It must have been the 29th September 1866 or 1865. I have the letters at home, which I can show you; but I say this much, that Mr. Pitman has as cheap a house and a cheaper house than any in this street at this moment, and I have a tenant prepared to take the premises at an increased rental at this moment.

39,570. All that you deny is that you told him before the election that he must be prepared to give up the premises if he voted against you ?—I swear that I never spoke to Temblett or any other tenant about how he should vote in my life.

39,571. Or that you told Mr. Pitman before the election that you should expect him to vote for your party ?—I never told him anything of the sort. I never expected that he would.

39,572. That is all you deny. All the rest is true ?—It is perfectly true that I gave him notice to increase his rent. I apprehend I have a right, if my property is worth the money, to have the value, and I say this, that the house is the cheapest house in this street now; and I say in addition to that that I pay Mr. Pitman every year of my life double for meat that he pays me for rent.

39,573. (Mr. Coleridge.) That has nothing to do with it. You must have meat, and he must have a house.—It shows that he has his premises rightly. I wish you would put Pitman in this box.

39,574. (Mr. Anstey.) We must determine that, you know ?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) One of the evils of being mixed up in a borough like this, with party feeling exceedingly high, is that all persons attribute everything that is done, everything in the shape of transactions between landlord and tenant, and everything else, to political interest.

(The witness.) Everyone's actions are misconstrued.

(Mr. Price.) That is one of the evils of living in a place like Bridgwater.

(The witness.) Everyone's actions are misconstrued; and in reference to Mr. Tilly, sir, I would ask you, in justice to myself, to put Mr. Tilly into the box and ask him.

39,575. (Mr. Coleridge.) Of course the observation applies equally to both sides, Conservatives and Liberals ?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Every action that is done where party spirit runs so high in a town like this is misconstrued. As Mr. Rees has got up a grievance against Mr. Sully, so Mr. Pitman has got a grievance against you.

(Mr. Anstey.) But we have not got to the bottom of this yet. Mr. Pitman has not been examined. I must say that I reserve my opinion upon that, and I always make up my mind without reference at all to the question of who is telling the truth or who is not till I have heard both sides; and whether a man is Conservative or Liberal it matters not to me.

(The witness.) I would add in addition to that, that I have many tenants at will who are Liberals, quarterly tenants, and who have been under me for years; and I would ask you to ask them what I am as a landlord.

J. Bishop.

JAMES BISHOP sworn.

39,576. (Mr. Price.) I cannot find your name on the list. What are you, Mr. Bishop ?—A smith.

39,577. Whom do you work for ?—Messrs. Hennett and Spink.

39,578. How did you vote at the last election ?—Westropp and Gray.

39,579. Did you get anything for it ?—Nothing at all.

39,580. Any promise ?—Nothing at all.

39,581. Did your employers say anything to you about which way you were going to vote ?—Not at all. They never spoke to me on the case.

39,582. Did you vote at the election before that ?—No. In 1865 I voted.

39,583. How did you vote then ?—For Mr. Westropp.

39,584. Did you get anything then ?—10*l.*

39,585. Who from ?—Mr. Jarvis.

39,586. What did you get 10*l.* for ?—I do not know.

39,587. (Mr. Coleridge.) Bribery, of course ?—For my vote.

39,588. Bribery ?—Bribery.

39,589. (Mr. Price.) Is that the only election at which you voted before ?—Yes, that is the only time.

39,590. Why did not you vote in 1866 ?—Well, I left the town; that is the reason.

G. Attwell.

GEORGE ATTWELL sworn.

39,591. What are you ?—A coach painter.

39,592. Where do you work ?—Mr. Ritson's.

39,593. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

39,594. Who for ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

39,595. What did you get for it ?—Nothing.

39,596. Any promise ?—No.

39,597. Did you vote at the election before that ?—No, I never had a vote before. I think there is a mistake. I think I am subpœnaed wrong.

39,598. Is there any other George Attwell in the town ?—Yes, my uncle.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It always seems that when there is a wrong one to be got we get him.

(The witness.) I have been three or four days in attendance.

(Mr. Price.) Well, we cannot help that. It is through the incorrectness of people who give in the names. They won't tell us where the people live, or whether there are two of the name or not.

E. Hartnell.

EDITH HARTNELL sworn.

39,599. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Miss Hartnell ?—An assistant to Mr. Temblett.

39,600. Now, did you pay any bills in respect of the election of 1866 ?—I did, sir.

39,601. How much did you pay away ?—That I cannot say.

39,602. As much as 158*l.* ?—I did not count it, therefore I do not know.

39,603. Have you got any list of the bills?—I did not keep any list at all.

39,604. Who gave you the money?—It was sent from Mr. Smith's office.

39,605. Was it sent in money or in a cheque?—In money.

39,606. In gold or notes?—Gold.

39,607. Did you pay all away that you received?—I did.

39,608. (Mr. Anstey.) Were any of the sums in shillings and pennies, or was it all in gold?—Oh, it was gold and silver.

39,609. No pennies?—No.

39,610. All gold and silver?

39,611. (Mr. Price.) Had you bills to take with you to pay at each place?—Yes.

39,612. And you saw the bills receipted, and paid the money?—I did not pay anyone unless they gave me a receipt.

39,613. You did see them receipted, and then you paid the money?—I did.

39,614. Did you give the bills receipted back again to Mr. Smith?—Yes.

39,615. (Mr. Anstey.) Who did you get the bills from?—Mr. Smith.

39,616. (Mr. Price.) Did you give the bills back again to Mr. Smith?—He told me to take them to the office.

39,617. What office?—Mr. Smith's office.

39,618. That is to Mr. Bealy Smith's office?—Yes.

39,619. Did you take them there?—I did.

39,620. Were there any bills unpaid which you had received from Mr. Joseph Richard Smith?—I do not understand the question.

39,621. Were there any bills that you received that you did not pay?—No.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Had you money enough to pay all the bills?

39,622. (Mr. Price.) Did you put any of the money into your own pocket?—I did not put it into my pocket at all.

39,623. Did your master, Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, keep back any of the money, or did he hand it all over to you?—He gave it all to me.

39,624. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you to say that you got it; that it was sent to you?—I did not say anything of the kind.

39,625. Who gave you the money first of all?—Mr. Joseph Smith gave it to me.

39,626. What did you say about its being sent to you from the office?—I did not say anything of the kind.

39,627. You said, "Sent from the office." Then you cannot say how much money he gave you?—I had a bill for every one I paid.

39,628. Can you tell me how much money—how many hundred pounds, or whatever it was that you had got to pay?—I did not count it, and therefore I do not know.

39,629. He gave it to you in sovereigns and silver, no coppers. Then you paid a lot of people that came to you with bills?—No person came to me. I went to them all.

39,630. What?—No person came to me. I went to them all.

39,631. You went to every one of them? You went round the town to pay them at their houses?—I did.

39,632. Can you tell me what the amounts were? Were they large amounts?—I do not know. I did not count anything.

39,633. Were there any 5*l.*?—I cannot say anything about it, because I did not count them.

39,634. But you remember what you paid, surely! Did you ever pay anybody as much as 10*l.*?—I do not know.

39,635. Did you ever pay any shillings without gold?—Not that I am aware of.

39,636. All gold, or gold and silver, but you cannot say how much?—It is so long ago. I do not recollect.

39,637. Well, then, when you finished paying the bills, what did you do with the rest of the money?—I had no money left.

39,638. Then when you had paid away all the money, what did you do with the rest of the bills that were not paid?—I took them over; Mr. Smith told me to take them to the office.

39,639. And you cannot tell me how much?

39,640. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for your trouble?—Nothing.

39,641. Nothing at all? Not a present?—After the election was over Mr. Smith gave me half-a-crown, but I was paid nothing.

39,642. (Mr. Price.) Did not you get a pair of gloves then?—No, I did not.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Or a new hat?

39,643. (Mr. Price.) Or ribbons?—No.

39,644. (Mr. Anstey.) How old are you now?—What?

39,645. How old are you now?—Twenty last birthday.

JAMES GILCHRIST sworn.

J Gilchrist.

39,646. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A brewery agent.

39,647. Who are you brewery agent for?—Captain Shackell, of the Burnham Brewery.

39,648. Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

39,649. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

39,650. Did you get anything for it?—No.

39,651. How did you vote?—I voted for Westropp and Gray.

39,652. Did you receive any promise of any kind?—No, none at all.

39,653. Had it anything to do with your employment? What made you vote in that way?—No, nothing at all.

39,654. Did you vote at the election before that, in 1866?—Yes, I did.

39,655. How did you vote then?—I voted for Mr. Patton.

39,656. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

39,658. Who from?—Frederick Jarman.

39,659. Did you vote at the first election of 1866?—Yes, for Mr. Patton.

39,660. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

39,661. How much?—10*l.* from Frederick Jarman.

39,662. Did you vote in 1865?—I voted in 1865 for Westropp and Padwick.

39,663. No, no. Mr. Westropp stood alone in 1865. Did you vote for him?—Yes.

39,664. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you plump for him?—I plumped for him.

39,665. (Mr. Price.) What did you get?—I had 10*l.*

39,666. Who from?—Frederick Jarman.

39,667. Did you vote in 1859, Padwick and Westropp?—Yes.

39,668. Whom did you vote for?—Padwick and Westropp.

39,669. How much?—10*l.* from Frederick Jarman.

39,670. Did you vote in 1857?—Yes.

39,671. How did you vote then, Follett and Mansell?—No, I think it was Tynte and Kinglake.

39,672. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were a Liberal then?—A Liberal Conservative.

39,673. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you get for your vote?—Nothing at all.

39,674. (Mr. Coleridge.) So you turned round to the Conservatives because you got nothing from the Liberals?—No.

39,675. You seem to be a man in a decent position. It may be as well to ask you as anybody else. Did you feel no sort of shame in taking this money for your vote?—Well, it was going you know. I did not ask for it.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

J. Gilchrist.

8 Oct. 1869.

39,676. Did you not feel the slightest shame? Did anybody think the worse of you for it?—I cannot tell.

39,677. Did you ever lose a customer through it?—No.

39,678. (Mr. Price.) How long have you been a brewery agent?—Scarcely two years.

39,679. What were you before?—A tea dealer, and kept a public-house.

39,680. In the town?—No, I was in the Scotch tea trade.

39,681. (Mr. Coleridge.) Going about the country with tea?—Yes, I drove.

39,682. (Mr. Price.) Like Mr. Allan?—Yes, precisely.

39,683. The difference between you and Mr. Allan is that he paid the money away, and you received it. How much have you had altogether at different times. You have given us about 40*l.* I think?—That is all.

39,684. Did you get anything at all from the other side?—No, nothing at all from 1840. I think that was about the first time I had a vote in Bridgwater. I have been for 32 years past in Bridgwater.

(Mr. Anstey.) Are you a member of the town council?

A. Gard.

ALFRED GARD sworn.

39,685. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I work in the brickyard.

39,686. Where do you work?—Brown and Company's.

39,687. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

39,688. Who for?—Westropp and Gray.

39,689. Did you get anything?—No.

39,690. Any promise?—No.

39,691. Was that the first time you had ever voted?—Yes.

39,692. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then what have you come here to tell us about?—I had a paper this morning.

39,693. What have you got to say? Have you got anything to tell us?—No.

39,694. Did you help to bribe anybody?—No.

39,695. Did you carry any money to anybody?—No, I had none to carry.

39,696. That is a very good reason. Can you read?—No.

39,697. Do you never hear a newspaper read?—Not very often.

39,698. Has anybody told you that somebody said that he bribed you?—They have in chaff.

39,699. Just tell us who it was. We shall get at it presently?—I don't know who it was. They did not tell me.

39,700. Which way did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

39,701. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know anything about him, Bussell?—No, I never knew anything about a person of the name who had a vote before.

F. C. Temblett.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled.

39,702. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything about him, Temblett?—No. I do not know the man.

(Mr. Price.) It is a great waste of our time. Some of you men return people's names, and you will not give their addresses or anything.

(The witness.) I think it is a mistake. I do not think that man has been returned by either myself or Jarman.

(Alfred Gard.) My name was on the door last night.

J. Poles.

JOHN POLES sworn.

39,703. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

39,704. Where do you work?—Brown and Company's.

39,705. Are you a voter?—Yes.

39,706. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

39,707. Who for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

39,708. Did you get anything?—No.

39,709. No promise?—No.

39,710. Did you vote at the election before that?—No.

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

(The witness.) In 1865 he did.

J. Poles.

JOHN POLES recalled.

39,711. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote at the election before?—1865, I did.

39,712. In 1866?—No.

39,713. In 1865 you got 10*l.*?—Yes.

39,714. Who from?—Frederick Harden.

39,715. Are you sure it was not from a man called Jones?—No.

39,716. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get it from both?—No. Jones introduced me to Harden.

39,717. (Mr. Anstey.) You had previously been canvassed by Shelley and Kinglake?—Yes.

39,718. And you had promised both of them to vote for them?—Yes.

39,719. And this 10*l.* you got in two packets, I think?—Yes.

39,720. What induced you to break your promise to Shelley and Kinglake and vote for Westropp?—10*l.*

39,721. That induced you to break your promise?—Yes.

39,722. And you voted for Westropp?—Yes.

39,723. Had you been promised any money before that by Stroud?—No.

39,724. Quite sure?—Yes.

39,725. Are you the brother of another respectable person called William Poles?—No, I have no relation at all but myself and my own family.

39,726. Did you vote before 1865 at any election?—No.

J. Jenkins.

JAMES JENKINS sworn.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Jenkins, what have you got to say?

39,727. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you the prosecutor of an information for which a rule had been obtained? or rather, were you the defendant in a prosecution for which a rule had been obtained by Mr. Heard in 1859?—I was.

39,728. And was there an action brought besides that; an action for damages brought against you by somebody?—Against me?

39,729. Yes.—No.

39,730. Against somebody else then at the same time?—I brought an action against another proprietor of a Taunton newspaper, Mr. Bragg.

39,731. Oh, you were the prosecutor of the information?—Yes, I was the person libelled for bribing 60 voters.

39,732. Then is it the fact, or is it not, that the prosecution of that action, and of the election petition, which were all commmenced at the same time were all given up together; all withdrawn?—They were withdrawn against my wish. I brought the action, and was about to prosecute the action, and my solicitor——

39,733. Who was that?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

39,734. He discontinued the action without your leave?—He discontinued the action against my wish. He never asked me.

39,735. In order to compromise the election petition?—Just so.

39,736. Do you happen to recollect whether any money was paid by Mr. Tynte and Mr. Kinglake on that occasion, on the withdrawal of the petition, or by anybody?—I heard that they received 500*l.* for it.

39,737. That who had?—I heard that they had. I never received a farthing.

39,738. Who are "they"?—Mr. Lovibond and the late Mr. Bate.

39,739. Ah, that is another thing. You heard that they received a present of 500*l.*? Did the Tories, Padwick and Westropp, or any of them, receive any sum of money as part of the consideration for not going on with the election petition against Kinglake and Tynte?—Not that I am aware of.

39,740. But you heard at this time that 500*l.* had been paid to Bate and Lovibond. By whom?—By Mr. Heard's party, to cause him to withdraw the action, my action against Mr. Heard for libel.

39,741. When you heard that your proceedings had been discontinued against your positive wish or expressed wish by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, did not you go to him about it?—I went and waited for him five or six different times at the railway station. He heard I was very much put out about it. He sent Mr. Bate on before him, and Mr. Bate either telegraphed or sent to him by some means or other, and told him he had better not come back, for he could not tell the consequence if he came back, for Jenkins was so enraged at the manner in which he had been treated that he had better stop away.

39,742. That is, that you were so enraged?—Yes.

39,743. That was the effect of the telegraph?—I do not know whether it was letter or telegraph, but that is what I heard that induced him to hide away for a week, and when he did come I was rather warm with him, and he said, "We did it to save our members," and he said, "Mr. Reed consented." Mr. Reed was a party who brought an action as well as myself. He said, "Reed consented, and we thought "you, knowing how deeply you felt interested in the "Tynte family, I took it for granted that you would "raise no objection." I said, "Then who is to defend my character?" He said, "Oh, everyone knows that you were not guilty of the libel in the paper." I said, "No, I do not believe that; I will have it tried if there is any means of having it tried." He said, "Oh, you cannot do it." Therefore up to the present time I have always lain under the scandal of having bribed 60 voters with 25*l.* each in a slaughter house then belonging to Mr. Newton.

39,744. That was the purport of the libel?—That was the libel in the paper.

39, 745. And you took proceedings upon that, and Mr. Lovibond, behind your back and against your will, deprived you of the means of setting yourself right?—Exactly so.

39,746. Well, now you have this public opportunity. Had you been guilty of anything laid to your charge in that libel?—Nothing of the sort. I never bribed a person in the whole course of my life, nor never received a single farthing, direct or indirect, for my own vote. I always voted on the Liberal side, and always from a Liberal principle.

39,747. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you a resident in this place?—I am.

39,748. That would hardly have injured your character, I suppose; this libel?—It injured it so much that hundreds, and I may say thousands, believed it.

39,749. Yes, in believing it they did not think any the worse of you.

39,750. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a grazier at the present time.

39,751. Did you ever lose a customer by this?—Well, I should think I lost a great many. I know I had got some of the people at the time on the Conservative side which thoroughly believed that I had been guilty of the charge alleged.

38,752. (Mr. Coleridge.) But they did not think anything the worse of you for bribing but only for bribing on the other side, I suppose?—I cannot tell what they thought; I thought a great deal of it myself.

39,753. But I mean you have never been told it was a serious detriment to your character in any shape or way?—I thought it was, because I know a great many intimate friends on the Conservative side showed me the cold shoulder after that.

39,754. That was because you had done it on the other side?—I do not believe on the Liberal side that anybody ever did show me the cold shoulder.

39,755. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose from not having bribed anybody, you, yourself, hold bribery in proper dislike?—I did, most decidedly.

39,756. I presume your feelings were naturally much wounded in being set down with the common herd of bribers here, and I presume you felt exceedingly annoyed that the measures which you had most properly taken for righting your character, not only before Bridgwater, but before the whole world, had been set at nought by this corrupt compromise between Benjamin Lovibond and the other parties?—Just so.

39,757. (Mr. Price.) You seem to lose all independence of character in Bridgwater. Notwithstanding this compromise, which was effected behind your back, why did not you denounce and expose the whole of this affair?—I did. I was turned round on directly, and they said, "You have no remedy; you employed "Mr. Lovibond, and he has thought right to go and "sell you."

39,758. Sell you or compromise for you?—"Sell you without your own control."

39,759. Then you did denounce it?—I did. I was almost wild for a week or two. I have something more to tell you when you have done with that.

39,760–1. It is a very great injustice to you I only want to know whether there is no means of a man in your position being able to denounce such a thing and letting it be known?—These are the papers. If it is not taking up too much of your time, I should be truly thankful if you will just read the libel. I sent it for your perusal. Perhaps I had better finish with this matter first.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Well, be as quick as you can.

(The witness.) Mr. Bragg, the other party against whom I brought the action, came and apologized, and I said, "Most certainly I shall withdraw all further proceedings against you," and I went with him down to Mr. Lovibond's office. You will find a letter from Mr. Bragg.

(Mr. Price.) Well, never mind; go on.

(The witness.) I should like to have that letter read.

39,762. What has this got to do with corrupt practices?—It has a great deal.

39,763. Well, let us hear. Come to the point?—

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

J. Jenkins.

8 Oct. 1869.

I went down with Bragg to Mr. Lovibond's office, and I said, "Mr. Bragg will apologize in the public "papers, for he has made a mistake, and will pay the "expenses." Mr. Lovibond then charged him 32*l.*

(Mr. Price.) Well, what has that got to do with corrupt practices? We will adjourn till to-morrow morning at half-past 10.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

Saturday, 9th October 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

Mr. W. Toogood.

9 Oct. 1869.

Mr. WILLIAM TOOGOOD sworn.

39,764. (Mr. Price.) You are a solicitor and parliamentary agent in London?—I am.

39,765. Carrying on business in Parliament Street?—In Parliament Street.

39,766. Are you a native of this place?—I am.

39,767. Give us the history of your bringing down and introducing Mr. Gray to this borough at the last election?—I had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Gray as a member of the same club as myself, and consequently I from time to time met him there, and in the course of the early part of last year he said he should be glad to get into Parliament; that possibly, my business being parliamentary, I might hear of some place where he might have a chance of getting returned.

39,768. Did you then mention to him Bridgwater?—No, I did not, but I had occasion to come to Bridgwater in the summer of that year, and while here I met Mr. Lilly, and then it occurred to me to ask Mr. Lilly, thinking of Mr. Gray, what was likely to happen here at the ensuing election. Mr. Lilly said he thought there would be no opening.

39,769. No opening?—That is what he then said, but if there should be any change in the position of matters here he would communicate with me.

39,770. Why did you go to Mr. Lilly?—I met Mr. Lilly accidentally, or perhaps I called on him, he being an old acquaintance of mine, knowing most people as I do in this town. I think it was that I was on my road to Messrs. Poole's office, and either on my going or returning I looked in on Mr. Lilly, or met him, I cannot now recollect which, but it was my habit to look in, knowing him so well, just simply to know what was passing in the town. I said to Mr. Lilly when I saw him I thought I knew of a gentleman who might be disposed to come here. I did not of course give Mr. Gray's name at that time. I said he was a commercial man, and I thought he was likely to suit Bridgwater, it being a commercial town; and Mr. Lilly said, "If there should be any change I will communicate with you." Then I went back to London.

39,771. Did you see anybody else belonging to the Conservative party besides Mr. Lilly at that time?—I daresay I saw many, but I did not touch upon the subject.

39,772. Did you see the Trevors?—No; I saw no one but Mr. Lilly with whom I talked on business at all; my business was of a private nature. Then I heard from Mr. Lilly, and he said, "I think now there "is a change, and if your friend is disposed to think "of Bridgwater you will communicate with him." Thereupon I wrote to Mr. Gray and told him I should be glad to see him. I did not get any immediate answer. Then I was called into Devonshire before I had heard from or seen Mr. Gray, and while I was in Devonshire Mr. Gray came down to Torquay quite unexpectedly by me, and I saw him and told him just that, and thereupon I again communicated with Mr. Lilly, and it resulted in my taking Bridgwater on my way back to town, Mr. Gray having previously gone back to town. The reason I did not hear from Mr. Gray at the time I wrote him was, that he happened to be at Leamington, it was the vacation, and that caused the delay in my not seeing or hearing from him.

39,773. In your first communication with Mr. Gray did you say anything to him about money matters?—Nothing at all. I told him I considered Bridgwater a rather troublesome place, knowing it as well as I did.

39,774. Did you use the word "troublesome," or did you say "expensive"?—No doubt I may have said that.

39,775. Did you tell Mr. Gray that it was an expensive place; "troublesome" is a very vague word?—I might have said it. I cannot tell whether I used that word, but I meant to imply, no doubt, that money was spent here. Mr. Gray immediately said, "If I go down I spend nothing but what I may legally spend."

39,776. (Mr. Anstey.) Then he must have understood you perfectly well to mean that it was an expensive place by his making that reply to you immediately?—What I meant was that party spirit ran very high. I never remember an election at which there was not a contest and no doubt money had been spent.

39,777. But I am speaking with reference to your last answer. He immediately said to you, "As far as "I am concerned, if I go down I shall not spend "money," &c., &c.?—I do not mean those were the exact words he said, but in the course of conversation to that effect.

39,778. You say that was the immediate answer he made you, and my question upon that is a natural question, which I wish to have answered. From his having made you immediately that answer had you any doubt in your mind that he understood your words to convey the impression that Bridgwater was an expensive place?—I have no doubt he did; he would have been very foolish if he had not.

39,779. (Mr. Coleridge.) Either Mr. Gray or Mr. Westropp has told us that he expected 1,500*l.* at least to be the expense of a contest at Bridgwater on fair principles?—Mr Gray did.

39,780. Yes, I think it was Mr. Westropp who told us Mr. Gray said so to him, and he was very much surprised to hear that it would be 600*l.* Had you given him a limit of 1,500*l.*?—Certainly not. I mentioned no figure whatever.

39,781. (Mr. Price.) Now go on with the history. Whom did you introduce him to here? You met him, you say, when he came to Torquay, and you came to Bridgwater on your way home?—Then I saw Mr. Lilley and told him who Mr. Gray was, told him all I knew about him.

39,782. Did you tell Mr. Lilly he was a rich merchant?—I told him I understood Mr. Gray was a man of fortune, a merchant in a very large way of business in the city of London, a highly respectable man as far as I knew, but I should like to tell you I had not had a lengthy acquaintance with Mr. Gray. I had seen him some six months previously or more, but when he was elected a member of the Conservative Club, I occasionally met him for some time. He dined on the next table, and of course in that way Mr. Gray addressed me in the way I have described.

39,783. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you never had any business with him?—No.

39,784. Or ever visited at his house?—I never visited at his house in my life.

39,785. Or he at yours?—No.

39,786. Then in point of fact you had only a casual acquaintance with him, and only knew him as a man of fortune?—Well, I knew him to be a perfectly respectable man, or he would not have been elected a member of that club if proper inquiry had not been made with regard to him. I understood he was a man of position in the city of London as a merchant.

39,787. I am asking, not with reference to his respectability, but with reference to his capacities to represent a borough of this kind?—I formed my own opinion about that from talking to him.

39,788. And from what you observed in your casual acquaintance at that time?—I formed my opinion from communication with him, talking with him, and in that way.

39,789. No more?—No, which I considered to be a fair opportunity of judging. Then I believe I saw Mr. Lilly. I do not know that I saw anybody else here at that time to speak on this subject, and I think Mr. Lilly said, "Very well then, I will talk to the "party here, and you shall hear from me, and it may "be desirable that Mr. Gray should come to Bridg-"water, and you should meet him here," and that state of things came to pass. After a time I heard Mr. Lilly say that Mr. Gray was in communication with the party, and they thought he would be a very acceptable candidate, but he had better come down, and he did. I went again down to Torquay; then I wrote to Mr. Gray; a day was fixed; then I came and talked to him; he came from London. We met at the hotel, and I stayed the night. I am giving you now the best of my recollection. I think that was about it. Then while we were here I introduced him to Mr. Lilly.

39,790. Before you come to that, I may ask you, would you have recommended him to the people here, knowing what you did of the place, and of their expectation, if he had not been a rich man, a man of fortune?—Whether rich or poor has nothing to do at all with the question in my mind, and did not influence me in anyway at all.

39,791. Therefore you can answer my question. Suppose you did not know him to be a man of fortune in the ordinary sense, but a man of small means, would you have recommended him to the people of this borough?—Certainly, I should, if he had been a gentleman, and in my opinion a fit man to represent the borough. It did not matter in my estimation whether he was a man of 500*l.* or 5,000*l.* a year.

39,792. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, wait a moment. You are a native of Bridgwater and know thoroughly the history of this place, as well as any man in the kingdom, do you mean to say that if you had had an intimate friend for whom you cared very much, he being a poor man, or one who could not afford to expend anything like 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.*, or even 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.*, and he told you he was going to stand for Bridgwater, would not you have thought it right to caution him, he being your friend, and said to him, "My dear fellow, do not go near such a place"?—No.

39,793. Then you would be an extraordinary friend?—If you will allow me, I understood that Mr. Gray was——

39,794. I am not asking about Mr. Gray, but I am putting it in the abstract. If you had a friend who could not afford to spend 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* in a place like this, and he said he was thinking of standing for Bridgwater, would you not have thought it fair to give him him a caution, "Take care what you are about in going to Bridgwater"?—That would depend on whether I thought he was going to spend a large sum here.

39,795. What?—If I had a friend, and heard him say, "I want to go to Bridgwater, and if unfair means "are resorted to I shall endeavour to hold my own "there," I should have said, "Do not go to Bridg-water," in that state of the case.

39,796. Then I do not understand you?—I will endeavour to make myself clear if you will put any question to me.

39,797. I ask you whether you would not have thought it right if a friend of yours who was not a rich man was coming to Bridgwater, and he was coming here not knowing the place, whether you would not have thought it right to give him a caution as to the state of the borough?—Yes, if he went down with the intention of spending money to that amount, that it would be unadvisable, and rather a dangerous matter to embark in.

39,798. You knew as well as anybody Bridgwater was an essentially corrupt place?—Yes, but the state of the law had altered.

39,799. (Mr. Price.) Would you not have said, if he was not a rich man, "Do not touch such a place as that"?—I do not know that I should have said that. I did not contemplate, and Mr. Gray did not at the time, spending any more money but what was right.

39,800. (Mr. Anstey.) Take it so, that is not an answer to my question, which I will put once more. Without reference to his spending money in corrupt practices or not, put it in either way, supposing he said, "I mean to spend money in corrupt practices," or supposing he said, "I mean to take my stand on "purity principles of election, and I intend to fight "the battle to the last on purity principles," you knowing Bridgwater as you did, would you not in either case say to your friend, "Do not do it; you will "have thousands to spend, and if you do not spend "money in corrupt purposes, the money which you "do spend in fighting a purity of election fight will "be money thrown away, for if the other side bribe "you will have no chance"?—Well I might have said that if necessity had arisen, but there was this offering itself to my mind, that Bridgwater was in a totally different state of circumstances under the law as it then stood—the new law—the constituency was enlarged.

39,801. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then I will ask you whether you mean as regards the new law relating to bribery, or the increased constituency?—My answer has reference to the new constituency. If coming down on the old plan, I am sure I would not have allowed any friend of mine to come, certainly not. "Do not come Bridgwater," would have been my answer immediately and my advice.

39,802. Do you mean then that the lower you go down in the scale the more pure it is?—I think bribing is much more difficult.

39,803. But did you imagine from your intimate knowledge all these men coming in under 10*l.* would be less likely to be corrupt than those above it?—No, I do not mean that, but I thought it would be a more difficult thing to bribe, because the area would be so enlarged.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

Mr. W. Toogood.

9 Oct. 1869.

39,804. Surely you do not mean that the new voters would be more likely to be incorrupt than the old ones?—Certainly not.

39,805. You base your opinion entirely on the increased number?—The enlarged area; but when you say my intimate knowledge of Bridgwater, I was never engaged in elections here in my life. I left Bridgwater 30 years ago, and I do not think I have been at an election here except the last all that time.

39,806. (Mr. Anstey.) Thirty years ago would be 1839, call it '38, you would have had the experience of the elections of 1832, 1835, and 1836, and 1837?—I have been 20 years in Parliament Street, and before that was articled in London, and therefore I have been absent from Bridgwater a very long time. When I left Bridgwater I was too young to embark in those matters, or take any part in them in any shape or way.

39,807. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect Leader's election here?—I just remember it. I was a boy.

39,808. Do you recollect anything about it?—I heard that large sums were spent here, but it is so long ago that I cannot tell you.

39,809. You are not in a position to give us information about that election, what we have had has been rather contradictory?—Not any that is worth hearing.

39,810. (Mr. Price.) Now go on?—Then Mr. Gray came down in the way I tell you, and when he came he saw Mr. Lilly.

39,811. Did you come with him?—I came up from Torquay and met him here. He saw Mr. Lilly, and I think he saw Mr. Ruddock, and he saw Mr. Brice, and those were the only gentlemen he saw. The next morning we both went away.

39,812. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know at that time that Mr. Lilly had been one of the conduit pipes for bringing a large sum of money into the borough at a former election?—No, nothing.

39,813. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you know that he had charged 60*l.*, and got it under the name of a fee for his services from Mr. Patton?—No, I know nothing at all about it.

39,814. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you look on Mr. Lilly as one of those mysterious persons we have heard described, as the heads of the Conservative party?—No, I looked on Mr. Lilly as an intelligent active man. I thought he was a very fit person to put the question I had to put to.

39,815. We have had the term so frequently used, and when we try to probe it it comes out the lawyers are the heads of the party. Do you call Mr. Lilly one? I should think he would be one of the heads of the party. Then after that introduction, Mr. Gray communicated with the town direct—he communicated with those gentlemen he was introduced to direct, and at a proper time it was suggested by his friends here, and he came down with Mr. Westropp. Before that I should tell you on seeing Mr. Ruddock on the first occasion of Mr. Gray coming here, it was suggested that Mr. Gray should see Mr. Westropp in London; because we understood Mr. Westropp was again going to offer himself for the borough, and we did so. Mr. Ruddock, I believe, wrote to Mr. Westropp, and the Union Club was fixed as the place at which we should call on Mr. Westropp, and we did so, and there we saw Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Gray explained what had passed.

39,816. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you give Mr. Gray any warning as to Mr. Westropp's antecedents, knowing that he had been unseated on the petition before?—I told him all I knew about it. I knew that.

39,817. You told him that?—I told him that, no doubt. I have no actual knowledge myself, but I had been in the House of Commons Committee Room very frequently while the petition was on.

39,818. But you knew all about it?—I had a general knowledge.

39,819. And you told Mr. Gray?—Certainly. Then at this meeting Mr. Gray explained what had passed, and he thought of going to Bridgwater.

39,820. (Mr. Price) Did you hear him explain that he had been asked for the 1,500*l.*?—Did I hear Mr. Gray?

39,821. Yes?—No, he did not say so.

39,822. Not in your presence?—Not in my presence, certainly. I do not know what happened whilst I was not there, but I believe I was with him until the meeting broke up. The result of the interview was that Mr. Westropp stated his willingness to come to Bridgwater with Mr. Gray as mutual colleagues at the ensuing election. Then we thought it well to go to Mr. Spofforth's office, which we did, to hear what he had to say. At this interview I should tell you, at the Union Club, Mr. Westropp explained to Mr. Gray the principle on which he was going to Bridgwater—to spend nothing at all beyond what was legal. He said, "That I will do and nothing else." Mr. Gray said, "That is what I mean to do; unless we "go down on that footing, we will not go," and that was the standing agreement. Then we went over to Mr. Spofforth, and had a long talk with him, and told him he had decided on going down, and wanted to know what Mr. Spofforth had to say, and he thought Mr. Gray might be acceptable in every way. Mr. Spofforth knew Mr. Gray before, and he said, "I think he is a very fit man, Mr. Westropp," and Mr. Spofforth said to me, "Toogood; you know Bridgwater well." I said, "I know Bridgwater." "Well, you go down with Mr. Gray." "Well," I said, "Mr. Gray wishes me to do so." Then, he said, "I will leave it to you; you will go down with him"? "Certainly;" and I did come here, Mr. Gray having arranged with me to employ me professionally in the matter.

39,823. (Mr. Price.) What were you to do?—I was to introduce him here.

39,824. What did you do?—I did introduce him and gave him all the assistance I could.

39,825. What assistance did you give him?—I endeavoured to get him returned fairly and properly.

39,826. (Mr. Anstey.) To what persons did you introduce him?—Everybody I knew on our side of the question.

39,827. Tell us some?—I have already told you some; Mr. Brice whom I saw here, Mr. Lilley, Mr. Ruddock, and Messrs. Poole, Messrs. Trevor. I am sure I cannot remember all. I know nearly all the old inhabitants here.

39,828. Did you introduce him to anybody except lawyers?—Yes; I began by saying Mr. Lilly.

39,829. He is a man who has been stated in evidence to be half a lawyer?—He may be half one; I do not consider he is one.

39,830. Nor I; but he himself so considers. Can you tell me anybody else?—I dare say I did, but I cannot at this moment recollect who.

39,831. Then as far as you recollect?—Yes. I introduced him to Mr. Smith. If I had a list of the inhabitants given me I dare say I could give you 20 names other than lawyers; perhaps 50.

39,832. Did you introduce him to Mr. Joseph Richard Smith?—The gentleman lives in Friarn Street. I do not know his initials, but his name his Smith. He was formerly a pawnbroker, but he was mayor at that time.

39,833. Anyone else?—Everybody I knew.

39,834. Do you recollect anyone by name?—I will try to, but I do not at the moment.

39,835. At present those are all the names you remember?—I introduced him to Mr. Sealy for courtesy sake.

39,836. Mr. Sealy, the banker?—Yes.

39,837. But he is on the other side?—Yes, but I introduced him having known him.

39,838. I am speaking of your side?—Everybody I could think of.

39,839. Do you remember whom?—I cannot at the present moment. Yes, the Axfords. Mr. Axford, the surgeon, down here; but all the leading people on the Conservative side of the question here, I introduced him to, and told them what I knew about Mr. Gray, and in my opinion he would be a fit man to represent this borough in Parliament. I introduced him to Mr. Greenhill whom I knew, just a little way out of the town, in fact, to everybody. I do not know whether Mr. Strangways, but everybody I knew. I knew a great many people here.

39,840. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you come down here professionally, or merely as a friend?—Certainly professionally. Mr. Gray had no acquaintance with me. It did not suit me to go away, and that was the distinct understanding.

39,841. (Mr. Price.) Then are we to understand you never had any discussion with Mr. Gray as to money matters at all?—Discussion?

39,842. You may use any other phrase you like, had you any other conversation with him?—Well, now and then I told Mr. Gray from what I had heard that I thought it quite possible something would be said to him about money. He immediately said, "You know "I shall not agree to that, and in one moment I will "leave the borough if I am pressed or attempted to "be pressed."

39,843. You are the person he had reposed confidence in, and had been asked to come down here to attend him professionally, do you mean that he never mentioned to you that a sum of 1,500*l.* had been mentioned to him? It is a strange thing with regard to the man put in confidential relationship if he did not?—I could not say that.

39,844. (Mr. Anstey.) You have said it at all events?—Pardon me.

39,845. (Mr. Price.) I wish to draw your attention to it. Whenever you did hear this 1,500*l.* mentioned to come from Mr. Gray, did you not tell him that was an absurd sum for legal expenses. Mr. Westropp says he told him at once it was ridiculous nonsense that 500*l.* was ample, and Mr. Gray, he says, was quite like a child when he came down, and did not know whether it was 500*l.* or 1,500*l.*, and you were his confidential agent and friend. I want to know whether he ever mentioned 1,500*l.* to you as the sum named to him, and whether you did not say it was nonsense to spend such a sum?—He did not at any time name to me that he had been asked to spend 1,500*l.*

39,846. He never mentioned the sum of 1,500*l.* in anyway?—Yes, certainly, because I had myself heard 1,500*l.* mentioned. I heard 1,000*l.* mentioned, but I think 1,500*l.* was the limit of the sum I heard at any time mentioned.

39,847. (Mr. Anstey.) Who from?—Frequently.

39,848. Tell me one person?—I do not think I could fix any one person as having said that to me, but I frequently heard people say on our side of the question if unfair means were resorted to certainly 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.* would be wanted.

39,849. (Mr. Price.) Not unfair means?—Or improper means.

39,850. Mr. Gray says he intended to fight on pure principles, and he came down here having been informed that 1,500*l.* was the sum which would be required if he fought on pure principles?—No, I do not think that.

39,851. He told us so?—Did he?

39,852. Certainly?—I assure you I never heard Mr. Gray say that he was asked to spend 1,500*l.*

Henry Westropp recalled.

H. Westropp.

39,853. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think it was you who said that he thought 1,500*l.* necessary, and you told him that 500*l.* was enough, and I put it to you that he was both lightened and enlightened by your remark?—Mr. Gray said he would only spend legal expenses at least. I told him I would only spend legal expenses, and he asked how much that would be, and I told him 500*l.* would be ample to cover every legal expense, and he after that when walking across Trafalgar Square said, "I thought there would be much larger expenses." I said, "What did you imagine they would be," and he said, "I imagined they would be 1,500*l.*" That is exactly what I said, "Oh, nonsense!" said I "that is a great deal too much," and he said then I had enlightened him on that head by telling him it was only 500*l.*

Mr. William Toogood recalled.

Mr. W. Toogood.

39,854. (Mr. Price.) Assuming what Mr. Westropp says is true, it is quite clear that Mr. Gray must have had some person or other to tell him about 1,500*l.* He could not have imagined it of his own head?—Certainly.

39,855. But at all events, what did he say to you about it when he mentioned the 1,500*l.*?—He never told me that he expected he should be called on to spend a 1,500*l.* Such a sum was not named, but neither he nor I knew exactly what sum might want to be expended. Mr. Westropp seems to have given him some more information on that subject than I, for I really did not know, and if I had heard of his spending 1,500*l.* I should have thought it a very immense sum.

39,856. (Mr. Anstey.) Had he any other confidential adviser besides you?—No.

39,857. And he concealed that fact from you?—No, he did not conceal that fact from me.

39,858. But he did not tell it to you?—He may have mentioned to me that he heard 1,500*l.* might be wanted for legitimate purposes, but I do not recollect.

39,859. At all events, you say that you had heard independently of Mr. Gray of 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.*?—Yes.

39,860. What did you say to him when you heard that?—I said, "If such a sum as that is wanted it is "wanted for purposes other than those for which "money ought to be expended." He said, "You "know my intention?" I said, "I do." He said, "If I am asked to spend any such sum as that I shall retire immediately."

39,861. How long before polling-day was it that you told him that?—I daresay it was when I came down here, the candidates came down and were received.

39,862. After they were received?—Yes, at that time, and again later; frequently I heard this and I was not surprised: "If money is going to be spent on "the other side and if money is spent on our side "1,500*l.* at least will be wanted," and I never heard anything of that kind, but I immediately reported it to Mr. Gray, and I never had but one answer, "I "shall not spend it at any election in this kingdom or "any other."

39,863. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you settle Mr. Gray's legitimate expenses for him after the election?—No.

39,864. Did not it pass through your hands?—Not at all. I never had any money.

39,865. Who settled your account? Was it done personally or through an agent?—It was done in London. Part I got at Christmas last and part at the beginning of this year.

39,866. And not put into the election expenses as returned by the election agent as it ought to have been?—No, not at all. What I understood was a sum of 700*l.* had been paid into Stuckey's bank here, which was contributed in moieties by Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and that was supposed to meet every demand.

39,867. What was the object of keeping your fee for assisting Mr. Gray out of the legitimate expenses?—I do not know. I wrote to him and said, "I shall be glad if you will send me a cheque," and he did.

39,868. (Mr. Price, reading.) "What did Mr. "William Toogood say about it?—We discussed the "matter. Did he discuss what it would cost?—No, "he did not; he said it might be 1,000*l.*"?—What might be?

39,869. The expense?—The legitimate expense.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

Mr. W. Toogood.

9 Oct. 1869.

39,870. Yes?—I said just now I could not tell exactly.

39,871. (Mr. Price, reading.) "Did it not astonish "you that 1,000*l.* should be spent in a small borough "like Bridgwater? A. It did not strike me at the "time. If you remember, I was then quite a new "hand. Q. But you are not a child? A. No. "Q. You are a grown up man? A. I was not an "expert in these matters. (Mr. Price.) What non-"sense to talk of experts! (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not "Mr. Toogood tell you what was the character of his "native place? A. No; he did not. Q. Did he "not tell you it was most impure and he wanted you "to go there and make it pure? (A.) No; he did not "I did not hear that until I came down here."?—I think he must be under a misapprehension there. I did tell him. It was very natural that I should tell him.

39,872. You seem to me to have let your friend into a hole blindfold?—Well, sir, I do not quite, if you will allow me to say so, understand your observation.

39,873. He said you never warned him about Bridgwater being an impure place?—I told him just what I said before. I began by saying——

39,874. He does not seem to me to have understood it at all. He really does not seem to have understood it so. He seems to have thought that 1,000*l.* would be the legitimate expenditure; that Mr. Westropp would have to spend 500*l.* and he knew he should have more, and that 1,000*l.* was something like what it would be?—Well, he might conscientiously have been informed so.

39,875. He said that he had discussed it with you and you said it might be 1,000*l.*?

(Mr. Anstey.) I understood you to say not 10 minutes ago, before the Chief Commissioner was looking at Mr. Gray's evidence that the moment you had heard that it was a rumour here that 1,000*l.* or so would be wanted, you told Mr. Gray this, "Such a "sum as that cannot be wanted unless for improper "purposes." Now you confirm Mr. Gray's statement that you yourself named to Mr. Gray that sum as the amount of the legal expenses?—No, I beg to say I never did.

39,876. Twice you have said, when the Chief Commissioner was reading, and after he had done reading, that you did name it as he states it?—1,000*l.*, or 1,500*l.*?

39,877. (Mr. Price.) 1,000*l.* He says, "We dis-"cussed the matter." Then he said you told him 1,000*l.* This is all on the assumption Mr. Gray puts before us that he thoroughly believed everything was to be legitimate, and therefore this 1,000*l.* was impressed upon his mind, whatever you said to him, as a legitimate expenditure.

39,878. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell him 1,000*l.*?—I never told him any definite sum at all. I did not know. I could not know myself. But if the expenditure had gone up to 1,500*l.* I should immediately have had my suspicions that money was going for impure purposes. But my conversation with Mr. Gray was of the kind I have explained over and over again. I could not tell him what the legitimate expense would be. It is impossible to say what professional men employed here ought to be paid. I did not know; but if I had heard of his being asked to pay 1,500*l.* I should have had my suspicions immediately; and I should have thought 1,000*l.* a large sum.

39,879. Did it not occur to you, Mr. Toogood, that you were incurring a great moral responsibility in being the means of allowing a comparative stranger to you to come down here under the belief that he was not going to be called upon for more than legal expenditure and yet be pretty sure of his success?—I did not say anything about success. I left him to form his own opinion about that from what he heard in the town. I could not express any opinion about it.

39,880. Did you tell him so; that you could not answer for his success?—Certainly. Is there any reason to make you think that I should not have told him so. How could I answer for the borough?

39,881. I want to know?—I never told him whether he would be successful or not. I said, "Go to Bridgwater and make your own inquiries."

39,882. You say that you told him exactly what you told us to-day?—Certainly.

39,883. What you have told us to-day is this, that you had no knowledge of Bridgwater for 30 years; that it was a troublesome place before that time; that the constituency was largely increased; that you could not answer for his success, and that he must depend solely upon legal expenditure?—He told me himself, "I go upon no other footing." I told him there was a fair chance of being returned on that footing, and he was confirmed in that by Mr. Westropp.

39,884. Then you did tell him about his success?—I told him I had heard of it. I did not live in Bridgwater. I picked it up when I was here.

39,885. You came down with him?—Yes.

39,886. I am referring to what occurred in London before he took the fatal step of coming down here. Did you tell him after that?—He came here himself with me and saw Mr. Lilly, Mr. Ruddock, and Mr. Brice.

39,887. You know you met him where you were dining together; at the Conservative Club?—Then I told him little or nothing about it.

39,888. Then when he spoke to you it was as a Bridgwater man. He spoke to you as a man who had been in Bridgwater, and was a native of Bridgwater?—Yes.

39,889. Well, I ask you whether in London before he had decided upon the fatal step of coming down here you had told him that you thought he had a fair chance?—No, I had not.

39,890. Then I put it to you shortly; is it true that Mr. Gray as far as you know or as far as you are concerned has nobody but himself to blame for coming down here?—Certainly not. Will you just allow me to say a word. You know I brought Mr. Gray here himself that he might see, think, and judge for himself. What more could I do?

39,891. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before he had determined to stand?—Of course I did. I brought him here. I took the trouble to come up to meet him here—"Now "judge for yourself; there's Mr. Brice, and Mr. Rud-"dock, and Mr. Lilly: you hear what they say;" and then after that there was a correspondence.

39,892. (Mr. Price.) No doubt, Mr. Toogood, you brought him here. Now listen. Is this true, "It "seems to have got abroad, Mr. Gray, that your name "meant money?"—A. "I endeavoured by every "means that I could to dissipate any such idea as "that? Q. Had you found it was the prevailing "idea?—A. No, Mr. Toogood mentioned to me "once or twice that he thought money might be re-"quired."—Certainly.

39,893. What did you mean by that? You could not mean for legitimate expenses?—What I heard.

39,894. (Mr. Price, reading.) "And I said imme-"diately 'I will withdraw. I will do anything; but "as to spending money illegally, I will not do so.' "(Mr. Coleridge.) When did Mr. Toogood tell you "that money might be required?—A. I think Mr. "Toogood mentioned that just before. Q. Was it "after you were down here?—A. Yes, it was after "I was down here. Q. How long before the poll-"ing day?—A. I cannot state the date; but I have "it running in my mind that it was sometime before "the canvassing commenced. I think so. He was "here, and he told me something that led me to sup-"pose that money might be required." It could not be for legal expenditure, you know. "Q. Did he "say how much?—A. No, he did not. Q. Did "he ask you in case money should be required whether "you had made any arrangement as to sending it "down?—A. No. Q. Are you sure of that?—"A. I am certain of it."—Well now, sir, once for all, I wish to say that Mr. Gray was brought down here to see and judge for himself as to whether he should come here or not. I did not advise him to come. I brought him for the purpose that he might form his own opinion and determine for himself.

39,895. (Mr. Anstey.) But, Mr. Toogood, surely you see that you are not answering the Chief Commissioner's question?—Well, I am coming on to that. Nothing was said about money before Mr. Gray came down here in a formal way, and was received by the inhabitants; but when he did come, and after he came from time to time I heard what I have already said, "If there is money to be spent on the other side, money will have to be spent on this." Of course I from time to time reported to Mr. Gray what I heard, and Mr. Gray never gave me but one answer, "If any "money, Mr. Toogood, is to be spent illegally, I am "not the man for Bridgwater or for any other place, "and therefore I will go." At no time was any formal request made to me to go to Mr. Gray and say, "so-and-so will be wanted, and so-and-so must be "found" (at no time), by any person. The conversation about money prior to that was just what Mr. Westropp has explained to you, and it may have been that when walking across Trafalgar Square it was said, "Well, I daresay 1,000*l.* will be wanted, if you "are to have a contest, and money is going to be "spent." I shall be happy to answer any other questions upon this subject that you may think right to put to me.

39,896. I am very glad the thing stands in that way. I say again I think you might have given Mr. Gray more caution: that is all?—I do not see what caution. I do not, think with all deference to you——

39,897. (Mr. Price.) I won't argue with you. I think Mr. Gray came down here thoroughly green about all these matters, and might have got himself into a very great scrape?—It was his own doing entirely. He came here, and judged for himself. I did not stay here. He stayed by himself a long time.

39,898. You were in a very confidential position?—Well, I had nothing to tell him beyond what I did, and I should like to say also that I am quite satisfied. I know myself, that not one penny was spent improperly through me by Mr. Gray. That is my firm conviction.

39,899. (Mr. Price.) It has not been said. There has not been any evidence that it was spent by Mr. Gray?—A more honourable man is not to be found in London or anywhere else.

39,900. (Mr. Price.) Well that is another thing?—But I saw Mr. Gray yesterday and he was much hurt by the reports and the evidence given before you. He is placed in an unfair position.

(Mr. Price.) There is his evidence. Never mind about the reports. It was unfortunate for Mr. Gray that he could not explain some things.

39,901. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not told us yet; were you employed in the petition at all?—Not at all.

39,902. Not professionally or otherwise?—Not at all. Occasionally Mr. Gray consulted with me and he showed me the draft of the petition, but the 150 guineas that were paid me were for all the services rendered him in London and down here.

39,903. How was it as you had been professional adviser down here, you did not have the conduct of the petition?—Well, at one time I thought I ought to have had it, and I rather complained about it, but I was told, "Very likely you will be wanted as a witness "and the inquiry will be a local one. It is not to be "at the House of Commons, and it will be hardly "worth your while. Before I leave the box I want "to ask the President, if you will allow me, what "more you think I should have said or done to protect "Mr. Gray."

39,904. (Mr. Price.) Every man must judge for himself what he should do for a friend. If I had been a confidential friend of Mr. Gray I should have given him every caution to banish Bridgwater from his ideas for ever, and if he could never get into Parliament as long as he lived in any other way never to think of coming here?—Why should I say that? I should not be justified in it?

39,905. We need not argue it?—If you make an observation I must, with all deference, make a reply. I did not feel justified.

39,906. Well, I think you ought to have given him a caution. It does not appear he ever had one from you?—Well, I brought him down here.

39,907. I do not say to what extent the caution should have been, but it is quite clear that Mr. Gray unfortunately came into this place with a ridiculous notion impressed upon his mind somehow or other that he would actually have to spend 1,000*l.* in legitimate expenses, and nobody seems to have disabused his mind except Mr. Westropp who told him that it would be a robbery if they wanted to make 1,000*l.* out of him?—I did not tell him he would have to spend 1,000*l.*, it was merely what I heard.

39,908. (Mr. Anstey.) How could a person in your fiduciary relation have mentioned what you heard without telling him "I don't believe it"?—You have not heard me say that I did not tell him that 1,000*l.* would be a very large sum for legitimate expenses.

39,909. You have heard Mr. Gray's evidence read and you confirmed it upon that point, and he says that he objected. He does not say that you did?—If you wish to leave it in this way that I encouraged Mr. Gray to spend 1,000*l.*, it is entirely wrong.

39,910. (Mr. Coleridge.) What I understand you to say is this, that you said to him, "If money is spent "1,000*l.* at least would be required"?—Certainly, that is how I put it, and I never put it in any other way, and really I must again state that emphatically. I never told Mr. Gray that he would have to spend 1,000*l.* in legitimate expenses. I could not say it. I should have been beside myself.

39,911. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Gray says so?—Then I say he is in mistake, and perhaps the better way would be to have him down again. I say distinctly that I never told him that he would have to spend 1,000*l.* I am sworn, and I say that.

39,912. What I read to you was a series of answers to Mr. Coleridge, and they come in consecutive order, and they are in that form?—Perhaps you will be kind enough to read them again, and I will see if I can answer them.

39,913. He got into his head that he would have to pay double what Mr. Westropp paid because he was to have more of the lawyer's time. This is Mr. Coleridge's question—"What did Mr. William Toogood say about it!—A. We discussed the matter"?—Yes.

39,914. Now then, you objected to the word "discussion"?—No, I do not object.

39,915. Yes you did. That is Mr. Gray's own words. "Did he discuss what it would cost?—No, he "did not. He said it might be 1,000*l.*"?—Yes.

39,916. "Q. Then he did say something about it? "—A. I think I said so. (Mr. Price.) Did it not "astonish you that 1,000*l.* should be spent in a small "borough like Bridgwater?—A. It did not strike "me at the time. If you remember, I was then "quite a new hand. Q. But you are not a child? "—A. No. Q. You are a grown-up man?—A. "I was not an expert in these matters." Nobody made him an expert. Then I said, "What nonsense to talk of experts!" "(Mr. Coleridge.) Did not Mr. "Toogood tell you what was the character of his "native borough?—A. No, he did not"?—But there is the mistake.

39,917. "Q. Did he not tell you it was most "impure, and he wanted you to go there to make it "pure?—A. No, he did not. I did not hear that "until I came down here. Q. Had you not heard "it before, that it was most impure?—A. No, I "had not. When I came down here I heard it was "a place where there was a great deal of money "spent corruptly. Q. Had you not heard there had "been a petition filed before, in 1865?—A. I had "not. (Mr. Anstey.) As I shall not have an

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

Mr. W. Toogood.

9 Oct. 1869.

" opportunity of asking Mr. Westropp about it, I will " ask you. Did not he tell you before this of the " manner in which he had bribed, and his friends had " bribed the voters here, and the demands the voters " had made? — A. He did not. He told me of " course that there had been a petition against " him, and that he had been turned out for bribery. " Q. And that was all?—A. And he added, "But " there is a different state of things now, because I " have determined to come down, and this shall be a " pure election." Then I asked him about Mr. Westropp, and so on. That is what he said about you there, and then further on it goes on, "Tell us any " more you know about that election. It seems to " have got abroad, Mr. Gray, that your name meant " money? — A. I endeavoured by every means that " I could to dissipate any such idea as that. Q. Had " you found it was the prevailing idea? — A. No. " Mr. Toogood mentioned to me once or twice that " he thought money might be required, and I said " immediately I will withdraw; I will do anything, " but as to spending money illegally, I will not do so. " (Mr. Coleridge.) When did Mr. Toogood tell you " that money might be required? — A. I think Mr. " Toogood mentioned that just before. Q. Was it " after you were down here? — A. Yes, it was after " I was down here. Q. How long before the poll- " ing day? — A. I cannot state the date, but I have " it running in my mind that it was sometime before " the canvassing commenced"?—Yes.

39,918. Before it commenced, mind you—"before the canvassing commenced." "I have it running in " my mind that it was some time before the canvass- " ing commenced; I think so. He was here, and he " told me something that led me to suppose that money " might be required. Q. Did he tell you how " much? A. No, he did not. Q. Did he ask " you, in case money should be required, whether you " had made any arrangement as to sending it down? " A. No. Q. Are you sure of that? — A. I am " certain of it."—Well now, I can endorse all that except one thing, that is, with regard to the 1,000*l.*, and I beg you to understand that I at no time told Mr. Gray that he would be called upon to spend 1000*l.* in legitimate expenditure, for really I did not know what he would be called upon to spend. I heard 1,000*l.* mentioned and that led Mr. Gray to say the other day to you what he there said, but I never told him or made any formal proposition to him to spend 1,000*l.* Subsequently to that he informed me that 700*l.* had been paid in to Stuckey's bank, that it had been done after consultation here with his friend Mr. Westropp and the local solicitor, and that that money had been paid in in the belief that it was an ample sum to meet all the expenditure. He did not tell me that in that would be included what he would have to pay me and I do not know what has become of that money, whether it is still there or drawn out, but I do know that subsequently Mr. Gray paid me in town by sending me his own cheque.

39,919. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not it occur to you that he ought to have paid that through the hands of the election agents and that it should appear like other payments?—I supposed it was returned. I have not seen the return.

39,920. That is not down. You would not have received it from him but through the election agent? —I had no knowledge. I did not know what the return was. When I came back to London, I only saw Mr. Gray occasionally; he came to me and said, "Here " is this petition. Here is the draft sent up. Will you " look at it for me." What he was doing at Bridgwater after I went back to London I do not know. He acted quite independently. In my judgment I do not know that I could have done more than bring Mr. Gray to the place. I stayed here with him a night, and allowed him to have his own conversation with the people here, which he did do, and then he himself determined, but not till after he had seen Mr. Westropp.

39,921. (Mr. Anstey.) Then on what did you found your expectation of being employed as the agent in the matter of the election petition?—Simply for this reason, that I was brought down here. I knew Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and I knew most of the people in the town who were going to take part in that petition, and because I was a parliamentary agent. I thought it quite likely that I was to be employed, but I did not make it a point.

39,922. Was that in your mind; the contingency of there being a contested return, and an election petition filed when you first came down?—No, certainly not; I did not know it. I am only anxious about these two points, as to the deception of Mr. Gray. If it had been my own brother or father, I could not have done more than I did for him. I may have failed. I might have done more, but I do not see how.

Mr. G. Harris.

Mr. George Harris sworn.

39,923. (Mr. Price.) You are a stockbroker carrying on business in London?—Yes.

39,924. Will you please tell us (perhaps I had better put the question to you) when did you first become acquainted with Mrs. Westropp in the way of business—In 1862.

39,925. How was the introduction effected?—Miss Stockwood was brought down by clients of ours from Regent Street and introduced personally.

39,926. That is Mrs. Westropp?—Mrs. Westropp. I did not know till I had heard of the evidence which has been given here that she was married.

39,927. (Mr. Price.) How was she introduced to you; just tell us the name?—As a spinster, Marianne Stockwood.

39,928. Introduced by clients of yours?—Yes.

39,929. Who were those clients?—Ravenscroft & Co. If you will allow me to have those books I will just refer to the entry. (The books were handed to the witness.)

39,930. Read the entry if you please?—Yes, I have the entry here. " 25th March 1862. Introduced by " Mr. T. R. Ravenscroft, Conduit Street, Regent " Street." Ravenscroft Brothers, they are outfitters. And on that date we made a purchase of stock, and we described her as "Marianne Stockwood, of Connaught Terrace, Hyde Park, spinster, new account."

39,931. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were the people who introduced her?—Messrs. Ravenscroft of Conduit Street, tailors and outfitters.

39,932. (Mr. Price.) And they were clients of yours?—Yes.

39,933. (Mr. Anstey.) Did they tell you for what purpose she sought to be introduced to you?—No, there was no necessity. She merely wished to make an investment, and she asked what we should recommend a spinster lady to invest in, I immediately recommended government funds.

39,934. Then she invested the sum?—Yes, 1,500*l.*

39,935. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did she give you that money? In notes, or cash, or what?—The entry in the cash-book does not tell us, I think it was in notes.

39,936. Not by cheque?—I won't be positive. I could tell by referring to the bank. It is my impression it was in bank-notes.

39,937. (Mr. Price.) Did it remain there invested till a later period, or was anything done between that period and the time you sold it out for her?—Yes, we made another investment subsequent to that investment before we had made the sale.

39,938. The same money?—We added to that investment.

39,939. I do not know that we need care about that? —It was not a large amount, 70*l.* or 80*l.* It was in 1863.

39,940. Will you turn to your book, if you have got it there, the year 1865, and tell us what you did about money then. Did she receive the dividends from time to time through you?—I did not, she called at the office.

39,941. I mean she received them through your office?—I identified her at the bank.

39,942. You identified her at the bank?—It is usual with a person opening an account at the bank to identify them, and I went with her, nothing more. I have the entry of the sale, "June 1865, 29th. The "whole amount sold for Marianne Stockwood, Con- "naught Terrace, Hyde Park, spinster."

39,943. (Mr. Anstey.) Did she instruct you in person to sell that?—Yes.

39,944. Was she alone?—She was not, another lady was with her, her sister. She introduced me to her sister.

39,945. Nobody else?—No.

39,946. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did she sell the whole amount?—1,666*l.* stock. "All," it is put against it.

39,947. (Mr. Anstey.) I presume she did not tell you for what purpose she wanted it sold?—No.

39,948. Did she say anything about the mode of payment?—Yes, she said she wished to ask me a favour, would I let her have gold. I said, "Well, I don't think you will be able to carry it." And she said, "I have brought my sister, we have two bags." I said, "If you particularly wish it (it's a curious mode "of payment), you shall have gold, if you like. I will "go with you to the bank and they shall pay you in "gold." When the transfer had been made at the bank and she went back, I wrote an open cheque payable to her order, and I went with her to the bank and she had it in gold.

39,949. Do you remember the clerk objecting? Do you remember anybody objecting that it was unusual?—Not the least.

39,950. (Mr. Price.) Making a remark, or anything about ladies wanting so much gold?—Well, the cashier might have made a remark of that kind, but he would not pass any remark to me on the point. He would pay it directly.

39,951. (Mr. Anstey.) In two bags?—In two bags.

39,952. (Mr. Price.) They went away in a cab?—They did.

39,953. Had you any suspicion who this lady was at the time?—Certainly not. Not the slightest.

39,954. (Mr. Anstey.) Nor whether she was married or single?—No. I did not know till Wednesday morning, when she called at our office in London and told us she was a married lady.

39,955. I suppose if you had known you would not have invested the money for a married woman in her maiden name?—No, certainly not. It is not legal.

39,956. (Mr. Price.) That is the thing. The reason why we had you here is that it is very important to clear it up and show that it was a regular transaction?—Perfectly regular.

(Mr. Price.) We desired you to come down to explain that, and also the circumstances of the case.

39,957. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Ravenscroft and Co. introduce her by letter?—No, he came down personally with her.

39,958. Mr. Ravenscroft the elder?—Mr. T. R. Ravenscroft. I do not know which is the elder.

39,959. He gave her name as Miss Stockwood?—Yes. We could not have put the stock into the name without having the name and address.

(Mr. Price.) I think that will do, Mr. Harris.

Mr. Henry Westropp recalled.

Mr. H. Westropp.

(The witness.) Will you allow me to make one remark. I want you to ask Mr. Harris to try and recollect whether Mr. Ravenscroft went down in person, because I have a distinct recollection as I stated yesterday that it was a note. (To Mr. Harris.) I think, Mr. Harris, if you will kindly tax your memory, there was a note and it said "The bearer," She was introduced simply as "the bearer," because I wrote to Mr. Ravenscroft whilst I was in Ireland. The sum of 1,500*l.*, I think, came through a bank in Ireland, a draft. At this moment I am not aware of what bank it was, or whether it was payable to Mr. Harris or not.

(Mr. Anstey.) But you see, Mr. Westropp, Mr. Harris was present and you were not present. Therefore he can speak positively as to Mr. Ravenscroft coming down.

Mr. George Harris recalled.

Mr. G. Harris.

39,960. (Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure about that, Mr. Harris?—I am almost positive. In fact I may say I am positive that Mr. Ravenscroft brought the lady to our office; and I am almost positive it was bank notes.

Mr. Henry Westropp recalled.

Mr. H. Westropp.

39,961. (Mr. Coleridge.) You see, you were in Ireland, Mr. Westropp?—I was in Ireland.

39,962. All you know is that you wrote a letter requesting him to give a letter to "bearer," but you do not know what Mr. Ravenscroft did. You can have no knowledge of that?—I sent the letter to my wife, the introduction. Whether she made use of it or not, I do not know.

(Mr. Price.) Probably a letter would hardly have done?

(Mr. George Harris.) And if we had seen that letter we should not have bought the stock in her maiden name.

Mr. George Harris recalled.

Mr. G. Harris.

39,963. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is one question; we did not know of it before, therefore we could not ask Mrs. Westropp. What became of the balance of the stock. There was 1,666*l.*?—Ah, but you must recollect that is stock, not money. It did not produce fifteen hundred pounds, 1,495*l.* or 1,496*l.*

(Mr. H. Westropp.) I was asked about that second investment, and I think you will find that it was something about the amount of the dividend that accrued.

(Mr. Price.) The dividend re-invested?

(Mr. H. Westropp.) The dividend re-invested.

(Mr. Anstey.) That is what struck me when it was mentioned.

(The witness.) I can tell you if you will wait one second. I will tell you what it was (after referring). Yes, it was; 5*l.* odd to make the amount even, 70*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* in August 1863.

39,964. (Mr. Coleridge.) What amount of stock did Mrs. Westropp get for her 1,500*l.* worth of bank notes?—Oh, I can tell you that. You want the stock?

39,965. I merely want to know what amount of stock she got for her 1,500*l.*?—1,595*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.*

39,966. And when it was sold what did she get?—That is bought at 93⅞ths.

39,967. What did she sell at?—Then I made another purchase.

39,968. Then what was that purchase at?—That was 70*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* That made the 1,666*l.* stock.

39,969. What was that at?—That was at 93¼.

39,970. What did she sell at?—I apprehend the funds were low. I will refer 89⅞ths.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

Mr. G. Harris.

9 Oct. 1869.

39,971. Then there was a considerable loss upon the sale?—Yes, 70*l.* loss.

39,972. (Mr. Anstey.) There was a great difference between 1862 and 1865 in the price of the stock. There would be a loss of nearly 100*l.* on it?—Four per cent.; a loss of nearly 70*l.*

Mr. Henry Westropp re-called.

Mr. H. Westropp.

(The witness.) Allow me to say that my wife has since informed me that to make up that 1,500*l.* from whatever she received, she added the difference between it and the 1,500*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is the reason I asked the question about it.

(The witness.) She added whatever it was.

(Mr. Harris.) It would be four or five pounds.

(Mr. Price.) It would be out of petty cash. Now Mr. Westropp, I think we may release you.

(Mr. Harris.) You do not want to see the cheque with the signature of her maiden name at the back.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, we do not care about it.

(The witness.) I know perfectly well that under the circumstances there was a sort of cloud hanging over me in respect of this matter, but I hope it is now cleared away, and I may be held as having done nothing further than having given the money.

(Mr. Price.) Well, you must not ask us for an expression of opinion, but I think you have given your evidence in a thoroughly satisfactory way, Mr. Westropp.

(Mr. Anstey.) There was one question more I forgot to ask you. I put it in the most general way and the most comprehensive way, and you will please to answer the question particularly if you can. In the course of any one of your contests or elections, or of any contest or any election in which you were concerned either for yourself or another, (here at Bridgwater, of course I mean,) did any person of professional rank, not being a lawyer, solicit of you the sum of 500*l.*, or any other large sum as the condition of giving his vote and influence or his vote or influence. I am not asking you whether you ever gave it, but did you receive an application?

(The witness.) Sir, will you excuse me?

39,973. (Mr. Anstey.) I must have it?—Of course if you must have it, I am exonerated from any blame.

39,974. Certainly?—There was a gentleman who wrote to me in some year preceding 1865, and asked me for a loan. I certainly never mentioned it. I had not any money then. I had some money just before that time, but I had reinvested it in one of the northern railways, and I wrote word to say that I had none at my disposal at that time. The letter I brought down with me amongst others in the year 1865. I am glad I have an opportunity of speaking of it now, because it might appear that I had spoken of it. I never mentioned it to anybody. The gentleman mentioned that I could have as a security two life policies. I knew of course that those policies were no security, because if anything had occurred to him to prevent him, you know, I should have had to keep up the insurances. Therefore, as far as that goes that was no security. In the year 1865 that letter was taken out of my desk. It was in the "Clarence" rooms, and it was taken out of my desk, and it became published.

39,975. (Mr. Anstey.) It became published?—When I say it was published, I mean it had become published abroad.

39,976. Was that letter received by you just before the election of 1865?—Years previously, I believe. I know it was some years previously.

39,977. Did it promise you the vote and influence of the writer either directly or indirectly?—Yes, it did.

39,978. I must ask you the name of the writer?—It is an exceedingly painful thing to me.

39,979. I cannot help it; we must do justice between the great and the small in this borough?—I assure you that.

39,980. Who was it?—Dr. Parsons.

39,981. Did he vote for you at the election of 1865?—No. I think, on the contrary, his influence was against me; certainly he did not vote for me.

J. Jenkins.

James Jenkins recalled.

39,982. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Jenkins, your examination was to be continued. It will shorten your examination very much if you answer as shortly as you can the questions I put to you about this matter of the libel?—I will.

39,983. Of course you know nothing of these legal matters; you know nothing of legal practice. When you said you had brought an action, what you meant was that you had obtained a rule for criminal information?—Just so.

39,984. And there were two criminal informations: one on the prosecution of Mr. Reed of Burnham, who was libelled also, and one on your prosecution?—Just so.

39,985. And one rule was against the "Bridgwater Times," and the other against a Taunton paper for having copied the article?—Just so.

39,986. And you obtained a very satisfactory apology from the Taunton paper, attributing the insertion of the article to the mistake of subordinates, and expressing deep sorrow that they had ever extracted it from the "Bridgwater Times"?—Just so.

39,987. Then that left the "Bridgwater Times" to be the only paper to be prosecuted. That was Mr. Heard's paper?—Just so.

39,988. Very well, then the rule was applied for, and granted by the Court of Queen's Bench?—It was.

39,989. Lord Campbell, in granting the rule, is reported to have said, "This libel is a very grave "imputation. Great license is generally allowed at "elections, but such great and scandalous charges as "these complained of cannot be endured"?—Yes.

39,990. And the effect of the libel was what you stated yesterday, that you had been party to the bribing of a large body of men at 25*l.* a head?—Quite so.

39,991. And then added, what you did not state yesterday, they called you one Jenkins, and said you were deacon of a Baptist congregation?—Such was not the case.

39,992. I am only asking what the libel was, that you were the deacon of a Baptist congregation, and they made some very scurrilous remarks on that also?—They did.

39,993. Then I understand, therefore, that at the time when Mr. Lovibond without your knowledge, and against your will, compromised the matter in the way you have described by withdrawing from the criminal prosecution in your name, and on your behalf, although against your will, you had incurred considerable expense already in the matter of that prosecution?—Just so.

39,994. Very well; and that expense you were called upon by Benjamin Lovibond to pay to him—make good to him?—No, I refused to pay it.

39,995. Well, you were called upon by him to pay it; he asked you to pay it?—No, he did not.

39,996. Then how did you know it was 37*l.*?—32*l.*

39,997. How did you know it was 32*l.*?—Mr. Bragg paid 32*l.* to him. I went with Mr. Bragg to his office.

39,998. Tell me. Mr. Bragg is the Taunton proprietor or editor of the paper which had made a handsome apology, and which had only copied the libel?—Just so.

39,999. Mr. Bragg paid that?—Mr. Bragg asked me to go to Mr. Lovibond's with him and to cut down the expenses, or something of that kind in that way.

40,000. And he paid it?—He paid 32*l.*, and then I made a very strong remark to Mr. Lovibond. I said, "I will never pay a shilling. If you press me for it I "would rather go to gaol. After serving me in the "manner you have I will never pay it." Consequently I never had a bill for it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But it had been paid by this man. Why should you pay it?

40,001. (Mr. Anstey.) No, the second one. I understand you to say that Mr. Bragg was called upon to pay the costs of the rule and information which had been obtained against him?—Just so.

40,002. But the cost of the rule which had been obtained against Mr. Heard were not paid by Mr. Heard, because Mr. Lovibond thought fit not to make them a part of the undertaking?—Just so.

40,003. Then you said, "As you have behaved in "this shameful manner you shall lose your costs alto-"gether. You shall not have them from me"?—Just so.

40,004. Then you were asked why you did not take proceedings against Mr. Lovibond. Were your circumstances such as would have made it worth your while to go to a large expenditure at that time?—I was told generally, told by many people in Bridgwater, that I had no power. "If you put your case into a solicitor's hands," it was told me, I had not the slightest power to interfere.

40,005. They gave you very bad advice, quite contrary to law?—I never heard of that until your secretary kindly told me that the other day.

40,006. Who told you that you had not the slightest power against Lovibond?—Mr. Lovibond and his clerk, and several others whom I conversed with about it in the town.

40,007. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that you asked Mr. Lovibond himself?—No.

40,008. Then which Mr. Lovibond was it who told you that you had no power?—Benjamin. I had threatened him, and he said, "You have no power." Foster, I believe, his clerk, told me I had no power whatever.

40,009. Did not you think of asking any other attorney?—Well, there was a case tried in the Court of Queen's Bench some little time before, which he referred me to.

40,010. You went and looked at this case?—He showed me that case wherein some person had compromised a large amount of money which was tried in the Court of Queen's Bench respecting some lady.

40,011. (Mr. Coleridge.) Swinfen v. Swinfen, I suppose?—I forget the name.

40,012. (Mr. Anstey.) Finish your answer. He showed you a case where there had been a compromise, and what?—That it had been compromised by the attorney against the wish of the lady, and he said, "What is the use for you to try it?" Of course I then gave it over, and I have ever since been lying under this scandalous report.

40,013. I think you are quite entitled to make that letter of apology from the other editor part of your evidence. Say whether you received that letter from Mr. Bragg (passing a letter to the witness)?—I did. This is Mr. Bragg's letter of apology to me.

40,014. Read it out. Before you read it I will ask you, was it that case Mr. Lovibond let you read which had just been decided a little while before. You will recollect it was a case where Sir Frederick Thesiger was counsel, and had compromised the suit on behalf of Mrs. Swinfen?—I believe that was the name, but I am not quite positive. But that was showed me to show I had no power. (The following letter was read by the witness):

"Somerset County Herald Office, Taunton,
"Dear sir, May 13, 1859.

"The announcement in the newspapers yes-"terday & the notice I received to-day that you had "instituted legal proceedings against me took me "quite by surprise. My attention has, consequently, "ben directed to the offensive matter published, & I "beg to say I most deeply regret that the columns of "of the Somerset County Herald should inadvertently "have been made the vehicle for causing you the "slightest possible annoyance. I hasten to make "every explanation & apology. On enquiry I find "that a reader and reporter in my employ noticing in "the 'Bridgwater Times,' a paragraph referring to "the election gave out the one in question (amongst "others), as an article of news for the 'Herald.' In "so doing he only glanced at it casually and there-"fore did not notice that it was so personal, and as "both he and myself are perfect and entire strangers "to you I think that in justice we must be acquitted "of having the slightest purpose or object in wound-"ing your feelings, and I assure you that I had no "such object, and being a stranger I never had the "slightest malice, nor any unkindly feeling whatever "towards you. The publication of the matter referred "to was therefore, so far as you and others are per-"sonally concerned truly accidental, but as I have in "my capacity, as publisher of the Herald, given you "offence, though without intentional malice, I feel "that every apology and reparation which one man "can make to another both publicly and privately is "due to you. Without prejudice, therefore, I write "this note to say that I deeply regret the publication "and I am ready to make such apologies and amends "as may, in reason, be considered necessary. I trust "therefore, under these circumstances, and having in "publishing the paragraph given the source from "whence it came, you will accept my offer and con-"sent to stay further proceedings which I have no "doubt are painful to you as well as to

"Yours very obliged,
"Mr. James Jenkins, William Bragg.
"Bridgwater."

(Mr. Anstey.) It should be on the notes. You are perfectly justified in reading the letter.

(The witness.) All I wanted the Commissioners to do was to investigate the truth. Since you have been sitting here I have been taunted by many of the Conservative party with being a briber.

40,015. (Mr. Price.) Your name has not been mentioned in the proceedings?—But they have taunted me.

(Mr. Price.) Your name has not been mentioned as a briber or bribee. If it had been mentioned you would have had the fullest opportunity of denying it. But it has not been stated and you will not be reported to the House of Commons as having been engaged in bribery.

James Trapnell sworn.

J. Trapnell.

40,016. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Trapnell?—A messenger and fruit dealer.

40,017. Are you a voter?—Yes.

40,018. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,019. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

40,020. Did you get anything for it?—No; I had a promise.

40,021. Who promised you?—Mr. Leaker.

40,022. How much did he promise you?—5l.

40,023. How much did you get finally?—I had 1*l.* afterwards and run up a bill of 4*l.* which Mr. Leaker agreed to pay.

40,024. (Mr. Coleridge.) For a suit of clothes?—Yes.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

J. Trapnell.

9 Oct. 1869.

40,025. (Mr. Price.) Did you have 5*l.* worth?—Yes.

40,026. Did you vote at any other election before that?—No.

40,027. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you one of the new voters?—Yes.

40,028. As a householder paying rates?—Yes.

ISAAC TRAPNELL sworn.

I. Trapnell.

40,029. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

40,030. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,031. How?—Westropp and Gray.

40,032. Did you get anything for it?—Not at the time.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But you did get it, you know.

40,033. (Mr. Price.) What did you get?—I only got 2*l.* I was promised 5*l.*

40,034. Is that all you got in money?—Yes.

40,035. (Mr. Anstey.) Who promised it to you?—Mr. Leaker.

40,036. How much did he promise?—5*l.*

40,037. (Mr. Price.) Why did not you get the other 3*l.*?—Because I have not been for it.

40,038. Did you ever vote at any other election?—Yes.

40,039. Did you vote in 1866?—I had not a vote then.

40,040. When had you a vote?—1852, I think.

40,041. How did you vote in 1852?—Follett and Tynte.

40,042. Did you get anything?—10*l.*

40,043. Who from?—Mr. Heal.

40,044. (Mr. Anstey.) William Heal?—Yes.

40,045. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote before that?—Yes.

40,046. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at any other time?—Yes.

40,047. Well tell us?—1857 I voted for Kinglake and Follett.

40,048. (Mr. Price.) What did you get then?—Nothing.

40,049. (Mr. Coleridge.) How was that?—I do not know.

40,050. Nothing afterwards?—No, nothing. In 1859 I voted for Padwick and Westropp, and I got 10*l.*

40,051. Who from?—From Mr. Walkem.

40,052. (Mr. Anstey.) What, the clerk to Mr. Trevor?—No; Mr. Walkem, the grocer.

40,053. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he alive?—Yes.

40,054. (Mr. Price.) Give us his christian name. Where does he live?—Thomas Walkem; he lives in High Street.

40,055. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1865?—No.

40,056. Or 1866?—No.

40,057. (Mr. Anstey.) How was that?—I had no vote.

40,058. How did you happen to have no vote?—Because I gave up shop-keeping.

S. Lee.

SAMUEL LEE sworn.

40,059. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I was a cabinet maker by trade; but I sell beer at the present time.

40,060. Did you vote at the last election?—For Westropp.

40,061. Did you get anything for it?—Not a farthing.

40,062. Any treating at your house?—No, not at all, not in the least.

40,063. Did you vote in 1866?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Vanderbyl?

40,064. (Mr. Anstey.) Vanderbyl and Patton?—Yes.

40,065. (Mr. Price.) How did you vote then?—I voted for Patton. 10*l.* I had.

40,066. Who from?—Mr. Jarman.

40,067. Did you vote at the other election of Patton?—No.

40,068. Only once?—Only once.

40,069. Only once that year?—In 1865 I voted for Westropp.

40,070. What did you get then?—10*l.*

40,071. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who from?—Frederick Jarman.

40,072. In 1859 did you vote?—I voted for Tynte and Kinglake.

40,073. What did you get then?—10*l.*

40,074. Who from?—Mr. Hill.

40,075. Did you ever get paid on both sides.?—No.

40,076. (Mr. Anstey.) From Mr. William Heal was it?—Hill, the baker.

40,077. Not Heal, the brewer?—No.

40,078. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you turn Conservative?—I always voted Conservative for a great many years.

40,079. But you voted both. You voted for Tynte and Kinglake in 1859?—Yes.

40,080. What made you turn Tory, 10*l.*?—No.

40,081. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the christian name of the man who bribed you in 1859?—I do not know that I ever was bribed in 1859.

40,082. Well, when you voted for Tynte and Kinglake. What is his christian name?—Thomas Hill.

40,083. (Mr. Price, pointing.) Is that the man?—Yes.

40,084. Well go on?—That is all that I had.

40,085. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything in 1857?—No.

40,086. Or anything a longer time ago?—No, nothing a longer time ago.

40,087. What have you got altogether in your lifetime?—Three tens. I was in a good business a great many years and I did not want money then.

40,088. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your business now?—I was a cabinet maker and carried on trade in this town a great many years.

40,089. A master cabinet maker?—Yes, master cabinet maker.

40,090. Yet you took bribes?—No, not then; but I got an old man and the money did me good.

40,091. You took money in 1859?—No.

40,092. You have told us so. Tynte and Kinglake?—Tynte and Kinglake I did.

40,093. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us you got 10*l.* for it?—Yes.

40,094. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you were a cabinet maker at that time?—No, I was not. My labour was done, I went and took to my own house and sold beer.

J. Southard.

JOSEPH SOUTHARD sworn.

40,095. What are you?—A tinplate worker.

40,096. Where do you work?—I am carrying on business on my own account.

40,097. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

40,098. How?—Mr. Westropp and Gray.

40,099. Did you get anything for it?—Nothing at all.

40,100. Any promise?—No.

40,101. Did you vote in 1866, Vanderbyl's election?—I did.

40,102. How?—For Mr. Patton.

40,103. Did you get anything?—I got 10*l.* at Mr. Patton's first election.

40,104. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get at the second ?—Ten.

40,105. Ten at each ?—Ten at each.

40,106. Who from ?—I am not aware who it was now.

40,107. (Mr. Price.) Was it at the "Bull and Butcher," or one of the inns ? Was it at one of the public houses ?—Well, it was at the "Three Crowns." I am not aware who gave it to me.

40,108. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1865 ?—I voted in 1865, Westropp.

40,109. What did you get ?—10*l.*

40,110. Who from ?—Well, it has been stated here, I believe.

(Mr. Anstey.) Well, never mind.

40,111. (Mr. Price.) Never mind what has been stated here. Who did you get it from ?—I was just going to mention it to you.

40,112. Tell us first who was it from ?—I do not know.

40,113. Where did you get it ?—At Mr. Harden's.

40,114. Now, what were you going to say ? Give your explanation ?—It has been stated here by Truman that I received 20*l.* from him, which I deny.

40,115. Did you get anything from Truman ?—I do not remember.

40,116. Will you undertake to swear ?—I do not know whether it was from Truman or Harden.

40,117. What did you get ?—10*l.*

40,118. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will you swear you did not get 20*l.* ?—I will swear I did not get 20*l.*

40,119. Or 15*l.* ?—Or. 15*l.* Never more than 10*l.*

40,120. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote in 1859 ?—I never had a vote before.

JOHN PITMAN sworn. J. Pitman.

40,121. (Mr. Anstey.) Where do you live ?—Bridgwater.

40,122. In whose house ?—Mr. Joseph Smith's.

40,123. Do you remember his raising your rent ?—Yes.

40,124. When was that ?—Immediately after Mr. Padwick's election.

40,125. Mr. Padwick's ?—Yes ; the poor gentleman who is dead.

40,126. Mr. Patton ?—Mr. Patton.

40,127. The first election ?—No, the last election.

40,128. How much did he raise your rent ?—Seven pounds a year.

40,129. Had he said anything to you about your tenancy before the election ?—Never a word.

40,130. Had he ever asked you for your vote ?—Never.

40,131. Nor threatened you ?—No.

40,132. You are quite sure that he never said to you, "If you do not vote right you must leave the land" ?—Never ; he never mentioned a word of politics his life to me.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then you have entirely refuted the charge against Mr. Smith that was brought against him by, I forget who.

40,133. (Mr. Coleridge.) And is the rent you pay now a fair rent for the house ?—Well, the only thing I grumble at, I pay a little more than my neighbour.

40,134. He says it is the cheapest rented house in the street ?—I do not think it is an extravagant rent.

40,135. He told us that it is the cheapest rented house in the street ?—Well, the fellow house is 7*l.* a year less and is quite as good. There is one thing I should like to state, if you please. You have asked other witnesses. I have been for eight and twenty years a voter for Bridgwater and I have never received a farthing or a farthing's worth from all the candidates that have come down.

40,136. Have you ever been offered anything ?—Never.

40,137. (Mr. Anstey.) Which side have you voted ?—Liberal.

40,138. Always Liberal ?—Always.

40,139. (Mr. Price.) You are quite right to say that. It is a pleasure to hear it.

JOHN WALFORD sworn. J. Walford.

40,140. (Mr. Price.) You are a clerk to Mr. Trevor ?—I was. I have left there recently 40,141. You have left there ?—Yes.

40,142. About the sea captain Rees ; what do you know about him ?—I paid him 5*l.* for expenses coming over from Milford, and also for the time the vessel was detained through his coming home.

40,143. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was that ?—That was after Mr. Westropp's election, I should say some four or five months.

40,144. By whose orders ?—I believe Mr. James Trevor gave me the money ; but Mr. Trevor had refused several times to pay Captain Rees the money and after that he went to Mr. Bealy Smith, and Mr. Bealy Smith came and saw Mr. James Trevor three or four times about it.

40,145. I suppose you and Mr. James Trevor were both aware it was an illegal payment ?—Well, I do not know myself, but I believe Mr. James Trevor did, and he refused it in the first place.

40,146. That was the reason he refused it ?—I believe it was.

40,147. Did Bealy Smith give you the money, or Mr. Trevor ?—I believe it was Mr. James Trevor.

40,148. Are you a voter ?—No.

40,149. Never had a vote ?—No.

WILLIAM CROWDEN sworn. W. Crowden.

40,150. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A labourer.

40,151. Did you vote at the last election ?—No.

40,152. Had you a vote ?—Yes, in 1865.

40,153. But you did not vote at the last election ?—No.

40,154. Did you vote in 1866 at either of the elections then ?—No, in 1865.

40,155. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get anything for not voting at the last election ?—I only had a vote in 1865.

40,156. (Mr. Price.) In 1865 how did you vote ?—Westropp.

40,157. Did you get anything ?—Yes.

40,158. How much ?—10*l.*

40,159. Who from ?—I cannot say whether it was Harden or Truman.

40,160. There is put down opposite your name a man of the name of Hamp, but you cannot say which it was ?—No.

40,161. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got 10*l.* ?—Yes.

40,162. Did you get anything from the other side ?—No, I never had but that vote.

WILLIAM HUGHES sworn. W. Hughes.

40,163. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A confectioner.

40,164. A master ?—Yes.

40,165. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

40,166. How ?—For Westropp and Gray.

40,167. Did you get anything ?—No.

40,168. Any promise of any kind ?—No.

40,169. Did you vote in 1866 ; Vanderbyl's election ?—Yes.

40,170. How ?—Patton.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

9 Oct. 1869.

W. Hughes.

40,171. Did you get anything ?—5l.

40,172. Who from ?—Mr. Temblett.

40,173. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get another 5l. afterwards ?—No.

40,174. Did you vote at the first election of 1866 ?—Yes.

40,175. How did you vote then ?—Patton.

40,176. Did you get anything then ?—10*l.*

40,177. How was it you only got 5l. afterwards ? Was any promise made that you would have it made up to 10*l.* ?—No.

40,178. Whom did you get the 10*l.* from ?—Mr. Harden.

40,179. How ?—Mr. Westropp.

40,180. Did you get anything ?—10*l.*

40,181. Who from ?—Mr. Harden.

40,182. Did you vote in 1859 ?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Padwick's election ?

40,183. (Mr. Price.) Padwick and Westropp ?—Yes.

40,184. Did you get anything ?—10*l.*

40,185. Who from ?—Mr. Harden.

40,186. Did you vote in 1857 ; Follett ?—Yes.

40,187. How did you vote ?—Mr. Follett.

40,188. (Mr. Coleridge.) And who else ?

(Mr. Price.) Follett and Mansell ?—No, Follett by himself.

40,189. Did you get anything ?—No.

40,190. Did you vote in 1852 ?—No.

40,191. Did you get anything at any time from the other side at any of these elections ?—No.

40,192. Nor any promise ?—No.

40,193. Then you have had 45*l.* ?—No.

(Mr. Price.) 35*l.*

F. C. Temblett.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled.

(The witness.) I paid Mr. Hughes the 5l. after the election. His name was given to me as having been paid 5l. previously. I did not pay 5l. previously.

W. Hughes.

WILLIAM HUGHES recalled.

40,194 (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Temblett paid you 5l. after the election ?—Yes.

40,195. After Mr. Patton's election ?—Some weeks after.

40,196. Who paid you 5l. at the election ?—No one.

40,197. Did not you get two 5l. notes about that time ?—No. I had nothing at all. I met Mr. Temblett some few weeks after the election, and he called me in and he said, "Here is a present for you."

F. C. Temblett.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled.

40,198. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Temblett, his name was given you by whom ?—Mr. Tromp gave it to me when he came down. If I had known he had not had 5l. before I should have paid him 10*l.* His name was given to me as having had 5l.

J. Pearce.

JAMES PEARCE sworn.

40,199. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A barber.

40,200. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

40,201. How did you vote ?—Westropp and Gray.

40,202. Did you get anything ?—No.

40,203. Any promise of anything ?—No.

40,204. Did you vote at the election of 1866, the second one, Vanderbyl ?

40,205. (Mr. Coleridge.) Vanderbyl and Patton ?—Yes, I voted for Patton.

40,206. What did you get ?—Nothing at all.

40,207. Nothing ?—No.

40,208. Any present after the election ?—No.

40,209. Did you vote when Patton stood the first time ?—I suppose I voted both times.

40,210. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get the first time ?—Nothing at all.

40,211. Do you mean to say you were not bribed at all ?—Not to my knowledge.

40,212. Had you any money left at your house ?—I do not know.

40,213. Did your wife tell you ?—No.

(Frederick Charles Temblett.) Harden returned him. Harden gave it to him.

(The witness.) Harden gave it to me ?

40,214. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Harden pay you at Patton's election ?—No.

40,215. (Mr. Price.) You swear it ?—I do.

40,216. (Mr. Coleridge.) At neither one nor the other ?—No.

40,217. At neither ?—At neither.

40,218. Nor made you a present ?—No.

(Mr. Price.) Stand down for the present. You must not go away. We will send for Harden.

J. Murlis.

JAMES MURLIS sworn.

40,219. (Mr. Price.) You are a gardener. Did you vote at the last election ?—No.

40,220. Did you vote at the elections of 1866 ?—Yes.

40,221. Both of them ?—Yes.

40,222. How did you vote ?—Both elections for Mr. Patton.

40,223. What did you get for each election ?—10*l.* each.

40,224. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who from ?—I believe it was Mr. Jarman,—one.

40,225. (Mr. Anstey.) Jarvis ?—Jarman,—one.

40,226. (Mr. Price.) Yes, and whom was the other from ?—I do not know who the other was. I only see the hand.

40,227. Where did you get it, at the "Bull and Butcher" ?—Not at the "Bull and Butcher."

40,228. At the "Three Crowns" ?—No.

40,229. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, tell us where ?—Down at St. John Street ; down at Pinns'.

40,230. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.

40,231. How ?—Westropp.

40,232. What did you get ?—10*l.*

40,233. Who from ?—I cannot recollect.

40,234. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you get it ?—I cannot recollect. Harden's, I think.

40,235. Harden's ?—Yes, but I do not know who gave it to me. My eyesight is bad ; I cannot see.

40,236. (Mr. Price.) You are partially blind, are you ?—Yes.

40,237. Did you vote in 1859 ?—Yes.

40,238. How did you vote then, Padwick and Westropp ?—Padwick and Westropp.

40,239. Did you get anything then ?—10*l.*

40,240. Who from ?—Murlis.

40,241. Did you vote in 1857 ?—No, I had not a vote.

ROBERT WHITEFIELD sworn. R. Whitefield.

40,242. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Whitefield?—A currier.

40,243. How did you vote at the last election?—Mr. Westropp and Gray.

40,244. Did you get anything?—No.

40,245. Who were your employers?—I work for myself.

40,246. Have you got the curriers yard down on the quay? Is that your place?—John Street.

40,247. Did you vote in 1866 at the last election then?—At Mr. Patton's two elections.

40,248. What did you get each time?—10*l.* each.

40,249. Who from?—Frederick Jarman.

40,250. Did you vote in 1865?—No.

40,251. 1859?—1867.

40,252. No, no; 1857?—1857; yes.

40,253. Did you vote in 1865 when Westropp was returned?—Yes, I did.

40,254. Did you get anything then?—No.

40,255. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing at all?—No.

40,256. (Mr. Price.) How was it?—I did not ask for it.

40,257. Nothing promised and nothing after the election?—No.

40,258. In 1859, did you vote?—No.

40,259. How was that?—I was not here.

40,260. In 1857 did you vote?—Yes.

40,261. Who for?—Kinglake.

40,262. Did you get anything?—Yes, 2*l.*

40,263. Who from?—Henry Hayward.

40,264. Was that all you got?—Yes.

40,265. Why did you sell your vote so cheap?—I do not know.

40,266. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote in 1852?—No.

40,267. Did you have a vote before 1847?—No.

FREDERICK HARDEN recalled. F. Harden.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Look at that man behind you, Pearce?

40,268. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Harden, did you pay that man?—No; the wife, I believe.

40,269. (Mr. Anstey.) You paid his wife?—Yes.

40,270. How often—how many elections?—Only twice.

40,271. He says he does not know that any money was left at his house?—Well, the wife said that he would have nothing to do with it, but it was between me and her.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then we must have Mrs. Pearce here.

JAMES PEARCE recalled. J. Pearce.

40,272. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean your wife never gave you any of this money that she got from Mr. Harden?—Not that I know of.

40,273. Did not you know that she had got 10*l.* that she could not account for?—No, I went freely to the poll.

40,274. Did she never tell you anything about it, up to the present day?—She did not.

40,275. Do you mean this is the first time you have heard of it?—She has not told me anything.

40,276. Has somebody else told you?—No.

40,277. Is this the first time that you ever heard of it?—It is the first time I heard that Mr. What's-his-name gave me any money. I did not know that he had given any.

40,278. Do you mean that your wife never told you?—No.

40,279. (Mr. Anstey.) Wait a moment Mr. Pearce. I presume that you had told your wife, had you not, before this, that if she ever took money for your vote she was to say nothing to you about it?—Yes, I did for this reason—I will give you the reason. Before that I gave my vote, and took a bribe for it.

40,280. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was that?—That was at Patton's, I think.

40,281. What did you get?—10*l.*

40,282. (Mr. Price.) Why did you cease to take it?—After taking that I was seized very ill, and then I resolved never to take a bribe any more.

40,283. (Mr. Coleridge.) But to let your wife take it instead?—And if my wife took it, it was quite against my will.

40,284. (Mr. Anstey.) You told her she was never to tell you?—She was never to say anything to me about it.

(Mr. Price.) You thought you would make your conscience easy in that way?

40,285. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often have you been bribed altogether?—Twice.

40,286. When was it?—1857.

40,287. Whom did you vote for?—I cannot tell who I voted for; I think it was Follett.

40,288. What did you get?—5*l.*

40,289. Who from?—From Mr. Smith's office.

40,290. Bealy Smith's office?—I think it was Bealy Smith's father.

40,291. Then in 1859 you got 10*l.* to vote for Padwick?—Yes.

40,292. Who paid you that?—Murlis.

40,293. (Mr. Anstey.) In 1857 did you vote?—I voted. I never took anything else.

40,294. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1852?—It is very possible. I cannot tell how long ago I voted.

40,295. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get money at other previous elections?—No, only those two. I was bribed at those two elections, and since that I resolved——

40,296. (Mr. Price.) You say you were taken ill?—Yes.

40,297. And then you began to repent?—I did. I was sorry that I had ever done it before.

Mr. JOHN PARSONS recalled. Mr. J. Parsons.

40,298. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Parsons, you are a medical man practising here. Mr. Westropp has mentioned your name in connexion with a letter which he says he received from you between the years 1859 and 1865. He has not fixed exactly the date; it was somewhere between. Will you explain that?—Yes, I can explain the circumstances very well. I knew Mr. Westropp quite well enough; not politically at all. I was never mixed up with him in any way in that respect, and never voted for him, and I asked him if he could favour me with a loan of 500*l.* on security which Mr. Brice was to approve. It was not convenient to him, and the thing dropped. He has told me since that the letter I wrote to him was abstracted out of his desk and stolen, and that probably people might make unkind remarks about it, and he begged to inform me that he had no knowledge of how that letter got away.

40,299. (Mr. Anstey.) In that letter, he says, you promised him your vote and influence?—No, I did not promise him anything in that way. I promised him, I think, generally speaking, that if he could confer such a favour upon me, perhaps I should have an opportunity some day of repaying it. It had nothing to do with an election. I said nothing about electioneering. It was a long way off any election. I did not anticipate any election.

40,300. (Mr. Anstey.) He said it did refer to his election ?—I am perfectly willing to take any onus you may put upon me.

40,301. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was three years before the election ?—It was quite in a business way, and I should have referred him to Mr. Brice, my solicitor.

40,302. You referred him to Mr. Brice?—No, I was about to do it. It was not convenient for Mr. Westropp to do it. It was to have passed through Mr. Brice's hands.

40,303. (Mr. Anstey.) Then he said you did not vote for him ?—No.

40,304. He says, on the contrary, you did a great deal to prevent his winning the election ?—I beg your pardon. I never did anything of the kind against him. I never went to any meetings. I never asked a person for a vote.

40,305. I am only telling you what he said?—That is a mistake. If it had been possible to have had a coalition here, and returned two members for the peace and quietness of the town, I should have been very much delighted, and I should have voted for Mr. Westropp.

40,306. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have always been a Tynteite, I believe ?—Yes, but I voted for Broadwood once, upon the understanding that the borough was to go on in a peaceable manner.

T. Herbert.

THOMAS HERBERT sworn.

40,307. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—Cabinet-maker.

40,308. Working on your own account ?—Yes.

40,309. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

40,310. Just give us your electioneering history ?—I commenced voting in 1847. I then voted for Tynte and Gazelee.

40,311. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get anything for it ?—No.

(Mr. Price.) You must tell us then.

40,312. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well, now the next election, in 1852 ?—I was under a Liberal employer before, and I thought it was better to vote according to my employer.

40,313. In 1852 whom did you vote for ?—Follett and Mansell. I was my own employer.

40,314. What did you get ?—Nothing.

40,315. Any promise ?—No.

40,316. (Mr. Anstey.) When you say you thought it better, did your employer ask you for your vote ?—Not at all. I thought I would not risk my situation.

40,317. Did he ever ask you for your vote ?—No.

40,318. In 1857 did you vote ?—Yes.

40,319. Who for ?—Follett.

40,320. In 1859 you got something then ?—From Charles Lear ; old Mr. Lear, through Murlis.

40,321. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the present Mr. Lear, or his father ?—The present.

40,322. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1865 how did you vote ?—I voted for Westropp.

40,323. What did you get ?—10*l.*

40,324. Who from ?—Mr. Batten.

40,325. 1866 ?—I voted for Patton.

40,326. What did you get ?—5*l.* from Hayward, and 5*l.* previous to the second election of Patton.

40,327. That was 10*l.* What did you get at the other election ?—Not a farthing.

40,328. The last time what did you get ?—Westropp and Gray ? Not a farthing.

40,329. And that is your experience ?—That is my experience.

J. Bottomley.

JONAS BOTTOMLEY recalled.

40,330. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Bottomley, this is Saturday afternoon. I think you came first into the witness box about Wednesday week, and you have been adding something at times since. Are you prepared now to make a clean breast of it, and tell us all about the history of your coming from Tiverton ?—I lived in Charmouth in 1856, and in 1858 or 1859 when a candidate put up for Lyme I worked for him at that election and had 20*l.*

40,331. That was for Lyme ?—Yes.

40,332. We are not asking about Lyme. I want to know the history of your coming from Tiverton that day. You said at first you did not vote. The poll book says you did vote. You said first you got no money. It was proved afterwards that you were offered 2*l.* 10*s.*, and you did not think it enough. You acknowledged you asked for 5*l.* and would not swear you did not ask for 10*l.* Now will you give us the true version of that ?—Yes, I will tell you all that I recollect.

40,333. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is it ?—I came over from Tiverton in 1866. I came to Bridgwater. I voted for Vanderbyl at his election, and I got 10*l.*

40,334. Who from ?—Mr. Allan I think it was.

40,335. Was that the time that Dyment fetched you up, or the time that Haviland fetched you up ?—Haviland.

40,336. When Dyment fetched you up what did you get then ?—I should not like to swear that I got the expenses, 2*l.* 10*s.*

40,337. Will you swear you had not ?—To the best of my recollection I had nothing, to the best of my recollection.

40,338. Did not you ask for 10*l.*, and you would not take 2*l.* 10*s.* ?—I did not ask for 10*l.*

40,339. Did not you ask for more than 2*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* for the trouble of coming from Tiverton ?—I thought the expenses were rather small.

40,340. It is only about 5*s.* the fare ?—Well, it was more than that, for my loss of time, and one thing and another.

40,341. Did you get 10*l.* at that election or not ?—No, I did not.

40,342. How much have you got altogether in your lifetime for voting at Bridgwater ?—10*l.*

40,343. That is all ?—That is all.

40,344. That you swear ?—I will swear.

40,345. And 20*l.* at Lyme ?—Yes.

E. Jarman.

EDWARD JARMAN sworn.

40,346. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A hatter.

40,347. How did you vote at the last election ?—Westropp and Gray.

40,348. Did you get anything for it ?—No.

40,349. No promise or anything of the kind ?—No.

40,350. Did you vote in Vanderbyl's election in 1866 ?—No.

40,351. Did you vote for Mr. Patton ?—Oh yes, yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Well, why did you say "No ?"

40,352. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Mr. Patton both times he stood here ?—Yes.

40,353. How much did you get ?—I had one 10*l.*

40,354. Who was that from ?—Jarman.

40,355. Which time ?—The first time.

40,356. You got something after that ?—No, not a farthing.

40,357. Not a present ?—No.

40,358. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.

40,359. How much did you get ;—10*l.*

40,360. Who from ?—Mr. Jarman.

40,361. Did you vote in 1859, Padwick and Westropp ?—Yes.

40,362. How much did you get ?—10*l.*

40,363. Who from ?—Mr. Murlis.

40,364. Did you vote in 1857, Follett and Mansell ?—Yes.

40,365. Did you get anything for it ?—No, I did not.

William Matthews sworn.

W. Matthews.

40,366. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a pattern maker.

40,367. How did you vote at the last last election?—I voted for Westropp and Gray.

40,368. Did you get anything?—No.

40,369?—Any promise?—No.

40,370. Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Patton stood the last time?—1866?

40,371. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Patton's election?—I did not vote for Mr. Patton; not that second time.

40,372. Whom did you vote for?—I voted for Vanderbyl.

40,373. What did you get?—I got 20*l.*

40,374. Who from?—From Mr. Roberts's daughter.

40,375. (Mr. Price.) Had you been offered anything on the other side?—I believe Mr. Jarman came down and left 10*l.* at my house, but I knew nothing of it.

40,376. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever give it back to him?—No. I will tell you the reason. I was up at the "Clarence" hotel. There was 30 of us locked up together, and we stayed there till Mr. Gray had lost his seat. They then told us that we could go were we liked.

40,377. (Mr. Price.) "Mr. Gray!" We are talking about Vanderbyl and Patton?—I was up there for Mr. Gray, with the intention of voting for Mr. Gray.

40,378. Will you attend to the question. You got 20*l.* for voting for Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

40,379. And you had 10*l.* also from Jarman. Did you pay it back?—I did not know it at that time. I was up at the "Clarence hotel" till Mr. Gray lost his seat.

40,380. What nonsense you are talking! Vanderbyl and Gray did not stand at that time. Mr. Patton we are talking about?—Mr. Patton I mean to say. I made a mistake. I meant Mr. Patton. I was up at the "Clarence." There was 30 of us locked up there till Mr. Patton lost his seat.

40,381. Locked up?—Yes.

40,382. Where were you locked up?—In a small room.

40,383. What room?—A small room first, and then we went into a large one.

40,384. Who kept the key?—I do not know. In the large room we were not locked in at all, I think.

40,385. You were locked in in the small room?—Yes.

40,386. Go on?—Then when Mr. Patton lost his seat they came and said we could go where we liked. I met Mr. Roberts on the bridge, and he asked me if I had been to poll, and I said "No." He said, "Will you go with us?" I said, "I don't know." He said, "If you will go I will give you 20*l.*" I said, "You have lowered the standard."

40,387. Do not keep on with your "He says," and "I says," Why did not you give the 10*l.* back, that you got from the other side?—I did not know it at the time.

40,388. Why did you not give it back afterwards?—Why, because Mr. Jarman never came and asked me for the money, and I did not know who to give it to.

40,389. You got 10*l.* from one, and 20*l.* from the other?—I did.

40,390. What did you get at the first election of Mr. Patten?—5*l.*

40,391. In 1865; Westropp?—I got 10*l.*

40,392. Who from?—Jarman.

40,393. In 1859 did you vote?—Yes.

40,394. Whom did you vote for?—Padwick and Westropp.

40,395. What did you get?—10*l.*

40,396. Who from?—Murlis.

40,397. In 1857 what did you get?—That is the only money I did get.

40,398. You seem to have got a good deal. You got 60*l.* altogether?—I have been a voter for the last 16 years, and I voted three or four times and never got anything.

40,399. Did you get anything at the old elections?—No.

40,400. You made up for it at the later times?—I was very sorry for it.

Henry Chapman Cook sworn.

H. C. Cook.

40,401. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A storekeeper at Messrs. Hennett and Spinks.

40,402. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes, for Westropp and Gray.

40,403. Did you get anything?—No.

40,404. Did you vote under any influence or promise or anything?—Nothing of the sort.

40,405. Did you vote in 1866?—I did.

40,406. At both elections?—Yes.

40,407. How did you vote both times?—For Mr. Patton.

40,408. How much did you get?—10*l.*

40,409. Each time?—Yes.

40,410. Who from?—Mr. Jarvis.

40,411. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

40,412. Who for?—Westropp.

40,413. How much did you get?—5*l.*

40,414. Who from?—Mr. Jarvis.

40,415. Did you vote in 1859?—That was my first vote.

40,416. How was it you only got 5*l.*?—I know no reason for it. I only know that I did not get more.

George Chapel Harden sworn.

G. C. Harden.

40,417. (Mr. Price.) Are you the father of the Mr. Harden who figures in these proceedings?—Yes.

40,418. I will ask you one general question. Have you ever received anything for your vote?—Never a farthing. I never had a vote. I have only lived in the town a few years. I have lived in the parish since 1825, and only lived in the town since 1864.

40,419. Were you one of those who subscribed a sum of money when Mr. Patton came forward here the first time?—I do not know that I ever subscribed anything towards it.

40,420. (Mr. Coleridge.) You must know if you did?—Well, I lent my purse to Mr. Joseph Richard Smith with a sum of money in it and got it back again.

40,421. How much was there in it?—I cannot tell.

40,422. (Mr. Price.) Then a man who stole your purse might "steal trash"?—There might have been 40*l.* or 50*l.*; I do not know.

40,423. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who brought it back afterwards?—Mr. Smith, the next day. He brought it back and said, "It's all right."

40,424. How much?—He paid me the same money, I suppose.

40,425. How much was it?—I do not know.

40,426. About 30*l.* you say?—30*l.* or 40*l.* perhaps it may be; I never counted it.

40,427. Did you ever bribe anybody?—Never in my life.

40,428. You left that to your son. Did your son ever give you any money at election times?—No; I never had a vote.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

GEORGE FINNER sworn.

G. Finner.

40,429. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a cabinet maker.

40,430. Do you work on your own account?—Oh, no. I do not do anything to it now.

40,431. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,432. How?—Westropp and Gray.

40,433. Did you get anything?—No.

40,434. Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Patton stood, both times?—Yes.

40,435. Both elections?—Both elections.

40,436. Did you vote for Mr. Patton both times?—Both times.

40,437. How much did you get each time?—I got 10*l.* the first time; but I cannot say where from. I should like to know. The first time that Mr. Patton came the money was thrown in as a present; but the second time it was given me in my hands.

40,438. Well, you got 10*l.* each time?—I got 10*l.* each time.

40,439. Do you know who you got it from?—Yes; Frederick Jarman.

40,440. Did you vote in 1865 when Westropp was here?—That is Westropp's election. Yes.

40,441. How much?—Nothing.

40,442. Did you vote in 1859, Padwick and Westropp?—Then I voted. At Padwick and Westropp's election I voted for Colonel Tynte and Kinglake.

40,443. Did you get anything?—Well, not at the time, and no promise.

40,444. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well, but did you at all?—There was a present made me about six weeks afterwards.

40,445. (Mr. Price.) How much was this present?—10*l.*

40,446. Who brought it?—It was given to me by John Smith.

40,447. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1857 did you vote?—Yes.

40,448. Whom did you vote for?—Then I voted for Kinglake and Follett.

40,449. What did you get?—Nothing.

40,450. Did you vote in 1852?—Yes.

40,451. Whom did you vote for?—If you run the names over perhaps I can tell.

40,452. (Mr. Price.) Lord Henley, and Follett, and Mansell, and Tynte—— ?—Kinglake and Tynte.

40,453. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get?—nothing.

40,454. How much have you got altogether in your lifetime?—Perhaps about 30*l.*

40,455. 1859 was the first time you got bribed, or were you bribed before. That was Padwick's election. Was that the first time you ever got what you call a present?—Oh no, long years before that.

40,456. (Mr. Price.) But did you get money given you before?—No, no more. Nothing at all.

S. Price.

STEPHEN PRICE sworn.

40,457. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A lime burner.

40,458. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

40,459. Did you get anything?—No.

40,460. Did you vote in 1866, Patton's two elections?—I did.

40,461. How did you vote then?—For Westropp and Patton. I got 10*l.* at each.

40,462. Patton stood twice?—Yes, at each election I got 10*l.*

40,463. Who from?—From Frederick Jarman.

40,464. And the election before, you voted for Westropp and got 10*l.* too?—Yes.

40,465. Who gave it to you?—William Heal, at the "Golden Lion."

40,466. Whom did you vote for in 1859?—I never had a vote before.

40,467. Have you ever been paid both sides?—No.

B. Porter.

BARNETT PORTER sworn.

40,468. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A brickmaker.

40,469. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,470. How?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

40,471. What did you get for it?—9*l.*

40,472. Who from?—Mr. Allan.

40,473. What have you got to tell us? You have said you heard Mr. Westropp say something at the "Clarence"?—I heard him make a speech there, and address the members there, and tell them that they should have something after the election, not at the time.

40,474. You heard Mr. Westropp say so?—Yes.

40,475. In the room at the "Clarence"?—Yes.

40,476. (Mr. Anstey.) What day was that?—On the day of polling.

40,477. How was it you happened to be at the "Clarence" if you are a Kinglake and Vanderbyl man?—Oh, I was not for anybody.

40,478. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were for money?—I attended both the Liberal meetings and the Conservative meetings.

40,479. Did you get paid on both sides?—No.

40,480. (Mr. Price.) Tell us the exact words Mr. Westropp used?—He told the men there that Mr. Gray's ships would come here after the brickyard was made, as they were going to have a brickyard down somewhere by the river side; or another of the men. I cannot say whether Mr. Westropp said that, but it was said there.

40,481. Do not tell us such nonsense as that about what somebody said. You said you heard Mr. Westropp say something, what did he say?—I heard he say that what the man, Mr. Hodges, had said before should be done.

40,482. What?—What Mr. Hodges had said.

40,483. What did Mr. Hodges say?—He said something about Mr. Gray's ships coming here after the election.

40,484. And what did Mr. Westropp say?—The ships should come. He said that was right.

40,485. To the brickyard?—Yes.

40,486. Is that all?

40,487. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you complete what you were saying about Hodges?—Mr. Hodges addressed the meeting, and he said Mr. Westropp and Gray were going to have some brickyards, or something of that sort, and that Mr. Gray's ships—large ships were coming here after the brickyard was opened—and that if any of the men on the Liberal side were put out of their employment owing to voting they would have employment there.

40,488. Mr. Westropp said, after that, what Mr. Hodges said should be done?—Yes, and so did Mr. Gray.

(Mr. Hodges.) I do not know whether there is any need to go into the box to contradict what this witness has said.

(Mr. Price.) You can go into the box, if you like, on Tuesday. We are going to adjourn now.

Adjourned to Tuesday the 12th instant at 12 o'clock.

FORTIETH DAY.

Tuesday, 12th October 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. HENRY PADWICK sworn.

40,489. (Mr. Price.) You are a solicitor?—No, I am not now.

40,490. You were a solicitor?—I was a solicitor some 12 or 14 years ago, and retired from the profession.

40,491. What we want to have from you is the history of your introduction to this borough as a candidate in the year 1859, who it was mentioned Bridgwater to you, and how it was you were introduced to the place. First, had you any connexion with Bridgwater in any way whatever professionally before?—Not before.

40,492. Or any acquaintance here?—Not a soul.

40,493. Tell us how it was you first heard of Bridgwater and entertained the idea of coming down here as a candidate?—It was at the invitation of Mr. Richard Smith.

40,494. How did you know Mr. Richard Smith?—I met him really by accident at first, having been in a waiting room, when we got in conversation, in Victoria Street, in the Conservative committee room.

40,495. (Mr. Coleridge.) Baxter, Rose, and Norton's?—Yes.

40,496. (Mr. Price.) You met him by accident?—I met him by accident.

40,497. Did he introduce himself to you?—Yes, he did ultimately.

40,498. What were you there for?—I was very much interested at that time in the election for Horsham on Mr. Fitzgerald's behalf.

40,499. Were you acting on Mr. Fitzgerald's behalf?—No, I was a personal friend of his, but I had gone there for the sake of getting some information about him. I forget what now.

40,500. Was that in 1859?—That was in 1859.

40,501. Previous to the election of course?—Previous to the election.

40,502. And you had gone to Baxter, Rose, and Norton's on Mr. Fitzgerald's behalf?—On Mr. Fitzgerald's behalf, to get some information with reference to somebody or something, and on being shown into a waiting room there were two or three persons there, and amongst those persons was Mr. Smith, and we got into conversation about various matters, and he stated that he was very anxious to go back to Bridgwater, for he had come up to London for the purpose of finding a candidate for this place.

40,503. Did you entertain the proposition then about being a candidate?—We talked casually about the matter, and a short time afterwards Mr. Spofforth came in and the subject was renewed, and I think to the best of my recollection I said, "Well, should I be a fit and proper person for you?" And subsequently it was supposed that I was, and that was the commencement of my knowledge of Mr. Smith.

40,504. When you say "a fit and proper person," what was the subject of discussion, your politics or your money?—Well, politics and money both.

40,505. What was said about money, and who by?—I cannot recollect. I think I mentioned that I had always heard that Bridgwater was rather a dangerous place.

40,506. You had heard so?—I had heard so.

40,507. Did you mention that to Mr. Smith?—I mentioned it to Mr. Smith.

40,508. What did he say?—Well, to the best of my recollection he said it required but very little money, that circumstances had now transpired which had altered the whole complexion of the electioneering of this town, and that the Tynte means were very much limited, and he thought it would be pure election, or words to that effect.

40,509. He thought it would be a pure election?—I cannot remember the exact words.

40,510. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long did he keep you in that happy delusion about the purity of it?—Well, it remained until the day after the election.

40,511. Had he given you any notice to be prepared in case of money being wanted in the interval?—No.

40,512. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean that all that passed about that was, that it would be conducted on on pure principles?—To the best of my recollection he said he thought the expenses would be something like 1,200*l.*, or 1,400*l.*, or something of that sort.

40,513. Did you understand by that 1,200*l.* or 1,400*l.* would be required for what are called legal expenses?—That is what he gave me to understand.

40,514. You had assisted Mr. Fitzgerald at Horsham, which is not an unnotorious place?—I think it is more sinned against than sinning.

40,515. Mr. Jarvis was unseated for bribery there, was he not?—No, I think for treating.

40,516. I will ask, with your knowledge of elections, did you suppose that 1,400*l.* would be required for what was called legal expenses?—Well, I understood him there were a great number of charities and things of that kind that would have to be contributed to. I did not go into the minutiæ of the expense.

40,517. Did he say anything about the legal gentlemen requiring any?—Yes, certainly. There were a great number of agents.

40,518. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you believe him when he said it would be a pure election?—I do not know; I do not think I did.

40,519. It must have struck you that if it was not for your money there was nothing to induce him to select you, who were a perfect stranger to Bridgwater, and, I believe, to public life, ?—Well, I did not arrive at that conclusion at all. I am merely repeating what to the best of my recollection passed in conversation between us.

40,520. (Mr. Price.) Had you known anything of Colonel Tynte?—No.

40,521. Did you know anything of Colonel Tynte's affairs at that time at all?—No, not at all, only by report or rumour. I really know nothing about it.

40,522. Was it at this first interview that you arranged that you would come down?—Yes.

40,523. Or was there a subsequent interview?—I think I met him a second time; I am not certain, but if I did it was probably the following day I came down.

40,524. How long was it before the election that you actually came down here?—I really forget.

FORTIETH DAY.

Mr. H. Padwick.

12 Oct. 1869.

40,525. How long before the election did you come down?—I cannot remember. I should think a month or two.

40,526. A fortnght, or three weeks, or a month?—A fortnight or three weeks; I really forget.

40,527. When you came down, who was it arranged that Mr. Westropp should come down?—It occurred in this way. It was stated by Mr. Smith that he thought there was a great chance for a second candidate, and that it would be very desirable by way of promoting my election if a second candidate could be found. Mr. Westropp's name was mentioned by some person as an individual who wanted to go into Parliament, and I was asked if I had any objection to being associated with Mr. Westropp. I did not know him, and had never heard of him, but subsequently I think Sir Frederick Slade came to vouch for him in some way or other as to his respectability and so forth, and it was understood that if either candidate was to be returned it was to be myself, and that Mr. Westropp's expenses were to be limited to 200*l.*, as it was to be considered more as an introduction to the borough than anything else.

40,528. Then did you both come down here together?—Yes, I think we both came down.

40,529. Whom did you see when you came here besides Mr. Smith?—We came down with Mr. Smith.

40,530. Did you see besides anybody among those called the heads of the party?—They were represented to me as heads of the party, but I do not know who they were.

40,531. Who were they?—I have not the slightest idea.

40,532. Were there any other but professional men as men of influence here?—Crowds of people, but who they were I have not the slightest idea on earth. I was never here before, and have not been here since.

40,533. Whom did you confide yourself to?—Entirely to Mr. Smith. I placed myself entirely in Mr. Smith's hands.

40,534. How soon after you had been here did he tell you how much money would be wanted?—I think the following morning he asked me for 1,000*l.*

40,535. Did you place yourself unreservedly in Mr. Smith's hands to do what he liked regarding anything?—Certainly not; unquestionably I did not.

40,536. If he had asked you for 10,000*l.*, would you have paid it?—Certainly not.

40,537. (Mr. Price.) What limit did you put on his pledging you to?—None, whatever.

40,538. Was any sum named as to the limit you would go?—I should think I named 1,200*l.* or 1,400*l.*, to the best of my recollection.

40,539. You stated that as the basis?—Yes.

40,540. Did you bring that down with you?—I think I brought 1,000*l.*

40,541. In gold?—No, notes. I either did, or gave a cheque on my bankers. I really forget which.

40,542. (Mr. Price.) Are you sure you actually did not bring the money in a bag with you?—Yes, I think I could actually swear I brought the money.

40,543. Did you bring it down when you first arrived to canvass the place?—Yes.

40,544. Where did you place it?—I gave it to two persons, to the best of my recollection. Who they were I do not recollect at this moment, but I think the money was placed in the bank; I think it was at the bank I gave it.

40,545. What bank?—I do not know.

40,546. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before going any further, are you quite certain that you did not bring that in sovereigns?—Perfectly certain.

40,547. And if Mr. Smith is under the impression that you did, he is mistaken?—Yes.

40,548. Did you bring any portion of it in sovereigns?—Not any of it.

40,549. Do you recollect what the notes were for, were they large or small?—I think large, perhaps 200*l.* or 500*l.*

40,550. (Mr. Price.) Was it placed to your credit or Mr. Smith's?—Either to Mr. Smith's credit or some person he named.

40,551. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Murlis the name?—I do not recollect the name.

40,552. (Mr. Price.) You do not recollect any such name in connexion with your election?—The truth is I do not remember any name except one or two of my agents.

40,553. Who besides Mr. Smith was an agent?—Mr. Ruddock and, I think, Mr. Trevor.

40,554. Both of them?—I think they both were agents. I do not remember anybody else, but there were so many persons coming in and out.

40,555. How soon was this sum exhausted which you first brought down?—Very early.

40,556. How soon; you came down three weeks before?—Probably at the end of the week.

40,557. When it was gone at the end of the week, did not you ask how it was gone?—Well, I did, and was given to understand that there were some outstanding accounts that had been contracted at former elections, and that a great part of the money had been got rid of in payments for the purpose of keeping the party together, or some excuse of that sort was given to me.

40,558. Did you inquire about it whether there was any truth in it?—I had no possible means of inquiring.

40,559. Did you then get another instalment down?—Yes, there was subsequently 1,000*l.* sent by a friend of mine.

40,560. Who is that?—A friend of mine in London, who sent it down at my request.

40,561. But where did the money come from?—From me.

40,562. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was the person who sent it?—A person of the name of Copham.

40,563. (Mr. Anstey.) Where does he live?—He was killed on the railway about four or five years ago.

40,564. Was he a partner?—No, a personal friend.

40,565. (Mr. Price.) What was he?—A gentleman.

40,566. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he in business?—No business at all; it was because I was not going to town at that moment.

40,567. (Mr. Price.) Did you borrow the sum of money?—No, it was my own money.

40,568. How was he to get at it?—I was not going to London, and I directed him to get 1,000*l.* and send it down.

40,569. How? did you write a cheque?—I wrote a cheque.

40,570. It is important for us to know who found the money on these occasions?—I found the money. I have no wish to keep back anything.

40,571. You drew a cheque, and sent it up to your friend, who cashed it or got it cashed?—I do not know. All I know is this: I found the money, and he told me that he had sent the money down, and Mr. Smith told me afterwards that he had received it, or that it had been received.

40,572. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he tell you that it had come down in gold, labelled samples?—No, he did not tell me that.

40,573. But he did tell you in gold?—Yes, in gold.

40,574. (Mr. Price.) And labelled?—I do not know; I never saw it.

40,575. Did you give directions for it to come down in gold?—I think I did.

40,576. That was 1,000*l.*?—1,000*l.*

40,577. How long did that second 1,000*l.* last?—I do not remember any more disbursements. I complained very much of this second application, and Mr. Smith promised to give me an account of the expenditure, but I never got any.

40,578. Is that the whole you had spent on the election?—That is the whole; I have no recollection of spending any more than that, not the slightest recollection, and I have tried to remember.

40,579. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay nothing after the election?—Not that I am aware of.

40,580. But you were repaid some time after the election, were not you?—No.

40,581. (Mr. Price.) Not after the compromise of the petition?—I had nothing on earth to do with compromising the petition; I never received a shilling from a soul.

40,582. Did you out of this second 1,000*l.* pay what are called the legal expenses?—It was given to Mr. Smith to account for at the end, and I never had any account given me; and I subsequently became so disgusted with the proceedings that I left the town in the middle of the day of the election.

40,583. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know money was going on the other side at that time?—I did not until just before I left the town. I was told by Mr. Smith on the morning of the election that there had been no bribery whatever.

40,584. He wanted some money just before you left the town?—He never asked me.

40,585. I mean after you found out that money had been going the other side for Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake?—No.

40,586. Did he press you for a third 1,000*l.*?—No.

40,587. And did you refuse it?—No.

40,588. (Mr. Anstey.) Did I understand you just now to deny that you had received any money at the time of the compromise of the petition?—Yes, I do.

40,589. Or after?—No, neither before nor after.

40,590. Did you after the petition was compromised become possessed of a sum of money stated to be 1,200*l.*, or any sum of money on which you laid your hands stating that it lawfully belonged to you?—No, I did not.

40,591. I think it right to state the words of a witness who gave that?—On reading the evidence I read that, and I am glad you have given me an opportunity of contradicting it.

40,592. You can give any statement which may explain that, or do you mean to deny it altogether?—I utterly and entirely deny it; it is a perfect fiction.

40,593. (Mr. Price.) Were you cognizant of the petition?—I was.

40,594. And of its compromise?—I was subsequently cognizant.

40,595. Who consulted you about it?—The petitioners in this way: On some occasion after the election was over I went and saw Mr. Rose; I felt extremely indignant at the wretched treatment and delusion that had been practised on me, and I heard that bribery had been very common, and some particular instances were mentioned to me, and I in the excitement of the moment said that I certainly would expose the whole thing, and suggested to Mr. Rose that the petition should be presented, which would give us, I supposed an opportunity probably of doing it; and I believe the petition was presented, but I do not think I was petitioner; I am sure I was not.

40,596. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you tell Mr. Rose of your own 2,000*l.* when he presented that petition?—As to what I spent?

40,597. Yes?—No.

40,598. I presume you did not claim the seat?—No, I did not petition; it was not mine.

40,599. (Mr. Price.) You advised the petition?—No, I acquiesced in it.

40,600. You say you mentioned it to Mr. Rose, and felt inclined to petition for the purpose of exposing these practices?—Mr. Rose made some inquiry.

40,601. Do you know how it was that the petition did not go on?—Simply because I was told by Mr. Rose that there was no chance of getting any evidence to bring the facts out, and I was so thoroughly sick and disgusted with the whole thing that it came to an end of itself; there was nothing done in it.

40,602. Do you know that it was the result of a compromise?—No, I do not think it was.

40,603. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said just now that you were cognizant to some extent of the compromise?—No, no compromise at all; I did not hear you say anything about a compromise.

40,604. No, but the learned Chief Commissioner did?—I beg your pardon, there was no compromise whatever.

40,605. He asked you whether you were cognizant of the petition, and you said "Yes;" and whether you were cognizant of the compromise, and you said "To a certain extent," I thought?—I beg your pardon, there was no compromise, not as far as I have heard or read.

40,606. (Mr. Price.) Then the first you have heard of it is in the evidence here?—Yes.

40,607. The first you have heard of anything like a compromise about that petition?—The first I have heard about any compromise, and I do not believe there was any compromise; I believe most religiously that the petition fell through precisely as I am attempting to describe.

40,608. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay any costs of that petition as far as it went?—There were no costs but the printed form.

40,609. There were some costs, I suppose?—I do not remember. I do not think I paid any, at all events.

40,610. (Mr. Price.) Had Mr. Rose, up to a certain point, the conduct of the petition?—As far as I know he had.

40,611. Did he send to you to consult about the petition, it being suggested, or, as I understood you to say, did you go to him?—It was the result of conversation one day. I had been in the habit of seeing Mr. Rose on other matters of business, and it was the result of conversation that it would be a good plan to bring forward the whole thing and expose it, if I could; I thought I had had quite trouble enough in the matter, and I wished to avoid any more.

40,612. Then you utterly deny that you knew of anything like a compromise, or that any money passed?—Most distinctly, either directly or indirectly, or in any possible form you can put it.

40,613. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you not hear that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond at that time had the conduct of the prosecution against your friend the petitioner, a Mr. Heard?—No.

40,614. And after putting his client to a great deal of expense and trouble, he, behind his client's back, and against his reputation, swapped the prosecution against the petition, and one being withdrawn, effected the withdrawal of the other?—Never. I never heard of such a thing until you stated it.

40,615. (Mr. Price.) The only person, as far as I can see, who could give accurate information on that would be Mr. Rose, who, up to a certain period, discussed the petition, and had the conduct of it?—Certainly. I had nothing on earth to do with it beyond what I have stated.

40,616. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had your private solicitor anything to do with it?—No, no one.

40,617. There was only 2,000*l.*, which I understand you to say was every farthing you spent at that election?—I cannot remember that I spent more.

40,618. Does that include your personal expenses here?—No.

40,619. You had to pay that entirely?—Yes.

40,620. What amount? You were here three weeks, and there were a lot of people about you?—Yes, I am sure I do not know; Mr. Westropp and I were living together, and I believe he contributed 1*l.* a day towards the expenses, because he considered in the case of a member being elected I was to have the preference; therefore he thought the justice of the case was met by his paying his own personal expenses.

40,621. Those who deluded Mr. Westropp here seem to have told him that you were second man, and those who deluded you that you were the first man?—It is quite notorious that he was second man to me.

40,622. He does not seem to think so?—No, I do not wish to detract anything from Mr. Westropp's position; but it was Mr. Westropp whom I assented to being associated with me.

40,623. He says it was the other way?—Yes; but I will say that.

40,624. Must not it have been Mr. Smith who misled

FORTIETH DAY.

Mr. H. Padwick.

12 Oct. 1859.

you both like a blind horse?—I am quite ready to admit that he misled me like a blind horse.

40,625. You were both to be first men?—It was known to both agents and myself that I must be first man, and it was equally known to anyone who knew anything about it that Mr. Westropp's position, if I may use the expression without intending any offence, was to be subordinate to mine.

40,626. No doubt the agents knew that; but Mr. Westropp seems to be the only person not cognizant of the fact, because he told us, after coming back a second time, it was "Westropp and Padwick," instead of "Padwick and Westropp"?—Nothing of the sort.

40,627. (Mr. Price.) I understand you that Sir Frederick Slade spoke to him long before you were communicated with, that was the impression conveyed to my mind, long before you had any communication with Mr. Rose?—That was not so; at least I do not know what Sir Frederick Slade may have said to him, but I know perfectly well my position in the matter, and I should have thought the fact of Mr. Westropp paying 200*l.* only towards the expenses was primâ facie evidence.

40,628. (Mr. Coleridge.) He explained, that because he was the first in the field he was to pay less?—That is quite wrong; because I remember perfectly well making the observation, that I wondered any gentleman would come and take up such a doubtful position, but he was looking on the introduction to the borough, and that if he did not succeed on that occasion he would on some future occasion.

40,629. (Mr. Anstey.) Your minority was larger than his, was not it?—I forget the numbers at this moment.

40,630. I will read to you his evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons. The question is asked, "You were defeated by about 80?" with reference to this election of 1859?—Yes.

40,631. Mr. Sleigh says, "You were defeated by about 80?"—I was?

40,632. No, Mr. Westropp. He is asked this question, "You polled a large number of votes?—I think 282. You were defeated by about 80?" To which he answers, "I was defeated I think by the same majority "as I defeated Mr. Kinglake now by; but it was "always considered that the majority by which the "gentleman who was running with me was defeated "was mine also, and in fact it was 41." That shows you had a larger number of votes than Mr. Westropp?—I had I believe.

40,633. And Mr. Westropp considered that your votes were his as well as yours?—Oh no; I do not know what he considered.

40,634. That is the answer he makes?—I only state the facts as I remember them very distinctly and clearly with reference to this matter you spoke to me about, that Mr. Westropp joining me was a secondary affair altogether, and that I hesitated at first about accepting as a companion in this matter a gentleman whom I never heard of before, and I do not think I had heard to the best of my recollection of Baxter, Rose, and Norton that they knew anything of it, but Sir Frederick Slade came in; he was appealed to in some way or other. At all events I heard he was an acquaintance of his, and he vouched him to be a respectable person; but I said I do not understand how any person would come down to go through all the annoyance of canvassing yourself, and so on, if put in this second position, without you can return two members.

40,635. The voting appears to bear out your statement, because you had 40 majority?—I know I had a majority.

40,636. At the end of the day, when you were getting so near, because 40 is not a large number to be beaten by, was not about the middle of the day more pressure put upon you?—About the middle of the day I remember some one coming to the committee room and saying that the election was lost, that numbers of persons who had promised to vote for me were going up one after another for our opponents; and the numbers were brought in by some one or other, and I said, "Well, I can very plainly see how this is, it is the old "story over again, and it is perfectly absurd to go on "in this fashion; I shall quit the place immediately," And I did, as fast as I could, get out of the town in the most perfect disgust, satisfied in my own mind that every corrupt practice that could be used was used, but what they were I had no means of judging in my own mind. I was not asked for any money.

40,637. Were you under the impression, from what was said to you, that they had out-bribed you?—No nothing of that sort was said.

40,638. I mean that they had given a higher price to bribees who received money than yourselves?—No, nothing; it was all frightful confusion at the moment.

40,639. (Mr. Coleridge.) After it was all over, and the talk of the petition was over, and everything of that sort, did not Mr. Smith press you for money for what he called outstanding accounts?—Not that I remember.

40,640. Do you mean that he never asked you or anyone else after you left the election?—The only thing I remember him asking me for was this, during the election some squibs—of course all sorts and kinds were going about, and everything that could be said to one's prejudice was said—I had an attack made and I wrote to Mr. Edwin James, who was my counsel on the particular occasion, for his version of all that had taken place on that occasion which the mother of Palmer——

40,641. Apropos of a caricature?—Apropos of a caricature, and Mr. Edwin James. At that time he wrote me a letter. We were political antagonists. He was canvassing for Marylebone, but he wrote me a letter fully absolving me from everthing in connexion with the Palmer affair, and that letter I put in the hands of Mr. Smith, and I am not sure whether it was published or was not, at all events he held the original letter, and some two years after probably I wrote to him saying I presumed the letter was not of any further consequence to him, and I would be much obliged to him if he would send it to me, and he did, and I have it by me at this moment.

40,642. (Mr. Anstey.) It had been printed in the meantime in the "Bridgwater Times" at length?—I believe it was; I am not sure about that, but I have the original letter at this time about me, and Mr. Smith, I remember, said that he had expended 50*l.* or 50 guineas in going about and getting candidates for Bridgwater, and he said he thought under the circumstances I ought to hand him a cheque for 50*l.*, and I said I rather thought that was out of the question, and I took no further notice of it.

40,643. (Mr. Price.) Going about for a candidate when?—When he unfortunately called upon me, and proposed to charge me 50*l.* for having found me.

40,644. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at that time a Conservative?—Yes.

40,645. When they found you, I mean?—When they found me.

40,646. When you were about leaving the borough defeated, did you intimate your intention to stand on the other side?—Certainly not. I intimated my intention of never coming to the place.

40,647. (Mr. Price.) Someone said you added to that, if you ever came again you would take care to be on the other side?—Certainly not.

40,648. Have you any reason to suppose that the circulation of those rumours about you in connexion with Palmer injured your chances of success?—I do not know how that might be. Of course it was very distressing to me at the time, and if you will allow me to show you the letter—

40,649. (Mr. Anstey.) It is a very long letter. I read it the other day in the "Bridgwater Times," from Mr. Edwin James?—From Mr. Edwin James.

40,650. I do not know that it is of much value?—He was the counsel on the occasion, and here is the "Times" of the day in which the trial was reported.

40,651. All we have about it is that you mention down here that it came out in evidence on the trial of Palmer for poisoning that you had known him, or known Cook, that is all, and it is no imputation on any man to say that.—Of course, coming on me suddenly I dare say it had some effect on some persons.

40,652. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Westropp ever speak to you about it, because from something that dropped from him I imagined he did?—He said he had made inquiries, and was quite satisfied of my conduct in all respects. There was not a word of truth in the whole transaction.

40,653. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not the best proof that it did not injure you with the Conservatives, that they put you at the head of the minority and not Mr. Westropp?—If you draw that inference, well and good. Would you allow me to offer you the letter?

40,654. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you wish to have it on our notes you must read it out?—If you please, I have no sort of objection, only it is so very personal.

40,655. (Mr. Price.) We have no desire to have it on our notes.—I have no desire to press it at all.

40,656. I think you may as well let the thing drop. It was done at a time of electioneering excitement?—Very good.

40,657. (Mr. Coleriege.) What was the name of the action? You do not mean the prosecution of Palmer at the Old Bailey?—No, certainly not.

40,658. (Mr. Price.) It was an action brought on a bill of exchange?—Against the mother of Palmer.

40,659. And he proved his wife's forgery?—I felt constrained to do this in consequence of the inquiry that was going on against Palmer for murder. I felt very much alarmed at having had anything to do with the family, which was considered a respectable family in those days, but I had had nothing to do with them except in the way of business. I had brought an action against the mother, who brought her son out of Stafford jail, to prove that the signature to the promissory note was the signature of his wife, who had written his mother's name there by his direction, and they were so satisfied with my conduct on that occasion that Mr. Wilkins, who was counsel against me got up and complimented me on the way I had acted, and he said he should not ask for any costs.

40,660. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they get a verdict?—They were obliged to get a verdict.

40,661. They believed the story of Palmer?—They believed it.

40,662. (Mr. Price.) That was the only case in which you had to do with Palmer's affairs?—The only case.

40,663. You had nothing to do with the prosecution for murder?—Nothing whatever.

40,664. You did not give evidence?—No, I had no more to do with it than the greatest stranger in the world.

40,665. I suppose the supposition was that the action was brought in consequence of some spite against Palmer?—I suppose it was thought a great card to say anything of that violent character.

40,666. Is there anything you have to tell with regard to that election you know; with regard to corrupt practices either on that side or the other?—Nothing whatever. I never had anything to do with Bridgwater since, and I do not know a single soul in it; and I think I may say, until I came to the town last night, I have not spoken to a single soul since.

40,667. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the election of 1865 was any overture made to you to come forward again?—No.

40,668. Then as far as we know 2,000*l.* was brought by you here, and your personal expenses, be what they may, 50*l.* or 60*l.* more?—Well, I should think probably more than that, perhaps 100*l.*

40,669. Did that include the payments of your agents, your attornies, and everybody?—I cannot recollect paying anybody anything.

40,670. The institution of election auditor was going on in those days, did you recollect what was paid through him as election agent in the way of legitimate expenses?—I do not think that was going on at that time.

40,671. In 1859, I think it was; the election agent came in afterwards?—I am quite sure it was, because I am quite certain I never made any return.

GEORGE HAYWARD sworn.

G. Hayward.

40,672. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A carpenter.

40,673. Where do you work?—Sometimes one place and sometimes another; I work for a good many about.

40,674. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you employed by Dr. Kinglake?—Sometimes.

40,675. At Taunton?—Yes.

40,676. Did you see him on the day he started for the poll here, for Bridgwater?—At the last election?

40,677. Did you see him at Taunton on the morning that he left for Bridgwater to go to this Bridgwater election?—Yes, I did, I believe.

40,678. What was the last thing he said and did?—He did not speak to me.

40,679. What?—He did not say anything to me; I saw him in his trap coming away, but he never spoke to me.

40,680. Did he show you a purse?—No.

40,681. Are you quite sure?—Quite sure.

40,682. And he said not a word to you?—He did not say a word to me.

40,683. I am not asking whether he said anything to you about the Bridgwater election, but did he say anything to you of any kind?—No, not to the best of my knowledge; he never spoke to me.

40,684. (Mr. Price.) You are a voter for Bridgwater?—No.

BENJAMIN STOODLEY sworn.

B. Stoodley.

40,685. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A painter.

40,686. Are you a master, or do you work for anybody?—I work for Mr. Bunter.

40,687. Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

40,688. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,689. How did you vote?—I voted for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

40,690. Did you get anything for it?—No.

40,691. Did you get any promise?—No.

40,692. Were you at any meeting at the "Clarence" on the morning of the polling day?—No.

40,693. Did you hear anything said by anybody in the way of promising money?—No.

40,694. That you would have it when the time came?—No.

40,695. Nothing of that sort?—No.

40,696. Anything about "M.D."?—No. I was not at the meeting.

40,697. And you did not hear it from others?—No.

40,698. Did you vote at the election before?—Yes.

40,699. For whom?—For Mr. Patton.

40,700. Did you vote at both elections for Mr. Patton?—Yes.

40,701. Did you get anything at those elections?—Yes.

40,702. How much?—10*l.* each election.

40,703. From whom?—At the "Bull and Butcher," from behind the door.

40,704. Both times?—Yes.

40,705. Did you vote in 1865?—No, I had no vote.

40,706. Not before 1866?—No.

40,707. Did you ever receive anything from the other side?—No.

40,708. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your christian name?—Benjamin.

FORTIETH DAY.

B. Stoodley.

12 Oct. 1869.

40,709. What are you to Joseph Stoodley?—Brother.

40,710. That was the man who was bribed to vote for Mr. Westropp in 1865?—Yes. I had no vote then. I want to state one thing, if you will allowme.

40,711. (Mr. Coleridge.) Go on.—Between Mr. Patton's two elections I had 5*l.* brought to my house, and put on the table for me.

40,712. (Mr. Price.) Besides the two tens?—Besides the two tens.

40,713. How was that left, do you know?—In my parlour, on the table.

40,714. Who left it?—Frederick Temblett.

40,715. Did he know you had already had 10*l.*?—I do not know whether he knew it then or not.

40,716. Did you keep the 5*l.*?—Yes.

40,717. Then you had 25*l.* altogether?—Yes.

40,718. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Temblett try to get it back from you, when he did know it?—Yes.

40,719. Tell us what took place then?—It was a day or two after. I told him I considered I had as much right to the money as he had; and I kept it.

40,720. Why did he want to get it back from you?—I do not know his reasons.

40,721. Was it not because he told you you had had 10*l.* from someone else?—I think he said it was a mistake.

40,722. And that you had had 10*l.* from somewhere else?—I got the money from the "Bull and Butcher."

40,723. Did he not want the money back, because he said you had been paid elsewhere?—No, he did not say anything of the sort.

40,724. Did not he say you had been paid at the "Bull and Butcher"?—Yes.

40,725. He simply told you it was a mistake, and he wanted it back again?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) You are quite right in telling us of it.

J. Quick.

JAMES QUICK sworn.

40,726. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A dairyman.

40,727. And a voter?—Yes.

40,728. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,729. How did you vote?—I voted for Westropp and Gray.

40,730. Did you get anything for it?—No.

40,731. Were you at any of the meetings, where you heard anything about "money down"?—I was never at a meeting in my life.

40,732. Did you hear anything from anybody to the effect that if you voted that way you would have something eventually?—No, I did not.

40,733. Were you promised anything by anybody if you voted for Westropp and Gray?—No.

40,734. Did you expect to get anything?—No.

40,735. Did you vote at the election previous to that, in 1866?—Yes.

40,736. For whom?—Patton and Westropp.

40,737. For Patton only you mean, I suppose. He stood twice that year, once with Mr. Vanderbyl and once with Mr. Bagehot?—Yes.

40,738. Did you vote at both of those elections?—I voted at both of those elections for Mr. Patton.

40,739. Did you get anything at either of those elections?—Yes.

40,740. How much?—Two 10*l.*

40,741. From whom?—Mr. Jarman.

40,742. Did you get anything between the two elections?—Yes.

40,743. Was that all you received for your two votes?—That was all I received for my two votes.

40,744. In 1865 did you vote, when Mr. Westropp was returned?—Yes.

40,745. How did you vote then?—Then Mr. Heal gave me 10*l.*

40,746. Did you vote for Mr. Westropp?—Yes, I did.

40,747. Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

40,748. Did you vote in 1859?—No.

40,749. Had you no vote then?—No.

40,750. Then you have had 30*l.* altogether?—30*l.*

C. Bennett.

CHARLES BENNETT sworn.

40,751. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer on the quay.

40,752. Whom do you work for?—Anybody.

40,753. Are you a voter?—Yes.

40,754. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,755. How?—I voted for Mr. Westropp.

40,756. For Mr. Westropp only?—For Mr. Westropp only.

40,757. Only Mr. Westropp?—Only Mr. Westropp.

40,758. What did you get?—Nothing.

40,759. Did you have any promise made to you?—No.

40,760. Did you hear that there was to be any money afterwards?—No.

40,761. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did your wife get anything?—No.

40,762. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes.

40,763. How did you vote then?—I voted for Mr. Westropp.

40,764. No; when Patton stood against Vanderbyl?—Yes.

40,765. Did you vote for Mr. Patton then?—Yes.

40,766. Did you get anything for it?—Yes.

40,768. From whom?—From the "Bull and Butcher."

40,769. Did you vote at the former election of Mr. Patton's?—Yes.

40,770. Did you vote for him then?—Yes.

40,771. Did you get anything?—Yes.

40,773. From whom?—The "Bull and Butcher."

40,774. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

40,775. At neither election?—No.

40,776. (Mr. Price.) Or between the elections?—No.

40,777. Did you get anything more?—No.

40,778. Or was anything left at your house?—Yes.

40,779. Did you vote at the election before, in 1865?—Yes.

40,780. For whom?—Mr. Westropp.

40,781. Did you get anything then?—10*l.*

40,782. From whom?—From the "Bull and Butcher."

40,783. In 1859 did you vote?—No.

40,784. Had you no vote?—No.

40,785. Then you have had 10*l.* at each election you have voted at, except the last election?—Yes.

40,786. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you expect to get anything at the last election?—No.

J. Dyer.

JOHN DYER sworn.

40,787. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A dairyman.

40,788. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you the son of Ambrose Dyer?—No.

40,789. No relation?—No relation whatever.

40,790. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter?—Yes.

40,791. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,792. How did you vote?—For Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

40,793. What did you get?—Nothing at all.

40,794. Any promise?—None whatever.

40,795. Were you at any of the meetings, where you heard anything said about money, or M.D.?—Well, I attended meetings occasionally, and I heard the name mentioned of "M.D."

40,796. Whom did you hear mention it?—Well, I cannot say; I have heard it so many times.

40,797. Do you know Mr. Joseph Smith?—Quite well.

40,798. Was he the person who talked about it?—It may be, I cannot say.

40,799. What did you understand him to say?—Well, I merely thought it was a hoax, if so be any of the other side had offered money, to take it. I concluded it as such.

40,800. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you say you heard it stated so many times?—Occasionally.

40,801. You said just now, when you were asked who said it, you could not tell who it was, because you heard it so many times?—Well, the chairman referred to it so many times that I cannot say from recollection who it was.

40,802. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl was elected?—Yes.

40,803. How did you vote?—For Mr. Patton.

40,804. What did you get?—10*l.*

40,805. From whom?—From the "Bull and Butcher."

40,806. Did you vote at the former election?—Yes.

40,807. For whom?—For Mr. Patton.

40,808. How much did you get then?—10*l.*

40,809. Did you get anything between the two elections in 1866?—No.

40,810. Or was anything left at your house?—No.

40,811. Did you get anything from the other side?—Not anything.

40,812. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

40,813. For whom?—For Mr. Westropp.

40,814. What did you get?—10*l.*

40,815. From whom?—The "Bull and Butcher."

40,816. Did you vote in 1859?—No.

40,817. You had no vote then?—No vote.

40,818. You say you got the money each time from the "Bull and Butcher"?—Each time from the "Bull and Butcher."

(Mr. Price.) You are returned on Temblett's list. I suppose he gave it to you at the "Bull and Butcher."

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled. F. C. Temblett.

(The witness.) I paid a good many of them by putting my hand out of the door. They did not see me pay it.

JOHN DYER recalled. J. Dyer.

40,819. (Mr. Anstey.) The "Bull and Butcher" was Temblett's house?—It was at that time; at least the old gentleman's.

(F. C. Temblett.) It was my father's.

THOMAS MARTIN sworn. T. Martin.

40,820. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Cellarman to Mr. Head, wine merchant.

40,821. Are you a voter?—Yes.

40,822. Did you vote at the last election?—No, I did not vote.

40,823. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a vote at the last election?—No, I had not.

40,824. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866, at either of the elections?—Yes, for the Conservatives; twice for Mr. Patton, and once for Mr. Westropp, in 1865.

40,825. Did you get anything from Mr. Patton?—Yes.

40,826. How much?—10*l.* at each election.

40,827. From whom?—10*l.* from Mr. Truman the first election, 5*l.* from the "Bull and Butcher" the second election, and 5*l.* from Mr. Temblett, brought to me at my house, and 10*l.* at the last election from Mr. Grabham.

40,828. At Mr. Westropp's election?—No, Mr. Patton's second election.

40,829. No, no. You say you were paid 10*l.* at Mr. Westropp's first election?—Yes.

40,830. 10*l.* at Mr. Patton's first election?—Yes.

40,831. 5*l.* the second election?—Yes.

40,832. And 5*l.* afterwards?—Yes.

40,833. Is that all you got?—Yes.

40,834. Did you ever get anything from the other side?—No.

40,835. Did you vote in 1859?—No.

40,836. You had no vote?—No.

40,837. How was it you did not vote at the last election?—I was not entitled to vote.

(F. C. Temblett.) He has made a mistake. He did not receive the 5*l.* at the second election. He had 5*l.* at the first election.

(Mr. Price.) It does not matter if the totals are right.

WILLIAM LOCK sworn. W. Lock.

40,838. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

40,839. For whom do you work?—Mr. Hodge.

40,840. Are you a voter?—Yes.

40,841. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,842. How?—For Mr. Westropp.

40,843. For Mr. Westropp alone?—For Mr. Westropp alone.

40,844. Not Mr. Gray?—Mr. Gray and Mr. Westropp.

40,845. Did you get anything for it?—No.

40,846. Any promise?—No.

40,847. Did you hear anything said that you would have money afterwards if you voted all right, or anything of that kind, which made you go and vote?—No.

40,848. Did you vote in 1866?—I did.

40,849. For whom?—I voted for Mr. Patton.

40,850. Twice?—Yes.

40,851. At both elections?—Yes.

40,852. What did you get at each election?—5*l.* at one election, and 10*l.* the other.

40,853. (Mr. Coleridge.) And how much between those elections?—Not anything.

40,854. (Mr. Price.) Was anything left at your house?—No.

40,855. To make up the first 5*l.* to 10*l.*?—No.

40,856. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you get it from?—The "Bull and Butcher."

40,857. (Mr. Price.) Both times?—Yes.

40,858. Did you vote in 1865 for Mr. Westropp?—No.

40,859. Had you no vote?—No.

40,860. And no vote before that at all?—No.

EDWARD PARSONS sworn. E. Parsons.

40,861. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A mariner.

40,862. Are you a voter?—Yes.

40,863. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,864. For whom?—Westropp and Gray.

40,865. Did you get anything for it?—No.

40,866. Any promise?—No.

40,867. Was anything said to you that if you voted all right it would be made right for you, or anything of that kind?—No, nothing of the kind.

FORTIETH DAY.

E. Parsons.

12 Oct. 1869.

40,868. Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Patton stood twice ?—Yes.

40,869. How much did you get each time ?—10*l.* the first time, and 15*l.* the second.

40,870. Where did you get the 15*l.* from ?—10*l.* from Henry Hobbs, and 5*l.* from Bryant, the baker.

40,871. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to get it from both ?—Because they gave it to me.

40,872. Did you not get any money from the other side ?—No.

40,873. At any time ?—No.

40,874. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell Bryant that you had 10*l.* from Hobbs ?—No. That 10*l.* was brought to my house.

40,875. After the election ?—No, before the election, and 5*l.* Bryant gave to me in the "Clarence."

40,876. Then you got 10*l.* at the former election ?—Yes; some time after the election.

40,877. From whom ?—From Mr. Jarman, the baker.

40,878. Did you vote in 1865 ?—No.

40,879. You had no vote ?—No vote.

40,880. You had no vote before 1866 ?—No.

40,881. Then you had 25*l.* altogether ?—Yes.

R. Temblett.

ROBERT TEMBLETT sworn.

40,882. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A smith.

40,883. Are you any relation to any of the other Tembletts, or is your name Tremblett ?—Temblett.

40,884. You are a smith ?—Yes.

40,885. Where do you work ?—For the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company.

40,886. At the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company's works ?—Yes.

40,887. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

40,888. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

40,889. How did you vote ?—For Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake.

40,890. Did you get anything for it ?—No.

40,891. Nothing at all ?—Nothing at all.

40,892. At what time of the day did you poll ?—About one.

40,893. Are you on the particular part of the railway under Mr. Bridges ?—Mr. Bridges.

40,894. Mr. Bridges you are under ?—Yes.

40,895. Did he bring you up to poll ?—No.

40,896. Did you come up alone then ?—Yes.

40,897. Did you vote in 1866 ?—No; I never had a vote before this last election.

40,898. You never got anything for it ?—I never got anything for it.

40,899. Nor have you asked for it ?—No; no promise, nor anything.

40,900. Have you been told by your employers, or the authorities on the railway, or anybody else, how you were to vote ?—To vote which way we liked.

40,901. You saw a handbill stuck up ?—Yes.

40,902. To vote as you liked ?—Just as we liked.

40,903. I do not know why you were summoned here. Is there another man of your name in the town ?—I have two brothers.

40,904. There cannot be another Robert in your family; is there any other Robert ?—Not that I am aware.

40,905. What are your brothers' christian names ?—George and William.

40,906. Are they voters ?—Yes.

40,907. Do you know how they voted ?—They voted for Westropp and Gray.

40,908. Did they get anything ?—I do not know; I never heard that they did.

40,909. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there a Temblett without the "r" ?—There is a Temblett here.

40,910. But is there a Robert Temblett ?—I cannot say.

(Mr. Price.) There has been some mistake. Your name has been returned on some man's list. We are sorry you have been asked to attend here. However you have shown that you voted independently.

J. Mansfield.

JOHN MANSFIELD sworn.

40,911. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A labourer.

40,911*a*. Where do you work ?—I work at the carriage shed.

40,912. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

40,913. Did you vote at the last election ?—I voted at the last election.

40,914. How ?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

40,915. Did you get anything ?—No.

40,916. Nothing at all ?—Nothing at all.

40,917. No promise ?—No promise.

40,918. What time in the day did you vote ?—About one o'clock.

40,919. Did you vote at the election before that ?—No.

40,920. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you quite sure you never got anything in the way of a present ?—No; I never had a vote before.

40,921. Was any money given to your wife ?—No.

40,922. Was anything left at your house ?—No.

40,923. (Mr. Price.) Had you ever promised Mr. Westropp that you would vote for him ?—No.

40,924. Had you been canvassed by him ?—Yes. He canvassed me in the yard, and I told him I had promised to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

40,925. You told him so ?—Yes.

40,926. That was all that passed ?—That was all that passed.

40,927. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at the meeting at the "Clarence" ?—No.

40,928. Nor at the "Lamb" ?—No.

(Mr. Price.) I am sorry you have had the trouble of coming here. It cannot be helped; there are such great numbers who have been mentioned here. You will have your expenses from the secretary.

H. Harwood.

HENRY HARWOOD sworn.

40,929. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A baker.

40,930. For whom do you work ?—I am my own master.

40,931. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

40,932. How did you vote ?—Westropp and Gray.

40,933. Did you get anything for it ?—No.

40,934. Any promise whatever ?—No.

40,935. Did you vote in 1866, at Mr. Patton's two contests ?—Yes.

40,936. How did you vote then ?—For Mr. Patton.

40,937. Both times ?—Yes.

40,938. What did you get ?—10*l.* the second, and nothing the first.

40,939. Any promise the first time ?—Yes.

40,940. Who did you get the 10*l.* from ?—Temblett.

40,941. Are you sure you got nothing between the two elections ?—No.

40,942. Or anything left at your house ?—No.

40,943. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.

40,944. Whom did you vote for then ?—Mr. Westropp.

40,945. What did you get ?—10*l.*

40,946. From whom ?—I do not know.

40,947. How was it you did not get anything from Mr. Patton on his first election ?—I do not know.

40,948. Were you promised anything?—Yes

40,949. Who by?—I do not know.

40,950. Were you promised by Temblett?—I do not know. I know I was promised. There was a talk of it.

40,951. Did you vote in 1859?—Yes.

40,952. How did you vote then?—Westropp and Padwick.

40,953. What did you get?—10*l.* at Murlis's.

40,954. Did you vote in 1857?—No.

40,955. Have you ever had money from the other side?—Never in my life.

WILLIAM LUXTON sworn.

W. Luxton.

40,956. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A smith.

40,957. Where do you work?—For myself.

40,958. Are you a voter?—Yes.

40,959. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,960. How?—Westropp and Gray.

40,961. Did you get anything?—No.

40,962. Any promise of any kind?—No.

40,963. Were you at any of the meetings where anything was said that induced you to vote?—Nothing of the kind at any of the meetings I was at.

40,964. Did you vote in 1866?—I voted at Mr. Patton's two elections, and had 10*l.* each time.

40,965. From whom?—Mr. Jarman.

40,966. Had you anything besides that between the two elections?—No, nothing at all.

40,967. Did you vote in 1865?—I had no vote then.

40,968. You had no vote?—No.

JOHN HUMBER sworn.

J. Humber.

40,969. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A carpenter.

40,970. For whom do you work?—I work for myself.

40971. Do you work a great deal for Mr. Joseph Richard Smith?—Yes, occasionally.

40,972. Are you a voter?—Yes.

40,973. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

40,974. How?—I voted for Westropp and Gray.

40,975. Did you get anything for it?—No.

40,976. Any promise?—No.

40,977. Were you present when Mr. Joseph Smith talked about "M.D."?—No. No such thing at all.

40,978. Was nothing said to you that it would be all right afterwards?—No.

40,979. Did Joseph Smith canvass you?—No.

40,980. How did you vote in 1866?

40,981. (Mr. Anstey.) Wait a moment. You were examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn, were not you?—I will tell you in a moment—1866?

40,982. (Mr. Price.) The question asked of you is, were you examined in this court before Mr. Justice Blackburn, in February last? Now attend.—(The witness referred to a paper.)

(Mr. Coleridge.) Never mind your paper.

40,982*a*. (Mr. Price.) Were you examined here before the judge?—Not as I know of.

40,983. Do you remember the judge being down here in February?—Yes.

40,984. Were you examined as a witness?—For a witness? Yes.

40,985. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you employed to get voters?—No.

40,986. Is not your name Henry Humber?—I have got a son called Henry.

40,987. What are you to Henry Humber?—Father.

40,988. (Mr. Price.) Did you say you voted in 1866? (A pause.) Your paper will show you, if you look at it. Mr. Patton stood here twice in 1866. Did you vote then?—Yes.

40,989. How did you vote each time?—For Mr. Patton.

40,990. How much did you get each time?—10*l.* the first election.

40,991. (Mr. Coleridge.) From whom?—Mr. Temblett.

40,992. Did you vote for Mr. Patton the other time?—Yes.

40,993. What did you get then?—5*l.*

40,994. And how much from the other side?—I never had anything to do with the other side.

40,995. Did you get another 5*l.* between the two elections? (A pause.) Will you answer the question?—How do you mean?

40,996. Did you get another 5*l.* between Mr. Patton's two elections?—Why, I had a share in the hustings.

40,997. Did you get another 5*l.* between the two elections?—No, I did not.

40,998. (Mr. Price.) What did you say about a share in the hustings?—(No answer.)

40,999. Were you paid any bill?—I was paid 5*l.* of course, or 4*l.* 10*s.*, or something like that.

41,000. What for?—For assisting in putting up the hustings.

41,001. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many day's work did you do for that?—I suppose it would take a week putting them up and taking them down.

41,002. (Mr. Anstey.) How long did it take you?—(No answer.)

40,003. (Mr. Price.) How long were you working at the hustings yourself?—About a week, I should say.

(Mr. Anstey.) A week putting up hustings?

41,004. (Mr. Price.) When was that? There were only two or three hustings?—Every time. Of course every person when they put them up expects to get paid for it.

41,005. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get paid 4*l.* 10*s.* every time when you assisted in putting them up?—Yes.

41,006. Did you get paid that amount?—Yes.

41,007. From whom?—Mr. Stockham, I believe, paid me.

41,008. How did you vote?—Always Conservative.

41,009. In 1865 how did you vote?—For Mr. Westropp.

41,010. What did you get?—10*l.*

41,011. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Temlett.

41,012. (Mr. Price.) Did you get 4*l.* 10*s.* for hustings that time as well?—I believe not.

41,013. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for hustings?—Nothing at all that time.

41,014. How did you vote in 1859?—For Padwick and Westropp.

41,015. What did you get then?—10*l.*

41,016. Who gave it to you then?—Mr. Murlis.

41,017. How did you vote in 1857, Follett, Tynte, and Kinglake?—I did not vote in 1857.

41,018. Did you vote in 1852?—No.

41,019. When was the first time you ever voted?—The first time that ever I voted was in Mr. Broadwood's election.

41,020. (Mr. Price.) How much did you get then?—10*l.*

41,021. From whom?—Old Mr. Richard Smith.

41,022. Did you get more than one 10*l.* from Mr. Broadwood? Mr. Broadwood sat for some time here as a member. Did you get 10*l.* every time?—No. I only voted once.

41,023. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much have you had altogether, besides what you got for the hustings; just tell us?—I can tell you that. I have had two tens, and the 5*l.* from Temblett, and 10*l.* else.

41,024. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you let me look at that paper?—Certainly (handing the paper to the learned Commissioner.) It is one I made out yesterday.

FORTIETH DAY.

J. Humber.

12 Oct. 1869.

(Mr. Price.) Two tens at Mr. Patton's two elections?

(Mr. Coleridge.) You have not put down Broadwood on that paper.

(Mr. Price.) 10*l.* Broadwood; that is 30*l.*; and 10*l.* Westropp. I think it is 45*l.* besides hustings.

41,025. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you not to vote in 1857, Follett's election?—I did not vote.

41,026. Why did you not vote, if you had a vote?—I do not know, sir, I am sure.

(Mr. Price.) No money going?

41,027. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the election of Mansell and Follett, in 1852?—No.

41,028. Then in 1847 you voted for Mr. Broadwood, and got 10*l.*?—Yes.

C. Browning.

CHRISTOPHER BROWNING sworn.

41,029. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A biscuit baker.

41,030. Are you a voter?—Yes.

41,031. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

41,032. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

41,033. Did you get anything for it?—No; neither money nor promise.

41,034. Did you vote in 1866?—I did.

41,035. How did you vote?—At Mr. Patton's election?

41,036. Yes, both of them?—Westropp and Padwick.

41,037. No. Westropp and Padwick did not stand then. Did you vote when Mr. Patton was the candidate?—Yes.

41,038. How did you vote then?—Westropp and Padwick.

41,039. Patton's two elections I am talking about?—Yes, I voted for Mr. Patton.

41,040. How much did you get for voting for Mr. Patton?—10*l.* at each election.

41,041. From whom?—10*l.* from Temblett at the "Bull and Butcher."

41,042. Where did you get the other 10*l.*?—I cannot tell where I got the other.

41,043. Did you get it from Truman?—No.

41,044. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

41,045. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

41,046. How?—I voted in 1865 for Mr. Westropp, I believe.

41,047. How much did you get?—I got 10*l.* then from Heal. He was my landlord at the time.

41,048. William Heal?—William Heal.

41,049. Did you vote in 1859, when Padwick and Westropp were here?—Yes.

41,050. How did you vote then?—Padwick and Westropp. That was the first time of my voting for the Conservatives.

41,051. What did you get then?—10*l.*

41,052. Did you vote in 1857?—Yes.

41,053. (Mr. Coleridge.) Liberal that time?—Liberal that time.

41,054. (Mr. Price.) Tynte and Kinglake?—Tynte and Kinglake.

41,055. What did you get?—That was the time I got the 10*l.* from Heal. I voted twice for the Liberals. I lived in a Liberal house.

41,056. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who gave you the 10*l.* when you voted the first time Conservative, for Padwick and Westropp, in 1859?—Murlis, at the "Albion."

41,057. Then in 1857 it was that Heal gave you the 10*l.*?—Yes.

41,058. In 1852 what did you get for voting Liberal?—I had no vote then.

41,059. You voted twice for the Liberals you say?—Yes, I did vote twice; I voted in 1852.

41,060. What did you get then?—Nothing.

41,061. How was that?—There was a sort of collation. There was no money going.

41,062. That was when Lord Henley was here?—Yes.

E. T. Lane.

EDWARD THOMAS LANE sworn.

41,063. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A confectioner.

41,064. Are you a voter?—Yes.

41,065. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

41,066. How?—Westropp and Gray.

41,067. Did you have anything?—No.

41,068. Any promise?—No.

41,069. Were you at any of these meetings where you heard anything said about "money down"?—I heard what Mr. Smith said.

41,070. Tell us what he said?—What Mr. Smith said was this, respecting our keeping together as we had done ever since the Conservative Working Men's Association had been formed, and when he had drawed his speech to a close, he said, "If any of you choose to "desert your camp, and change your colours, and vote "for the other side of the question, remember," he said, "the American adage, 'money down,' if any of you "choose to desert your camp and change your colours, "remember that," but nothing about sugar and plums.

41,071. In 1866, Patton's elections, how did you vote?—For Mr. Patton.

41,072. Both times?—Yes.

41,073. How much did you get?—10*l.* at the second election from the "Bull and Butcher."

41,074. Did you get anything at the first election?—I had nothing at the election, but about a month afterwards Mr. Temblett brought me up 10*l.*

41,075. Was that all you had at those two elections?—That was all I had at those two elections.

41,076. Did you vote in 1865?—I did.

41,077. For whom?—Mr. Westropp.

41,078. What did you get?—10*l.*

41,079. From whom?—Mr. Boys.

41,080. Did you vote in 1859?—Yes.

41,081. How?—Westropp and Padwick.

41,083. From whom?—Charles Lear brought it up

41,084. Did you vote in 1857?—Yes.

41,085. For whom?—I split my vote then for Follett and Tynte.

41,086. Did you get any money then?—No.

41,087. On neither side?—No.

41,088. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes; for Mansell and Follett.

41,089. Did you get anything?—No; neither money nor promise.

41,090. Did you vote before that?—No; I was not a housekeeper then.

J. Billin.

JAMES BILLIN sworn.

41,091. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A rope maker.

41,092. Are you a voter?—Yes.

41,093. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

41,094. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

41,095. Did you get anything?—No.

41,096. Any promise?—No.

41,097. Did you vote in 1866, the two elections of Mr. Patton?—Yes.

41,098. How did you vote then?—I voted for Mr Patton.

41,099. Both times?—Yes.

41,100. How much did you get each time?—I had

10*l.* one time, and 10*l.* the other time. I had two tens. I had 5*l.* at the time of the election, and 5*l.* again after that.

41,101. That came to 10*l.* each time?—Yes.

41,102. Whom did you get that money from?—I do not know who I got the 10*l.* from.

41,103. From whom did you get the 5*l.* after the election?—Temblett.

41,104. And the 5*l.* at the time of the election?—Mr. Waddon.

41,105. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

41,106. How did you vote?—For Mr. Westropp.

41,107. What did you get then?—10*l.*

41,108. From whom?—Mr. Heal.

41,109. Did you vote in 1859?—No.

41,110. Had you no vote?—No.

41,111. No vote before 1865?—No.

41,112. Did you ever have anything from the other side at any time?—No.

THOMAS CROCKER sworn.

41,113. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A bootmaker.

41,114. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

41,115. How?—For Westropp and Gray.

41,116. Did you get anything?—No.

41,117. Any promise of any kind?—No.

41,118. Were you present at any of those meetings where anything was said that induced you to vote?—Yes, I was present at the meetings, but I heard nothing to induce me to vote.

41,119. You did not vote in consequence of anything you heard there?—No.

41,120. How did you vote at Mr. Patton's two contests in 1866?—For Mr. Patton.

41,121. Both times?—Yes.

41,122. What did you get each time?—10*l.*

41,123. From whom?—I do not know exactly who it was from.

41,124. Did you get it from the "Bull and Butcher"?—No.

41,125. Where did you get it the last time Mr. Patton stood?—From a stranger, I think it was.

41,126. Where would it be at?—From the "Three Crowns," from a stranger.

41,127. At Mr. Patton's first contest, who paid you then?—Mr. Hayward, I believe, 5*l.*

41,128. Did you get another 5*l.* afterwards?—Yes.

41,129. Before the next contest?—Yes.

41,130. Who was that from?—From Temblett, I think.

41,131. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

41,132. For whom?—Padwick and Tynte.

41,133. No; they did not stand in 1865?—It was Westropp and Kinglake?

41,134. Yes. Did you vote for Westropp?—I did.

41,135. What did you get?—10*l.*

41,136. From whom?—I believe it was from Hayward, the 10*l.*

41,137. Did you vote in 1859, Padwick and Westropp?—Yes.

41,138. How?—I voted for Padwick and Tynte.

41,139. What did you get?—10*l.*, I think.

41,140. From each?—No.

41,141. How did you come to split your vote?—Well, I scarcely know.

41,142. Which side paid you? Whose money was it you got?—I think it was 5*l.* from Murlis and 5*l.* from Mr. Faun.

41,143. (Mr. Coleridge.) He is on the Liberal side?—Yes.

41,144. Then you were paid on both sides?—Yes, I must have been in that case.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Of course you were.

41,145. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1857?—Yes.

41,146. How did you vote then?—Tynte and Kinglake.

41,147. Did you get anything then?—No, I think not.

41,148. You think not, you say. Do you undertake to say you voted without money at that time?—Well, I am not certain; I have not got it down here.

41,149. (Mr. Coleridge.) Try and recollect. Did not you, or somebody on your behalf, get anything on that occasion?—I do not remember.

41,150. What was it, 10*l.*?—I do not know.

41,151. (Mr. Price.) Have you ever voted without getting money, except at the last election?—Yes.

41,152. When?—Well, I am not certain which election.

41,153. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1852?—Yes.

41,154. How did you vote then?—I voted for Follett and Tynte.

41,155. (Mr. Price.) You split your vote again?—Yes.

41,156. What did you get, 5*l.* each side?—No; I do not recollect getting anything.

41,157. Was that the first time you voted?—In 1847 I voted for Tynte and Broadwood.

41,158. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you get then?—I really do not know what I had.

41,159. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you some money when you voted for Broadwood?—I cannot say I did.

41,160. Will you swear you did not?—No, I will not.

41,161. Will you swear, except the last election, you ever voted without money?—Yes.

41,162. When?—I cannot say which election.

41,163. Let us understand you. At one out of three of those elections you say you had no money, but at two out of the three you certainly had?—Yes.

41,164. How much?—I cannot say; it must have been 10*l.* I got from one of them.

41,165. From whom?—I do not know.

41,166. From both sides?—No, not that I am aware of.

41,167. Had you money at all those three elections, 1847, 1852, 1857?—No.

41,168. Will you swear you had not?—No.

41,169. Will you swear you had not money at all three?—Yes.

41,170. That you swear?—Yes.

41,171. Two out of the three you got money, and you got 10*l.* at one of them?—I do not know.

41,172. Was it 10*l.* you got at the other?—I cannot say.

41,173. Which side was it to vote on that you had the money? You do not know, and you do not care?—Oh, yes, I care.

41,174. (Mr. Price.) Then why do not you tell us?—My memory is rather bad, or I would tell you.

41,175. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much have you had altogether for bribery and corruption since you have been an elector of Bridgwater? Assuming you got 10*l.* at those two elections, you have had 60*l.* or more?—No, not so much as that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I cannot make it less.

41,176. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you any relation to William Crocker, the mariner?—Yes.

41,177. And who was bribed by Bussell?—Yes.

41,178. And whose case led to the unseating of Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—Yes.

41,179. Are you now a master shoemaker or a working shoemaker?—A master.

41,180. How long have you been a master shoemaker?—About 20 years, I suppose.

41,181. Have you been in good circumstances all that time?—No, not very good circumstances; nothing to boast of.

41,182. You are a householder, of course, or you could not have a vote?—Yes.

FORTIETH DAY.

T. Crocker.

12 Oct. 1869.

41,183. You have been in business all that time?—Yes.

41,184. And at every election but two, the last one, and the one which you cannot recollect the date of, you have sold yourself, now to Whig, now to Tory, at the rate of 10*l.* per vote, and sometimes you were paid on both sides?—(No answer.)

(Mr. Price.) 5*l.* from each.

J. Hayward.

JAMES HAYWARD sworn.

41,185. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A nurseryman and seedsman.

41,186. Are you a voter?—Yes.

41,187. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

41,188. How did you vote?—Conservative.

41,189. Did you get anything for it?—No.

41,190. Any promise?—None whatever.

41,191. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

41,192. At both elections?—Yes.

41,193. What did you get each time?—10*l.* each.

41,194. Whom did you vote for each time?—Conservative.

41,195. From whom did you get your money?—The "Bull and Butcher."

41,196. Both times?—Yes.

41,197. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

41,198. For whom?—Westropp.

41,199. What did you get?—10*l.*

41,200. From whom?—The "Bull and Butcher."

41,201. Did you get anything from the other side?—No.

41,202. In 1859 how did you vote?—For Padwick and Westropp.

41,205. From whom?—Murlis.

41,206. Anything on the other side?—No.

41,207. In 1857 did you vote?—No.

41,208. (Mr. Price.) Did you live in the Taunton Road?—In the Taunton Road.

Mr. P. B. Sharkey.

Mr. PETER BURROWS SHARKEY sworn.

41,209. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a solicitor and parliamentary agent.

41,210. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you been concerned for Mr. Vanderbyl in late elections?—I have not.

41,211. In any election?—In no election.

41,212. Did you concern yourself in raising money for him for the purposes of his elections?—I never concerned myself in raising money for Mr. Vanderbyl for any purpose whatever, and therefore for no election purpose.

41,213. Has any money passed through your hands destined for Mr. Vanderbyl?—Not to my knowledge.

41,214. Do you know any person of the name of D'Esterre, 35 Piccadilly?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then you have been the victim, and the Commissioners have been the victims, of a stupid hoax. A man who has professed to give his name and address at full length has informed us on your behalf, that you are prepared to give very important information about the manner of Mr. Vanderbyl's raising money for his election.

41,215. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know Mr. Vanderbyl personally?—I do not know him personally. I never saw him to my knowledge. May I ask you, sir, to let me see the communication to which you have referred.

(Mr. Anstey.) I will find it if I possibly can.

41,216. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know anything of the firm of which he is a member, Alexander and Company?—No.

41,217. Or of another firm of which he is a member, Redfern, Fennelly, and Company?—No.

41,218. Have you in any shape or way been mixed up with those firms, either for them or against them, in any way whatever?—I may have been professionally connected with some one of the partners, but I have no recollection at present of any of them; but if you will kindly give me a clue in any way that will refresh my memory, I will state everything I know connected with them.

41,219. (Mr. Anstey.) Here is the letter. Do you know that handwriting (handing the letter to the witness)?—I will just read it through, sir, if you please. (After reading the letter to himself, the witness said) I do not know the handwriting.

41,220. Do you know the person whose name appears to be signed to it?—I do not know Mr. D'Esterre, nor have I ever heard of him. I do not know therefore that he resides at that place in Piccadilly.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is a disgraceful trick, that is all.

(The witness.) And it is only fair to the Reform Club that I should state this; I think I may take it to be an anonymous communication.

(Mr. Anstey.) A synonymous communication.

(The witness.) I will adopt your term, if you like. I was never in my life connected with the finding of money for corrupt purposes at any election. Although my sympathies and politics are with the Reform Club, which is mentioned in the letter, I have never been engaged professionally for any such purpose as is here represented.

41,221. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever been engaged professionally for legal purposes at all?—My professional avocations have frequently called me into legal activity.

41,222. Are you a partner of Mr. Holmes?—I have been.

(Mr. Anstey.) You can make any use you please, either of that letter or of me, in endeavouring to trace out the person who wrote and signed it.

41,223. (Mr. Price.) You are quite entitled to do so, because it is a very great shame.—I have travelled the greater part of two days and a night in order to be here; and, I need not say, I am very sorry that I have had my name connected or mixed up with this very painful inquiry.

(Mr. Price.) It cannot be helped. We have had numerous letters in which statements have been made with regard to various persons, the truth of which we are bound to find out.

41,224. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your political opinions are opposed to your partner's, Mr. Holmes?—Diametrically opposed.

41,225. May he have been mixed up with politics?—Am I to answer that question?

41,226. Yes.—According to my general knowledge I do not think he was.

41,227. As a general rule, in your business, did he act for the Liberal side, or more frequently for both sides?—More frequently for both sides. But if any Liberal business come to our firm, I am more generally entrusted with the management of it. Has the Commission ascertained whether this man resides at 35, Piccadilly or not?

(Mr. Price.) We have no means of ascertaining it.

(Mr. Anstey.) We are not sitting in London, so we have not been able to ascertain.

(The witness.) May I read the letter, so that it may get on the shorthand writer's note?

(Mr. Anstey.) Certainly.

(The witness.) "35, Piccadilly, London,

"5th October 1869.

Sir,

"If you think proper to summon Mr. P. B. "Sharkey, of No. 16, Piccadilly, he can tell you "a great deal of how money was obtained from

" various quarters (Reform Club, &c.) to secure the " return of Mr. Vanderbyl for Bridgwater, and afterwards to defend the petition against him. Mr. " Sharkey is a parliamentary agent, and has been " much mixed up in the Bridgwater and many other " such elections, which were carried chiefly by the " improper use of money.

" I remain, sir, your obedt. servant,

" HENRY D'ESTERRE.

" The Honble. Mr. Anstey,

" Commissioner, Bridgwater."

41,228. (Mr. Price.) So that we may get it formally on the notes, you entirely deny all and every part of that letter?—I deny all and every part of this letter, and I never had anything with Mr. D'Esterre, and I do not know him.

41,229. Have you ever been at Bridgwater before?—Never before I received your summons.

41,230. Or have you been in any way connected with the Bridgwater elections?—Neither directly or indirectly with the Bridgwater elections, or Mr. Vanderbyl or any other persons connected with Bridgwater.

41,231. (Mr. Anstey.) That letter seems to be in a lawyer's or lawyer's clerk's handwriting?—I do not know.

41,232. (Mr. Price.) Do you know the handwriting?—No.

41,233. (Mr. Anstey.) It appears to be a lawyer's clerk's handwriting?—It is a shaky hand. Probably it is the handwriting of some elderly person.

(Mr. Price.) It is a libel, there is no doubt, as you know probably, being a solicitor, and you are entitled to have that letter, and use it in any way you think proper.

(The witness.) The amount of damage would be for the way in which my name has been connected with this inquiry.

41,234. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you in any way, at any time, connected with Taunton elections?—I think our firm, if I am not very much mistaken, has had the conduct of the election petition.

41,235. This last election?—No, I think not; not this last election.

41,236. In 1865?—I think during my partnership with Mr. Holmes at the end of 1865.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That may give some clue to it; it may be Taunton.

Mr. GEORGE UPTON ROBINS sworn.

Mr. G. U. Robins.

41,237. (Mr. Price.) You are a member of a firm in London. We do not know the name of the firm?—I have only one partner, Burgess; Robins and Burgess.

41,238. Are you the private solicitors, or were you the private solicitors of Mr. Bagehot, or the London agents?—I have done things for Mr. Bagehot. I have been professionally concerned for him on occasions.

41,239. But was your firm acting at any time as Mr. Bagehot's solicitors?—I was myself.

41,240. You are the gentleman of whom we have heard money was obtained by some of the agents here?—Yes.

41,241. We have heard of you from Mr. Henry Lovibond, or Mr. Barham, or somebody. You are the Mr. Robins?—I am.

41,242. Well, had you the settlement then of any of Mr. Bagehot's accounts in respect of the election contest in 1866?—Nothing beyond this: A few days after the election Mr. Lovibond came up to London and called upon me (I had never seen him before in my life) and he mentioned that certain expenses had been incurred in reference to Mr. Bagehot's candidature, and that he trusted he should not leave him in the lurch. My name was given to him by Mr. Bagehot when he left the town.

41,243. Had Mr. Bagehot told you that he had given up your name as the person to refer to in respect to any of the expenses of the contest?—Yes, he did, when he returned from Bridgwater after his defeat, but not before he had come down here.

41,244. Not before he came down here?—No, but he intended to in case any questions were asked.

41,245. Then you say Mr. Lovibond came to you and said he hoped that you would not throw him over?—Yes. Then it was intimated that about 1,100*l.* had been spent improperly; and I asked by whose authority, and he said that four of them, I suppose gentlemen known to the Commissioners, Mr. Barham and two others, I think (they are all strangers to me), he said that those four gentlemen had made themselves responsible for 1,000*l.*; and I said, "Do you expect " to be paid this 1,000*l.*? And he said, "Certainly " we do, 500*l.* immediately, and the rest as soon as " possible." I said, "I will take time to consider it." I communicated with Mr. Bagehot.

41,246. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you tell Mr. Bagehot?—That 1,100*l.* had been spent improperly, the same exactly as Mr. Lovibond told me, and he said he was very sorry to hear of it, but he was almost afraid of it when he came away at the last moment, because they had said to him, "I hope you won't leave us in the lurch." Well, the result of our deliberations were that I advised Mr. Bagehot to pay the money, and he paid it through me.

41,247. (Mr. Price.) Well now, besides that sum of money, do you know of any other money spent by Mr. Bagehot at that election?—There was 193*l.* I think of legal expenses in the return.

41,248. In addition?—And the sum of 240*l.* paid not till the February, I think, of the following year. Mr. Lovibond had pressed several times for the fees which he said the professional men here ought to receive. 50*l.* a piece was named; and there was a sum for what he called "sundries." Altogether it amounted to 240*l.*, and that I sent him a cheque for.

41,249. That is all the expenditure that you know of on Mr. Bagehot's behalf. Is that so?—Every shilling.

41,250. Well, would you be the person who would know it?—I think I should; certainly.

41,251. Is it at all likely that anything like 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.* were spent by Mr. Bagehot at that election?—I feel perfectly confident he did not spend a single shilling beyond his hotel bill except what I have named.

41,252. (Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Bagehot a man of large property?—I should say not a man of large property.

41,253. (Mr. Coleridge.) He is connected with the "Economist"?—Yes.

41,254. He is editor, I think?—Yes.

41,255. (Mr. Anstey.) You would not call him a rich country gentleman?—Oh, by no means. I think I ought to mention, Mr. Commissioner, that when Mr. Bagehot first came to me he wanted me, as a friend, to protect him in the matter; he did not know what might happen, and he should refer everybody to me.

41,256. What did you understand protection meant?—He might be led to spend money illegally, and that was his particular objection. Emphatically he said that.

41,257. Do you know how he was introduced to the constituency? I mean, through whom; was it Mr. Travers Smith?—I do not know, but I think Mr. Lovibond and some other solicitor in this town came up and called upon him.

41,258–9. Do not you know whether they had any introduction through Mr. Smith or Sir William Drake?—I do not know. I saw Sir William Drake once on the subject, and he said he knew nothing at all about Bridgwater ; they always managed their own affairs here themselves.

41,260. (Mr. Price.) You saw Sir William Drake about Mr. Bagehot's coming down here?—Yes, I did; a month before the election.

41,261. That was what he said?—That was what he said

41,262. They managed their own affairs?—They always managed their own matters down here.

41,263. Mr. Bagehot, I suppose, having some connexion with the neighbourhood, knew something about Bridgwater personally?—He is a Somersetshire man, I believe.

41,264. I mean he probably knew something about the character of Bridgwater?—I presume he did.

41,265. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you go to Sir William Drake about?—To inquire as to the probabilities of success of the Liberal candidate, and also what the state of the constituency was, and so on, and also to ask him whether he had any idea about the expenses of a contest at Bridgwater. He said that he knew nothing at all about it.

41,266. They managed their affairs themselves?—They managed their affairs themselves.

41,267. That was in answer to your question about the probable amount of the expenditure?—Yes.

41,268. (Mr. Price.) Was Mr. Bagehot the least aware, do you think, before he came down here that these gentlemen had agreed to subscribe or become answerable for a sum of 1,000*l.* to be spent immediately?—I feel certain that he did not know it, from an observation which fell from Mr. Lovibond, because he said to me, at the first interview after the election, "If I had only seen you or some mutual friend soon "after, we should have carried him—he would have "been carried."

41,269. Why?—Because he said he felt embarrassed about the money. He had only 1,000*l.* to spend, and could not go beyond.

41,270. He thought if he had seen you he would have got more out of you, and spent more?—I gathered it from what he said.

41,271. Had anything fallen from you that could possibly lead Mr. Lovibond to say that?—I never saw him in my life before.

41,272. Did you say anything at that interview which led him to say that?—No; on the contrary I resisted and remonstrated, and took several days to consider, and it was only after much consideration and deliberation that we arrived at the painful conclusion that it was necessary. They said Mr. Bagehot's name would stink ; he would be a mean man, and would be always represented as mean wherever he went. Mr. Bagehot, being a generous minded man, did not like to leave them in the lurch by not sending the money.

41,273. Did they put on every kind of screw?—This kind of screw. They called and wrote more than once.

41,274. Using that kind of threatening language ; that he would be considered a mean man, and called a mean man?—Yes.

41,275. And at last his feelings were worked upon, and yours too?—I was quite as bad, I think. I advised him to do it. I was very sorry for it.

41,276. Do you know anything about his declining to stand at the next election?—Yes, I do. Mr. Lovibond came to me at the next election, and wanted him to stand. I said, in the first instance, it was unhandsome to Mr. Bagehot, and I discountenanced it entirely, and, secondly, that Mr. Bagehot would not spend another farthing.

41,277. (Mr. Anstey.) When Mr. Lovibond said to you, "If we had seen you we should have won," did you not feel surprised at his taking it for granted that you would have permitted or encouraged a profuse expenditure?—Well, perhaps, I did.

41,278. Did you express your surprise?—Yes, I did.

41,279. What did you say?—I expressed my surprise and astonishment that he should have incurred this expense without consulting Mr. Bagehot or me.

41,280. You see his remark implied that he had such confidence in you, in your being of the same opinion as himself, that if he had seen you that day he would have raised the money necessary to bribe the voters with, and would have got Mr. Bagehot in. Now were you not surprised that he should have formed that opinion of you, you never having seen him before?—Perhaps I was a little, but not very much.

41,281. Did anything occur to explain it?—Nothing whatever.

41,282. Is it a surprising circumstance even now, unless we suppose that Mr. Lovibond was not telling the truth?—That I cannot answer.

41,283. (Mr. Price.) I think that is all, unless you have any other information to give us with regard to it. You are quite sure there is only that expenditure. I will put the question again to you. You are quite sure that you would have known if there had been any greater expenditure than that?—I feel certain I should.

41,284. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Bagehot consult you before he came down here at all?—Yes, a month before.

41,285. (Mr. Price.) Did he come down here under the impression that he was going to fight a pure election?—Entirely ; and resolutely determined to do it. If they had mentioned it to him he would have gone back immediately by the next train, I feel confident from the observations he made.

41,286. (Mr. Coleridge.) Must he not, being a Somersetshire man, have known the character of the borough too well to imagine the possibility of a pure contest?—Well, I think the Commissioners should examine him, and he can expressly deny it.

41,287. I mean did he ever have any idea——?—I conceive he is an innocent man in that respect. He never stood a contest before and knew very little about it. Perhaps I ought to have known it and ought to have warned him.

41,288. (Mr. Price.) Had Mr. Bagehot been living in London the greater part of his life?—Yes.

41,289. Not in Somersetshire?—No.

41,290. Had he never been mixed up in the politics of the county?—Not in the least. I never heard of it.

41,291. He was a politician, I have no doubt?—Yes, he had a newspaper, and he has since offered himself as a candidate for King's College, if you remember.

41,292. At the last election?—At the last election.

Mr. J. Trevor.

Mr. James Trevor recalled.

41,293. (Mr. Price.) The first thing I wish to draw your attention to is to this question about the expenses. You see the whole legal expenses of Mr. Westropp returned at 191*l.* 0*s.* 8½*d.* Now, Mr. Westropp has told us that he in the first instance returned a sum of a little under 10*l.* as the personal expenses?—Yes.

41,294. Well, then, it seems by a letter which I hold in my hand from you ; a letter of the 27th of December 1868 : "I think your tavern bill at Bridgwater "must be included in your personal election expenses, "so will you send me amended account, and get Mr. "Gray to send me his account also." Then it seems that the personal expenses were then made out at 72*l.* 2*s.* 3½*d.*?—Yes.

41,295. For Mr. Westropp. And then there is 76*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* for Mr. Gray. Now, we find that Mr. Leaker's bill, which is a large amount in the whole, 130*l.* odd, is principally made up of expenditure previous to the hearing of the petition, and that the expense of Mr. Westropp whilst he was down here at the hearing of the petition does not amount altogether to 5*l.*?—No.

41,296. Now, when Mr. Leaker's bill was sent in, Mr. Westropp says that he divided the bill pretty evenly between himself and Mr. Gray, and that he added his share, that is to say, half of Mr. Leaker's bill, to the sum which he had previously given to you as under 10*l.*, and that that makes the sum of 72*l.* 2*s.* 3½*d.*, and that the other half added to what Mr. Gray had formerly sent in makes the sum of 76*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* Mr. Westropp therefore considered, he says, that having lodged in your hands or rather at the bank, 200*l.* for legal expenses, and the account published by you being only 191*l.*, which apparently includes Mr. Leaker's bill under the head of personal expenses, he considers that that bill was discharged, or ought to have been, out of that 200*l.*, and that consequently on application by Mr. Brice, I think, he declined to pay any sum, saying that he considered that you had had ample to pay Leaker's bill. Now, will you be pleased to tell us how it was, that Leaker's bill never was discharged although you returned the personal expenses as money spent? You know you returned it at 72*l.* ?—I consider that I had nothing whatever to do with Leaker's bill in any way. They were personal expenses excepted by the Act of Parliament from the payments that are made by the agent for election expenses.

41,297. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Leaker has said that he wrote at your dictation, and he wrote these bills by your dictation; and they were inserted by your dictation in the legal expenses ?—No, that is the other bill, the bill which I paid him.

41,298. (Mr. Price.) Look here, here is a letter from you :

"My dear Mr. Westropp,

" Leaker has sent me a bill of 26*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* and " 96*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* on you and Mr. Gray, which I enclose, " for your tavern expenses, which should be paid by " yourselves and not by me as agent; and you and " Mr. Gray must send me account of all your personal " expenses without loss of time as to the election. " The charge seemed high for rooms, but Leaker says " his house was so overrun that the ordinary charge " would not pay."

Now, what Mr. Westropp complains of is this, that there was 200*l.* lodged for legal expenses. Personal expenses are a part of that, and you returned them as a part of the legal expenses, and therefore he had a right to assume that that 200*l.* would be partly expended in the tavern bill?—Mr. Westropp has never told me that to this day. I have never heard it from him at all.

41,299. (Mr. Coleridge.) You put down the personal expenses ?—I had nothing whatever to do with his personal expenses. The only thing I have got to do is the return to the mayor.

41,300. (Mr. Price.) Who had the custody of the 200*l.*?—700*l.* was the sum. It was deposited at the bank.

41,301. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is 200*l.* for the legal expenses of the two gentlemen? — No, they were 380*l.*

41,302. That is what he stated? — That is very likely. Perhaps he made that up in his own mind but he never told me. As an indemnity to me 700*l.* was deposited at Stuckey's bank by Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray in my name.

41,303. And out of that all the agents were to be paid ?—That was the original intention, no doubt.

41,304. (Mr. Price.) And the legal expenses ?—Yes, the legal expenses; not the personal expenses.

41,305. We want to know how that has been expended ?—You have got the book, the banker's book; I have got a copy from them.

41,306. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is put down personal expenses to Gray, 76*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*, what does that mean ?—That is the account furnished to me.

41,306*a*. Who furnished it to you ?—Mr. Gray.

41,307. Of his personal expenses?—His personal expenses.

41,308. That included Mr. Leaker's bill ?—No doubt.

41,309. Very well. Then if Mr. Leaker has not had it, what has become of the money ?—If you consider that I have had anything to do with it, I will tell you what has become of the money, but I had nothing to do with their personal expenses. I might as well have paid their railway fare as Leaker's bill.

41,310. (Mr. Coleridge.) The two amounts added together make up the whole sum. When you put the 76*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* and the 72*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* together, it exactly comes to the whole of Leaker's bill?—Oh, Leaker's bill was never contemplated in the thing at all.

41,311. Tell us what those personal expenses are? —It was never contemplated that they should be paid by me. It was never intended that I should pay the personal expenses.

41,312. (Mr. Price.) Let us understand this. You have told us that there was an indemnity, 700*l.*, which is lodged for you, which is to be an indemnity for you against the legal expenses ?—Yes.

41,313. And the agents ?—Yes.

41,314. Very well. In the legal expenses are included the personal ?—Certainly not; they are different. If you look at the Act of Parliament, you will find they are the excepted expenses (the personal expenses), and the election agent has nothing at all to do with them.

41,315. Then how in legal expenses did you expend that 200*l.* ?—You have got the return there; if you will kindly show it to me, I will tell you how it was. (The return was handed to the witness.)

41,316. You may have the return by all means. You cannot make the legal expenses out to be 200*l.* without including the personal expenses 76*l.* odd in one case, and 72*l.* odd in the other ?—This is not what I returned to the mayor. This is what the town clerk made out, and got me to sign.

41,317. (Mr. Coleridge.) I do not suppose you signed anything which you did not know to be correct? —I have no doubt the figures are right, but he classifies them. The personal expenses are no doubt Leaker's bill, railway fare, anything they gave as subscriptions at church, any fees to servants when the candidate dined out; in fact all the expenses, everything he paid while he was here.

41,318. (Mr. Price.) Let us know how you made out 200*l.* of legal expenses without the tavern bill? —I do not make it out; I only make out that, including the personal expenses.

41,319. Where is the balance ?—In the bank.

41,320. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why has not Mr. Leaker been paid out of the balance that is in the bank ?—Because I have never been asked.

41,321. Has not Mr. Leaker asked you ?—Yes, he did mention it to me several months ago. I said he had better write to Mr. Westropp about it.

41,322. How much is left in the bank ?—380*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*

41,323. Unexpended ?—Yes.

41,324. (Mr. Price.) That is ample to pay Mr. Leaker ?—Yes. I will pay it if Mr. Westropp asks me to pay it; he never has; I have no authority to pay it; I do not know that he approves of the bill; he wrote and told me some of the charges were high; the money was no use to me in the bank.

41,325. Has Mr. Leaker ever told you that he had asked Mr. Brice to pay it?—Not till the commission came on, the inquiry. I heard him say so the other day.

41,326. (Mr. Anstey.) Westropp and Gray are the two petitioners ?—Yes.

41,327. There is nobody joined with them in the petition ?—No.

41,328. And they are the two candidates in the election, and the money came from them to pay or provide for all the expenses of the election petition? —No, I had a further deposit of 700*l.* two days before.

41,329. (Mr. Price.) Was there not a subscription got up about the petition ?—I do not recollect whether any money was paid.

41,330. But was there a subscription list ?—There was a subscription list entered into.

FORTIETH DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

12 Oct. 1869.

41,331. Your name was put down?—For 25*l.* I think.

41,332. Have you paid it?—I do not know; I have paid a good deal.

41,333. Did Mr. Westropp subscribe 100*l.*?—Yes.

41,334. And Mr. Gray 100*l.*?—Yes.

41,335. How much of the subscriptions did they pay?—They paid 700*l.* by a cheque from Mr. Gray in London two or three days before the petition came on for hearing.

41,336. Have any other persons who subscribed to the petition found any of the money?—They have not paid me; it is very possible they have paid Mr. Lilly; he had the management of it; I had nothing to do with it.

41,337. How much are the taxed costs?—1,290*l.* odd.

41,338. Have you received that?—Since you have been sitting here.

41,339. What are the extra costs that the 700*l.* will not cover?—I can hardly say; the bill sent in was something between 1,900*l.* and 2,000*l.* My impression was that the 700*l.* which I received two days before the hearing would about cover the expenses of the petition.

41,340. That was a separate thing altogether from the other 700*l.*?—Well, I should consider that I had a lien upon that for the costs of the petition.

41,341. I suppose that is the way you put it?—I do not set that up, because it remained in abeyance till the costs should be paid.

41,342. You returned the legal expenses. Well, in that, to make up the 200*l.* which Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray both concluded was enough for all legal expenses, you must include this tavern bill?—No, I did not do anything of the kind, I assure you; it is quite your mistake. I knew nothing about the 200*l.* covering the legal expenses.

41,343. Where is the balance of that 200*l.*?—At the bank.

41,344. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then there is plenty of money to pay Mr. Leaker?—No doubt. I will pay Mr. Leaker directly if Mr. Westropp tells me to, or if you will do so on behalf of Mr. Westropp, I will pay it this afternoon.

41,345. (Mr. Price.) Oh no, certainly not?—I have no reason for keeping the money; it is no use to me in the bank.

41,346. Nobody can doubt that it is an extraordinary thing that Mr. Brice has to go through a very curious transaction with Mr. Leaker; a kind of loan to him which he thinks himself entitled at any time to recover from Mr. Leaker, while in the meantime money is lying at the bank which would amply pay Mr. Leaker?—At any time I would have paid it if they had asked me to do so.

41,347. Mr. Westropp says, "I was called upon for "more money for Mr. Leaker's bill, but when I saw "the published account of the legal expenses, and "that it did not come to 200*l.*, or more than 191*l.*, "including my personal expenses, I refused." It would mislead anybody, for the amount could not be made up except by including the personal expenses?—Well, that is the mayor's doing, if it misleads anybody; it is not my fault.

41,348. Mr. Westropp said, "I will pay no more"?—Then why did not he tell me so? He never told me so. If he had written to me and said, "You have got so much money in hand; pay Mr. Leaker out of it," I should have done so immediately.

41,349. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are the professional men's fees all paid?—For the last election?

41,350. Yes?—Not a copper.

41,351. They made altogether 350*l.*?—We gave that up on the day of election. We told them that rather than lose the election we would forego our fees.

41,352. We know that; but still there is that amount for expenses unaccounted for. If the amount of money has been expended which that bit of paper shows to have been expended, how has it been expended?—This paper (alluding to the return)? When I returned that I did not know but what Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray had paid their tavern bill.

41,353. What is represented there? Take and dissect either the 72*l.* of Mr. Westropp or the 76*l.* of Mr. Gray?—Why, that is made up, no doubt of the tavern bill, their railway fare coming to and fro, and every other payment that may have been made by them.

41,354. Well, that tavern bill has not been paid?—So I am told.

41,355. Well, you do not account for it by the professional men having given up their fees? You still have enough in the bank for these professional men's fees, if they have not given them up?—Oh yes, I think I have got more than enough. I have got 380*l.* in the bank, and I have paid out of the 700*l.* nearly 100*l.* for the election petition; I have paid about 80*l.*

41,356. That has been applied to the expenses of the petition out of the money which you represented in that account as personal expenses?—It is not what I represented; it is what they represented themselves. You will find it signed by themselves.

41,357. Mr. Leaker said that he made his account out at your dictation?—That is the account which I have included here.

41,358. The 19*l.*?—He sent in a heavier claim. He said that the risk of his house being torn to pieces was so great that he could not take what was proposed; it would be insufficient. I said I could not pay so much; it would look like bribery. Nobody could suppose it was a legitimate charge for the rooms. Then he modified his bill in accordance with my dictation.

41,359. He alleges that at your dictation he made out those two sums of 72*l.* and 76*l.*, as a sort of division of Mr. Gray's and Mr. Westropp's expenses?—Yes, I told him he must do so.

41,360. Then that, on the face of it, is false?—No, no, it is not. It is perfectly true.

41,361. (Mr. Price.) Does not that represent to the public that it has been paid?—I do not know whether it does or not; I have nothing to do with it. It does not represent it to me.

41,362. The object of the Act of Parliament is if possible to let the public know how much a candidate has expended?—That is quite in his own bosom. I have nothing to do with it. He may have bilked the railway. He may have come down without a ticket.

41,363. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told Mr. Leaker to put it down in that way?—No. He sent in a joint bill, and I said, "Each candidate will have to make a "return of his own personal expenses, and therefore "you must divide your bill between Mr. Westropp "and Mr. Gray, and say how much is Mr. Westropp's "share and how much is Mr. Gray's."

41,364. Then you put it into the legal expenses and never paid it?—No, I have done nothing of the kind. It is put into "personal expenses."

41,365. But the personal expenses are included in the legal expenses?—No, it is not so. If you will allow me to say so, they are not included at all.

41,366. (Mr. Price.) Read the heading?—This is an "Abstract of statement of election expenses incurred by and on behalf of Henry Westropp, Esq." I did not mean the lawyers. I meant legal election expenses.

41,367. I thought you meant legal expenses. "Ab- "stract of statement of election expenses incurred by "and on behalf of——." Two classes, you see,—one by, and the other on behalf of?—That is all of them, exeept the personal expenses.

41,368. It is represented to be paid; therefore it is false?—I cannot help that. It is Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray's fault. You should get the mayor to let you see the paper which I sent in.

41,369. You told Mr. Leaker to make it out in that way?—I told him to divide it, and the two dividend bills were sent in.

41,370. If Mr. Leaker had divided the 19*l.* I could have understood it, but he divided the whole account, and you sent it in as part of the legal expenses?—No, sir, pardon me; I sent it in as the personal expenses.

41,371. Legitimate expenses?—There is the document signed by Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, stating what their own personal expenses were, under their own handwriting.

41,372. Where is it?—Well, the mayor has got it, I suppose, or I suppose you have got it there. You must have it there somewhere.

41,373. If you had not called upon Mr. Westropp, very properly, to put his tavern bill into the legal election expenses, so that you might include it in your account, it would have stood in this way: Mr. Westropp would have had a claim sent in by Mr. Leaker for his tavern bill, and would probably have written him a cheque for it at once, but you having told him that he must put it into the account of his own personal expenses, that you might return it, he took it for granted that the payment of that would come out of the 200*l.*?—No, he did not do anything of the kind. He had gone through the ordeal——

41,374. If I had been Mr. Westropp I should—I really should?—I feel quite clear that he could not have thought so. He never asked me about it when he was applied to.

41,375. Mr. Gray seems to have thought the same. Mr. Gray expressed his great astonishment when he was down here the other day to find this bill included, as they were applied to by Mr. Leaker?—Why did they not ask me to pay it?

41,376. Because they thought you had paid it out of the 200*l.*, which they knew by the accounts was ample to cover it?—I would have paid it if they had told me.

41,377. (Mr. Coleridge.) The 76*l.* and the 72*l.* are still unaccounted for, except that you say you have paid it towards the expenses of the petition, which you had no business to do?—If you will kindly refer to the Act of Parliament you will find there are two classes of payments, one to be made by the agent for election expenses, and the other to be paid by the candidate, for his own personal expenses; and I conceive I had nothing whatever to do with Mr. Leaker's bill, so far as dinners and breakfasts, and so on.

41,378. How did it get into the paper?—Because I was bound to return it to the mayor. You will find it, if you will kindly look. I think that will explain it.

41,379. (Mr. Price.) You said, "Send it to me, "and get Mr. Gray to send me his amended account "also, because we wish to include the personal ex- "penses in the legal expenses;" and then having put it down in that way they are applied to for Leaker's bill, and they say, Nonsense, here is 200*l.* lodged to pay our legal expenses, and that must cover Leaker's bill, or otherwise where is the 200*l.*?—No, it could not pay Leaker's bill more than their railway fare. Why should I pay for their breakfasts, and beds, and dinners, more than for their railway fare?

41,380. Then you must account for the balance?—Oh, certainly.

41,381. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say about 100*l.* went to the petition?—About 80*l.*

41,382. Then money which ought to have gone to Mr. Leaker, and which is put down as personal expenses, was applied to the petition?—Oh no. If you look to the statement sent in you will find there is an account sent by Westropp and Gray, showing how their personal expenses are made up.

41,383. (Mr. Price.) Are there vouchers?—I do not think they are bound to send in vouchers.

41,384. I mean there would have been no difficulty about it, because Mr. Westropp says the only other expense he had here was under 10*l.*?—I daresay such expenses as railway fare, going to and fro, and perhaps something in the plate at church, or something of the kind would be included.

41,385. Well, as to Leaker's bill, he said, "When I "was applied to for Leaker's bill I said, 'No;'" and "Mr. Gray said, "'No,'" "because they have already "got 200*l.*, and they cannot have expended that upon "legal expenses," and they will have nothing to do with it?—All I can say is, I was agent for Captain Hood, for West Somerset, and I should never have thought of returning tavern bills and personal expenses. He kept an account.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No; but they are here put in the account.

41,386. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know how it happened that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray thought of paying this bill through their lawyers here instead of paying it on going away?—Well, I was surprised at it. I had no idea but what they had paid it for many months afterwards.

41,387. I should have thought Mr. Leaker would have had a cheque?—I supposed so. It is the usual thing for a gentleman to pay his tavern bill before he leaves, and when Mr. Brice told me many months afterwards that Mr. Leaker had asked him for the money I was surprised. If they had asked me I would have paid it with a very great deal of pleasure.

41,388. It seems there has been a great deal of money to liquidate this bill, which has been applied to another purpose?—No, sir, it has not been applied. There it is at the bank now, unproductive.

41,389. (Mr. Coleridge.) That 80*l.*, applied to the petition would have been very nearly enough?—There is plenty of money left now.

41,390. You won't look this in the face?—I will look anything in the face if I understand it.

41,391. Supposing the agents had taken their fees which amounted to 350*l.*?—No, 300*l.* we have reckoned for their fees.

41,392. 350*l.* Mr. Westropp says?—Then he made a mistake. I believe 300*l.* was put down at the outset.

41,393. Then there would not have been enough left to pay Leaker's bill?—Because it was never contemplated to pay Leaker's bill. It had nothing to do with Leaker's bill.

41,394. (Mr. Price.) If a gentleman lodges 200*l.* for what are called legitimate expenses, and if at the end of the election that is not expended, he has a right to the balance?—Clearly.

41,395. Mr. Westropp says, "I am in this position: "I have neither had the balance nor had the bill "paid as I expected out of it?"—Then why did not he come to me and say so? He never mentioned it to me. He never asked me once. I have heard from him. I saw him in London so lately as last August, and he never mentioned it to me at all. I dined with him, met him at dinner.

41,396. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray are both as much puzzled as we are about this?—I cannot see that there is anything to puzzle anybody; I am sorry I cannot make myself more explicit.

41,397. You say a portion of the 150*l.*, the amount of the bill between Mr, Westropp and Mr. Gray, was applied to the petition?—Yes, 80*l.* That was applied in March last. You see it was many months afterwards. I gave Mr. Brice a cheque for 100*l.* on the 24th March last. He was going to London, and I gave it to him to pay Gurney and Cox, the law stationers in Chancery Lane. I did not know the exact amount. I gave him a cheque for 100*l.*, and afterwards when he came back he said he had not spent the whole of it, and he gave me back 18*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.*, which I restored to the account, put it back again.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No doubt the account in the whole is correct. The only question is whether those sums of 72*l.* and 76*l.* ought to have found their way in the form they have in the return without Mr. Leaker having been paid.

(The witness.) Well, I am very glad the Act of Parliament is not a very clear one as to the payment of the expenses, because I am sorry to say that I made another mistake which tells against myself at the previous election. It was done entirely through innocence, but it is right that I should explain it.

41,398. What election was that?—My late clerk, Walford, says that I gave him 5*l.* to pay the travelling expenses of a man of the name of Rees, in 1865, at the election of 1865.

41,399. He brought a ship round from Swansea?—I had forgotten it, entirely forgotten all about it. If I had been called immediately after Walford, I should have sworn positively, I believe, that it was a fiction of his entirely. I had not the remotest recollection of it; but when I came into town this morning I made it my business to send for Walford and ask him if he could throw any light upon it. He told me that if I looked in the strong-box I should find the receipt. I had no recollection of its being there, but I searched the box, and I found this receipt there, "July, 1865. "Received of James Trevor, Esq., electioneering "agent for Mr. Westropp, the sum of five pounds to "pay my travelling expenses from Milford to Bridg- "water and back."

FORTIETH DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

41,400. (Mr. Anstey.) Milford Haven?—Milford Haven. From Milford Haven to Bridgwater and back would be something like 480 miles, so that the amount given nobody can object to as being 5*l.* I paid that sum by a cheque upon Stuckey's bank, signed "James Trevor, borough election agent." It was paid in that way, so that there was no disguise about it. The thing was done openly, and in the face of day. It was paid openly in my office the same as any other payment would be made. After I made the payment I got this little book on the law of elections, "Lewis's Law of Elections." I should say this was the first payment I had made, and it was something like a fortnight or three weeks before I made any other payment. In the meantime I got Lewis's book on the law of elections, and I found on looking into that that travelling expenses were a legitimate payment, but that you could not pay them to the voter himself. You might take his ticket, or hire a conveyance for him, but you could not pay him himself. Upon reading that I found I had got into a scrape, and made a payment which was not strictly correct. I consulted my brother about it, and he said, "We must not let Mr. Westropp suffer for your "mistake, and I will take the payment upon myself." My brother on the 10th of August paid that 5*l.* out of his own money.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Not from the firm's money?—No; out of his own money. He said, I will take it upon myself; Mr. Westropp shall not get into a scrape through your having paid it in ignorance of the subject. He went and paid the 5*l.* to Stuckey's bank in discharge of that cheque which I had drawn. That was before any other cheques were drawn, before I began to settle up the accounts. I may say it was the first time I had been an election agent. I had never done so before. It was done entirely through ignorance.

41,401. I suppose your brother paid it in preference to your paying it because you were election agent?—No doubt. He said Mr. Westropp must not be prejudiced by your mistake. I will take the responsibility upon myself, and I will pay it. He did pay it; he paid it out of his own pocket, and it was a loss to him of 5*l.*

41,402. (Mr. Price.) Here are the returns you made to the town clerk, and I see the personal expenses are in the handwriting of the two candidates, signed by them?—I did not know for six months afterwards but what Mr. Leaker had been actually paid, and I have never been asked to this day to pay it.

41,403. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not it an extraordinary thing, Mr. Trevor, that when Mr. Brice wrote to Mr. Gray, wrote the second time to Mr. Gray, and Mr. Gray referred to Mr. Westropp, thereby showing that they were fully informed that Mr. Leaker was not paid, you did not get an order at once to pay Mr. Leaker, and that Mr. Brice should have written twice?—It does seem extraordinary. If I had had an order, I should certainly have paid it. I never did get any written or verbal order, although I have seen both those gentlemen frequently. They never mentioned the subject to me at all.

41,404. That is why I asked the question of Mr. Brice, and I think of yourself also—of two witnesses (Oh, one was Mr. Leaker himself)—whether there might not be peradventure some one or two items which it might be thought not desirable to pay till after the election was settled?—I recollect very well at the time Mr. Westropp said, "I don't know what to say "about this; they charge here for entertaining some "of you fellows at dinner." I said, If you come out "and dine with me, there is no reason why I should "not dine with you in return." It cannot be said to influence my vote, and I do not think there can be the slightest objection to anything of the kind.

41,405. (Mr. Coleridge.) The only thing is there has been a sort of shuffling from one pocket into another, and it has got into an awkward position in the account?—Not as far as I am concerned at all.

41,406. But it has?—I do not know how or why. I cannot see it myself at all. They told me they paid these sums. I merely adopt their own figures.

41,407. (Mr. Price.) If Mr. Westropp had put himself in direct communication with you, I have no doubt it would have been cleared up, but I suppose he had communication with Mr. Leaker, and he said, "I "will pay no more, because there is plenty of money "at the bank to pay it?—Why did not he tell me so. I cannot understand it. I should have paid it at once, and I should have been very glad indeed for Mr. Leaker to have been paid.

41,408. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Gray says that he thought there was some hesitation on the part of Mr. Westropp when speaking to him. As well as I can recollect Mr. Gray's evidence, he said, "I myself thought the "thing ought to be paid, and as soon as I heard from "Mr. Brice, I spoke to Mr. Westropp about it, and "something he said made me not pay it"?—It is a curious thing that they kept their thoughts to themselves and did not mention them to me, who had the control of the money. I should have thought I should be the first person.

41,409. Was there any other solicitor—I do not say in Bridgwater, but anywhere—who was more in the relation of a confidential adviser to Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, than yourself or Mr. Brice were?—My impression is that Mr. Westropp had not got perfect confidence in either of us. I think he had more confidence a great deal in Mr. Ruddock than he had in either of us. I think he would have been better pleased if he had found that the party here had selected Mr. Ruddock in preference to us. I should say in justice to Mr. Ruddock that he declined to act. If he would have accepted my post I should have been very glad, and I should have been only too thankful to have resigned it. Will you allow me to ask whether you have any other question to put about this 5*l.* It was suggested the other day that I let my clerk pay it because I knew it to be illegal.

(Mr. Price.) Oh no, not at all.

(The witness.) It was in the papers.

41,410. (Mr. Anstey.) There was nobody here said that?—It was so reported in the papers.

(Mr. Anstey.) I did not think so myself.

41,411. (Mr. Price.) I do not recollect anything of the kind being said. We investigated it because your clerk was named as the person who paid it. We investigated it first to test the truthfulness of this man?—I considered that 5*l.* would be a fair sum.

41,412. The man said he was paid this 5*l.* Therefore you or your clerk, whoever paid it, it is immaterial. There was no suggestion from anybody as to the legality or illegality?—Then the paper has got the thing wrong.

41,413. It is unfortunate. That is the only thing we can say. There has been a mistake about the other matter altogether which we hope may be rectified for Mr. Leaker's sake?—I will pay it at once if Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray will authorize me, will write and tell me so.

41,414. Perhaps when they see your evidence in print they will do so. Do you or do you not know as a fact that immense pressure, I use the word advisedly, immense pressure was put upon Mr. Gray at the last election to spend money?—I do not know it.

41,415. You never heard that?—I think that many of our friends in Bridgwater were under the impression that Mr. Gray intended to spend money in corrupt practices from the fact of his having expressed his willingness to spend so large a sum. They arrived at the conclusion, I have no doubt that it would be impossible to spend so large a sum except in corrupt practices.

41,416. That would no doubt naturally strike then, because 1,000*l.* seems to have been put into his mind somehow or other?—I am under the impression that it was 1,500*l.*

41,417. Well, 1,500*l.* Can you tell us how that could have been conveyed to him as representing anything like a legitimate expenditure?—My idea is that it was his own notion of the thing, that he thought we were to reap a golden harvest out of him legally. I fancy he thought so. He was quite new to electioneering.

41,418. Have you any reason to believe that when the thing went on up to the last moment there was extreme pressure put upon him to spend money.

41,419. I do not think there was extreme pressure put upon him, but I have no doubt that everybody expected money would be spent.

41,420. Did it go so far as this, that he had actually made up his mind to leave the town, and that it was all that could be done to keep him here?—Oh, no.

41,421. You never heard that?—I think we were rather under the idea that he was getting funky, and that he would not go to the poll. I think that was because Mr. Westropp was so much more popular than he was. He did not like the idea of being so much behind. He said, "I tell you what it is; Mr. Westropp will get a large majority, but I shall be nowhere." I assured him that I did not believe that there would be at the most more than 30 who would vote for Mr. Westropp, and not for him.

41,422. You have no reason to believe that there was extreme pressure put upon him at the last moment to spend money?—Not direct extreme pressure. It was the mere idea that everybody had that there must be money spent in Bridgwater.

41,423. No, something more than an idea; that the thing was spoken of and pressed and requested distinctly by people on his side to spend money?—All I can say is that it was not in my presence. I did not make it, and it was not made in my presence. If he ever had pressure put upon him of that kind it must have been by somebody quite independent of me.

41,424. Mr. Lilly seems to have been his confidential friend?—Well, then, Mr. Lilly could tell you more about it. I never said anything to Mr. Gray at all on the subject. From first to last I never mentioned the subject of expenditure to him.

41,425. That we understood before, but still I thought it right to give you an opportunity of saying so again?—I think the impression on my mind certainly was that he intended to spend money in corrupt practices, from the fact of his saying at the outset that he was prepared to spend a much larger sum than Mr. Westropp.

41,426. Did he state that publicly?—No. I heard that from Mr. Toogood. When Mr. Toogood first came to Bridgwater I met him at luncheon at my brother's house, and he said he thought Mr. Gray would come, and he was prepared probably to spend a handsome sum; not expend it in corrupt practices, but spend a handsome sum. Anyone who has experience of the world knows pretty well what that means, that if a man is spending a large sum, and says he will do it legally, he does not intend his legal agents to know anything about it. That is what I arrived at. It was a mistaken conclusion, but I did not know it.

41,427. Well, I should have arrived at the same conclusion myself?—I thought his 1,500*l.* and Mr. Westropp's 500*l.* meant nothing but bribery.

(Mr. Anstey.) This is what the shorthand writer has about that 5*l.*: "Q. Did you get 5*l.* from Heal "for expenses?—A. No, I got 5*l.* when I came "from Milford to vote for Westropp. Q. What year "was that in?—A. That is when Westropp got in "and was unseated again. Q. Then you got 10*l.* "and 5*l.*?—A. Yes, all the expenses I had, 15*l.* "Q. You got 15*l.*?"

(The witness.) It would be in my clerk, Walford's evidence of Saturday, in which the paper said that he swore that I must have let him pay the money because I knew it was illegal. It startled me on Sunday morning.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then Rees goes on again: "A. That "was 1865. Q. Very well?—Then I had 15*l.* "Q. Who from?—A. 10*l.* from Heal, and 5*l.* from "Mr. Trevor's office. Q. Mr. Trevor's office?— "A. Yes. Q. Who gave it to you?—A. One of the "clerks. (Mr. Anstey.) What is his name?—A. "Walford. (Mr. Price.) Did you get paid at Mr. "Trevor's office?—A. I got the 5*l.* from Mr. "Trevor's office. Q. What was that for?—A. "Because I left a vessel at Milford—expenses here "and back. That was 15*l.* at that election." That is all that was said.

41,428. (Mr. Price.) Just let us turn to Walford's evidence, because certainly the newspaper report, as you say, would give this complexion to it. It was not that we said so, but that your clerk said so?—That is in part of my clerk's evidence.

41,429. Not our expression?—The clerk said it.

41,430. If your clerk said that you knew, no doubt, that it was an illegal expenditure, and got him to pay it, and that therefore he paid it; we could not check that?—No, but that is what made me anxious to come here and state exactly what the fact is.

41,431. Your clerk seemed to have thought that?—He does not think so now.

41,432. That will be corrected. That is the way your clerk represented it, and how he explained it?—Yes.

41,433. Is there anything else you have got to tell us?—I hardly know what you want to know. There is a great deal that you have not heard.

41,434. Can you throw any light upon the last election in any way whatever, beyond what you have already told us?—No, I think not. My impression was that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray were going to do the same thing as had been done before, but they thought it right that I and their other legal agents should not know anything about it, and I certainly up to the last moment thought that would be done.

41,435. Have you heard anything after the election, showing that money was spent in getting up that large majority?—I feel convinced that no money was spent except the small sum that Mr. Leaker spoke of. It was certainly a marvel to me how the men did come up. I did not know of any expenditure, and I did not hear there was any.

41,436. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Trevor, one moment, if you please. Mr. Lilly's name came out when Mr. Bealy Smith's accounts were produced by a clerk who was examined. Before that he told me, as I understood him, that he had no papers at all of that gentleman's. When those accounts came out Mr. Lilly's name figured in them for the large sum of 40*l.* at one election, described as fee?—Described as what?

41,437. As fee; 40*l.* as fee at one election. The clerk was further asked, "Was not that bribery in "another form?" and he said, "Yes, it was," with great candour. Now can you throw any light upon that?—I think Mr. Lilly was worth the money.

41,438. Well, but what is the meaning of a fee to a man who is not allowed to take fees?—Well, he is a quasi lawyer; he began life as a lawyer's clerk.

41,439. (Mr. Price.) It is no use mincing matters. A man who is acting as attorney to the election is known well enough to require his fee for that as for any other business, but I never heard of any such position being assigned to anybody else?—I did not know he was paid till I read the evidence given in this court. It was the first thing I heard.

41,440. It would be an excuse for anybody to take money?—I do not think it justifies the payment.

(Mr. Anstey.) If Mr. Lilly really meant to claim a fee as a lawyer, I think that gentlemen of your profession in Bridgwater ought to take immediate steps to punish him for a very serious violation of the penal clauses of various Acts of Parliament.

41,441. (Mr. Price.) It is quite as penal for a man to practice as an attorney in an election as in a county court. One is as much an intrusion as the other?—Well, there is a great deal of trespass in the county court.

41,442. (Mr. Price.) There would be no end of it at elections as a cloak for bribery?—No doubt of it. But in this particular instance, although the payment may not have been a strictly regular one, Mr. Lilly was worth a great deal more than his vote. He is a very good man of business; a capital man of business.

41,443. That is nothing. If a man has political feelings he must consult them. He has been made a justice of the peace?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) He ought to have thought that he had been sufficiently paid.

41,444. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think that where the encroachment is most strongly marked is in the registration courts?—Yes; the Liberal agent for East Somerset was a man at Bath, who was not a lawyer, for many years, I recollect.

41,445. (Mr. Price.) They have allowed that for many years, but I do not know any registration court in which there are not legal gentlemen on both sides. These men are only doing work under them?—I do not think he used to act in court.

(Mr. Anstey.) This is the case which has been mentioned as it stands here. We have a person who pretends to be a patriot of the Conservative colour in politics. His patriotism carries him to do certain things for the good of the cause, and then, as soon as he has done them, he not only in the most sordid manner in the world proceeds to make money out of them, but the course he takes in order to get money is precisely that course which he cannot properly take, which he is forbidden to take, and which he is heavily punishable for taking; that is to say, he puts on the garb of a lawyer and asks for 40*l.* by way of a fee. I must say that such a proceeding appears to me to admit of no excuse.

(Mr. Price.) It is a direct bribe, call it what you will.

(The witness.) I do not mean to justify it in any way whatever, but if there were any extenuating circumstances, I should say Mr. Lilly was a man of ability, and that his services were valuable.

(Mr. Price.) In reference to what was said by Mr. Walford, it is fair to put the saddle on the right horse. I see it is a suggestion in a question which was put by one of my colleagues, in answer to which your clerk said that, it is quite fair that you should have it corrected.

(The witness.) I inferred that it was so.

(Mr. Price.) The question is, "I suppose you and "Mr. Trevor were both aware it was an illegal pay-"ment?—A. Well, I was not myself, but I believe "Mr. James Trevor was, and he refused it in the first "place. Q. That was the reason he refused it?—A. "I believe it was."

41,446. Well, you wish to have that corrected. You did not refuse it on that account?—Oh no, certainly not. I paid it because I thought it was a proper payment.

(Mr. Price.) The shorthand writer will take notice of your correction.

(The witness.) I paid it in the open face of day, by a cheque signed by me as election agent.

W. Parker.

WILLIAM PARKER sworn.

41,447. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Parker?—A porter.

41,448. Where?—Mr. William Poole's, cheese and bacon factor.

41,449. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at the "Clarence" either on the polling day of the last election, or before that?—I was.

41,450. Did you hear Mr. Gray say anything?—Yes, I heard him speak.

41,451. What did he say?—Oh, I cannot tell you exactly what he did say now. I cannot remember at this time.

41,452. Did you hear anything about rewards?—He might have said so.

41,453. Well, did he say so?—I cannot tell you; not exactly. I could not swear that.

41,454. You cannot swear to what?—I cannot swear that he did say that.

41,455. Say what?—Not rewarding.

41,456. I do not ask you whether he used that precise word?—It might have been said.

41,457. Did you hear him say anything on the subject of rewarding the voters at the last election?—He said he would not pay one penny. He said, "You "can go and vote for me if you like; if not you can "go and vote for the other party."

41,458. My question to you is, did he say anything about rewarding people after the election?—He never said anything about "after the election" at all.

41,459. Quite sure?—Yes; not "after the election." He never promised any money at all.

41,460. (Mr. Price.) Did he use the word "reward"? Did he say anything about rewarding anybody?—Well, he might have said it, I could not say.

41,461. How could he have said it if you did not know it?—He might have said they would be rewarded after, or something like that.

41,462. (Mr. Anstey.) That who would be rewarded after?—He did not tell who would be.

41,463. Somebody would be rewarded after. Did he mean the electors, or what?—I do not know who he meant.

41,464. (Mr. Price.) What did you understand by it?—Well, I did not understand that as any promise whatever.

41,465. What did you understand by it?—Oh, nothing at all.

41,466. (Mr. Anstey.) It is evident that you did not. You did understand nothing at all?—No, I did understand nothing at all.

41,467. Neither then nor now?

41,468. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

41,469. Who for?—Westropp and Gray.

41,470. What did you get for it?—Nothing at all.

41,471. Did you vote the time before?—No, I had no vote.

B. Porter.

BARNET PORTER recalled.

41,472. (Mr. Price.) Now, what do you want to add to what you said on Saturday? What did Mr. Hodges say?—He said he would promise the men 15*l.* a piece after the election, if they would go and vote for the Conservatives.

41,473. He said he had promised?—He said he would do it.

41,474. Where did he say this?—At the "Clarence Hotel."

41,475. What day?—On the polling day, before eight o'clock in the morning.

41,476. Out loud to everybody?—Yes.

41,477. Everybody in the room could hear it?—Yes.

41,478. That he would promise 15*l.* to every man who would vote for Westropp and Gray?—Yes.

(A voice.) It's a lie!

(Mr. Coleridge.) Who said that?

(Betty.) I said it. I beg your pardon, sir.

(Mr. Price.) Don't you know that the other day, because a man broke out in the court and said a thing was a lie, he was committed to gaol for the offence. Persons shall have an opportunity of coming forward if they want to contradict anything, but you have no business to interfere with the witness.

41,479. (Mr Price to the witness.) You say he said that ?—Yes.

41,480. That they should have 15*l.* after the election ?—Yes.

41,481. Anything more ?—To the best of my belief, that is how it was that the men went to poll. That is how they got such a majority a head.

41,482. That is how they got such a majority ?—Yes, but I would not take the promise.

41,483. You would not take the promise ?—No.

41,484. You voted on the other side ?

41,485. How much did you get ?—9*l.*

41,486. (Mr. Coleridge.) You preferred 9*l.* to the promise of 15*l.* ?—Yes, I would not take it.

41,487. How many were present when Hodges spoke ?—About 400, I think.

41,488. Where was it ?—In the large Assembly Room.

41,489. (Mr. Price.) He said it loud for everybody to hear ?—I could, and I should think everybody else.

41,490. Was Mr. Westropp present ?—Yes.

41,491. And he could hear it ?—Yes.

41,492. And Mr. Gray ?—Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray were both at the meeting.

41,493. And both could hear it ?—I should think so, I heard it and I should think everybody there could.

41,494. And no doubt Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray could ?—I should think so.

41,495. They were standing close to Mr. Hodges ?—Yes, they were on the platform.

41,496. And Mr. Hodges was ?—Yes.

41,497. Therefore, much nearer to him than you were ?—Yes, I was further back in the room.

41,498. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Hodges was in the chair ?—He was in the chair, but I do not know whether he was in the chair at the time; he was supposed to be a ringleader, and he said himself he was, and if he could spend any money then he should have to be walking up like this (describing) for two years. What was done after the election he said that would not be any difference. We could do that all right.

41,499. (Mr. Price.) They could have 15*l.* a piece ?—Yes.

41,500. Are you quite sure he mentioned the sum of 15*l.* ?—Yes.

41,501. Is that all you have to state ?—I was at the "Lamb" meeting as well, and there I heard Mr. Smith say about M for money, and D for down. That is the reason I did not go to the poll, I understood we were all to have money if we went to the poll.

41,502. But you did not stick out ?—Yes, I stuck out, I did have it before I did go to the poll.

41,503. Was it because Mr. Smith told you ?—That is what I stuck out for.

41,504. Because he told you to have money down ?—Yes.

41,505. And therefore you decided to have money down before voting on the other side ?—I did not care which side. I never had a vote before, and was not more one side than the other, but for the side which used me best.

41,506. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which side are you now ?—I do not know exactly.

41,507. (Mr. Price.) You meant to have money down ?—I meant to have money down.

41,508. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you hear Smith say ?—To be sure and get money down before they went to poll. I never heard him say anything about American.

41,509. Did you hear him say, "If you go to the other side you must get money down ?"—I never heard him say any such thing.

41,510. Did you hear him say anything about sugaring plums ?—No. He said, "There are two "letters in the alphabet, that is M and D, and I will "explain to you the meaning."

41,511. Did he say anything about the American phrase ?—No; "M for money, and D for down." And I understood we were all to have money down, and that is why I waited about and got the money.

41,512. Is that all you have to state ?—I was at the "Clarence," and heard Mr. Gray say he agreed with Mr. Hodges, and the rest of the gentlemen said that they should be all right afterwards.

41,513. That they should all have 15*l.* ?—He did not say anything about 15*l.*

41,514. But he heard what Hodges said ?—Yes.

41,515. And then they agreed to it ?—Yes.

41,516. Mr. Gray did ?—Yes, Mr. Gray and Mr. Westropp agreed to what the gentlemen said.

41,517. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that all ?—On the polling day I was walking down the town of Bridgwater, and was coming by the "Clarence" hotel, and there I saw two men by the name of William and James Ford. They carried me into the "Clarence;" they held up their finger and said, "Come inside;" and Mr. Hodges would give me 15 sovereigns. When I came inside there was no such thing. Mr. Hodges said I was a traitor because I would not go to the poll, because I had been to their meetings, and he thought there was something going on. I looked at him a bit, and he talked rather chuff to me, and asked me if I would join the Conservative Association, and I did not feel inclined, and he talked more chuff at me again, and he said, "Will you join the Conservative Association ?" and I considered if I did not consent to what he put to me, I should be put inside there; so I consented, and went off to the poll with James Ford, and as soon as I got outside the "Clarence" stable door I said I should not go any further, and I had a card of membership.

41,518. (Mr. Price.) And you went to Allan's and got 9*l.* ?—Yes.

41,519. For voting ?—Yes.

41,520. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to get 9*l.* ?—I do not know. When I got upstairs to put it in the box, I counted it and found only 9*l.*

41,521. Did Allan tell you it was 10*l.* ?—Allan never said anything to me about it was 10*l.*, and neither I to him, for he gave me the money, and off I went, and put it in my pocket directly.

41,522. (Mr. Price.) Is that all ?—Yes, that is all I know.

CHARLES OATEN sworn.

C. Oaten.

41,523. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A sawyer.

41,524. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

41,525. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

41,526. How did you vote ?—For Westropp and Gray.

41,527. Did you attend any of these meetings ?—Some of them.

41,528. Where you at the "Clarence" meeting ?—Yes.

41,529. The one which the last witness has spoken about ?—Yes.

41,530. And did you hear Mr. Hodges say you should all have 15*l.* after the election ?—No, I never heard any such thing.

41,531. Were you there all the time ?—Yes, I went away with him.

41,532. Are you sure you never heard that ?—No such thing, and I could hear as well as the rest.

41,533. Did you hear Mr. Gray say it was all right what Mr. Hodges said, and he would stick to it ?—No.

41,534. Did you vote early in the day ?—Yes, between 9 and 10 I suppose.

FORTIETH DAY.

C. Oaten.

12 Oct. 1869.

41,535. Did you vote under any expectation or promise of money in any way?—No, no promise or paid any money at that election.

41,536. Did you vote at the election of 1866?—Patton's I voted.

41,537. At both?—At both elections.

41,538. How much did you get?—20*l.* at both, 10*l.* each time.

41,539. Who from?—Temblett gave me 5*l.* and Waddon 5*l.* at his house, and 5*l.* at the "Golden Lion." I saw a hand; I do not know whose it was gave it to me. I had 10*l.* there; two fives.

41,540. Did you vote in 1865 for Mr. Westropp?—Yes, I had no vote before. That was the first I voted.

41,541. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear Mr. Gray say anything about giving employment?—No.

41,542. (Mr. Price.) Or reward?—No.

41,543. (Mr. Anstey.) Anything of this kind. "If Mr. Westropp or I returned, there will be such "and such things started for the good of the town "and you will get employment"?—No, I never heard anything of the sort. I heard Mr. Westropp say, "Go to the poll as early as possible. I cannot "give you anything, because traps are laid for me, "and I do not want to get myself into prison," or something of that sort, and we all went away to the poll——about 500 as near as I can judge.

41,544. "I cannot give you anything because there "is a trap laid for me and I do not want to go to "prison?"—Yes, and we all went to the poll as early as possible.

Mr. R. Hodges.

Mr. Richard Hodges recalled.

41,545. (Mr. Price.) You have heard what this man has stated, what have you to say?—In the first place I should like to make some remarks on the words of the last witness with respect to the words used by Mr. Gray.

41,546. By Mr. Westropp?—By Mr. Gray, that traps were laid.

41,547. That is by Mr. Westropp?—I used those words previous to Westropp and Gray coming into the room; in fact, they did not come into the room until after I had been speaking. And in using those words, I used them in this sense, that I had been by a private source informed that the Liberal party had intended to spend money, that they had anticipated that we should do the same, that they had laid every kind of trap to catch us, but that we did not intend to be entrapped and caught, and we should not spend any money, and I begged them as men belonging to the Conservative association to poll for us. With respect to what the witness Porter has said, it is an entire fabrication from beginning to end; in fact, I may go so for as to say, "I believe it to be a conspi-"racy between him and one or two others who have "egged him on to come and tell falsehoods, out of "mere spite to myself or the party, I do not know "which."

41,548. (Mr. Price.) We must get it categorically denied. Did you say that morning in either Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray's presence, or when they were not there, that they should have 15*l.* after the election?—I did not.

41,549. Did either Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray say that they would abide by what you said, or stand to it, or anything to that effect?—They did not. I should like to say further here that Mr. Westropp or Gray could not have heard what I said because they were not in the room.

41,550. At all events whether in the room or not, did they at all when they did come into the room say in reference to anything that you had said, whether they heard it or not, that they would stand by what you said?—They did not most certainly.

41,551. Was anything said by Mr. Gray about rewarding, or what would happen afterwards, or anything of that kind?—Certainly not, not a single word of the kind; in fact there were at least 350 men present, and I think nearly all those persons who have been called have sworn to the contrary.

41,552. (Mr. Anstey.) That young witness, it being the first time that he ever had a vote, said he did not know what he was to understand by it, but he heard Mr. Gray say something about rewarding after; who were to be rewarded, or by whom he could not say?—I have no recollection of any word "reward" or "promise" or anything of the kind or description, or "employment," or anything of the kind.

41,553. Nothing about employment?—In fact I am confident no words of promise of employment or reward were used that morning.

41,554. Were those persons present who had been to your shop a week or a fortnight before?—I cannot say.

41,555. How many persons were down at your shop a week a week or a fortnight before to give in their names to support Westropp and Gray?—None had given in their names to support Westropp and Gray. I was honorary secretary of the Working Men's Association, and also a vice-president of that association, and the men came to me to join that association.

41,556. On any of those occasions were they told they should have money if they joined?—Certainly not. So far from that I was never in a position to know from first to last whether there was money to be or not to be until the night previous to the election, when I discovered there was not, and I took the first step I possibly could by calling a meeting in the morning on my own responsibility to tell them there would not be any money, but to go to the poll with us and promise to join the association.

41,557. (Mr. Price.) How about this man coming to the "Clarence," he says you kept him at the "Clarence" and made him join the association?—It is perfectly ridiculous. The fact is this; when the men about 2 in the day came, I had been running about the town and went into the "Clarence," believing we were beaten, and I had given up, and whilst in the lobby several men came up and amongst them Porter, and said, I cannot say exactly the words, but the sense of it was he would go to poll for us if I would only give him a little money, and I said, "Give you what"? And he said, "If you will only give me a little money, "I will go to the poll for you, if it is only a few "shillings." I said, "It is perfectly absurd, and the "best thing you can do is to go out of this house." And I turned round to I do not know who it was, and said, "I believe the fellow is a traitor;" but I may say as well that this man had attended our meetings, and I believed he would poll for us. I had seen him at least at three or four of our meetings previous to that morning.

41,558. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know William Herbert and James Phelps?—Yes, certainly.

41,559. They were both canvassing for Westropp and Gray before daylight that morning, were not they?—I do not know. I was not with them. I cannot say.

41,560. Were they under your instructions?—No, certainly not, one is a vice-president of the Working Men's Association, and as such he would be sure to act.

41,561. Before daylight?—The election was in winter, and it would not be quite daylight until 7 o'clock or past.

41,562. But as a matter of fact, was the canvassing before daylight?—I do not really know.

41,563. What streets had he to canvass?—I really cannot say. I do not know anything of it.

41,564. As vice-president, what streets would he have?—None in particular.

41,565. You know James Creedy of Polden Street?—I know there is a man of the name of Creedy. I do not really know him.

41,566. Did you speak to him about his vote ?—I may have done ; I do not know.

41,567. Did he tell you he had had a misfortune in losing fat pigs and was not going to vote for nothing ?—I do not know at all.

41,568. What do you see to laugh at that ?—The mere fact of the man coming to me and telling that statement.

41,569. Your statement is, that you might possibly have gone to him to ask him for his vote ?—No, I never went to him. Your question was, whether he came to me.

41,570. What do you see ridiculous in his coming to you about his vote, when you told me the other day that bribery or no bribery your intention was to do your best ?—Yes, but where was I to get money from for his fat pigs ?

41,571. Do you know John Attwell ?—I know one Attwell ; he works at Baker's, I think.

41,572. In the Bristol road ?—No, I do not know him. This Porter also says, that of the rest of the gentlemen who were there that morning, there was no one addressed the meeting but myself, Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Gray, and I certainly must, after the evidence he has given, and I hope the Commissioners will support me in causing the man to be indicted for perjury.

(Mr. Price.) You may if you like; we cannot assist you in that. We have caused one class of men to be, because they made a gross imputation on two other persons which might have got them into serious trouble, but between you and this man it is a question of conflict of testimony. We should have to order indictments over and over again if we did it in such a case as this.

41,573. (Mr Coleridge.) You may take out an indictment ?—I certainly shall.

41,574. (Mr. Anstey.) You see the difficulty your zealous friends get you into and zealous friends of your opponents get them into. One of the witnesses on your side, in all other respects a creditable witness he appeared to me, notwithstanding all the questionings to which I put him, persisted in this story which contradicts yours you see from beginning to end, that Mr. Westropp was not at the meeting at the "Clarence" that morning at all ; that you were in the chair ; that nobody spoke but you ; that he, the witness, was there before the meeting began, and went away after it was over, and during the whole of that time Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray not only did not speak there, but were not present there, and that you were the only speaker at that meeting. So you see the difficulty into which you get one another by over zeal in colouring or over-colouring a particular state of the case ?—No, I can easily account for that. The fact is this ; I went on the platform by myself, and after I had been speaking, Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray came into the room. It is just possible that the witness—I do not know who it was—may have directly I finished my speech left the room and gone out to poll.

41,575. I asked him the question, and suggested it was possible, and he said, No, it was impossible, so anxious was he to screen Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray ; it was utterly impossible he could have gone, because he did not go until the meeting was entirely broken up and gone ?—Well, he may have thought so.

41,576. That this man swore deliberately that you promised 300 or 400, and said 15*l.* was to be paid ; that you promised it ?—Most decidedly I did not.

CHARLES OATEN recalled.

C. Oaten.

(The witness.) Mr. Parker was a gentleman who addressed the meeting. I can mind the words he said then.

41,577. Who was he ?—A gentleman of Bridgwater. He said he had seen two Conservative gentlemen carried for Bridgwater, and he should never die happy until he saw it again, and those are the words he used there, and I can recollect other words he said.

JAMES SULLY sworn.

J. Sully.

41,578. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A gardener.

41,579. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

41,580. How did you vote at the last election ?—For Westropp and Gray.

41,581. Did you get anything for it ?—No, I did not.

41,582. Did you get any promise ?—No, nothing at all promised.

41,583. Who do you work for ?—For Mr. Dyer now, I did not at that time, I worked for Mr. Balsen at that time.

41,584. Are you a jobbing gardener ?—Yes.

41,585. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866 ?—I did.

41,586. At both of them ?—Yes.

41,587. How did you vote each time ?—I always voted for the Conservatives.

41,588. For Patton ?—Yes.

41,589. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever get paid by the Liberals ?—No.

41,590. (Mr. Price.) How much did you get from Mr. Patton for voting at each election ?—Ten pound.

41,591. Who from ?—Jarvis.

41,592. Both times ?—I voted for Patton, and 10*l.* I got from Jarvis twice.

41,593. What did you get the other time ?—I believe nothing the other time.

41,594. Are you sure ?—I think not.

41,595. Did you get nothing after the election ?—Nothing after the election.

41,596. Did you vote in 1865 for Westropp ?—I did.

41,597. What did you get then ?—Five pound.

41,598. Who from ?—Jarvis.

41,599. The same Jarvis ?—Yes.

41,600. Did you vote in 1859 for Padwick and Westropp ?—I did.

41,601. How much did you get ?—Nothing.

41,602. Nothing from the other side ?—No, from neither side.

41,603. In 1859 did you vote for Follett and Tynte ? I must because I voted for all.

41,604. All round ?—All round.

41,605. Tynte and Kinglake ?—No, I always voted for the Conservatives.

41,606. You voted for Mr. Follett I think ?—I did.

41,607. Did you get anything for it ?—Ten pound.

41,608. Who from, Murlis ?—I think it was Jarvis.

41,609. Did you vote in 1852 ; that would be Follett and Mansell ?—Well, I believe I did.

41,610. Did you get anything then ?—No, not then.

41,611. Did you voted in 1847 when Broadwood was here ?—Yes, I did.

41,612. Did you get anything then ?—No, I was promised then 20*l.*, and never got anything, that was from the old Mr. Murlis.

41,613. He promised you 20*l.*, and did not give it ?—Yes, there were 26 of us, I can reckon up ever so many, and I do not know that any are now alive. My brother-in-law was one, and there were 20 of us, we never got anything.

41,614. Did you vote before 1847 ?—No, that was the first time I voted.

CHARLES DARE sworn.

C. Dare.

41,746. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A basket maker.
41,747. Do you keep the Turkish baths ?—Yes.
41,748. What have you to say about this ?—On the polling afternoon——
41,749. Which ?—At the last election, about half-past 3 o'clock, my missus came to look for me, and said Betty was going to do a day's work for me, and she came and found me at the "Masons' Arms," and I met him on the Cornhill, and he said if I would come to the "Clarence," I was to have 30*l.*
41,750. Who ?—This last man. I heard all he said, and I said it was no use to humbug him, for I had been to poll; and he said, "I hope you do better on "the other side than what ours do;" and I said, "I "have not done better at all, because I never had "anything." My wife can give you more information than I can, because he waited while she got on her things.
41,751. Did Mrs. Dare come to you in a fly, waiting to take you to the poll ?—No, they came to our house.
41,752. Who ?—This man and Mr. Hodges.
41,753. Was this man, Betty, driving ?—No, Mr. Hodges, I believe. I never saw him.
(Mr. Hodges.) It is quite a mistake. I was never near the man's house.
41,754. (Mr. Price to the witness.) Did you see the fly ?—I did not. I was not home.
(Mr. Hodges.) He has made a mistake, I assure you.
41,755. (Mr. Price to the witness.) Did you vote ?—I did.
41,756. Who for ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.
41,757. What did you get for it ?—Not a half-penny.
41,758. Were you promised 30*l.* to vote for the Conservatives ?—Yes, I was, if I would vote for them. I was to go to the "Clarence" and have the 30*l.* if I would vote for Westropp and Gray; those were the words he said to me.
41,759. That man Betty ?—Yes, that man Betty.
41,760. Did you vote at any other election ?—No.
41,761. We had better have your wife here ?—She is dangerously ill, and cannot attend.
41,762. Who told you that Hodges was driving the fly ?—My wife.
41,763. Did she see him ?—No.
41,764. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they take her out for a drive ?—Not that I know of.
41,765. (Mr. Price.) It was not true that they waited to take you to the poll ?—No, I do not believe she got into the fly.
41,766. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the matter with your wife ?—I do not know. Mr. Haviland attends her.
41,767. I should like to see Mr. Haviland, because this is an important matter ?—She is willing to come.
41,768. (Mr. Price.) Is she fit to be examined at home ?—I cannot tell you. Mr. Haviland said she would not be able to come to-day nor to-morrow. We told Mr. Haviland of it, and he said he would make that all right.
(Mr. Price.) Tell Mr. Haviland to come the first thing in the morning.

41,855. He is out of his mind ?—Not exactly.

41,856. Is he childish or what ?—Childish; old age has come on him, I suppose.

41,857. What age is he ?—77 ; the last two years he has been going on.

41,858. He voted at the last election, did not he ?—He did.

41,859. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you a voter ?—No.

41,860. Do you know anything about what money your father had for his vote at different times ?—No.

41,861. (Mr. Price.) How did he vote at the last election ?—Westropp and Gray; he always voted that way all the days of his life.

41,862. You do not know what he had at each election ?—No.

41,863. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose he did not vote at the last election without being paid ?—I cannot say.

41,864. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say he is so childish that he would not understand ?—Yes, you would not get anything out of him.

Mrs. Mary Ann Francis sworn.

41,865. (Mr. Coleridge.) What have you got to say?—I have only come to say that my husband is ill and not able to attend.

41,866. What is his name?—William Francis.

41,867. Was he on the list for to-day?—Yes.

41,868. Did he get any money at the last election?—No.

41,869. The one before he did?—Yes.

41,871. Who from?—I think Bulpin.

41,872. The election just before, what then?—10*l.*

41,873. Who from?—Bussell.

41,874. In 1865, what did he get then?—He got three 10*l.* together, one for Westropp from Waddon.

P. Betty.

Peregrine Betty recalled.

41,875. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever go to Dare and say that he could have 30*l.* if he went to the "Clarence"?—Never made use of the words in my life, because I had no power.

41,876. Did you say anything of the sort?—No, I am quite certain.

41,877. Did you say anything to Mrs. Dare?—I recollect walking with Mrs. Dare.

41,878. What did you say?—I asked whether her husband had been to poll, and she did not know whether he had or not. I said, "He always said he would vote for Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray," and I did not know whether he had or not, and I accompanied her up to Jonas Silke's.

41,879. Did you say anything about 30*l.* if he would go to the "Clarence"?—Not a word, because I had no authority.

41,880. Did you chaffingly or otherwise say you may as well vote because 30*l.* is going at the "Clarence"?—Nothing of the kind.

41,881. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he say anything about money?—No, nothing of the kind.

41,882. About money?—No, because I had nothing myself.

41,883. (Mr. Price.) You are working for Mr. Rick's?—Yes.

41,884. Now?—Yes.

41,885. If you had a fly out that day you would have to make a return of what you did?—Yes.

41,886. The jobs you did?—There was no charge that day.

41,887. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were going about offering to convey people to the poll?—Yes.

41,888. Did you see this man?—No.

41,889. His wife?—No.

41,890. Did you vote yourself?—Yes.

41,891. Did you get anything?—Nothing.

41,892. Who did you vote for?—Westropp and Gray. I never had a vote before.

41,893. What did you get for your fly driving?—Nothing. I thought I ought to have something, but I never had.

R. Washer.

Robert Washer recalled.

41,894. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you know about this?—I was in company with Dare at the "Mason's Arms," and this man and Dare's wife fetched Dare out of my company.

41, 895. You say Betty came with Mrs. Dare?—Betty did not come to the house. Mrs. Dare came in with her husband and he went away with his wife and he came back again to me and I said, "Where have you been?" He said, "They fetched me away to the poll." "Who?" I said, "Mr. Hodges and "Betty drove down to our house to look for me and "I was not there, and I have been to see Betty, and "he offered me 30*l.* if I would go to the poll."

41,896. This is all what Dare told you?—Yes.

41,897. You did not see any part of it?—No.

41,898. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did he tell you?—The same day.

41,899. (Mr. Price.) He told that there and then?—Yes.

J. Silke.

Jonas Silke sworn.

41,900. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter?—Yes.

41,901. What are you?—An innkeeper.

41,902. What inn do you keep?—The "Masons' Arms."

41,903. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

41,904. How did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

41,905. How much did you get?—Nothing at all.

41,906. No promises?—None whatever.

41,907. Was there any bill at your house for treating?—None. There was a little treating, but not in the shape of the election; there was no word mentioned.

41,908. But there was drinking?—Yes.

41,909. Who paid you your bill?—No one.

41,910. It has not been paid?—No.

41,911. Who did you send it to?—Bulpin.

41,912. How much is it?—20*l.* 17*s.*

41,913. (Mr. Anstey.) You call that "a little treating." You cannot deny that you said there was a "little treating"?—Yes.

41,914. (Mr. Price.) Did that all occur on the day of the election?—No.

41,915. How long before?—Some days before and some days after.

41,916. Did you ever make 20*l.* in any way in so short a time before?—I never made that.

41,917. What did you get for voting besides?—Not a farthing.

41,918. Not any promises of anything?—No.

41,919. Any present to your wife?—No.

41,920. Did you vote at either election in 1866?—No, that was the first.

41,921. Had you treating in 1866?—No.

41,922. What have you to tell about this matter?—Mrs. Dare fetched him from my door, and there was a gentleman waiting at her house, while she put her clothes on to fetch him.

41,923. Did you see the gentleman?—No.

41,924. How did you know it?—Only what Mrs. Dare came and asked us.

41,925. What did she say to you?—"Is Dare here?" I says, "Yes." "Tell him I want him directly." As he kept the Turkish bath, I did not know but what a gentleman was there who wanted a bath.

41,926. Did Dare go out?—Yes.

41,927. Did you see him?—Yes.

41,928. Was that man Betty there?—No; I did not see him, he may have been outside.

41,929. You went to the door with Dare?—No, I did not. I saw Dare go out with his wife. I was in the passage.

41,930. You did not see who was in the street?—No, I did not.

41,931. Is that all?—That is all.

C. Dare.

Charles Dare recalled.

41,932. (Mr. Price.) Do you think there is any chance of your wife coming in a day or two?—She might be able in a few days, I cannot say exactly. Mr. Haviland can tell you she was attacked last evening.

FORTIETH DAY.

Mr. R. Hodges.

12 Oct. 1869.

Mr. Richard Hodges recalled.

41,933. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say further about this?—I am strongly impressed that it is a mistake altogether, that it is Hodges on the Liberal side who went in the fly. I certainly did not go in the fly.

C. Dare.

Charles Dare recalled.

41,934. (Mr. Price.) What Hodges do you understand?—I never saw Hodges, I was not at home; he came where my wife was; my wife knows Hodges very well.

41,935. This Hodges?—Yes.

41,936. Did she indentify this Hodges?—She identified him here on Saturday; when he contradicted Porter she said, "That's the man."

41,937. Then we must wait till we see Mrs. Dare.

(Hodges.) I am quite confident that I have not been to the house at all.

(The witness.) I don't believe she did so. She said you went to the house, and Betty came in; so she told me. I never saw it.

(Hodges.) There is a great mistake somewhere; I cannot say where. I did not drive a fly for the day.

Adjourned to to-morrow morning at half past 10.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Wednesday, 13th October 1869.

Present:

Edwin Plumer Price, Esq., Q.C.
Thomas Chisholm Anstey, Esq.
Charles Edward Coleridge, Esq.

Henry Francis Purcell, Esq., Secretary.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. J. Haviland.

13 Oct. 1869.

Mr. James Haviland sworn.

41,938. (Mr. Price.) You are a medical man practising in Bridgwater?—I am.

41,939. Are you in attendance on Mrs. Dare, the wife of Dare who keeps the Turkish baths?—I am attending her at the present time, and have been for the last three days.

41,940. What is her state of health?—Very bad.

41,941. Is she fit to come to court?—Not at all.

41,942. Do you expect that she will be in the course of this week any day?—I am fearful not.

41,943. What is she suffering from?—From obstruction of the bowels with threatened inflammation.

41,944. Would she be able to answer any questions if we went to her, or is she in such pain that she could not attend?—Decidedly yes.

41,945. She would?—Yes.

41,946. Do you think we had better see her to-day or to-morrow?—Well, I think the sooner it is over the better for her. To-morrow if the most convenient for yourselves.

41,947. What do you say if we went about one to-day?—That will do.

41,948. Will you be in attendance there at one o'clock?—If it is your wish.

O. Bridges.

Oliver Bridges recalled.

41,949. (Mr. Price.) Were you a voter?—No.

41,950. At the last election?—No.

41,951. Has your name been given in as a person who received a bribe for voting?—No.

41,952. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you received money for anybody else?—No, my father is a voter.

41,953. Is he the same name?—No; Henry Bridges, Silver Street. At his request I have attended here this morning. My mother is lying dead.

41,954. Had he a vote the last time?—Yes.

41,955. Did he get anything for his vote?—No, he voted Conservative. He had a vote in 1841 he tells me, and voted for Broadwood and Forman.

41,956. What did he get?—10*l.*

41,957. Is that all he ever got?—No, 10*l.* in 1859, when he voted for Padwick and Westropp.

41,958. In 1865?—He had no qualification.

41,959. How no qualification?—He did not live in a house.

Mr. W. Bagehot.

Mr. Walter Bagehot sworn.

41,960. (Mr. Price.) We understand you are now the editor of the "Economist"?—Yes.

41,961. And son-in-law of the late Mr. James Wilson, who is very well known?—Yes.

41,962. You have some connexion with this borough?—I am director of Stuckey's bank, and am connected with this borough in this way, that my family have been traders for a very considerable period; 70 years or somewhere about that I should think. They are not largely interested in the trade now, but still they have some connexion with it, and my father lives near. I am connected with the neighbourhood.

41,963. Previous to your coming here as a candidate had you ever intimated to anybody your willingness to be a candidate for Bridgwater in any way?—I think the thing had been talked about for a considerable period.

41,964. Before you came down here?—Before I came down here I should think for a very considerable period. Mr. Brand had my name down in his list, and I think Bridgwater was one of the places mentioned.

41,965. You knew Bridgwater by repute?—Yes; but I never consented to come here until lately.

41,966. You never elected to come of your own choice?—No, by no means. It was merely conversation as about other places.

41,967. When was the first intimation, and from whom that there was an idea of bringing you forward here in 1866?—The first definite information was when three gentlemen called on me in London. Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Barham, and Mr. Paul Reed. They came to my house. I think I had a letter from them telling me to expect them, or something of that kind.

41,968. When they came did they tell you that they had seen any of the active members of the party, Sir William Drake or Mr. Brand?—No, it was three years ago.

41,969. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say your name was down in Mr. Brand's list; was it down for the general election of 1865?—I think it has been down longer than that.

41,970. How was it when they were in a difficulty about a second member in 1865 you were not brought forward?—I rather think my name was mentioned.

41,971. At that time?—Yes, I think so.

41,972. (Mr. Price.) It would be so if it is a true document or anything like a true document which was produced before us amongst Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's papers. Mr. Travers Smith does not recognize some of the names, but along with Sir John Shelley your name is mentioned, and that would be previous to Sir John Shelley coming?—Yes, I have heard, I do not know it quite, that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond objected to me.

41,973. On what ground?

41,974. (Mr. Coleridge.) That you knew too much about Bridgwater?—No, I think there was an old feud between him and Stuckey's bank, and he thought perhaps that I was not quite the class of man. I do not know.

41,975. (Mr. Price.) You say you received a letter?—I think I did. They all three came to me there.

41,976. Did they say when they came that they had had a communication with Sir William Drake or Mr. Travers Smith when your name was mentioned; do you remember?—No, I do not think they did.

41,977. Now we will leave you to tell us succinctly and as clearly as you can what took place at your interview with these three gentlemen?—Of course I soon became aware of what the nature of their position was; they stated that they wished me to become a candidate. Immediate reference was made either by myself or some of them to the circumstances under which we then stood. It was just after Mr. Westropp had been unseated for bribery, and that was naturally a prominent topic, and I remember saying that I understood the Liberals had been pure at the previous election in 1865, and of course I understood that they were come to me on those terms again. They said "Oh yes," and that was the distinct understanding that the party had determined on their election being pure, and I was asked by one of them, I think by Mr. Barham, whether I would subscribe to the petition in case there should be one, because we considered if I came down on pure principles, it was not likely I should win. We did not wish to slander the other side, but still the idea was that money would be used, and therefore I should be in a minority, and so they at once asked whether I would subscribe to the petition. I think some sum was mentioned, but I cannot remember at this distance of time what it was.

41,978. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it a large or small sum?—Something like 600*l.* or 700*l.*

41,979. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not your subscription to that amount?—My subscription. I understood I was to subscribe about 600*l.* to the petition. That is the sort of sum which is in my mind.

41,980. (Mr. Price.) What did you say to the proposition?—I agreed to that. I gave him to understand that I would be quite Liberal in everything that was legal as far as I was concerned. I wanted to get into Parliament, and everything that could be honourably and righteously done I was ready to do.

41,981. Was anything said about that time about those gentlemen, the agents, expecting fees?—No, not at that time, but I had taken the precaution some days before, knowing that this was likely to come, to talk to Mr. Robins, whom you had here yesterday, and I agreed, if anything had been said, I I would consult him on the subject. I was very inexperienced in these things, and did not feel equal to coping with professional gentlemen on a subject of this description.

41,982. Is that all that took place at that interview?—I think almost the whole.

41,983. Was there any intimation given you that these gentlemen had put down their names, guaranteeing a sum to be spent at the election?—Nothing of the kind whatever.

41,984. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything said to you or by you that Bridgwater was a place where money had been spent in corruption?—There was a discussion as to the petition on which Mr. Westropp had been turned out for bribery—a good deal of discussion, of which I do not remember the particulars.

41,985. Did they or any of them give you the pledge that no money on your part should be spent in corrupt purposes at that election?—I considered there was a distinct understanding of a pledge from all three.

41,986. Each of them?—Yes, they all spoke en masse, but I considered it amounted to that.

41,987. (Mr. Price.) And on that footing only you consented to become a candidate?—On that footing only.

41,988. How soon after that did you come down to Bridgwater?—I do not quite remember when that interview was with precision.

41,989. The seat had been declared vacant and a writ moved?—No, the writ had not been moved for, it was before the writ was moved for, because there was a discussion as to whether it should be moved for or not, a very considerable discussion. There was a great doubt at that interview whether it would be moved for, and that was one of the subjects we discussed, whether it would be moved or not.

41,990. Was anything said to you at all, not only with reference to your spending money, but to lead you to suppose you would be called on to pay outstanding bills incurred in Sir John Shelley's or Mr. Kinglake's former election?—Nothing whatever.

41,991. Nothing suggestive?—Nothing suggestive of that kind or description.

41,992. I need hardly ask you, would you have repudiated that as much as any other form of bribery?—I should have repudiated it.

41,993. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this your maiden essay to get into parliament?—Yes, I had inquired about places, but I had not stood for any before.

41,994. (Mr. Price.) Then go on with the history of your candidature on that occasion. You probably did not come down until after the writ was issued?—I came down the day after the writ was issued. I went down to the House to see whether it would be moved for and the next day in the evening, the Friday evening, I came down and was received here, of course, in the usual tumultuous manner, according to the habit of this place.

41,995. (Mr. Anstey.) With reference to that, will you just read a part of your address to the electors at the meeting when Mr. Sealy, the banker, was in the chair?—Yes, I think that was Saturday eveniag.

41,996. Yes, and a report of your address has been forwarded to us by you?—Yes, I sent it down.

48,997. Will you read out that passage which is marked?

41,998. (Mr. Price.) That is part of your address?—Part of my speech, not address. "I need say no "more to you on the state of the nation, but I want "to say one word as to the state of the borough. We "know that for a long time the Liberal party has "been triumphant here, and we know that at the "last election that party suffered a temporary but "disastrous eclipse, and we know by what foul means "that eclipse was produced (Hear, hear.) I do not "mean to touch the details, but I have a practical

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. W. Bagehot.

13 Oct. 1869.

" remark to make about it. There is a remarkable " class of people whose position in the matter I do " not understand. I understand Mr. Westropp's, and " I do not want to be hard upon him ; after all, he " has suffered a great penalty in being excluded from " Parliament. He was very ambitious of his seat, and " therefore, had great temptation. I can, too, make " allowance for the poor voter ; he is, most likely, ill- " educated, certainly ill off, and a little money is a " nice bait to him. What he does is wrong, but it is " intelligible. What I do not understand is the " position of the rich, respectable, virtuous members of " a party which countenances these things. (Cheers.) " They are like the man who stole stinking fish, they " commit a crime, and they get no benefit. (Laughter,) " Bribery cannot be carried on without their con- " nivance. It is their crime as well as that of others, " and they are more inexcusable, for they are hardly " tempted at all, and others are tempted much. Now " that it has been exposed to the light of day, I " cannot believe that the respectable men of the Con- " servative party will commit what at the election " ascertained to have happened. (Hear, hear.) I " have nothing else to say to you except that I shall " be happy to answer any questions which may be " put to me, and to ask you to form yourselves into " one great vigilance committee for the success of our " party, the purity of the borough, and the triumph " of Liberal principles."

41,999. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you intend during the the whole of your contest to act on the purity principles there set forth ?—Entirely.

42,000. (Mr. Price.) Was that address of yours, and that passage amongst others, received with tumultuous applause ?—I see "loud cheers" at the end of it. Oh yes, it was very well received.

42,001. (Mr. Anstey.) I see immediately afterwards that a motion was made and carried unanimously, you can read what it was ?—" On the proposition of " Henry Lovibond, Esq., seconded by G. B. Sully, Esq. " it was unanimously resolved, ' That this meeting " ' having heard a declaration of Mr. Bagehot's poli- " ' tical principles, approve of the same and considers " ' him a fit and proper person to represent this " ' borough in Parliament, and further pledges it- " ' self to use every legitimate effort to secure his " ' return.' "

42,002. It appears therefore that they wish to have it go forth that their intention was equally pure with your own ?—That is what I understood to be their intention.

42,001. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you understood, did you believe ?—Oh, I believed. I believed it on this ground, that though I perfectly well knew in former times the Liberal party had been quite as bad as the other, yet having turned out Mr. Westropp for bribery, and the election having been pure in 1865, I considered I might rely on that pledge.

42,004. But you are assuming a great deal in saying that they had been pure in 1865 ?—Well, that is what was stated to me.

42,005. (Mr. Price.) Did not they tell you there had been a counter petition against Mr. Kinglake which no doubt was dismissed by the committee, or fell through from want of proof, but which did allege corrupt practices ?—I was well acquainted with that, not so much from their telling me as my own knowledge, but it was generally understood at that time that that was wholly unfounded, and that the Liberals were pure. It may have turned out different from your investigation, but that is how it appeared to me at that time, and I also considered that I might rely on it. I did not think they would come to me living in the neighbourhood, and not being quite the class of person who is generally sought for.

42,006. If that account is true which was given by Mr. Travers Smith, you were put down as one of the rich men, "All the above are rich and good men" ? —I do not know anything about that, but the people here, do not want to go to Mr. Travers Smith about me and my family.

(Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Benjamin Lovibond and his experienced clerk, Fletcher, set you down in a list of five, side by side with gentlemen called very moderate, with a gentleman of advanced principles, who went in for abolition of church rates, and vote for ballot, and other gentlemen of moderate principles, and a nobleman who is said to have no experience, but very intelligent, and there comes this last sentence——

42,007. (Mr. Price.) I will give you your description, "Walter Bagehot, an able man, editor or part " proprietor of the 'Economist,' son-in-law of James " Wilson, M.P., a good candidate." You are followed by Lord Milton, "an intelligent young candidate, but not " experienced ; the highest social and family position." Then at the bottom, "All the above are men of wealth " and position, who would do credit to almost any " constituency" ?—What I meant in the remark I made just now, is that I thought at that time, and remember thinking that the persons who generally commit the bribery, and come down to corrupt boroughs, are either very rich men to whom money is no object, or what I may call sham millionaires who come down because it is thought that they have got it, and I do not suppose that anybody thought I was either one or the other. I may have certain moderate means, but I cannot afford to throw away these enormous sums, and I did not intend to do it, and I certainly do not think I am a sham millionaire.

42,008. (Mr. Coleridge.) No one came to you as they did to Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No.

42,009. From their own local knowledge ?—No one ever came to me.

42,010. From their own local knowledge you mean, they would not think of doing so ?—From their own local knowledge.

42,011. (Mr. Anstey.) That is the meaning of my question, a little while ago. You are in the paper which the learned Chief Commissioner has read, set down side by side with one with whom you are made to agree in the important consideration that you are said to be a man of wealth and position, and the man who set you down is not a stranger, but a Bridgwater man ?—I am not anxious to make myself out a pauper, that is not my case.

42,012. (Mr. Price.) The question is that the impression intended to be conveyed to people here, if Mr. Lovibond allowed this to be circulated, which was prepared after careful analysis, was that each one of these gentlemen was a man of wealth ?—Well, wealth is a comparative term. I am not anxious to make myself out a pauper, but at the same time I want to put myself right before the Commissioners, I do not think it is likely that persons intending to commit bribery would come to me being so well known, and I believe myself that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond rather objected to me on that ground. I do not wish to slander his memory, but I know that he did, I believe that he did object.

42,013. During the whole course of the time you were here while the contest was going on, did anything of the kind occur to raise your suspicions that anything like corrupt practices were going on on your side ?—On the contrary I circulated this speech in the borough, and it was generally well received, and I had various conversations with my agent Mr. Lovibond particularly.

42,014. Were you in constant communication with Mr. Barham, Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Reed ?—Yes, in constant communication with them, but nothing ever passed ; on the contrary we had a good many conversations of the same kind as far as conversation went.

42,015. Had you a canvass ?—I went all over the canvass with Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond.

42,016. What was the result ?—We did not put down the canvass very much, because I was told a good many I could fairly not rely on.

42,017. When you were told it could not be relied on, was anything said to explain that ?—If the Tories offered money, although they pledged themselves to me, I was not to rely on them. There are certain streets in Bridgwater, I should not like to name them, and I am not sure that I know them now, which nobody can go down and not see that they knew nothing about politics, and care nothing about it, and taking down the names there would be a perfect farce.

42,018. (Mr. Anstey.) Speaking from your experience of those streets when you went down them canvassing, did any of the people say anything to you, or in your hearing, about money?—Yes, one I recollect standing at the door, who said, "I won't vote for "gentlefolks unless they do something for I. Gentlefolks do not come to I unless they want something "of I, and I won't do nothing for gentlefolks, unless "they do something for me." Of course I immediately retired out of that house.

42,019. That man did not give you his promise?—I retired immediately; he stood in the doorway sideways, as these rustics do.

42,020. Were there many such instances?—One or two I remember. One suggested that I might have a place. I immediately retired from him.

42,021. Did anybody of a better class than those voters, privately of course, expostulate with you you against your resolution to be pure?—No, nobody ever came to me at all.

42,022. But those about you, did any of them say anything of this kind, "Mr. Bagehot, you are quite "wrong in putting purity of principles forward. It "will not do if the other side bribes"?—I might have been told that I should be unsuccessful in the stream of conversation; many people may have told me that; that is how I gathered if the other side was impure and we were pure, I should be beaten.

42,023. Can you remember the names of any who told you that?—No I cannot, but I daresay I was told by as many as 20 people, and we went upon that entire consideration.

42,024. That continued up to the day of the poll?—That continued up to the day of the poll.

42,025. In the early part of the day you were in a majority?—Yes for a considerable time.

42,026. Tell us whether anything occurred on that day communicated to you by any of your important friends?—Nothing occurred at all.

42,027. Which led you to suppose that money was about?—Nothing was ever said to me, but at the same time I did not go through the day without suspecting that some one was doing something wrong on my behalf.

42,028. What was it that gave rise to your suspicions?—I was getting too many votes. I got many more than I could believe honestly got.

42,029. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you given up all hope?—I did not think I could win, I do not say I had given up all hope. I thought I should be beaten.

42,030. (Mr. Price.) You thought you were fighting a losing battle?—That I was fighting a losing battle. I came down to fight one, and when I found that I was winning I began to suspect that something was wrong. It did not come on me early in the day, and I cannot specify the time that it did, but I certainly did begin to think that some one on my behalf was doing what they ought not to do.

42,031. Did you say anything at all to anybody connected with you?—No, I did not. I did not feel confident myself; it was mere suspicion.

42,032. Were you accompanied by any friends from London, as many candidates had been?—No, I had nobody here on my behalf. I should say that what has really happened since did not occur to my mind then. What I thought was that some purse had been made up in the place, and I think this passed through my mind, "Well, shall I say anything about it to these people; I shall certainly be told it is not so." That was really it.

42,033. In the result you were beaten by a small majority?—Yes. I heard some people say, "How "well he bears it; after a triumphant majority early "in the day, he is beaten." The fact was that I was very glad to be in the minority, because I thought the majority would not have been honestly procured. It was a very mingled feeling, at any rate, in my mind.

42,034. You think you would not have felt any great sense of triumph if you had been returned, from what your feelings were?—I did not much care at all.

42,035. (Mr. Coleridge.) How early in the day were you pretty well convinced that the opposite party had spent money?—I was told early in the morning by Mr. Lovibond that the money had not come down they had heard, and therefore he thought that he should be able to congratulate me. I remember his coming into the room, and saying that, and for a long time I was in a considerable majority, but not more than I had a right to be probably. I do not know how long I was looking for the money of the other side to come and counteract this. That is what I was expecting, but it did not come. I seemed to be getting ahead, and getting ahead, and then at last I saw what I had expected had come, but I cannot say exactly the precise time.

42,036. We have heard that as much as 4,000*l.* was spent at that election on that side?—

42,037. (Mr. Price.) 1,900*l.* in direct bribes of 10*l.* then, besides large sums afterwards. 1,900*l.* was spent beyond all question, very much on that day, and the election finally won by collecting a tally of 30 or 40 men, which just turned the scale at the last moment?—Yes, I may have heard all day that they were spending money.

42,037. Did you wait after the declaration of the poll, or did you go away?—I stayed till the declaration of the poll, and made a little speech before I went, which nobody heard but on the platform.

42,038. (Mr. Coleridge.) You lost by seven?—I lost by seven.

42,039. (Mr. Anstey.) During the vicissitudes of that day did you observe or not observe that your friends about you began to be more importunate with you on the question of purity?—Not a single word was said to me.

42,040. No word of regret that you had taken that course?—No one said a word to me. When the thing became quite hopeless, when all the voters had polled, I think it was something after an hour before the declaration of the poll, a great many of my friends came into the room, but nothing was said to me about the petition. I felt from that moment, I put it down as quite certain, that something had been done on my behalf.

42,041. They never suggested any particulars?—No, no one suggested a single word.

42,042. Although you came down with a full promise to spend 600*l.* towards the petition, fighting for purity after you had lost, not a word was said?—Not a single word. From that hour I was convinced that someone had been doing something.

42,044. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you advanced that 600*l.*?—No.

42,045. What did you pay before the election?—Not a single farthing to anyone.

42,046. (Mr. Price.) I suppose then you went away?—As soon as the poll was declared, I went home.

42,047. Now tell us how soon after you left the town did you become aware that there had been an improper expenditure of money?—I cannot remember quite whether it was the next morning that I came down here, or the morning after, but it was the first morning that I came into the place.

42,048. Were you in the neighbourhood?—I went to Langport, about 30 miles off, at night, and came down here the next morning, or the one after, to take away my things which were left at lodgings.

42,049. Were you lodging at the celebrated Andrew Allan's?—I was; and if anything passed on the polling day, in thinking over what was likely I should not have thought that he was a likely man to be concerned in it.

42,050. You had no idea he was?—On the contrary, I should have thought he was the last man.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. W. Bagehot.

13 Oct. 1869.

42,051. (Mr. Anstey.) Why so?—The whole place is so respectable.

42,052. And his conversation also?—I had not much conversation with him, but that was the impression. I was some time in the house, and would never have thought him concerned in so rascally an affair, but they were lodgings which I should have recommended to a candidate who was coming down.

42,053. Was there a crowd there?—No, nothing of the kind; it was as quiet as possible.

42,054. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were your legitimate expenses returned to you as?—193*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*

42,055. How long after the election did you pay that?—About two months, I think. I paid through Mr. Robins, who was here yesterday.

42,056. (Mr. Price.) 193*l.*, I think he said, besides 1,100*l.*?—193*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*

42,057. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you pay your personal expenses bill before you left?—I paid Allan, and I also paid the hotel bill where my servant slept.

42,058. Before you left on the polling day?—No, when I came down here on the morning I was mentioning.

42,059. How long after?—I do not remember whether it was the next day, or the day after that.

42,060. (Mr. Price.) 196*l.* is about the average, but then included in that sum, with regard to the last election, are both Mr. Westropp's and Mr. Gray's personal expenses to make up that sum. Do you remember how the 196*l.* was made up against you?—I do not distinctly.

42,061. Because there were fewer polling places and less hustings expenses in 1866?—The accounts will show; I do not know it.

42,062. Had you any conveyances?—No, I had no conveyances at all.

42,063. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean that all the voters walked to the poll? It was before the Act, you know?—I think there was nothing of the kind. At the same time I do not remember.

42,064. (Mr. Price.) With reference to the last election the bills against two of the candidates for personal expenses came to 72*l.* each, and then there were many more polling places, and the hustings expenses divided between four candidates were 31*l.* for hustings and so on?—The hustings expenses would be divided only between two.

42,065. There was only one polling place, less clerks, and all that would be legitimate expenses?—I have no recollection.

42,066. Do you think there was anything for agency in that 196*l.*?—I do not think there was. I paid 50*l.* to each of the lawyers afterwards.

42,067. Then you came here in two or three days?—I came here on this morning which I mentioned, which I do not quite remember, and before I had been here some time—I do not suppose a quarter of an hour in my room—Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond came in and intimated to me——

42,068. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Henry Lovibond.

42,069. (Mr. Anstey.) You had nothing to do with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond at all?—No, he was suffering from paralysis. I never saw him in my life.

42,070. When you have spoken of Mr. Lovibond throughout your examination, you mean Mr. Henry Lovibond?—I had no transaction with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond; he was passed away; and when I heard of him I did not think that was an unfavourable thing, because, having been concerned so many years in the bad work here, I knew it was a good opportunity for beginning a new regime, and he was incapable of taking a part. Then these gentlemen came to my room, and told me in fact that money had been spent.

42,071. Who told you?—Mr. Barham, I think it was, who spoke. I am pretty sure.

42,072. Did they explain to you how the money had been found?—No, I did not know at that time. I was disgusted.

42,073. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they tell you how much?—They, I think, said 800*l.*, that is my recollection now. I cut the matter rather short. I did not consider about it.

42,074. (Mr. Anstey.) Did they appear embarrassed when they opened the communication?—Yes; I see Mr. Barham's face now—certainly there was a look of that sort. I was exceedingly disgusted with it; it did not come on me by surprise, because I was convinced there had been bad work, and I should make it my business to inquire into it, because I knew as well as possible about it.

42,075. Did you express your disgust?—I think I did. I looked it I know.

42,076. Did you remind Mr. Lovibond, or Mr. Barham, or any of them, of the distinct promise you had from them in London?—I had not much discussion. I do not remember whether I did or not, it was a very short discussion. I know I was disgusted then, and would not have much to say to them.

42,077. (Mr. Price.) Did you then leave Bridgwater?—I then left Bridgwater.

42,078. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you undertake to pay the money?—No, I did not undertake to pay it. I do not know whether they might have gathered that.

42,079. Did not it occur to you that it was retrospective bribery they were asking you to commit?—No, I never heard there was such a thing. I never knew it until reading the Beverley Commission the other day. I am not alleging this as an excuse, but I never knew there was any such crime. I never knew the paying money under such circumstances when bribery had taken place was a criminal offence at all, till the other day.

42,080. Did it not strike you to be, whatever the law was, as complete an offence against the moral code as if you had previously authorized it?—I do not say it was right; that is quite another thing, but I thought you were asking me as to the law.

42,081. Did you not think it a violation of that pledge which you gave so admirably in the words you have read in your speech?—I do not think I did. I know I did not want to pay the money then. It was very reluctantly I ever consented to it.

42,082. (Mr. Price.) Was great pressure put upon you to pay this money?—The determinate circumstance in my mind was this, that it would be said I did not pay it because I was beaten, but I should not have paid it otherwise. If I had come in, that would have been the general impression down here, I know, that I did not like to pay this money because I had failed, and, so far from making a good moral impression, I should only have made the impression that I was a mean person. A successful candidate, at any rate, can clear himself of that by giving up his seat, but a defeated candidate is left to be virtuous at other people's expense. That was the feeling in my mind. I am not by any means defending it.

42,083. (Mr. Price.) Was anything paid besides that; a sum of 1,100*l.* I think Mr. Robins told us in all?—Yes, that is all I spent.

42,084. Was anything said to you by way of pressure to pay any of Sir John Shelley's outstanding bills?—No, I never did.

42,085. Were you asked?—No.

42,086. Did they never mention that subject to you?—No; I paid everything through Mr. Robins, and all communications as to money took place through him, with the exception of one conversation on the morning I named.

42,087. Then you did eventually, as we have heard from Mr. Robins, yield?—I had many conversations with him after that, and he advised me to do it, I, not knowing that it was illegal, but knowing it was a very questionable thing, the purpose to which the money would be put, but still feeling that there was a very great difference between that and coming down to corrupt the borough.

42,088. (Mr. Coleridge.) Supposing you had come a second time; having done that, and the same thing had taken place, your agents here would have known that you would adopt their corrupt acts hereafter?—Yes.

42,089. (Mr. Price.) That brings us to the question of your being asked to come a second time?—I was asked, and declined on that ground.

42,090. Tell us what you said about that?—I said to Mr. Paul Reed, who was the only one I saw myself—he came to me at the "Economist" office—"Well," I said, "knowing what I know, you cannot expect me," or something of that kind; and he then said something about of course I was not to come down empty handed, or something like that, and then the conversation ceased; but I never persuaded them then not to have a contest, but I did not say I would not come here at the general election, because I had some sort of hope that purity might possibly prevail.

42,091. You hoped against hope?—I hoped against hope, but still I did not like to abandon the idea at once.

42,092. However, you distinctly refused to come down?—I distinctly refused to come down.

42,093. Partly objecting that Mr. Patton ought not to be opposed on the re-election?—Well, the real thing on my mind was this, that if I came down it would be impossible to prevent these things occurring again, and I did not choose to.

42,094. What were your arrangements with Mr. Robins, as to how the money should be then paid?—I do not know. I paid him certain sums amounting altogether to 1,532*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*

42,095. That was money found by yourself?—Yes, entirely my own money.

42,096. Not any party subscription?—No, I found my own money.

42,097. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not any assistance from the Reform Club?—No.

42,098. Or Sir William Drake?—No, I never asked for it.

42,099. (Mr. Price.) You found that money yourself, and left to Mr. Robins the mode in which it was to be expended?—Yes, and each of these gentlemen had 50*l.* in addition; I include that.

42,100. (Mr. Coleridge.) The whole cost, legal and illegal?—The whole cost, legal and illegal, was 1,532*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*

42,101. (Mr. Price.) You have no reason to suppose we have no evidence to that effect, but it has been said there was a great deal more spent at your election?—I have no knowledge, but I am quite sure it was not so.

42,102. (Mr. Coleridge.) I believe you consulted Mr. Robins as to whether you should pay these illegal payments?—Just so. I entirely acted under his advice throughout.

42,103. And he advised you to pay them?—Yes; he thought that was the best course.

42,104. Was that with a view to keeping up an influence in the borough in the future?—That did not operate in my mind at the time. I was thoroughly disgusted with the whole affair.

42,105. (Mr. Price.) You did not abandon all hope of success?—I did not abandon all hope of success; I had some sort of hope that purity might still be possible.

42,106. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was not till after Mr. Vanderbyl's election that the money was paid?—Oh yes, before that.

42,107. There was only a month or two between the two elections?—The money, with the exception of the fees of the lawyers, was paid.

42,108. Before Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—Before Mr. Vanderbyl's election, oh yes.

42,109. Then it must have been paid within a fortnight or three weeks of the election?—Oh yes; they were paid; I told Mr. Robins what was to be done with it.

42,110. (Mr. Anstey.) Had the postponement of the payment (if there was any postponement) any reference at all to Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—No. I am inclined to think, I was more inclined to think at the time, that they were more urgent for it, thinking that perhaps Mr. Patton might come back for re-election, and they might like to have the money first, so as to be free. If I had not paid them I should have had the staff in my hands, and I should have been able to say whether there should be a contest or not. Now I certainly did think afterwards that they got the money as quickly as they could in order to do what they did do.

42,111. Did it not occur to you on the other hand, that the giving of the money then was an encouragement to them to go and do likewise at Mr. Vanderbyl's contest?—It was not till afterwards that they got that. Oh no, they got that a month or so afterwards, when I come to recollect.

42,112. (Mr. Price.) When you saw they had got another candidate down here, who would be ready to spend a great deal of money?—Oh yes. I wrote to the Commissioners to ask that I might be allowed to give evidence. I only did it in order that this speech might be in evidence. Something has been said in one of the newspapers about Mr. Bagehot's family having advanced money; I would just say that that is all nonsense.

42,113. I have not heard anything of that sort said here?—It was Mr. Sully who said that.

42,114. (Mr. Anstey.) I have not heard that said by anybody here?—Something has been said in a report in one of the papers to that effect, and I wish to negative that.

42,115. (Mr. Price.) Yes; that is negatived. I do not remember any such thing as that having been said at all. So far as I am concerned, you have been entirely separate in my mind from other persons. I have not thought of you in connexion with others, as I should have done if it had been said here?—It was stated in a report in one of the papers. It may be a slight error.

RICHARD CASELY sworn.

R. Casely.

42,116. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A porter at the station.

42,117. At the station here?—Yes.

42,118. Are you a voter?—Yes.

42,119. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

42,120. How?—I voted for Mr. Westropp.

42,121. And Mr. Gray?—And Gray; Westropp and Gray.

42,122. Did you get anything for it?—I did not.

42,123. Any promise?—No; no promise of any kind.

42,124. Was there any influence brought to bear upon you?—There was no influence brought to bear upon me whatever.

42,125. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—I did.

42,126. At both of them, when Mr. Patton stood twice?—Yes; I voted for him twice.

42,127. How much did you get?—10*l.* each time.

42,128. From whom?—Well, I cannot tell you.

42,129. At the "Bull and Butcher," or the "Three Crowns"?—No; it was in John Street.

42,130. At the "Golden Lion"?—At the "Golden Lion."

42,131. From a stranger?—I never saw anyone.

42,132. Did you vote in 1865, when Mr. Westropp was returned?—I did.

42,133. How did you vote?—I voted for Mr. Westropp.

42,134. How much did you get?—10*l.*

42,135. From whom?—Some time after the election I got it.

42,136. From whom?—I got it from the pump, and I cannot swear who put it there.

42,137. You took it from the pump?—Yes.

42,138. At the station?—No.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

R. Casely.

13 Oct. 1869.

42,139. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you know it was in the pump?—There was a gentleman out in the yard, and I went out for something; it was down at Jarman's, in John Street, and I suppose Jarman put it there; I cannot swear.

42,140. Did anybody tell you it was there?—No; he only threw his arm out like that (describing), and I went and looked into the pump, and there I found the money. That is the truth, sir.

42,141. (Mr. Price.) In 1859 did you vote, when Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp were here?—I did not.

42,142. Had you a vote then?—No, I had not.

42,143. Was 1865 the first time you voted for Mr. Westropp?—The first time I voted for Mr. Westropp, at the time you speak of.

42,144. Have you ever had anything from the other side?—No. I have always been a Conservative all the days of my life, and always should vote Conservative.

J. Creedy.

JAMES CREEDY sworn.

42,145. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote at the last election for Westropp and Gray?—I did.

42,146. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

42,147. Where do you work?—On the quay.

42,148. For any particular master?—No; not one more than another.

42,149. You voted for Westropp and Gray last time?—Yes.

42,150. Did you get anything?—No.

42,151. Any promise?—No.

42,152. Were you present at any meetings at the "Clarence?"—Well, I was there in the morning of the poll, about five minutes.

42,153. Did you hear anybody make a speech?—No, I did not. It was just at the close when I got there.

42,154. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say you never had money after the election?—I never received a farthing. I have never had a promise, nor have I ever had any money.

42,155. Did you ever ask for any?—I never asked for any. I went to the poll free and independent of anything of the sort.

42,156. Just attend to me. Just before the election did you suffer some loss in your business?—I suffered the loss of a pig about five or six weeks before the election.

42,157. Do you remember saying you had had a misfortune in losing some fat pigs, and that you were not going to vote for nothing?—I never said that in my life; on oath, never.

42,158. Nothing like it?—Nothing like it.

42,159. (Mr. Price.) About one pig?—Yes.

42,160. It was about one store pig?—About one pig; about one store pig.

42,161. Did you say anything about losing one store pig?—I did. A gentleman, a clerk, made out a brief for me to get something to make up the loss.

42,162. A memorial, I suppose, you mean?—Yes; to get something towards that loss.

42,163. Who was that gentleman?—Mr. Chapman.

42,164. Chapman the clerk to Mr. Boyle?—To Mr. Boyle, I suppose he is.

42,165. Did he get up a subscription for you?—No. I did it myself.

42,167. How much did you get?—I got about 14*s.*

42,168. Was that before you voted or after?—Well, it was nearly a month before I voted.

42,169. Whom did you get the 14*s.* from?—Some from one party and some from another.

42,170. People of different politics?—Some from the Liberals, and some from the Conservatives.

42,171. Was anything said by you to them about your voting when you asked them to subscribe?—Not the slightest.

42,172. Nor by them to you?—Not the slightest.

42,173. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Chapman say anything to you?—No, Chapman was a stranger to me. I do not know that I ever spoke to him in my life before.

42,174. (Mr. Price.) How did you know Chapman?—My daughter used to work for him. Last week she was taken ill, and obliged to go to the infirmary. I asked him to make out the memorial for me, and I have never spoken to him since.

42,175. Did you vote in 1866?—I never had a vote before this last election. I voted for Westropp and Gray, and went to the poll free and independent.

42,176. You have been called about this transaction of the pig?—I just voted as much for one party as the other.

G. Dunn.

GEORGE DUNN sworn.

42,176*a*. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a shopkeeper, residing at Bridgwater.

42,177. What kind of shop do you keep?—A toy shop.

42,178. Have you a large stock?—Well, a few hundred pounds, I suppose so. I became a voter in 1852.

42,179. We will begin at the last election; did you vote at the last election?—I did.

42,180. How?—Westropp and Gray.

42,181. Did you get anything?—Nothing at all.

42,182. No promise?—No promise.

42,183. Did you attend at a meeting held at the "Clarence"?—Never in my life at Bridgwater, neither Conservative nor Liberal.

42,184. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

42,185. At both elections?—Yes.

42,186. For whom?—For Patton both times.

42,187. Did you get anything?—Yes.

42,188. How much?—10*l.* was brought to my house by Harden without asking for it.

42,189. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes, for Westropp.

42,190. What did you get?—10*l.*, without asking for it.

42,191. Did you vote in 1859?—I did; for Westropp and Padwick.

42,192. Did you get anything?—Yes, also 10*l.*

42,193. From whom?—Murlis. I will tell you why I had it. Murlis came to my house on the evening of the nomination day and asked to look at a lady's bag, a good one. I showed him several. He selected one which I believe to the best of my knowledge was 10*s.*; I will not be positive to a shilling. I believe it was 10*s.*, and then he put down 10 sovereigns on my glass case, one by one. I had the 10 sovereigns, and he had the lady's bag.

42,194. (Mr. Anstey.) What was your condition of life at that time?—Staff-sergeant of pensioners.

42,195. (Mr. Price.) You kept a shop?—I kept a shop, the same as I do now.

42,196. You are a pensioner?—Yes.

42,197. (Mr. Anstey.) What rent did you pay at that time for your shop?—26*l.* a year.

42,198. And what was your pension?—26*l.* 4*s.* a year at that time.

42,199. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were not disqualified by being a pensioner?—No, not for being a pensioner. When I was serving I was disqualified. I was not in the town then.

42,200. When you were discharged you were pensioned, and got your vote again.

42,201. (Mr. Price.) Was that the first time you voted in 1859?—No, I voted in 1852.

42,202. Did you vote in 1857?—Yes; in 1857 for Follett, and Tynte and in 1852 for Follett and Tynte.

42,203. Did you get anything?—I got 5*l.* between those elections, sent in a letter. I do not know who it came from; between 1852 and 1857.

42,204. How did you vote?—For Follett and Tynte.

42,205. Did you get anything at the time?—No.

42,206. Did you vote before that?—No.

42,207. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything between 1857 and 1859?—No. 35*l.* I have been paid altogether, taking 10*s.* off for the bag it would be 34*l.* 10*s.*

42,208. Then you have been paid at every election, except Tynte and Follett's election and Westropp and Gray's election, the last election?—Westropp and Gray and Tynte and Follett's alone. There was 5*l.* came in a letter between 1852 and 1857, but I do not know who from.

42,209. (Mr. Anstey.) On those occasions when you received money, which you say you did not know whom it came from, had you previously to voting been promised anything?—No; I never was at a meeting since I was at Bridgwater, either Liberal or Conservative.

42,110. Will you kindly attend to my question. You say there were occasions when you received money without knowing where it came from?—Only on one occasion.

42,211. On that one occasion when you received money without knowing who it came from, had you promised your vote to anybody?—No, I had not.

42,212. Had you been canvassed by anybody?—I promised my vote when the candidates came, and I voted as I promised.

42,213. Was that before or after you had received the money from them?—After.

42,214. And you presume it came from somebody connected with them?—I judged as much.

CHARLES SPRANKLIN sworn. C. Spranklin.

42,215. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

42,216. For whom do you work?—In the town.

42,217. For anybody?—Scavenging.

42,218. Are you a voter?—Yes.

42,219. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes, I did; that was the only time.

42,220. For whom?—Westropp and Gray.

42,221. Did you get anything?—No.

42,222. Any employment of any kind?—No.

42,223. Did you attend any meeting?—No.

42,224. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything after the election?—No.

42,225. Was that the only election at which you voted?—It was.

HENRY HOBBS sworn. H. Hobbs.

42,226. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A shoemaker.

42,227. A master?—Yes.

42,228. Are you a voter?—Yes.

42,229. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

42,230. Did you get anything?—No.

42,231. Did you get any promise?—No.

42,232. Did you attend any of those meetings which have been spoken of at the "Clarence"?—I attended part of the time.

42,233. At the "Clarence"?—Yes.

42,234. Were you there when anybody was making a speech?—I heard Mr. Gray make a part of his speech.

42,235. Tell us what you heard him say?—I heard him tell the working men to go to poll early. That is all I heard him say.

42,236. Did you hear him say that he would do good to the town, or advance the trade, or anything of that sort?—I never heard it.

42,237. Did you vote under any promise, or were you influenced in any way to vote?—At the last election?

42,238. Yes?—No.

42,239. Did you vote at the two elections in 1866?—Yes, I did.

42,240. Both of them?—I did.

42,241. How did you vote?—For Mr. Patton.

42,242. Both times?—Yes.

42,243. How much did you get?—You wish me to state the correct thing?

42,244. (Mr. Coleridge.) Of course we do, and it will be the worse for you if you do not.—I mean whether I went to them to be bribed, or they sent money to me?

42,245. (Mr. Price.) Tell us all about it?—I voted for Mr. Patton the first election, and there was nobody ever offered me anything on either side, or promised me anything, and I never went in for anything that way; but about three days before the election, I will not be certain about the day, there was 10*l.* sent to my house, and as I was passing up the street to go to Mr. Temblett's, I think it was Mr. Waddon who asked me if I had had it. I said "Yes," and I asked him what it was for, and he said it was for my services.

42,246. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you do?—I got the voters up. I was away a day and a night.

42,247. You got 10*l.*?—Yes.

42,248. (Mr. Price.) Were you what is called a watcher?—Yes.

42,249. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the next election, Mr. Patton's, did you get anything then?—Just the same way. I had 40*l.* from Mr. Waddon.

42,250. What for?—To carry 10*l.* to Parsons, I think it was stated here yesterday; 10*l.* I gave to Charles Hobbs, and I think he voted the other side afterwards; 7*l.* I returned to Mr. Waddon, and 13*l.* he said I was to have for myself, for money I had spent, and for my services.

42,251. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865?—I did.

42,252. For whom?—Westropp and Kinglake.

42,253. What did you get?—Nothing, and never a promise.

42,254. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay any money to anybody?—Not then.

42,255. Did you get anything for your services?—No, I never had anything at all.

(Mr. Anstey.) How came you to vote for Kinglake?

42,256. (Mr. Price.) How came you to split your vote?—I think I voted for him twice.

42,257. (Mr. Anstey.) How came you to vote for Kinglake in 1865, and not plump for Westropp?—I never voted but once before, and that was for Mr. Kinglake.

42,258. Why did you vote for him then, and not vote for him afterwards?—I have a perfect right to alter my views, have not I?

42,259. (Mr. Coleridge.) But the curious thing is that the money followed the alteration of your views?—Never. I never received anything in the way of money.

42,260. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not see what you mean by altering your views. You must have altered your views when you split your vote, because your views must have been Liberal when you gave one half of your vote to the Liberals, and Conservative when you gave the other half to the Conservatives?—I made a mistake.

42,261. (Mr. Price.) Attend to the question. I ask you again for the third or fourth time, what made you vote for Mr. Kinglake then, seeing that your opinions were Conservative?—I was never an out and out Liberal. I was always Conservative. I voted for Kinglake and Westropp. I cannot answer more than that.

42,262. Was it not to keep well with both parties?—No.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

H. Hobbs.

13 Oct. 1869.

42,263. Was it not with the hope of getting money?—No; I never got any money for my vote.

42,264. Do you mean to say you never got any money for your vote when you sold yourself like a pig?—No.

42,265. You said just now that you had sold yourself in the market twice?—That was not that year.

42,266. The immorality does not depend on the year of the election. I am talking of your views; your views are as corrupt as that of any other bribee; and I want to know whether you did not look for money at the election of 1865 as you did in the election of 1866?—No, I did not. I went to vote free and independent.

(Mr. Anstey.) Do not talk about free and independent.

42,267. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1859?—Yes.

42,268. How did you vote then?—For Mr. Kinglake.

42,269. (Mr. Price.) Did you plump for Kinglake?—Yes.

42,270. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—Nothing at all on either side.

42,271. (Mr. Price.) How did you vote?—If I voted then, I voted for Mr. Kinglake. I never in my life received anything.

42,272. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you mean by saying "never in my life;" you have given two instances already?—I mean at this time.

42,273. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1852, when Mr. Kinglake first came here?—I think not.

42,274. Did you vote before 1852 at any election?—No.

42,275. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever have any money to pay men for their votes, except the three you have told us of?—No.

42,276. No other?—No.

42,277. Are you sure?—I am quite sure.

42,278. (Mr. Anstey.) The men you took trouble about at Mr. Patton's first or second election (I really forget which you said), you were away a day and a night getting them up; did you promise them any money?—I did not. I had not any money to promise them with.

42,279. Did you tell them you would take them somewhere where they would get money?—I do not think that was the first election.

42,280. Will you answer my question? When you got them up (to use your language) did you tell them where they could get money?—I told them I was going to the "Bull and Butcher."

42,281. Did you tell them what you were going to take them there for?—Yes.

42,282. That was to get money?—I have not the least doubt of it.

42,283. That was the work you were paid the 10*l.* for?—Yes, and the money that was sent to me.

42,284. Your work and your vote were the things you got 10*l.* for?—No.

42,285. Have you anything more to say?—I heard my name brought up the other day.

42,286. (Mr. Price.) Of course it was brought up?—Mr. Lilly said I could answer something about the "Foresters."

42,287. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is that?—I am sure I do not know.

42,288. (Mr. Price.) What about the "Foresters;" let us hear what it is?—It was respecting spending the money at the "Albion," I think, but we had no politics brought up in our society; that is what I was going to state. That is all.

J. Bryant.

JOHN BRYANT sworn.

42,289. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are you?—A master mariner.

42,290. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,291. How did you vote?—For Kinglake and Westropp.

42,292. What did you get?—Nothing.

42,293. Nothing at all?—No.

42,294. Nothing in the way of expenses for coming home?—No.

42,295. No payment afterwards?—No.

42,296. Nothing at all?—No.

42,297. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you promised anything?—No.

42,298. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the election before?—Yes.

42,299. For whom?—For Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

42,300. No, no; when only Vanderbyl and Patton stood, in 1866?—Yes.

42,301. What did you get then?—10*l.*

42,302. From whom?—From Bussell.

42,303. And at the election before that, when Patton and Bagehot stood, did you vote then?—Yes.

42,304. For whom?—Mr. Bagehot.

42,305. What did you get then?—5l., five or six weeks after the election was over.

42,306. From Bussell?—Yes.

42,307. In 1865 did you vote?—I had no vote at all.

42,308. You said you voted for Vanderbyl and Kinglake at the last election?—Yes. I voted three times.

42,309. And you got 15*l.* altogether?—Yes.

J. Sanders.

JAMES SANDERS sworn.

42,310. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are you?—A cabinet-maker.

42,311. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,312. How did you vote?—For Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

42,313. What did you get?—Nothing.

42,314. Any promise?—No.

42,315. Was there any bill at your house?—No.

42,316. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

42,317. Did you vote at the election before, Vanderbyl and Patton's?—No.

42,318. How was that?—I was not in the town.

42,319. Did you vote at Patton and Bagehot's election?—No.

42,320. Did you vote in 1865?—No.

42,321. When did you vote before? Did you vote at Padwick's election?—Yes.

42,322. How did you vote then—that was in 1859?—That was Mansell and Follett.

42,323. No, no; Kinglake and Tynte in 1859. Did you vote then?—I was in the town.

42,324. Did you vote?—I must have voted.

42,325. How much did you get?—Nothing.

42,326. Nothing at all?—No.

42,327. When were you paid for voting?—In 1859 I voted. Who were the candidates in 1859?

42,328. Padwick and Westropp, Conservatives, and Tynte and Kinglake, Liberals?—Padwick and Westropp I voted for.

42,329. And I suppose you got paid?—No, I got paid in this way when: I was not at home I was told by my wife that 10*l.* had been left with her. That was after I had voted.

42,330. Then you were paid?—I did not know of it till I voted.

42,331. You did not return it?—I thought it was very kind of them.

42,332. Did you vote in 1857?—Yes.

42,333. How did you vote?—For Follett and Mansell.

42,334. What did you get?—Nothing.

42,335. Did you vote in 1852?—I did.

42,336. What did you get then?—Nothing at all.

42,337. Have you ever received anything before or after the election mysteriously, excepting that one 10*l.* ?—I had not.

42,338. That one 10*l.* is all you have had ?—That one 10*l.* is all I have had, and I did not know that I had that at the time.

GEORGE JARMAN sworn.

42,339. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A stonemason.

42,340. How did you vote at the last election ?—For Westropp and Gray.

42,341. What did you get ?—Nothing.

42,342. Any promise ?—No.

42,343. Did you vote the time before ?—No; I never had any vote before.

42,344. Did any of your family get anything before ?—No.

42,345. Did your wife get anything left with her ?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is there any other George Jarman ?

(A voice.) Yes.

Mr. GEORGE HENNING PAIN sworn.

42,346. (Mr. Price.) Were you a practising solicitor here ?—I was.

42,347. For how many years ?—I have not refreshed my memory—from 1822 up to five years since.

42,348. Were you connected with any of the elections here in former days ?—Yes.

42,349. When did you first begin electioneering ?—In the year 1823.

42,350. Were you an agent of either party at that time ?—I went to town upon a requisition from the voters to get a candidate. I was a very young man at the time, just turned 21, and I brought down Sir Colin Campbell, and there was a coalition formed between Tynte and Astell, who were returned; Sir Colin Campbell, finding them against him, resigned.

42,351. How many signed the requisition ?—About 110.

42,352. How many did he poll ?—He polled about 90.

42,353. Did he pay any money in bribery ?—Nothing whatever. I had 15*l.* for my expenses out of pocket, and that was all I had.

42,354. (Mr. Anstey.) Did any of those who signed the requisition to him vote against him ?—Yes.

42,355. How many ?—I cannot say. It is so many years ago; about eight or ten. A gentleman, who was one of the committee, was so annoyed that he took and published all their names in a handbill immediately afterwards.

42,356. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did the other side spend money in bribery in that election ?—No, I do not think they did. Both parties formed a coalition, so there was no occasion.

42,357. (Mr. Anstey.) At that time, do you recollect what the strength of the electoral constituency was ?—About 300 I think.

42,358. Therefore, nearly half of the constituency signed a requisition to Sir Colin Campbell ?—No.

42,359. (Mr. Price.) About how many voted for him; 100 ?—No, not so many.

42,360. About 90 ?—About 90 I think.

42,366. Tell us about the next election, if you please ?—I cannot recollect.

42,362. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will that help you at all (handing a list of candidates to the witness) ?—The next election was a Mr. Shirley's.

42,363. (Mr. Price.) The election of 1826; that is the one you are speaking of ?—No.

42,364. The one you are speaking of is Astell, Tynte, and Campbell ?—That is the first one I have just given the details of. The next one was Shirley's.

42,365. There was an intermediate election, Astell and Tynte; no contest ?—I do not think there was.

42,366. Yes, 1831.

42,367. (Mr. Anstey.) On George the Fourth's death ?—Well, I do not recollect anything about that.

42,368. (Mr. Price.) There seems to have been no contest ?—I had nothing to do with it.

42,369. 1831, Astell, Tynte, and Shirley; tell us about that ?—I acted for Mr. Shirley at that election. I had no retainer, and I never received anything for my services; but I was annoyed about the requisition, and I refused a retainer for Mr. Shirley, and took him up, and did what I could for his return. He was a poor man, and had nothing to pay his expenses with. For 500*l.* he might have won his election, but he had not got it, and I never received anything.

42,370. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did the other side spend any money at that time ?—Oh yes; that was when there was a two days' poll, and the people hung back. We were ahead the first day's poll, and we might have won the election; we gave him the preference, but he had no money.

42,371. (Mr. Price.) Then there seems to have been an election in 1832, when Tynte and Tayleur were returned without a contest ?—Yes.

42,372. Then in 1835 the candidates were Broadwood, Martyn, Tynte, and Leader ?—Yes.

42,373. Had you anything to do with that ?—Yes.

42,374. Tell us what you did ?—I was agent for Mr. Tayleur at that election.

42,375. (Mr. Anstey.) And Twiss and Chatteris were here ?—Twiss and Chatteris were here, and I entertained a very poor opinion of Mr. Twiss. We did not consider that he had any money, therefore the mode we adopted was to lend the poorer voters money upon notes of hand.

42,376. (Mr. Price.) Had Mr. Tayleur money ?—Yes.

42,377. Who was he ?—He was a friend of Mr. Kinglake's.

42,378. Was he a Liverpool merchant ?—I do not know.

42,379. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he a relation of the Marquis of Headford ?—I do not know.

42,380. But he was a Liberal ?—Yes.

42,381. How came you to be a Liberal, and act for him ?—Because I had gone over from annoyance at having been split upon by my party. When they set me the example, I followed it.

42,382. What did he give you in the way of agency fee on going over to him ?—I had nothing at Shirley's nor at Tayleur's election; no consideration whatever.

42,383. (Mr. Price.) Was Mr. Shirley a Tory ?—No, Shirley was a friend of the celebrated Joseph Hume. However, he had not got the money to pay the common expenses of the day.

42,384. He got them of you ?—Yes, he got them of me.

42,385. What money was spent Tayleur's time ?—I should say one way and the other, perhaps it might be 800*l.*

42,386. Not more ?—No. The money that was lent to the voters then on notes of hand was 20*l.* apiece, or something of that sort. Why I tell you that is to show you that in the ensuing election, in which Mr. Leader came down, there was never the money spent which you have been told of here, 12,000*l.*; it is absurd altogether.

42,387. We will come to that ?—These notes of hand were handed to the people, and so we were able, by giving them 25*l.* more, to get them up to the poll.

42,388. (Mr. Anstey.) That was bribing them with their own money ?—Yes.

42,389. Mr. Bussell, the old man, said that at Tayleur's election that he, Bussell, was the distributor of something like, I think he said, thousands of pounds ?—I went up with a professional man, Mr. Lovibond, to get a candidate, and we got Mr. Leader.

42,390. At Tayleur's election, I am talking of

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. G. H. Pain.

13 Oct. 1869.

Bussell's statement, that thousands were spent through him?—No, it was not so at all; it was through nobody. It was Twiss and Chatteris.

42,391. (Mr. Price.) Had they no money?—None whatever.

42,392. (Mr. Anstey.) At what election was Bussell employed to spend thousands of pounds?—That next election you are coming to.

42,393. (Mr. Price.) We will come to that election, Broadwood, Martyn, Tynte, and Leader?—Yes.

42,394. Just tell us about your bringing Leader down?—We wanted a candidate, and we wanted 3,000*l.* brought down; and Mr. Leader, being disappointed down in Scotland, came up just in the nick of time, and was quite agreeable, and brought down 3,000*l.*

42,395. (Mr. Coleridge.) He is connected with the neighbourhood, is not he?—Yes.

42,396. And with the Luttrells?—Yes.

42,397. (Mr. Price.) How far did that 3,000*l.* go?—There was a good deal spent in this way: Colonel Tynte said he would not stand unless he had a requisition signed by a majority of the electors. We were able to get that requisition signed by a majority of the electors, after spending money; and we therefore laid out a good deal of the 3,000*l.* in getting that requisition signed.

42,398. How much?—I cannot tell you.

42,399. Did you give 5*l.* for each signature?—No; we returned them their notes of hand.

42,400. But besides that?—The 3,000*l.* was spent, and Mr. Leader sent up his servant to London for 1,000*l.*, which was all the money I know was spent at that election. Colonel Tynte came forward very generously and paid what he considered were legitimate expenses.

42,401. But nothing for bribery?—But nothing for bribery.

42,402. Were you sufficiently acquainted with the proceedings of that election to say that 4,000*l.* was all that was spent in bribery?—No, I am not. I cannot say that, as I do not know what the other side spent.

42,403. No, but on Mr. Leader's side?—That is all I know of.

42,404. That would be the election when old Mr. Bussell would be entrusted with the large sums of money that have been spoken of?—I do not know. I do not agree at all with what has been said by the different persons that Mr. Leader would spend 8,000*l.* or 12,000*l.*, and Mr. Broadwood would spend nothing.

42,405. No, it has never been said that Mr. Broadwood spent nothing, but it has been said that Mr. Leader spent 8,000*l.*, or 10,000*l.*, or 12,000*l.*, and that the money was given away openly in the street without any disguise?—No such thing. There was never an election managed better in the world; everything was done before the day of the poll.

42,406. Then old Mr. Bussell has boasted of more than he ever did?—I never remember Bussell being entrusted with even a shilling.

42,407. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would you trust him?—I would not trust him.

42,408. (Mr. Price.) How did he get made gaoler?—I do not know; I dropped politics afterwards.

42,409. (Mr. Anstey.) Surely you have taken part in subsequent elections?—No, I never did.

42,410. Did you not go about with Mr. Westropp canvassing?—No. I never went about canvassing for him or any other person.

(Mr. Anstey.) It was your son.

42,411. (Mr. Price.) How much do you think Broadwood spent, or Martyn, or both of them?—I cannot tell; I think he spent quite as much as Mr. Leader.

42,412. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you anything more to tell us?—No, not that I know of; not that I can recollect. I would tell you with pleasure if I recollected anything further. I have only just heard I was wanted. I was going up to town to-morrow morning.

C. Thomas.

CHARLES THOMAS sworn.

42,413. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A fitter.

42,414. Where do you work?—At the foundry.

42,415. Hennett and Spink's foundry?—Yes.

42,416. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,417. How?—For Westropp and Gray.

42,418. Did you get anything for it?—No.

42,419. Were you influenced in any way by your employers to vote in any way?—No, sir, not in the least.

42,420. Did you vote at either of the elections of 1866?—No.

42,421. Had you any vote before the last election?—Yes.

42,422. When did you vote before?—In 1859.

42,423. Then you did not vote in 1865?—No.

42,424. In 1859 how did you vote?—For Padwick and Westropp.

42,425. Did you get anything?—Yes.

42,426. How much?—10*l.*

42,427. From whom?—Murlis sent for me to give me a present, to his house.

42,428. Did you vote in 1857?—No.

42,429. Did you vote at the election before, in 1859?—That was the only vote I had, 1859, and last time.

42,430. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get any money from Mr. Westropp at any time between 1859 and the last election?—No.

42,431. That is during nine years?—No.

42,432. Nor your family?—No.

42,433. No charities?—No.

42,434. No money lent you?—No.

W. Bell.

WILLIAM BELL sworn.

42,435. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A turner.

42,436. Do you work for anybody?—I work for anyone.

42,437. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

42,438. How?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,439. Did you get any money for it?—No.

42,440. Any promise of any kind?—No.

42,441. Did you vote at either of the elections of 1866?—No.

42,442. At neither?—No.

42,443. Had you a vote then?—No.

42,444. Did you vote at any election before that?—In 1859.

42,445. You did not vote in 1865, then?—No.

42,446. In 1859 how did you vote?—For Padwick and Westropp.

42,447. What did you get?—10*l.*

42,448. From whom?—From Murlis; it was sent me by Murlis.

42,449. How was it you voted last time just the opposite way?—Because in 1859 I voted for the money and not for the men.

42,450. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get any money at any time after 1859 from Mr. Westropp?—No.

42,451. Did you ask for anything?—No.

42,452. I do not mean at the time of the election?—No, not at any time.

42,453. (Mr. Price.) Did you at any election before 1859?—Yes.

42,454. Did you vote in 1857, when Tynte and Kinglake and Follett were here?—I voted when Lord Henley was here.

42,455. That is earlier, in 1852?—That is earlier; yes, I voted for Mr. Gaselee.

42,456. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is earlier?—Yes; I voted for Tynte and Follett.

42,457. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything then?—No.

42,458. You split your vote?—Yes.

42,459. (Mr. Anstey.) Why?—Because Mr. Follett was an acquaintance of mine at Exeter; I did claim a distant relationship with him.

42,460. With Mr. Follett?—Yes.

42,461. Did he accompany his recognition of your relationship with him by some act of kindness towards his relative?—It was merely mentioned, that was all.

42,462. Did he say that he would provide for his relation in any way?—Oh no, not at all.

42,463. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1852 did you vote, Lord Henley's election?—Yes.

42,464. For whom?—For Lord Henley I voted.

42,465. Did you get anything?—No, nothing.

42,466. In 1847 did you vote?—Yes; I voted for Gaselee.

42,467. Did you get anything then?—No.

42,468. How much have you got altogether in your life?—Only that 10*l.* I voted for Drewe and Robinson.

42,469. (Mr. Price.) What did you get then?—Nothing at all; that was my first vote.

(Mr. Price.) That was in 1841.

42,470. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not seem to have done as much with your vote as most of them have?—No.

WILLIAM HELLARD sworn.

W. Hellard.

42,471. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you the grave digger?—Yes.

42,472. (Mr. Price.) You are a gardener at the cemetery?—Yes.

42,473. And the sexton there?—Yes.

42,474. Did you vote at the last election?—No.

42,475. Had you a vote?—No, no vote at all.

42,476. Do you live on the premises at the cemetery?—No, I have shifted out of them.

42,477. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes, at all three of them.

42,478. There were only two of them, and there was one in 1865. Did you vote at the two elections in 1866, when Mr. Patton was here?—Yes.

42,479. How did you vote when Mr. Patton was here?—For Mr. Patton.

42,480. How much did you get?—10*l.* each time.

42,481. From whom?—Temblett.

42,482. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

42,483. For Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

42,484. How much did you get?—10*l.*

42,485. From whom?—Thomas Boys.

42,486. Did you vote in 1859, when Padwick and Westropp were here?—Yes.

42,487. Did you before 1859 at any election?—No.

42,488. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get in Padwick and Westropp's time?—10*l.*

42,489. (Mr. Price.) From whom?—Murlis.

42,490. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you got 40*l.* in all for your vote?—Yes.

42,491. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the cemetery you speak of? Does it belong to a joint stock company or to the church?—To the churchwardens.

42,492. Do they know that you have received money in bribes?—No, I do not think that they do.

EDWARD WALFORD sworn.

E. Walford

42,493. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A saddle and harness maker.

42,494. Are you a master?—No; a journeyman.

42,495. How did you vote at the last election?—For Westropp and Gray.

42,497. Any promise?—Not the least.

42,498. Were you at any of these meetings where anything was said to you to induce you to vote?—Yes, at some of them. I belong to the Conservative Working Men's Association.

42,499. Was Mr. Joseph Smith there?—Yes.

42,500. Did you hear him speak?—Yes.

42,501. Tell us what you heard him say about "M. D."?—I heard him say if any of them deserted their colours he should advise them to have M. D., the American adage, as he said; he did not know whether they knew anything about the meaning of that; he would tell them it meant "money down."

42,502. Did you hear anything about sugaring your plums?—No.

42,503. Were you at the "Clarence" at any meeting there?—Yes. Hodges and Westropp and Gray were there.

42,504. What did Hodges say?—He advised them to go to the poll; there would be no money spent.

42,505. Did he, when Westropp and Gray were not there, promise them 15*l.* apiece if they would go and vote?—No; he never said a word of that sort.

42,506. Must you have heard it if he had said so?—Yes, I was as close to him as I am to you.

42,507. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he say anything about waiting till after the election, and then they would see?—No, not a word.

42,508. Or about Mr. Westropp not wishing to go to prison?—Well, he said he did not suppose they wished Mr. Westropp to go to prison for a couple of years; he advised them to go to poll like men; there would be no money spent.

42,509. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, or either of them, speak?—Yes.

42,510. Did they say anything?—Mr. Westropp said they had determined to come down to fight the election purely, and they had determined not to spend any money; they had come to that determination.

42,511. Did Mr. Gray say anything about doing good to the town, or about ships coming up the river?—No, I do not remember his saying anything about ships coming up the river.

42,512. Did he say he would do the best he could for the trade of the town?—No, I did not hear him say so.

42,513. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you not hear him say, if Mr. Westropp and he were returned, there would be a large employment of labour?—I never heard anything of the kind while I was there.

42,514. Did you vote in 1866?—I have not lived here, till the extension of the borough, for the last 20 years.

42,515. Have you ever voted at any election before the last here?—Yes.

42,516. Twenty years ago?—I was not on the register seven years before that.

42,517. Tell us the first election you voted at?—I cannot tell you the date.

42,518. Did you vote in 1847?—I cannot tell who the candidates were then.

42,519. Can you remember whether you voted when Mr. Serjeant Gaselee was here?—I cannot tell you.

42,520. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you always vote Liberal, or Conservative?—Conservative.

42,521. Did you ever get anything?—I never got anything.

42,522. Did you poll early in the morning of the last election?—Early in the morning. I have been returned by Mr. Murlis as one Edward Walford who has received 10*l.*

42,523. (Mr. Price.) You are quite sure you were at the meeting when Mr. Hodges spoke?—Yes, I was there at that time, and when the meeting broke up, I was recommended to go to the poll, and the other men too.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

13 Oct. 1869.

Edwin Bryant sworn.

E. Bryant.

42,524. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A baker and corn factor.

42,525. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.

42,526. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

42,527. Did you get anything for it ?—No.

42,528. Any promise of any kind ?—No.

42,529. Were you present at either of the meetings which have been spoken of?—I have been at the Gloucester Place meetings on one or two occasions.

42,530. But were you at the "Clarence" ?—Oh no, I was not.

42,531. Did you vote at either of the elections of 1866, when Mr. Patton was here ? —Patton and Vanderbyl's election.

42,532. How did you vote?—I voted for Mr. Patton.

42,533. How much did you get ?—I had 50*l.* from John Waddon; not for my vote.

42,534. What did you do with it ?—I returned 5*l.*, and 10*l.* I paid William Jones at the "New Inn." I paid it to Mrs. Jones ; William Jones was dead, Mrs. Jones was living ; 10*l.* to John Lee at the "Star;" 10*l.* to John Lee, the gardener. Then about half-past 10 I met Luckes and a man of the name of Parsons, of Cornhill. Luckes came to me and said he had had 10*l.* in the morning, and I think he said he had it at Pimms'; somewhere down that way. He went "through the mill," as they term it, and that he had been offered 25*l.* or 20*l.*, I am not certain which, by George Harwood, to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl, but he said, "I have had 10*l.* to vote your side and if they will "give me 100*l.* the other side I will not vote for "them; but I will not go to poll for you unless I get "20*l.*" I said, "Well, I am not authorized to do it." I then saw John Waddon, I think it was John Waddon, and he said, "Well, you have the money and you had better get the man to poll;" and I gave him the 10*l.* more to poll. When I found he would not go under 10*l.* I gave him 10*l.* I gave Parsons 5*l.*, and I gave him 10*l.*

42,535. Did you get nothing yourself ?—No.

42,536. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing afterwards, for your trouble ?—No.

42,537. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the first of Patton's ?—I did.

42,538. For whom ?—Mr. Patton.

42,539. Did you get anything then ?—Yes, about a fortnight afterwards I got 5*l.*, through a suggestion of Mr. Bealy Smith's. I sent in a bill for expenses.

42,540. What expenses ?—I had been travelling about, and so on, and he said, "Have you incurred any expenses ?" "I said, I have been travelling about for one and the other, and treating one and the other."

42,541. And you had it paid ?—Yes. That is how I came to have it, through the suggestion of Mr. Bealy Smith. At Mr. Westropp's election, when he was returned, there was a deficiency of about 20 at half-past 10 ; there were 20 men who had had no money, and Sellar and Luckes were together, and they asked me if I could get them money ; I said, "No." I happened to see Henry Batten about it, and he said, "Will they take your word ?" I said, "I think they will." I said, "Who shall I get this money from if they are reasonable ?" He said, "I will see you are all right." I found Sellar would take my word, but Luckess would not ; and Sellar went to the poll. I paid him some money on that day, and the remainder about a fortnight afterwards. I paid him 10*l.* altogether. That was William Sellar, and I was not paid that until Mr. Patton's second election; and I met Mr. Bealy Smith, and I said I thought I ought to have the money. He said, "My dear fellow, you have had the money." I said, "It has never been paid to me." He said, "I am sorry for that ; are there any expenses you have incurred ?" I said, "Never trouble about that." He said, "You have "had nothing ; send in a bill for the expenses you "incurred, and the 10*l.* you paid at Mr. Westropp's "election ;" and I did.

42,542. How did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. Westropp.

42,543. Did you vote in 1859 ?—No. I never had a vote before.

42,544. (Mr. Anstey.) You were at the meeting at Gloucester Place ?—I was not at Gloucester Place for about a fortnight before the election. I never attended those meetings, although my name was down on the committee.

John Thomas sworn.

J. Thomas.

42,545. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A mariner.

42,546. Are you a voter ?—Yes.

42,547. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

42,548. How did you vote ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,549. Did you get anything ?—No.

42,550. Any promise ?—No.

42,551. Whom do you work for generally; whose ships do you work ?—I have not a ship at the present time. The last time I was in a ship was one that belonged to Gloucester.

42,552. Were you brought here to vote at the last election ?—No, I happened to be at home.

42,553. Did you vote at either of the elctions in 1866 ?—Yes, in 1866.

42,554. How did you vote at Patton and Vanderbyl's election ?—Vanderbyl.

42,555. What did you get ?—Nothing at all, not one time. I voted for him twice.

42,556. Which time did you get anything then ? (No answer.) You said just now that you got nothing at the last election. Mr. Vanderbyl was returned then. Mr. Vanderbyl stood in 1866 ?—Yes.

42,557. Did you get anything then ?—Yes.

42,558. How much ?—10*l.*

42,559. From whom ?—From Henry Chapman Bussell.

42,560. Did you vote at the first election in 1866, when Mr. Bagehot was here ?—Yes.

42,561. How did you vote ?—For Mr. Bagehot.

42,562. How much did you get ?—Nothing.

42,563. Did you get anything between the two elections ?—No, nothing.

42,564. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.

42,565. How did you vote then ?—For Westropp.

42,566. How much did you get ?—10*l.*

42,567. From whom ?—I cannot tell the parties who gave it to me. I had it at the "Bull and Butcher."

42,568. Did you vote in 1859 ?—No.

42,569. Did you vote at any election before 1859 ?—No.

Moses Squibbs sworn.

M. Squibbs.

42,570. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A tailor.

42,571. A master tailor ?—Yes.

42,572. How did you vote at the last election ?—For Westropp and Gray.

42,573. Did you get anything ?—No.

42,574. No promise ?—No.

42,575. Did you attend the meetings at the "Clarence" ?—No.

42,576. Or at the other place, where Mr. Smith spoke ?—No.

42,577. Did you vote at the elections in 1866 ; the two elections ?—Padwick's, sir ?

42,578. No. Mr. Patton stood here twice in 1866; Mr. Vanderbyl opposed him one time, and Mr. Bagehot another ?—No. I had no vote then.

42,579. Did you vote in 1865, when Mr. Westropp came in?—What, Padwick and Westropp?

42,580. No, Westropp alone?—No.

42,581. Did you vote in 1859, when Padwick and Westropp were here?—Yes.

42,582. How did you vote then?—For Padwick and Westropp.

42,583. Did you get anything?—Yes.

42,584. How much?—10*l.*

42,585. From whom?—Mr. Murlis.

42,586. Did you vote in 1857?—No.

42,587. Or the election before 1857?—Not that I can recollect.

42,588. 1852, Tynte, Kinglake, and Lord Henley?—Somewhere about 28 years ago.

42,589. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—Nothing.

42,590. (Mr. Price.) For whom did you vote then?—I forget the candidates then.

42,591. What year was it in? 1841, was it not; Broadwood, Forman, Drewe, and Robinson?—I cannot recollect the candidates.

(Mr. Anstey.) Why did you not vote at any election between 1859 and 1868?

42,592. (Mr. Price.) You voted at one election of Mr. Patton's?—Yes.

42,593. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you not vote in 1865?—My vote was not good.

42,594. Why did you not vote at the other election, in 1866?

42,595. (Mr. Price.) The first one, when Mr. Bagehot was here?—My vote was not good. I was not on the book.

42,596. I do not know how that was, because you voted at the second election for Mr. Patton, you say?—I voted for Padwick and Westropp.

42,597. Then you never voted for Mr. Patton?—No.

42,598. (Mr. Anstey.) That is just what I thought; that you had not voted between 1859 and 1868. You had not a vote all that time?—(No answer.)

EDWARD CHARLES JONES sworn. E. C. Jones.

42,599. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tilt maker at the railway carriage works.

42,600. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,601. For whom?—Westropp and Gray.

42,602. Did you get anything for it?—No.

42,603. Any promise?—No.

42,604. Were you influenced by anybody at the railway to go and vote that way?—No.

42,605. Had you a vote the election before that?—No.

42,606. Did you get any promise?—No.

42,606*a.* Is your name Edward C. Jones?—Yes.

42,607. Of the Bath Road?—Yes.

42,608. You never got anything?—No.

42,609. Nor any promise of any kind?—No.

42,610. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever get any money from anybody else?—No.

42,611. (Mr. Price.) Have you a father who is a voter?—He is dead.

42,612. Do you remember whether your father had a vote when alive?—Well, I do not know whether he had or not. If he did he never voted.

42,613. Did he live in the Bath Road?—No, Dampiett Street.

HENRY GUY sworn. H. Guy.

42,614. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A master mariner.

42,615. For whom do you generally work?—For my father.

42,616. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,617. How did you vote?—For Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

42,618. Did you get anything?—Yes.

42,619. How much did you get?—10*l.*

42,620. From whom?—Henry Chapman Bussell.

42,621. Did you vote at the elections in 1866?—I had no vote before the last election.

42,622. Never?—No.

WILLIAM ADDICOTT was then called, and went into the box.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled. H. C. Bussell.

42,623. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say?—There is a mistake here. I returned the name of this man as being bribed at the last election. Instead of that, it should be James Cording. He has been subpœnaed. There were two men.

42,624. A mistake about this man in the witness-box, William Addicott?—Yes.

WILLIAM ADDICOTT sworn. W. Addicott.

42,625. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A mariner.

42,626. Whom do you work for generally?—Wherever I can get it.

42,627. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,628. How?—For Vanderbyl.

42,629. And Kinglake?—No.

42,630. Only Vanderbyl?—Yes.

42,631. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get?—Nothing.

42,632. Any expenses?—No.

42,633. Nothing for expenses coming home?—No, I was home.

42,634. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you not vote for Mr. Kinglake?—I do not know.

42,635. Had you any reason for it?—I had no reason for it.

42,636. Was it not because you had been promised or expected to get more from Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

42,637. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at any election before that?—No.

42,638. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you in Mr. Vanderbyl's employment?—No.

42,639. Or Mr. Brogden's employment?—No.

42,640. (Mr. Price.) Had you ever voted before?—No.

(Mr. Price, addressing H. C. Bussell.) You made a mistake about this man?

(H. C. Bussell.) Yes. It was James Cording, instead of this man.

JOHN HEAL sworn. J. Heal.

42,641. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A potter.

42,642. For whom do you work?—For Mr. Symmons.

42,643. How did you vote at the last election?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,644. Did you get anything for it?—Yes, 10*l.*

42,645. From whom?—Mr. Allan.

42,646. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—No. I never had any vote before that.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

J. Heal.

13 Oct. 1869.

42,647. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you a householder who pays his rates; is that your qualification?—A potter I am.

42,648. Is your qualification a qualification under the new Reform Act?—(The witness hesitated.)

42,649. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you a voter under the new Reform Act?—Yes.

42,650. You pay your own rates, but do not occupy a house of 10*l.* value?—Yes, I do.

42,651. Do you occupy a house of 10*l.* and upwards?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then you would be a voter under the old Act.

Mr. W. Herbert.

Mr. William Herbert recalled.

42,652. (Mr. Anstey.) I want you just to tell me this. Did you take care of the polling of certain streets on the polling morning?—No. I was not out of my bed before half-past 7, and I never left my door until I went to the poll.

42,653. And you never had anything to do with the taking care of the voters in certain streets before daylight that morning?—I was not out of my bed before half-past 7.

42,654. Will you answer my question. Had you anything to do with taking care of the voters in certain streets in the town on the polling morning?—No.

42,655. Had James Phelps anything to do with it?—Not that I am aware of on the polling morning.

42,656. Was he employed during the day?—No, not as I am aware of.

52,657. Do you know anything of John Atwood and James Creedy?—I know them very well.

42,658. Did they get money from anybody on that day, or after that day?—Not as I am aware of.

42,659. You have not heard of it?—I have not heard of it.

B. B. Burton.

Benjamin Brewster Burton sworn.

42,660. (Mr. Price.) You seem to be a railway porter?—A railway porter.

42,661. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,662. How?—I voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,663. Did you get anything?—10*l.*

42,664. From whom?—I do not know.

42,655. Where did you get it at?—At the "New Inn."

42,666. Did you vote at either of the elections of 1866?—No.

42,667. Had you no vote before the last election?—No.

42,668. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your qualification; a householder paying rates?—I come in under the new Act.

42,669. (Mr. Coleridge.) You occupy a house under 10*l.*?—Under 10*l.*

J. Fryer.

James Fryer sworn.

42,670. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An innkeeper.

42,671. What inn do you keep?—The "King's Arms."

42,672. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,673. How?—For Westropp and Gray.

42,674. Did you get anything?—Nothing.

42,675. Had you a bill for treating at your house?—No.

42,676. Was there any treating going on there, at the expense of the candidates?—No.

42, 677. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

42,678. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—Mr. Patton's?

42,679. Yes.—At both of them.

42,680. Both elections?—Yes.

42,681. For Mr. Patton?—At both for Mr. Patton.

42,682. Did you get anything?—10*l.* each time.

42,683. From whom?—Mr. Harden and Mr. Temblett.

42,684. Did you have any treating bills at either of those elections?—No.

42,685. No bills of any kind?—No bills of any kind.

42,686. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

42,687. For whom?—Mr. Westropp.

42,688. How much did you get?—10*l.*

42,689. From whom?—Mr. Boys.

42,690. Had you any treating bill then?—No, not at all.

42,691. Did you vote in 1859, when Padwick and Westropp were here?—I did.

42,692. How did you vote?—Padwick and Westropp.

42,693. Did you get anything?—10*l.*

42,694. From whom?—Murlis.

42,695. Did you vote in 1857?—I never voted before then at all.

42,696. You have had money every time but the last time?—Yes.

W. Dyke.

William Dyke sworn.

42,697. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

42,698. Where do you work; for any particular master?—Browne and Company.

42,699. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,700. How did you vote?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,701. How much did you get?—10*l.*

42,702. From whom?—Allan.

42,703. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—No. I had no vote before the last election. I wish to state concerning Ford's evidence. He stated when I and John Richards were with him when he went into the "Clarence," I and Richards were with him and waited for him till he came out. That is all.

42,704. You do not know what passed inside?—No.

(Mr. Price.) You do quite right to tell us.

J. Matthews.

John Matthews sworn.

42,705. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A herbalist.

42,706. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,707. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

42,708. What did you get?—Nothing.

42,709. Any promise?—No.

42,710. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—Yes.

42,711. How did you vote then?—I voted for Mr. Patton.

42,712. Both times?—Yes.

42,713. How much did you get?—10*l.* each time.

42,714. From whom?—From John Waddon and Temblett.

42,715. Did you vote in 1865 for Westropp?—Yes.

42,716. How much did you get?—10*l.* I got.

42,717. From whom?—I do not know who the person was. It was down at the "Three Crowns;" down at Mr. Newton's.

FORTY-FIRST DAY

J. Matthews.

13 Oct. 1869.

42,718. Did you vote in 1859, Padwick and Westropp's election?—Yes.

42,719. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Padwick.

42,720. How much did you get?—10*l.*

42,721. From whom?—Murlis.

42,722. In 1857 did you vote?—Yes.

42,723. For Mr. Follett?—For Mr. Follett.

42,724. How much did you get?—Nothing.

42,725. In 1852, did you vote?—No. I was not here.

42,726. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are you?—A medical herbalist.

42,727. You keep a shop of your own?—Yes, I keep a chemist's shop in Castle Street. I am a registered chemist.

42,728. (Mr. Coleridge.) You must have paid for all your stock-in-trade by bribery?—No; I work for my livelihood.

JOHN BAKER sworn. J. Baker.

42,729. What are you?—A cheese dealer.

42,730. Do you keep a shop?—No, I do not.

42,731. Where are you; in whose shop are you?—My own.

42,732. Well, you do keep a shop?—No, I do not keep a shop at all.

42,733. Where do you sell your cheeses?—Well, I keep the market.

42,734. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

42,735. How did you vote?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,736. How much did you get?—Nothing at all.

42,737. Any promise?—No.

42,738. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—I voted three times. That is what I voted.

42,739. Did you vote for Mr. Vanderbyl the first time he was here?—Not the first time; Mr. Westropp.

42,740. No, no. Did you ever vote for Mr. Patton?—No, sir. I believe I did not vote for him at all.

42,741. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote for Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

42,742. In 1865?—Yes.

42,743. Did you get anything?—Nothing at all.

42,744. (Mr. Price.) Why did you not vote in 1866, when two elections were going?—Because I changed my mind.

42,745. Why did you not vote either side?—Well, I did vote one side.

42,746. Which side did you vote, for Mr. Bagehot?—I believe it was for Mr. Bagehot.

42,747. Did you get anything then?—Mr. Lott, he is dead now, gave me 15*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) And that changed your mind, I suppose?

42,748. (Mr. Price.) When Mr. Vanderbyl came the same year, did you not vote then?—The same year?

42,749. Yes; the end of 1866.

42,750. (Mr. Coleridge.) About six weeks after Mr. Bagehot's election, when you changed your mind for 15*l.*, you changed it back again for more money I suppose?—No, I had 5*l.* and 15*l.* That is all the money I had.

42,751. You had 5*l.* at the election of Mr. Vanderbyl's. It was about six weeks after you had had the 15*l.*?—Well, that must be so.

42,752. Whom did you have the 15*l.* from?—Mr Lott, down to the shop.

42,753. Whom did you have the 5*l.* from?—The baker, Mr. Jarman.

42,754. (Mr. Price.) Did you not vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

42,755. When he stood alone against Mr. Patton?—Yes. I believe that was the time I got 15*l.*

42,756. You said it was at Mr. Bagehot's election just now?—I cannot recollect.

42,757. Did you get more than 15*l.*?—No, I did not.

42,758. In the year 1866?—No.

42,759. Did you vote at more than one election in that year?—Well, now, that I cannot say, sir. I have not lived in the town for about five or six years.

42,760. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much money have you had for your vote since you have lived here?—20*l.*

42,761. (Mr. Price.) When did you get the other money?—The other 15*l.*?

42,762. The 5*l.*?—A long time after Mr. Westropp's election.

42,763. Did you vote for Mr. Westropp in 1865?—I voted, the first time I had a vote at all, for Mr. Westropp.

42,764. And then you got 5*l.* some time afterwards?—Well, it was a long time afterwards; I did not expect it.

42,765. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did you get it from?—Jarman.

42,766. You did not refuse it when you got it?—No. It was brought to my house.

42,767. You did not send it away?—No.

42,768. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at any election before 1865?—No, I did not.

RICHARD BURRIDGE sworn. R. Burridge.

42,769. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A carpenter.

42,770. Where do you work?—At the Bristol and Exeter carriage works.

42,771. How did you vote at the last election?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,772. Did you get anything?—10*l.*

42,773. From whom?—Well, I believe from Allan's.

42,774. Did you vote at either of the elections of 1866?—Never.

42,775. You had no vote before the last time?—Never.

An adjournment of half anhour here took place, to take the evidence of Mrs. Dare, at her house.

The Commissioners adjourned to the witness Charles Dare's house.

MRS. EMMA DARE sworn. Mrs. E. Dare.

42,776. (Mr. Price.) What we want to ask you about is, do you remember anybody coming to you and asking you about your husband's vote at the last election?—A man of the name of Betty came about four o'clock.

42,777. Peregrine Betty?—Yes.

42,778. Did you know him well?—No—by sight. He has come here for baskets of my husband.

42,779. You know him, then?—Yes.

42,780. And his name?—I knew his name as Betty, but nothing more.

42,781. But you knew him by sight?—Yes, I knew him by sight.

42,782. (Mr. Anstey.) What is he?—An ostler.

42,783. (Mr. Price.) Did he come with any conveyance?—No.

42,784. What passed when he came?—He came here in the afternoon, and asked, "Where is your husband?" I said, "I do not know, I am sure." He was out. Did I know where to send and look for him? I said, "No, I cannot." I heard my little boy say he saw him at the "White Horse" when he came to his dinner, and I said, "I daresay he is at Jonas's; you had better go and look for him." I felt unwilling to leave the place. "It will take only a few minutes," he said. "I can do a damned good day's work for him"—just those words.

42,785. Was anybody with him?—No. Then I came afterwards to this room to change my dress, and he said, "Never mind changing, we have only a few "minutes; we only want eight more before we shall "win the election." I came to change my dress, and whilst changing I heard a conveyance stop at the door, and I went and looked out of the front window, and my impression is it was Hodges on the fly.

42,786. Which Hodges do you mean?—The woollen-draper.

42,787. Describe him?—A tall man.

42,788. His hair?—I could not see that. I could not swear it was Hodges; he had a blue fall round his hat.

42,789. Can you tell us anything about his face?—No, his back was towards me.

42,790. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has the Hodges you speak of hair on his face?—Yes.

42,791. The one you speak of?—The one I speak of is the one who has the moustache; I do not think any whiskers.

42,792. (Mr. Price.) You think no beard?—I do not know.

42,793. A black moustache?—I could not see that.

42,794. (Mr. Anstey.) But the woollendraper?—Yes. I could not swear to the man, but I had seen him with a blue fall round his hat at the hustings; that is why.

42,795. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know the man who had been speaking at the "Clarence" that morning?—No.

42,796. (Mr. Anstey.) The man who was active for the blue party, I mean?—Yes.

42,797. (Mr. Price.) Your impression is that it was Hodges?—Yes.

42,798. But you will not undertake to swear positively?—Yes. Whilst I looked out I saw Betty go out and speak to him, and he drove back round the square, and Betty came and said, "For God's sake, missus, make haste." I put my shawl on downstairs, and he said, "For God's sake, what have you been so long about?" and he said, "Come on, come on!" And I saw it was 20 minutes to 4, and I said it was not worth while to go. He said, "Come on, it is but eight more we have to get to win the election."

42,799. Did he say anything about money?—He said, "I can do a damned good day's work for your husband."

42,800. Did he say anything about money?—No.

42,801. Nothing more than "a damned good day's work"?—No.

42,802. (Mr. Anstey.) Anything about the "Clarence"?—Yes; he said, "If you can find him, send him to the 'Clarence;' I shall be there."

42,803. Did he get into his fly?—No, the fly drove to the back of the square.

42,804. (Mr. Price.) Then what did you do?—We went out, and he wanted me to come the front way, and I said, "No." There was such a mob of people, and I went round the back way, by Pig Cross and the bullock market; and he said, "You go into Jonas'" (that is the "Mason's Arms"), "and I will go into the 'White Horse.'" I went into the "Mason's Arms," and found him there, and by the time I came out and called him out into the street, Betty came out from the "White Horse.'

42,805. Did you ever see that man you thought was Hodges again at all?—No.

42,806. Except when he was driving off with the fly?—No.

42,807. (Mr. Anstey.) Betty was coming towards you?—Betty was coming towards me, and my husband was coming straight towards him, and I said, "That is who it is wants you." I went on towards the Pig Cross. I did not hear their conversation.

42,808. (Mr. Price.) You are quite sure it was Betty?—Yes.

42,809. You say he is an ostler?—Yes.

42,810. Do you know his employer?—Mr. Ricks.

42,811. A fly driver and ostler?—Yes.

42,812. Was he a fresh-coloured man?—I do not know that.

42,813. Young, and with a fresh colour?—A light complexion.

42,814. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have no doubt it was Betty?—No.

42,815. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you call him when you spoke to him—"Betty"?—I do not know that I did then.

42,816. (Mr. Price.) You have no doubt about him?—No.

42,817. The other your impression is was Hodges?—Yes, I should think it was Hodges. I had seen him before with this fall round his hat, and that is why I considered who it was.

42,818. You cannot tell whether the man had dark hair or light?—No.

42,819. Did he speak to you at all?—No.

(The Commissioners then adjourned to the Town Hall.)

Mr. J. Phelps.

Mr. James Phelps sworn.

42,820. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A corn merchant.

42,821. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

42,822. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

42,823. How much did you get?—Nothing.

42,824. No promise of any kind?—No promise of any kind.

42,825. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—I did.

42,826. How did you vote then, when Mr. Patton stood twice?—For Mr. Patton.

42,827. Both times?—Both times.

42,828. What did you get?—Nothing.

42,829. Neither time?—Neither time.

42,830. Did you vote in 1865 for Mr. Westropp?—I did.

42,831. Did you get anything then?—Certainly not.

42,832. Did you vote in 1859?—No.

42,833. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever got anything for your vote?—Never in my life.

42,834. Have you ever had the distribution of money to others?—No.

42,835. (Mr. Price.) Has your name been mentioned in connexion with any of those meetings?—No.

42,836. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you anything to do with getting up and looking after voters in some of the streets of the borough about daylight on the polling morning?—No.

42,837. Is there a man of your name who has?—No, mine is the only name in the town James Phelps.

42,838. And if it is said you had, that is not true?—Not true.

42,839. Were you looking after men before daylight on the polling morning?—No, certainly not.

42,840. Do you know a man named Attwell?—I do.

42,841. Is he in court now?—I do not know.

42,842. Do you know Creedy?—No.

42,843. Do you know whether either of those men got any money on or after the election?—I do not know whether they did or not.

42,844. You have not heard of it?—I have not heard of it.

WILLIAM STUCKEY sworn. W. Stuckey.

42,845. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

42,846. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

42,847. How did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,848. What did you get?—Nothing.

42,849. No promise?—No promise.

42,850. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind. I voted at about 10 minutes past eight in the morning.

42,851. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—No.

42,852. Neither of them?—No; this is my first vote.

42,853. When were you summoned?—15th September.

42,854. Have you been returned that you know of as a person that had been bribed?—I do not know; there is another of the name of me in the town.

42,855. William Stuckey?—Yes.

42,856. Where does the other man of your name live?—I believe it is St. John Street. I do not know the person.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled. F. C. Temblett.

42,857. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of these men who have been called this morning; were they returned by you?—They have not been returned by me.

42,858. None of those called this morning?—No.

42,859. Do you know anything of William Stuckey?—I never heard of the name as a voter.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

42,860. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know anything about Hooper?—He was paid by me last time; he is a tailor.

42,861. Then it is just as well for him to know that if an attachment is moved against him he may go to prison for an indefinite time. Where does he live?—In Eastover. I have seen him in this court.

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not think they are entitled to any grace after disregarding notice. If they do not choose to come when they have received the notice they must simply go to gaol.

42,862. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything about any of the men that have been called this morning?—I was not in court this morning. I have given the Secretary a list of every name I paid during the last election.

GEORGE LOCKYER sworn. G. Lockyer.

42,863. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A postman and carpenter.

42,864. Where do you work?—I work for myself. I am a postman.

42,865. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

42,866. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

42,867. Did you get anything for it?—I did not.

42,868. Any promise of any kind?—No promise of any kind.

42,869. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866?—No. I could not vote until the law was altered. I have been a ratepayer.

42,870. When were you summoned?—I was summoned on the 23rd August.

42,871. Is there any other man of your name?—No, none whatever. I have a brother, Edwin.

42,872. Have you been returned, do you know, as a person bribed?—I have not seen my name mentioned.

42,873. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present at either of the meetings?—I was present at one meeting, that is at Gloucester Place.

42,874. (Mr. Price.) That was before the election?—That was before the election.

42,875. Is that the place where Mr. Joseph Richard Smith spoke?—He spoke after he declined the mayorship.

42,876. Did he say anything about the election?—No, I believe not. I do not believe he said anything about the election.

42,877. (Mr. Anstey.) I think I know why you are summoned. The first intimation we had about "M. D." and "sugaring plums" fixed Gloucester Place as the scene of the meeting, and then we were told that one or two persons were present at that meeting, and then I think you were summoned, and then afterwards it was found that it was not Gloucester Place, but the "Lamb" inn?—I believe there were words to that effect mentioned at the Gloucester Place room.

42,878. (Mr. Price.) Who by?—By Mr. Smith.

42,879. Tell us exactly what you heard?—It was about the bribery bill that was posted round the town, "100*l.* reward." He was saying there were a good many voters here belonging to the association, and he said, "Remember the American adage, M. D." I heard the people round say, "That means 'money down;'" but there was nothing alluded to that I knew of about the ones present would have to look out for "M. D."

42,880. Did you understand it to be in any way conveying to your mind that you were to have money at the election?—No, not the slightest.

42,881. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you understand that to mean if they voted the other side they were to insist on having the money down?—It was spoken in that way.

42,882. Tell us how?—I understood it in this way, if any man should take money from the other side he would have to look out for the 100*l.*, that is "M. D." before he said anything about it.

42,883. It was an advice to him to look out?—I did not take it as such.

42,884. Then what did you take it as?—I took it as I stated about the 100*l.*

42,885. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean the 100*l.* penalty?—The 100*l.* reward.

42,886. You thought the "M. D." alluded to the reward?—Yes.

42,887. (Mr. Anstey.) It is not a reward; it is a penalty, is not it?—100*l.* reward I think it is.

42,888. What do I understand you to say if your side was bribing or the other side was bribing?—I took it myself the other side.

42,889. If the other side was bribing no one was to say anything against them unless he got the reward, "M. D.," money down?—I suppose that would be it.

Mr. JOHN LOVELL SEALY recalled. Mr. J. L. Sealy.

42,890. (Mr. Price.) You have been examined here on one or two occasions, but we observe that you have taken advantage of the public prints to controvert and animadvert on some of the evidence given here, and therefore we have sent for you. The remark made on ourselves we care very little indeed about, only with regard to myself I may say the expression which I used was misquoted. Tell us, now, while you are in the proper place to say anything, the witness-box, what you have to say?—The other day

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. J. L. Sealy.

13 Oct. 1869.

I came here I wished to say that Dr. Kinglake did not come into the bank between 1 and 2 o'clock; that I heard it was Davis's son drove up in a fly. He stopped somewhere near to the bank, and went not into the bank, but into a house.

42,891. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has Davis's son any remarkable likeness to Dr. Kinglake?—I do not know that he has; he is about the same height. I also wish to state that Mr. Bate came to the office about half-past eight that day, on his return from the station, and that I read in the office at that time Mr. Kinglake's farewell address.

42,892. Did you see Mr. Kinglake at any time in the bank on the polling day?—I did not.

42,893. At no time?—No, at no time at all. I was only in the bank between 1 and 2 o'clock, and he did not come in between those hours.

42,894. Did you see him in the bank?—Not during the nomination day; I have no recollection of doing so, and I do not believe I did.

42,895. (Mr. Anstey.) That is precisely what I understood you to say before, you had not seen Dr. Kinglake in the bank that day, consequently I do not see by what right you presented yourself here the other day. You seemed to have founded the claim of right, on being sworn, to give information on a matter which you could know nothing of. You were not in the bank when Dr. Kinglake called, consequently you could not state the hour at which he did, which was the only point at issue; and I took on myself, as I shall certainly do again, to prevent your volunteering worthless evidence, or appearing as an advocate for another person?—I did not come to advocate another person at all. The chairman the day before invited us to come here and give evidence on anything with which we were acquainted. You had examined my clerk, Henry Beale; I was there between one and two with him alone, and Dr. Kinglake did not come into the bank between those hours.

42,896. I took that liberty, and I shall with all your clerks?—I do not quarrel with you, but it was a point on which I could speak.

42,897. You could not speak; you said yourself you did not see him in the bank all that day; if that is a true story, it is a point which you cannot speak on?—I can speak that he was not in the bank between 1 and 2 o'clock.

42,898. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not speak, I understand, of your own authority about Davis's son driving up; it is only what you have heard?—I think Davis's son spoke to me about it.

42,899. I mean you did not see him drive up?—No, it was from some information.

42,900. (Mr. Price.) You took the trouble to write three letters to the "Bridgwater Mercury"?—Two letters and an extract.

42,901. Have you any wish to say on oath in the box anything about the matters you stated there?—It was stated the other day by Mr. Anstey, he supposed I went to London to that meeting at the "Tavistock Hotel," to look after my 500*l.*

42,902. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear me make that statement, as you respectfully call it?—I thought I heard you.

42,903. Please to quote me correctly. My statement was a question put to Mr. Westropp, "Was it for the purpose of looking after the 500*l.*?" If you call that a statement you may, but shall not do so in my presence.—I thought I heard you make this remark, "I suppose he went there to look after his 500*l.*" That is not so.

42,904. If I did, that is not a statement; therefore your last observation is incorrect, and you will please to recollect that you are on oath and I am not?—I hope I have due regard for the truth.

42,905. You had better be accurate when you put words into the mouths of other persons, and then bind the representation of those words by an oath?—I believe I have as much respect for the solemnity of an oath as any man in this hall.

42,906. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did your information come from about this son of Davis's driving up?—It was mentioned in the bank. I forget exactly who it came from; from Davis's father, who mentioned it I think to someone in the bank.

42,907. Is Davis's son here?—He was the other day, I believe, when I was here.

42,908. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you wish to say with regard to that communication to the newspapers, because there never has been any desire to shut out any person whatever from giving the fullest explanation. It was only on the supposition that you were going to speak on behalf of someone else that I declined to hear you the other day. There has been no indisposition, I take on myself to say, to hear you, and I take on myself to say that it is exceedingly unbecoming to talk of persons being clothed with brief authority domineering?—You saw the way I was treated in this hall.

42,909. I talked to you courteously; I did not want to draw any distinction. If I remember right I said we sent for you, and then on reconsideration we did not think it was necessary to examine you, and we did not trouble you; and then you commenced a statement which one of my colleagues thought to be the commencement of advocacy of some-one else, and we have not allowed the humblest man in this hall, who have once or twice attempted it, for instance Bussell and others, to get up and say things, and therefore we thought it not right to hear you; and I may say for myself that I do not care about your personalities, but at the same time it is not becoming language for a man in your position to use "men clothed with brief authority domineering like tyrants"?—Allow me to remark that I did not come here with the slightest intent of advocating any man's claim, but because you sent for me.

42,910. That was the impression made?—It was a wrong impression.

42,911. Then that is corrected. The impression was, and give us credit for acting on some impression other than that there was any desire to shut out, which we do not desire, the fullest investigation of everything on either side; and whatever quarter it came from we have listened most patiently to, and a great number of stories, which turned out to be things quite untrue, have involved the necessity of putting very disagreeable questions to witnesses, because we thought it our bounden duty to do so if we had not been under the fullest impression, or unfounded impression, that you were about to advocate someone your mouth would not have been shut, nor would it have been if you had come and asked to be allowed to explain a portion of the evidence given against you. There is no disposition to shut out anybody, the lowest or the highest, from giving the fullest explanation.

42,912. (Mr. Coleridge.) You see the observation the learned Chief Commissioner has made is as to your language in the public prints, and you must see that it is not decent or becoming writing with regard to a commission while it is sitting. The commission itself is of a nature sufficiently unpopular without men of your position in the town making it more so, and this expression in print seems to be the telling part of the whole case?—You saw the impetuous way I was treated the other day. I did not come to advocate anyone, but to give some information on a point which I was acquainted with. It is a perfectly gratuitous supposition to say that I came to advocate anyone.

42,913. (Mr. Anstey.) You are using the term "gratuitous supposition" as applying to some language that fell from this bench, and I will not submit to such language, and I will proceed to show you out of your own mouth that it was no gratuitous supposition, but you have confirmed it yourself by what you have said to-day. The words you uttered were these: "I "wish to tell the Commissioners there is a man called "the son of Davis, who can state——" Was not it that which you said when I stopped you?—Will you explain to me? I forget. It is merely to give information on a point, that is all I came for. I came because I was sent for, and being here I wished to give information on that point, and you would not hear me.

42,914. Then you were told distinctly by the learned Chief Commissioner that you were not wanted?—Clearly.

42,915. Then you got up to say something about this man, Davis?—I wanted to give you information.

42,916. Which information you have only second hand?—I beg your pardon; I had some of the information first hand, of my own knowledge.

42,917. From Davis himself?—No.

42,918. Then it is second hand?—It was not second hand; I beg pardon.

42,919. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you did not see the fly?—I was going to speak of Dr. Kinglake being at the bank, for that was the point, between one and two.

42,920. (Mr. Anstey.) I am not talking of what you were going to say?—You would not hear me.

42,921. You said, "I have just heard the son of Davis had said so and so." As I knew perfectly well what Davis was going to say, that he had gone to visit someone of the name of Jones, for that we have had from one of the anonymous letters we are deluged with; it was no news to me, and I did not approve of the person who resolutely withheld information, and could come here and volunteer information for another; and I therefore stopped you, as I shall again, if you volunteer under like circumstances?—I can only say that I have told everyone with whom I have been in communication to come here and tell everything they knew about it before this Commission came here; everyone, whenever I had an opportunity of saying anything at all about it—"Go, and tell all you know; you had better conceal nothing." That has been my language.

42,922. Then I cannot understand what earthly objection you can have to our examining your clerk?—I have not any objection to it.

42,923. (Mr. Coleridge.) I did not understand you to express any objection to it; you only said we had examined your clerk?—No, it would be absurd doing so.

42,924. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything you wish now to tell us which will throw light on this matter?—I know nothing which would throw the slightest light on it. I believe you have had the whole story weeks ago.

42,925. You know nothing with regard to that advance from your bank in any way?—Nothing whatever; you have had that story weeks and weeks ago, and I have not the slightest doubt it happened so. With regard to my being at the "Tavistock" hotel, I wish to mention that, because it seemed to me I was misrepresented very much; it was quite an accident my being there.

42,926. At the conference?—At the conference. I merely walked down with my friend; I was not actually at the conference, or present when Mr. Westropp had any communication.

42,927. You had not gone to town on that business?—I had nothing whatever to do with it. I went to see the Islington cattle show, and an agent of mine, who had come from Australia.

42,928. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you have also in these letters contradicted Mr. Westropp. Are you prepared to do that on oath also?—Clearly; and I showed that letter to Mr. Lilly, and he confirmed every word. I do not know any reason for my commanding persons, down here; they are not the sort of people to be commanded or ruled by any person. It is the most ridiculous assertion that was ever made; no one who knows me can say that I desired to rule them.

42,929. (Mr. Coleridge.) But surely every bank can command a good deal where there is money owing to them?—One may strain a thing so that you can put any construction you like.

42,930. (Mr. Price.) Is there any influence in a small borough at all, compared with the influence of the two sections, the lawyers and the banks?—I do not think I can command three votes in this place. I would only say that my own man-servant did not vote with me.

42,931. Was Mr. Westropp under a false impression as to your determination to keep him out?—So he was; I state what took place.

42,932. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any personal dislike of Mr. Westropp, which he seemed to infer?—It is all imaginary. He says some one told him so, but he does not tell me who.

42,933. (Mr. Anstey.) You and he had not been on speaking terms for some time?—He cut me in the streets for some cause; I do not know what.

42,934. You and he, I believe, have not been on speaking terms for a considerable time before the last election; is that so?—Two or three years, about three years before, I believe, he cut me in the street for some reason or other, I do not know what it was, and at the last election, when he was canvassing, that took place which I communicated to the papers.

42,935. Then you had been on bad terms down to the election?—I do not say bad terms; not on any terms at all.

42,936. (Mr. Price.) The impression conveyed to Mr. Westropp's mind seemed to be that he was not responsible for the person who conveyed it. The impression conveyed to his mind was clearly that so long as you could do anything he should not sit, and under that impression Mr. Westropp seemed to have remained. Your explanation may or may not be satisfactory to him, but if you had said anything as arrogant as that you can hardly be surprised that in a moment one would say Mr. Sealy seems to think he is a very great man?—As arrogant as what?

42,937. As long as you were here he should not have a seat for Bridgwater?—It is quite absurd. I have no more power.—I could not control three votes in this place.

42,938. Mr. Westropp was under the impression that you said it, and he said he understood you said it, and assumed you said it. You must concede yourself that if you said so it was an arrogant thing to say?—Undoubtedly it was; but Mr. Westropp is a very credulous man to believe such nonsense as that.

42,939. There is an end of it. I still remain of the same opinion, you having had the fullest opportunity to explain, although there is some impression in your mind that you were shut out that it would be more becoming of you to have done so than to write a letter to the paper in terms which I hope you regret.

GEORGE JONES sworn.

G. Jones.

42,940. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A foreman at Mr. Barham's cement works.

42,941. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

42,942. Which way?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,943. Did you get anything?—Not a farthing.

42,944. Did you vote at the elections of 1866?—No; in 1859 I voted.

42,945. Did you vote at any election between 1859 and the last?—No.

42,946. In 1859 how did you vote?—Westropp and Padwick.

42,947. What did you get?—10*l.*

42,948. Who from?—John Murlis.

42,949. Did you vote before that at all?—No.

42,950. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or after?—Nor after.

42,951. (Mr. Price.) You had no vote then between 1859 and the last?—No, I had not.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

13 Oct. 1869.

GEORGE PHELPS sworn.

G. Phelps.

42,952. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A machine proprietor.

42,953. Are you a voter ?—I am.

42,954. Did you vote at the last election ?—No.

42,955. Did you vote at the election of 1866 ?—I did.

42,956. How ?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

42,957. No, when Mr. Vanderbyl stood last, and Mr. Patton?—For Mr. Vanderbyl.

42,958. Did you get anything ?—No.

42,959. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you have any money to distribute to others ?—No.

42,960. Did you have anything to do with the election ?—No.

42,961. Did you vote at Mr. Bagehot's ?—I voted for Mr. Bagehot.

42,962. Did you get anything then ?—No.

42,963. Did you get anything between the two elections ?—No.

42,964. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you have anything to distribute at that election ?—No.

42,965. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865 ?—Whose was it ?

42,966. When Westropp, Kinglake, and Tynte stood ?—No ; I was not in the town at the time.

42,967. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you had anything at any election ?—No.

42,968. Or to distribute ?—No.

42,969. Did you ever get anybody ?—No.

42,970. Or intimidate anybody ?—No.

42,971. Or promise anybody ?—No.

42,972. You keep an inn ?—Yes, I kept the "Commercial" hotel at the time.

42,973. Had you any bills ?—I had a bill which was never paid.

42,974. Which election ?—Bagehot's.

42,975. How much was it ?—19*l.* something.

42,976. That was treating on the polling and nomination day, I suppose ?—Yes.

42,977. Who ordered it ?—I really cannot tell you ; various, different people.

42,978. Who came and told you that you might trust people ? Whom did you look to to get paid ? Whom did you send your bill in to ?—Allan came for the bill, and it was made out to Mr. Bagehot, and he paid the money.

42,979. Had you another bill at Vanderbyl's election ?—I think not.

42,980. Which was the bill you did not get paid ?—Sir John Shelley's and Kinglake's.

42,981. You never got paid that?—I got 30*l.*, something about the amount I paid for posting and feeding the horses, and for the turnpikes, out of pocket.

42,982. How much was your bill at that time ?—55*l.*

42,983. And you got 30*l.* paid ?—About 30*l.*

42,984. Was that the first time you had a bill at your house ?—That was the first time.

42,985. (Mr. Price.) Had you no bill before that ?—No, not in the town before.

42,986. Do you mean to say you have 25*l.* owing you now ?—I have more than 100*l.* owing me now. I never got a penny paid me except what was drunk and spent out of the house. I only got near about the amount I paid out of my own pocket for the drivers and turnpikes, and the horses at various different places.

42,987. (Mr. Coleridge.) What election do you put it you are owing upwards of 100*l.* for ?—Sir John Shelley's.

42,988. That is 25*l.* ?—No.

42,989. You got paid 30*l.* out of 55*l.* ?—Yes, but that was only posting.

42,990. What was the whole bill ?—The treating to the amount of 70*l.* odd in three weeks ; the houses were open for three weeks.

42,991. That is Shelley's ?—Sir John Shelley's and Mr. Kinglake's chiefly, by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, which he had the book with every particular in it for.

42,992. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the name of the house at that time ?—The "Commercial" hotel, at Eastover.

42,993. And the amount was 70*l.* ?—75*l.*, I believe.

42,994. (Mr. Price.) And 55*l.* for posting ?—Yes, that was another.

42,995. How many horses did you keep ?—Seven at that time.

42,996. Is that all you had owing you—70*l.* for treating, and the remainder of the 55*l.* ?—Yes.

42,997. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a bill at Mr. Vanderbyl's election ?—No, I believe not ; I have no recollection.

42,998. Have you tried to get paid that 100*l.* ?—I have, and told Mr. Kinglake that I should send a writ for him ; but I was informed by my solicitor that I could not recover it, because my bill was not sent in in good time for election matters, and I had to lose it, I am sorry to say.

42,999. Had you anything to do at the last election ?—Nothing at all.

43,000. No treating ?—No.

P. Betty.

PEREGRINE BETTY recalled.

(Mr. Dare's evidence was read over to the witness.)

43,001. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say about that ?—I never made use of the word "damn" in any way at all.

43,002. But you were there ?—I went to her house ; I walked.

43,003. (Mr. Coleridge.) You swore yesterday so far as that you were not there ?—No ; I told you I walked with Mrs. Dare round the corner.

43,004. (Mr. Price.) Did you go there, in the first instance, and ask for her husband ?—Yes, I went there.

43,005. Did you say you wanted eight men to win the election ?—I never said the words.

43,006. Nothing of the kind ?—If it was the last speech I made——

(Mr. Price.) Do not talk in that way.

43,007. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to say something about the words ?—I did not use the word "damn."

43,008. Did you all the rest ?—Certainly not.

43,009. What did you mean by singling out the word "damn" there then, if you did not mean the rest. Did you say anything to her like this : "I can put a good day's work in your way" ?—I never said the words.

43,010. What did you mean by denying the word "damn" just now, and not the rest of the sentence ?—What I was going to speak upon was the conversation that took place from she to me when we were going from her house up to her husband.

43,011. (Mr. Price.) Long before that, before the fly came, before she had gone upstairs to change her dress, did you say anything about a good job for her husband, or you could do a good day's work ?—(No answer.)

(Mr. Anstey.) You shall have your first answer read to you. (The shorthand writer read the witness his evidence) : "What did you say about that ?—I "never made use of the word 'damn' in any way at "all. But you were there ?—I went to her house ; "I walked."

43,012. (Mr. Price.) Now what do you mean by saying that you did not use the word "damn" ?—I never made use of that word. The reason I went to him was——

43,013. (Mr. Anstey.) Keep to the point. Did you say anything to him about a day's work ?—No, I did not.

43,014. Or a good job ?—No.

43,015. Or money?—No.

43,016. (Mr. Price.) What did you go for? Who sent you?—No one sent me.

43,017. What made you go to look Dare up?—Because we had been in conversation days before, and we said he should go to Mr. Westropp.

43,018. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now you see what a gross lie you told yesterday: "What are you?—An ostler "at Ricks's. Do you know some people of the name "of Dare?—I know two or three. Do you know "anything about the Dares connected with the last "election?—I do not know at all who they voted for. "But do you know anything about them?—I know "them from seeing them, but have never had any "particular conversation with any of them." Is that true or false?—Not since the election.

43,019. That you are not asked. I am reading from the shorthand note. You are in a very awkward position, and may be indicted for perjury. Now make a clean breast of it. You have committed the grossest perjury to-day in denying what you said yesterday: "I know them from seeing them, but never had any "particular conversation with any of them." Which is true, that you had a conversation or not any?—I had a conversation with the missus.

43,020. "With them" your answer is: "I know "them from seeing them, but have never had any "conversation with any of them." Is that true or false?—Well, I had a conversation.

43,021. Then that is false?—I have spoken.

43,022. Is it true or false?—It must be false, because I had a conversation.

43,023. "Do you recollect driving a fly with Mrs. "Dare, and waiting to take her husband up to the "poll on the polling day?—I never drove her during "the day. Do you recollect ever having her in your "fly?—No. Do you ever recollect taking her to her "husband, and waiting to take him to the poll?—"No, I never took him to the poll." You see you do not answer the question; did you take her to her husband?—I said I did yesterday.

43,024. You swore you did not yesterday?—I beg your pardon; I said she went up with me yesterday.

43,025. Listen to the question and answer: "Do you "ever recollect taking her to her husband and waiting "to take him to the poll." And then you do not choose to answer the first part of the question, but say, "I never took them to the poll." Did you ever walk with her?—I did.

43,026. Then that is untrue yesterday. "Is there "any other man of your name, a fly driver?—No. "Who do you work for?—Mr. Ricks. (Mr. Cole-"ridge.) Have you ever driven Mrs. Dare in your "life?—No. Ever Mr. Dare?—No. What is he? "—The basket maker, I suppose you are alluding "to; keeps the Turkish baths; a basket maker as "well. You do not recollect driving him on the "polling day?—No." You have already contradicted two most material answers you gave yesterday?—I never drove Mrs. Dare; I walked with Mrs. Dare from her house to the corner up to her husband, as I said yesterday.

43,026. You did not?—I beg your pardon, I did.

43,028. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you say you would do him—leaving out the damn—a blessed day's work?—I did not, because I had no power to do so.

43,029. Did you say anything about doing a good day's work?—No, I did not make use of any such expression at all.

43,030. (Mr. Price.) Why were you so urgent to get Dare to the poll?—Because he told me days and days before that he should vote for Mr. Westropp. That was the only reason, no more than that.

43,031. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get anybody else up to the poll?—My brother.

43,032. Anybody else?—No.

43,033. Why were you so anxious to get Dare up?—Because he said he was going to vote for Mr. Westropp.

43,034. I suppose many others were?—Yes.

43,035. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did Dare vote?—He voted the other side.

43,036, You swore yesterday you did not know how?—Of course I heard since his evidence yesterday.

43,037. Did you know when you came here?—I did not know but he voted for Westropp.

43,038. Did not you know he did not, but voted on the other side?—I must have known it.

43,039. You swore yesterday that you did not. Three separate assignments of perjury in your evidence yesterday.

43,040. (Mr. Price.) Who was on the fly?—Mr. Collett I drove on the fly.

43,041. Who is Collett?—He used to keep the "Commercial."

43,042. Is he here?—I do not know. I drove several gentlemen that day.

43,043. But the fly that went into the square Mrs. Dare speaks of, at the time you were there?—Collett was one of the gentlemen.

43,044. Was he on the fly at that time?—I believe he was; I cannot say; I was driving about an hour or two with no one in the fly.

43,045. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had he a blue fall on?—No.

43,046. Who were you driving about with a blue fall?—I drove several people that day to different places.

43,047. Who did you drive with a blue fall is the question?—(No answer.)

43,048. (Mr. Price.) If you do not answer straightforwardly you will have to go to prison?—I drove Mr. Hodges.

43,049. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you driving him at the time you went into the square?—I cannot answer that, I had so many.

43,050. Had he a blue fall on?—I cannot say.

43,051. Will you swear he had not?—I cannot because I do not recollect.

43,052. Did you see Hodges that day with a blue fall?—I cannot say.

43,053. Have you ever seen him with a blue fall on?—I have seen him with a blue band.

43,054. (Mr. Price.) Did he drive your fly that day?—He never drove the fly. It was my place to drive.

43,055. Was he on the box of the fly with you that day? If you do not answer you will have to go to prison. Was Hodges on the box that day?—If I was to say yes I should tell a lie. If he was not on the box he might be in the carriage.

43,056. On your oath, was he on the box that day?—I do not believe he was.

43,057. Will you swear he was not?—I will not swear; but he might be in the carriage.

43,058. "Box," is my question?—He was not.

43,059. Who was?—Collett.

43,060. At the time you went to Mrs. Dare?—As far as I can recollect that is the man.

43,061. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had he a blue fall on?—I cannot remember whether he had or not.

43,062. (Mr. Anstey.) As one of my colleagues has told you, you have brought yourself in imminent danger of an indictment for perjury?—I do not know what for.

43,063. Do not make matters worse than they are by returning a false answer to the next question I am going to put to you, because I am anxious to know who are the more potent rogues. Who was the man who employed you or asked you to try and get up Dare to vote, give me his name?—No man whatever alive.

43,064. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Hodges say anything to you that day about getting Mr. Dare to vote?—He did not speak to me more of Dare than any other man.

43,065. Did he speak to you about getting Dare to vote, now yes or no?—I cannot recollect.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

P. Betty.

13 Oct. 1869.

43,066. (Mr. Anstey.) Just now you said nobody employed you?—Nobody employed me.

43,067. (Mr. Price.) Or asked you to get Dare to vote?—I do not know which of the gentleman it was; there was a lot there.

43,068. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Hodges speak to you about getting up people to vote?—I do not recollect that he did.

43,069. (Mr. Anstey.) Did anybody speak to you about getting up people to vote?—I think it was Mr. Collett said something about Dare.

43,070. (Mr. Price.) I will give you one more chance, and if you do not answer intelligibly you will go to prison for the night and see whether your memory will be refreshed. Did Mr. Hodges ride with you on your fly that day?—He did, inside or out; I cannot say which.

43,071. One or the other?—One or the other. That is what I was going to state.

43,072. When you went off the box of your fly, which you must have done when talking to Mrs. Dare, who was it you left on the box of the fly. Who drove into the square with the fly?—I do not know who it was. I drove several gentleman.

43,073. (Mr. Coleridge.) Must it have been Collett or Hodges?—Well, I think it must have been those two, and might have been others.

42,074. Will you swear one of those two?—I will swear it was one, I think it might have been both of them, either inside or out.

42,075. You are asked when you left the fly to go to Mrs. Dare who was in charge of it. Must it have been Collett or Hodges, one or the other?—I must see the gentlemen I drove. I cannot say. I drove so many that day.

43,076. You have already sworn Collett or Hodges; now which was it?—I should think it was both of them.

43,077. Both were on the box you mean?—Inside or out.

43,078. (Mr. Price.) Were both on the box?—No, they could not be.

43,079. You are asked, which did you leave on the box when you went to Mrs. Dare, and who drove that fly into the square, for Mrs. Dare saw it go?—I believe it was Mr. Collett, as far as I can recollect, for I know Mr. Hodges was there with him, and another gentleman I believe was there as well.

43,080. Had you told Hodges that you could get Dare to vote?—I might have said something to that effect to him, try and get another voter for him.

43,081. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you a friend or relation of Dare's?—No relation at all.

43,082. Are you a friend of his?—Not a very great friend.

43,083. (Mr. Anstey.) You told me just now that someone had spoken to you about getting up people to vote, but not Dare more than others. Were you asked that day to busy yourself to get people to vote?—Well, you know——

43,084. Yes or no?—Well, yes.

43,085. Who asked you?—It was either Mr. Hodges or Mr. Collett.

43,086. Both of them, I suppose?—Well, perhaps it might be, to try and get voters.

43,087. (Mr. Price.) There is another question we come back to, and depend on it if we believe Mrs. Dare's story in preference to yours you are liable to be tried for perjury. Upon your oath did not you say anything to Mrs. Dare about the good it might do her husband without mentioning money?—I did not.

43,088. Nothing of the kind?—I did not.

43,089. Nothing of the sort?—Nothing of the sort I did not say to her at all.

43,090. What did you say to her about her husband coming to vote?—I spoke to her about her husband, asked whether he had been to poll, and she said she did not know, and I asked where he was, and she said up at Jonas's, and she walked up with me and called me out, and I asked him whether he was going to vote for Westropp.

12,021. Did she go up stairs and change her dress, and did you say, "For God's sake make haste, we have "not a minute to spare, and there is only eight wanted "to win"?—No, I did not use the words.

43,092. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you say anything like it?—No, I have no recollection.

43,093. (Mr. Price.) It is not a question of recollection?—I never said the words.

43,094. Never told her not to wait to dress herself?—I never said the words.

43,095. You never said you only wanted eight to win?—No, I never made use of the words. My busin ess was——

43,096. Never mind your business. Did you ever say anything of that kind to her?—I never said the words.

43,097. (Mr. Anstey.) Nobody asks you about the words; but the question is, did not you press her to see her husband, because 4 o'clock was coming on, and you were within a little of winning? Did you ever press her in that way?—I never pressed her at all, no more than what took place previous to that; he said he was going to vote for Mr. Westropp.

43,098. That is not her. Did not you press her to make haste for the purpose I have mentioned, to get her husband to vote?—I never pressed her at all.

43,099. (Mr. Price.) What did you stay there for?—I do not believe I was there three minutes.

43,100. (Mr. Anstey.) To use one of your own phrases, did you keep speaking to her about it whilst you were there?—I might have said a word or two, of course I did when I went in.

43,101. What had you said?—About going up for her husband, nothing more than that.

43,102. You said that more than once?—What, going up for her husband?

43,103. Yes?—Well, those are the words I did say.

43,104. Did not you say it more that once?—I might have said it twice, perhaps; I cannot say.

43,105. And very often say it when she was not fast enough?—No, I never said the words.

43,106. (Mr. Price.) He is no great friend of yours?—No.

43,107. And he is under no great obligation to you?—No.

43,108. What influence had you to bring on Dare having not voted up to 20 minutes to 4?—I will tell you how it was. I was going to get some baskets, which Mr. Dare stated quite correctly, and I was in conversation with him about who he should vote for, and he said his man was on the other side, but that he should vote for Mr. Westropp, and he said all along he should vote for Mr. Westropp, and that was my reason for calling on him, to see whether he was going to vote for Mr. Westropp; that is all.

43,109. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who paid you for your trouble?—I never had a farthing in my life.

43,110. (Mr. Anstey.) But he voted the other side?—Yes.

43,111. (Mr. Price.) Did you take him to poll?—No.

43,112. What became of him when he came out into the street?—He had been to poll, he said, and had been to poll before his wife and me went up.

43,113. When did he tell you that?—When he came out, directly; he said he had been to poll.

43,114. For Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—On the other side, he said.

43,115. And yet you told us you did not know he had voted, and did not know for whom, and to-day you say you did not know whom he voted for, and now you tell us he told you as soon as he had voted?—I tell you as far as I can.

43,116–7. (Mr. Price.) It only shows that certain persons ought to have good memories. Now you tell us that he told you himself he voted on the other side. Yesterday you told us you did not know how he had voted, or whether he had voted at all?—Well, 12 months ago was a long time to recollect. I cannot recollect things at once.

43,118. (Mr. Price.) Now, what more have you to say ?—Well, I cannot say more than I have said. I cannot tell whether Hodges was on the box nor Collett.

43,119. What did you say to Mrs. Dare to induce her to go out with you in a great hurry at that time to look for her husband ?—I never made use of the words she has said.

43,120. Words like it ?—I never said anything about money, or anything at all of the sort.

43,121. Not about money, but a good day's work for her husband if he would come and vote ?—No, I did not make use of the words in any way. The only thing I went there for was on account of going there after things, and he always said he should vote for Mr. Westropp, and that is the only reason I went there to him.

Mr. Richard Hodges recalled.

43,122. (Mr. Price.) Were you on the box of this fly on this day ?—I do not believe I was.

43,123. When it went into the square ?—I do not believe I was.

43,124. Will you swear you were not ?—I will not swear I was not on the box.

43,125. Did you wear a blue fall ?—I did not wear a blue fall from 9 in the morning for the day.

43,126. Did Collett ?—I do not know. I cannot say.

43,127. (Mr. Price.) But you will not swear you were not on the box of the fly while he was indoors ?—No, but I will explain to you how I came on the fly. I did not go on any fly but that one on that day, and about 3 o'clock I should think I found a man of the name of Hole out of Crowpill who had not polled. I had some conversation with him, I think, the election before, and he told me it was only for the sake of fetching him that he did not vote for the Conservative party. I found the man had not polled, and thought, "It shall not be an excuse at this election ; I will go down for him." I went down to the door ; the fly was there, and I told Betty to drive me to Crowpill, and I found a man named Ankle who went with me. I am not sure about it, but I think he did.

43,128. Had he a blue fall on ?—I do not know. I went to Crowpill and found the house shut up, and I came back through Angel Crescent, which is just at the back of the "Clarence," and we stopped, as several parties hailed me at the door of the house and said, "Here is Harwood has not polled," and Harwood came up and got into the fly. I got out of it, and I did not get into the fly any more for the day, but it is right to state I do not know whether or not we went through the square, as it is the route if the gate is opened. Betty perhaps can say whether we went through the square to go to Crowpill or through the crescent. I know we went round there. I know it was the only day I got into the fly, but as far as Mrs. Dare is concerned I do not think that I have ever spoken to the woman or her husband, but as far as bringing me in any shape or form into it it is absurd.

43,129. (Mr. Price.) Had Betty mentioned to you that he knew this man Dare had promised to vote for Westropp, and would look him up ?—Certainly not, and I had no idea that he had been looking Dare up. I had no idea I should be in any way connected with Dare, or anything of that kind. In fact, at this time I told one of our party that I would split if any money was going on our side.

43,130. (Mr. Anstey.) We cannot go into that ?—But it is evidence.

43,131. (Mr. Price.) At all events, you say it is quite possible that Mrs. Dare's account is true. She does not swear to you. It appeared a very truthful account. She has a strong impression that you were the man on the fly, and you say it is possible you may have been there ?—I may have been, but I am strongly impressed that I was not in the fly.

43,132. That is not the question. The question is how far Mrs. Dare is a truthful witness, because she did not pretend to swear to you. She was very cautious, and expressed herself she had a strong impression that you were the man, and you will not undertake to swear you were not the man ?—I bel ve it is a conspiracy against me.

43,133. You will not undertake to swear you were not the man on the fly ?—No, I will not.

43,134. (Mr. Anstey.) As to your horror of bribery, you recollect what you told me the other day ?—Yes.

43,135. And you repeated it two or three times ?—Yes.

43,136. Namely, that you were anxious to know, merely for information, whether there was to be bribery or not to be bribery ?—Yes.

43,137. But you were equally prepared to be anxious and active to the same extent, whether your side was going to bribe, or whether they were not going to bribe ?—Yes, certainly.

43,138. And you have also said in your speeches at the "Clarence" and elsewhere, that you so worded your phrases, I think "diplomatic" was the word you used, so as to convey to the delicate mind of the Conservative working man that he would very likely get money for his vote, without at the same time promising for yourself or your masters, Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, do you remember that little statement ?—I do not remember it in that form. You put it in so roundabout a form.

43,139. It is not for men like you to waste the time of the public and the money of the borough, or I would desire the shorthand notes to be referred to. You did not deny it when I last asked you about it, and the word diplomatic was referred to in questions put to the other witnesses ?—You will allow me to explain that, perhaps——

43,140. I will not indeed, until I have put my question. Now the question which I have put to you is, you have heard this man's statement, his reluctant and tardy statement, to the effect that you asked him, or as you are diplomatic in your language, spoke to him about getting people to come up to vote ; is that true or false ?—Certainly not. I did not ask him anything of the kind, not Betty.

43,141. Nor speak to him ?—Certainly not.

43,142. To get a man to vote, nor anything of the kind ?—Not a word to him.

43,143. About looking up the people who were backward in polling, to get them to vote ?—Well, I do, if he said so, in toto.

43,144. You have heard what he said ?—He is the last man I would employ. I would rather do it myself.

43,145. Why so ?—Because I would rather do the work I have to do than trust Betty, a working man.

43,146. I am not insinuating that you asked him to go to bribe voters, but that you asked him to get them to come up and vote, that is all, in the most innocent way in the world ?—I would rather do it myself.

43,147. Did you ask him to do it ?—No.

43,148. Not in any case ?—I did not. I should have done it myself, being so near the "Clarence" as it is. It is only 15 or 20 yards from the "Clarence."

43,149. You would have asked Dare ?—Yes.

43,150. You have said just now that you did not know him ?—I did not, but I would ask any man who had a vote.

43,151. Then I do not understand you. You say at one moment "I do not know him," and then you say, if you wanted his vote, as he was so near the "Clarence," you would have gone yourself ?—If I wanted him.

43,152. If he lived so near the "Clarence" ?—I

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. R. Hodges.

13 Oct. 1869.

have heard in this court, I thought he lived in North Street.

43,153. Do you mean to tell me to-day, a year ago you were prepared to get Dare to come up to vote?—I beg your pardon, I was prepared to go and ask him.

43,154. And yet you have told me that Dare was not known to you?—Dare was not known to me. Dare will tell you that.

43,155. Then you have contradicted yourself in the box?—But allow me to say that with regard to the language I have used on the morning of the election there has been so much talk about, Allan has put a wrong complexion altogether on me. When Allan spoke to me about it on his return from America, he told me I had used language that induced the men to believe that they were going to be paid, and I contradicted it there and then in toto.

43,156. I am not talking about what Allan said?—Yes you are.

43,157. I am taking your own sworn language in this court?—You are talking of my diplomatic language.

43,158. I am taking your own sworn language in this court, where you said you used diplomatic language which, while not compromising you, would convey to him there was to be bribery?—Excuse me.

43,159. It was never doubted nor denied till now?—Then I deny it now.

43,160. You distinctly swore it in my presence?—I deny it.

J. Hunt.

JAMES HUNT sworn.

43,161. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A fireman.

43,162. At the railway?—No, Cole's foundry.

43,163. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

43,164. How?—Vanderbyl.

43,165. Vanderbyl and Kinglake?—Yes.

43,166. Did you get anything?—No.

43,167. Any promise?—No.

43,168. Did you vote at the election before that?—No.

43,169. Have you ever voted before that?—Never.

R. Hodges.

RICHARD HODGES recalled.

(Mr. Anstey.) Now, you know you said to me just now, "I deny it," in a most contemptuous manner. Now hear for yourself.

(The witness.) I deny that.

(Mr. Anstey.) Now be quiet. Listen.

(Mr. Price, referring to the notes of the 30th day's sitting.) Mr. Allan wished you to be asked a question. He says, "I should wish you to ask Mr. "Hodges this question, Whether he did not tell me "in his own shop since the election that the meeting "of the Conservative men at the 'Clarence' the "morning of the poll was called, and the idea all the "men had when they came to that meeting was "beyond all doubt that they would be paid; that at "that meeting Mr. Westropp addressed them, and "Mr. Hodges also, who spoke most, and he so "arranged his language that it was completely diplo-"matic; that he did not make a promise; did not "commit himself to a promise, but caused every man "there to to believe that they would be paid, and "they went to poll under that impression." Now that is what Mr. Allan wished you to be asked.

(The witness.) Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Then Mr. Allan in answer said to me, "I say Mr. Hodges told me so." Then you are recalled. "(Mr. Price.) What do you say to that?—A. It is a long question, but I will answer it." Then the question is, "Did you tell Allan the idea the men had when you called that meeting was that they would be paid?"—"A. I did not, but I did say this, it was "the idea of the men afterwards from the language "used at the meeting in the morning at the 'Clarence' "they would be paid money."

(The witness.) Yes, quite right.

(Mr. Price, reading.) "But that idea was put into their heads by the Liberals of Bridgwater."

(The witness.) Afterwards.

(Mr. Price.) Now, do not attempt to correct, this was taken down word for word, you may be quite "sure. (Reading) "(Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell "Allan that the language from which those men "inferred that they were going to be paid some time "or other was the diplomatic or clever language used "by Mr. Westropp and yourself? A.—I did not. "I am not capable of using such clever language, "as I did not think it was possible. Q. By "whom was the language used then? A.—There "was no language used. Q. Have not you one "minute ago said that you confessed to have told "Allan that after the meeting was over the men "understood from the language used at that meeting "that they were to expect money?—A. A week "after."

(The witness.) Yes, after the election.

(Mr. Price, reading.) "Q. Whether a week or not "after does not signify. I ask you whose language "you are referring to; yours or Mr. Westropp's?—"A. I am not referring to anyone's language. "Q. You say the men inferred from language used "at that meeting addressed to them that there was "going to be money?—A. From the language used "that morning. Q. By whom?—(A. I cannot "say. (Mr. Price.) You were the chief speaker. "(Mr. Anstey.) You wanted to inflict on us some "speech of your own, and you have told us something "about a speech by Mr. Westropp. Were there any "other speakers there?—A. There was Mr. West-"ropp, Mr. Gray, and myself. Q. Then it would "have been either My. Westropp, Mr. Gray, or your-"self, or all three, or two of the three, from whose "language the men understood that.—A. I did not "consider so. Q. But there was no other speaker?—"A. The Liberals spoke a good deal two days "afterwards.

(The witness.) Yes; will you allow me to explain that?

(Mr. Price.) No, no, certainly not. "Q. You "said at that meeting, the language used. Do not "equivocate and palter with the truth.—A. They "inferred it from the language of the Liberals. (Mr. "Anstey.) That is not your language?—A. From "the language the Liberals pretended to say had been "used at the meeting. Q. You said nothing of the "sort; the object of your being recalled is to answer "the questions put to you as to what you told Allan, "and you deny a portion of what he says you told "him, but you admit the rest. You say you told "Allan from the language (not saying whose at that "meeting however) the people inferred so and so, "and had been persuaded so to think by the interpre-"tation put on that language by the Liberals. My "question was to you immediately, 'By whom was "it used, by Mr. Westropp?' 'Certainly not.' 'By "yourself?' 'Certainly not; I am not capable of it.' "I ask you whether you; and if not there was but "one other speaker, and that a very poor speaker ac-"cording to Mr. Trevor—Mr. Gray; and now you say "you do not know by whom the language was used, "or to whom you referred when you made mention "of it. You are paltering with the truth.—A. I "should like to make one other remark, and that "bearing out what I say. After the election was "over we had determined to petition, and Mr. John "Smith sent for a man who had been paid, who had "polled for the Conservative party, who had an IOU. "Q. Were you present?—A. I have his evidence "down. (Q.) Were you present at the conversation?

" —A. I was not, but I can produce the witnesses. " Q. We must call him. We cannot take it second-" hand.—A. It merely amounts to this ; if I call " him you will hear him, I suppose ? (Mr. Anstey.) " If you will state to our secretary what he will say ? " —A. I shall be very pleased, because I should like " to clear my character." That has nothing on earth to do with the matter.

(Mr. Anstey.) Nothing to do with it.

(The witness.) Well, now, I will explain the whole of that, if you will allow me. The fact of the matter was simply this——

43,170. (Mr. Price.) Before you explain we will just understand. You made a speech at that meeting ?—I did.

43,171. Did you use language which you afterwards represented to Allan had been misinterpreted ?—I did not, and further than that——

43,172. What misinterpretation, then, do you allude to when you say that the Liberals misinterpreted your language ?—The simple fact I wished to explain, and Mr. Anstey would not allow me to do, was that two days after the election the Liberals were at work to try and stop the petition.

(Mr. Anstey.) That has nothing whatever to do with it.

43,173. (Mr. Price.) What was the language you used which you say the Liberals misinterpreted ?—None at all; but the Liberals did say that Mr. Gray had used language that morning to the effect that men were to look for benefits or rewards that they might get hereafter. The language was never used there.

43,174. You admitted that you said to Allan that your own language that morning had been misinterpreted ?—It was not my language.

43,175. You said so to Allan. You admitted it ?—No; I told Allan that he had misconstrued it.

(Mr. Price.) Now listen. You said, "I did say " this ; it was the idea of the men afterwards, from " the language used at the meeting in the morning at " the 'Clarence' they would be paid money, but that " idea was put into their heads by the Liberals of " Bridgwater."

(The witness.) Yes, it was.

43,176. Whose language were you alluding to ?—Mr. Gray's.

43,177. Why did not you say so ?—I should have said so, only Mr. Anstey would not allow me.

(Mr. Anstey.) I did nothing but ask you the questions again and again.

(The witness.) You would not allow me.

(Mr. Anstey.) If you do not drop that tone and manner I shall move to have you committed.

Andrew Allan recalled.

A. Allan.

43,178. (Mr. Price.) Are you prepared still to stick by that language ?—Yes, word by word. That is exactly what Hodges told me.

43,179. Did he use the word "diplomatic" ?—He said he had so couched his language that he would not commit himself to a promise, but lead the men to believe that they would be paid.

(Richard Hodges.) I contradict it in toto; and further than that, allow me to say, when Allan accused me of that I went direct to Allan, and said, " I did " not say anything of the kind, and I will tell you " what I did say ;" and if Allan misconstrued it I can not help it. I have got a witness to prove it.

43,180. (Mr. Coleridge to Allan.) Did he say what he says now ? He says he told you it was not what he said, and that he told you what he did say ?—He said exactly what I have said.

43,181. (Mr. Price.) You said so in the first instance ?—I do not understand what he does say.

(Mr. Price.) No more do I.

(Richard Hodges.) When Mr. Allan——

43,182. (Mr. Coleridge to Allan.) If I understand it, it is this : that you told him that you had heard him say this before, and then he said, " I never did " say anything of the sort, and I will tell you what I " did say." Do you recollect that occurring ?—I do not recollect anything of the sort.

(Richard Hodges.) Well, it did occur.

Richard Hodges recalled.

R. Hodges.

43,183. (Mr. Price.) We know what your letter is, Mr. Hodges ; that it is couched in what you call diplomatic language, because you speak of future advantage ?—What letter ?

43,184. (Mr. Anstey.) Your circular letter. You cannot plead ignorance of that ?—I explained that.

43,185. You did not explain it ?—I did entirely

43,186. If you mean to my satisfaction, I can only say that that letter was a distinct invitation to men to come and to be bribed for their votes ?—I did not write the six letters.

43,187. (Mr. Price.) It is quite enough if you wrote one in equivocal language ; and the probability is that when you spoke you used language just as equivocal ?—I had been told plain and plump that there was to be no money, and I fought the election on that principle.

43,188. Have you not told us that Mr. George Pain to your own knowledge held out expectations of money for voting ?—I did. No doubt about it.

43,189. After a great deal of pressing we got that ?—I think I gave it directly.

43,190. You gave us nothing directly ?—I have tried to give you everything correctly from my own heart and from my own mind, as an Englishman.

43,191. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you have got a witness about the contradiction of Allan. Allan says that such a conversation never took place ?—I say it did take place.

43,192. If you have got a witness, what is his name ?—The name of the person ? It is my wife. I should not like to bring her into this hall. I would not bring her for any amount of money scarcely. There are many here perhaps know the circumstances under which I would not like to bring her here ; but at the same time I will say I did use that language, and I will defy Mr. Allan or anybody else to say I did not.

43,193. (Mr. Price.) If you do not bring your wife (it is entirely for your own sake) it rests on Mr. Allan's word, and we must form our own conclusion ?—You must form your conclusion, but I have given a correct statement.

43,194. If you could bring witnesses——?—Mere appearances will carry me out ; I think facts as well.

(Mr. Anstey.) I should advise you not to depend upon that.

(The witness.) I beg your pardon. I think they will.

Thomas Collett sworn.

T. Collett.

43,195. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—I am an auctioneer and hotel keeper.

43,196. What hotel do you keep ?—The Commercial Hotel.

43,197. First, I will ask you, were you out on a fly of Ricks's on the day of the poll of the last election ?—I was out on one fly ; whether it was Ricks's fly or not I am not prepared to swear.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

T. Collett.

13 Oct. 1869.

43,198. Driven by Betty. Do you know Betty?—No, I do not by name.

43,199. Do you know him by sight?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Where is Betty?

(The witness, after looking at Betty.) I do not remember being on a fly driven by him.

43,200. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember being in any fly at any time between half-past 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, near where the Turkish baths are, and driving in that fly up as far as the square?—No.

43,201. Were you there?—Certainly not.

43,202. In no such fly?—No.

43,203. You are quite sure about that?—Decidedly.

43,204. (Mr. Anstey.) If Betty says that it was either you or Hodges on the box, it could not have been you?—It was not me.

(Mr. Anstey.) Therefore it was Hodges.

43,205. Mr. Coleridge.) Did you wear a blue fall round your hat on that day?—No.

43,206. Have you ever worn such a thing?—No.

43,207. By a blue "fall" do they mean a neckcloth or a thing round your hat?—Well, I did not wear a fall at all. It might have been a piece of ribbon in the morning.

43,208. Round your hat?—Or a handkerchief, I think; a pocket handkerchief.

43,209. Tied round your hat?—Yes.

43,210. (Mr. Price.) Had you anything to do with the last election? Did you vote?—I had no vote. I had only been in the borough five months.

43,211. Did you canvass that day?—Yes.

43,212. Did you go by the doors of the Turkish baths at all that day?—No.

43,213. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ask Betty to get votes?—No.

43,214. You are quite sure that you never spoke to that man about getting up voters?—No.

43,215. Or a single voter?—Certainly not.

43,216. He has distinctly sworn that you did, and that Hodges did too?—I have never had any conversation with him at all about it.

43,217. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you vote yourself?—I had no vote, and never had a vote.

P. Betty.

PEREGRINE BETTY recalled.

43,218. (Mr. Anstey.) Is this the gentleman you spoke of (referring to the last witness)?—This is the gentleman.

43,219. Is this the Mr. Collett you mean?—Yes.

43,220. There can be no mistake about it?—Oh, no; this is the gentleman, and Mr. Hodges will tell you, and many other gentlemen I drove that day as well.

T. Collett.

THOMAS COLLETT recalled.

(Witness.) The only fly, if you wish to know, that I was on during the day, in case there may be any misapprehension, was when I had taken a man of the name of Day to the poll in Polden Street, in a line with Barclay Street, to the polling booth there. The fly drove up with a party of the name of Jarman on the box, and a man of the name of Bennett, a butcher, inside; I do not know the man who drove it.

43,221. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had it a white horse?—That I could not say. The only fly I was on was a fly with Jarman on the box; he, living in the country, perhaps may know what fly it was; it came quite promiscuously to me. I wanted to go up to the "Clarence," to the committee room, to report how the poll was, he said, "This is not the right place, I am going up straight." I said, "Perhaps you will give me a lift," but as to who drove that fly I do not know. But I was not at the Turkish baths that day.

43,222. (Mr. Price.) You never asked that man to get up voters?—Certainly not.

43,223. (Mr. Anstey.) What time was it?—About three o'clock in the afternoon.

43,224. Which way did you drive?—Nowhere near the Turkish baths, the other side of the bridge altogether.

43,225. In Eastover?—In Eastover. I never rode in a fly by the Turkish baths all the day.

43,226. Where did he come from?—He is a man living at the other side of the town; he is Bennett, a butcher; he can tell you exactly. I am satisfied it was not me at the Turkish baths.

(Mr. Price.) Very well, that will do. It was only to see which way the truth lies.

P. Betty.

PEREGRINE BETTY recalled.

43,227. (Mr. Price.) What do you say about Mr. Collett?—I drove Mr. Collett to several places in the town that day, and Mr. Hodges and other gentlemen as well. I drove Mr. Collett from the "Clarence" round there down into the Bristol Road somewhere to get a voter. This man was a foreman of Lott's at the time, with sandy whiskers; and I drove him up to poll, and Mr. Collett, and Mr. Hodges, and there may be another (I won't say), in the carriage at the time. They were entering into conversation about voters, and I said, "There is Dare that will vote for Westropp for certain." And Mr. Collett said, "You go and try to get him," and I think (I won't say, but I think,) that Mr. Collett or someone else that was on the box, whilst I went to Dare's wife, I think they drove to some place else after another voter.

43,228. Do you mean to swear positively that Mr. Collett was in your fly when you went to talk to Mrs. Dare?—He was there decidedly, because Mr. Collett's words were, "Would you go and try to get him?" And Mr. Collett and Mr. Hodges went after another voter. I think he said just now he went down to Crowpill.

43,229. Which of them drove?—I do not know.

43,230. (Mr. Anstey.) If this is all true, why did not you tell us so yesterday and to-day? You have been twice under examination, and very sharp examination. Why did you not tell us all this?—Yesterday I was not asked that question.

(Mr. Price.) You were asked enough to lead you up to that if you wished to tell the truth.

T. Collett.

THOMAS COLLETT recalled.

43,231. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, Mr. Collett, do you hear that?—Yes.

43,232. (Mr. Coleridge.) What do you say to this statement?—All I can say is this, that the only time I was in a fly at Bridgwater on that day is the time when I went to Monmouth Street from Polden Street, against where the polling booth was.

43,233. Do you recollect this man going to get a voter while you were in the fly?—No.

43,234. (Mr. Anstey.) Is any part of what he has just stated, as far as you are concerned, true or false?—I should say it is false.

43,235. The whole of it?—Yes.

43,236. The first is the most important part, that he was driving you about, not once but several times that day, along with Hodges?—No, certainly I was not along with Mr. Hodges. I was working on foot all the day near the Bristol Road, and the only fly I was in that day was the time I went to Monmouth Street, near the polling booth.

43,237. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you in any other carriage?—Yes, an open carriage. Mr. Leaker's carriage, which was lent for the day.

43,238. Was the carriage that Betty was driving an open or close one?—I do not remember his driving.

43,239. But if he was?—The only fly that I was in at all was a close one.

43,240. (Mr. Anstey.) You were not in any conveyance on that day with Mr. Hodges?—No, Mr. Hodges and me were not working together, we were in different parts of the town.

(Peregrine Betty.) Will you allow me to call a man forward that saw Mr. Collett in the fly?

RICHARD HODGES recalled.

(The witness.) I should just like to say that the man Ankle Mr. Collett speaks of, and he is the very man who went with me down to Crowpill, and it was an open carriage and not a fly. I was never in a close carriage all that day.

43,241. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it driven by Betty?—I cannot say; but I am under the impression that it was.

PEREGRINE BETTY recalled.

43,242. (Mr. Coleridge.) Betty, were you driving a close fly or an open one?—It was open that day. It may be closed up.

43,243. But it was open that day?—Yes.

STEPHEN COLIN JONES recalled.

(The witness.) I saw Mr. Collett in the fly with Betty at the time that he polled Bennett; about 12 o'clock. The words Mr. Collett said to me were these, "What will Parson Duck think of that?"

43,244. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did that mean?—I am in the habit of going to a place of worship. I do not know whether he alluded to that, I am sure; and when he came off the fly he said, "What will Parson Duck think of that?" That was about 12 o'clock.

43,245. (Mr. Price.) That is all you know?—Yes, I saw him about——

43,246. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you, or do you not, come here to support the statement that this man Betty has made?—I say here, I know I saw Collett on the fly.

43,247. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was 12 o'clock in the day. We are talking of three in the afternoon?—I never saw him about that time.

(Thomas Collett.) I should like you to ask that witness whether it was a close fly or an open one he saw me on.

43,248. (Mr. Coleridge to witness.) Was it a close fly or an open one you saw Mr. Collett in?—I almost think it was a close fly.

THOMAS COLLETT recalled.

(The witness.) It was a close fly that I took the temporary ride on. Betty was not driving a close one.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, he was, in one sense.

(Mr. Price.) It could be closed up. Perhaps part of the time that day it might have been closed, and perhaps part of the time it might have been open, which would account for the discrepancy in the statements as to what kind of fly it was.

(The witness.) It may be; but the fly I was on never was open at all. It was an ordinary old-fashioned fly with a swing door in it; the one I went from the polling booth in.

43,349. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you to say that between three and four you were not either on the box seat or any other seat of any fly by the side of the Turkish baths?—Certainly not.

43,250. Mr. Hodges admits that he was or might have been thereabouts at that time?—I was not there certainly about that time.

JOHN BIDGOOD sworn.

43,251. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A carpenter.

43,252. Where do you work?—Not for anybody particular.

43,253. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

43,254. How did you vote?—Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

43,255. What did you get for it?—Nothing at all.

43,256. Nothing at all?—No.

43,257. Did you vote at either of the elections of 1866?—No.

43,258. Did you ever vote before last time?—Yes.

43,259. When did you vote before last time?—I voted for Broadwood the last time he was here.

43,260. How was it you had no vote between that time and the last election?—Because I have not been living in a house of 10*l.* a year.

43,261. When you voted for Broadwood did you get anything?—Well, there was a promise of 20*l.*, and I got 6*l.* about three months after.

43,262. Who from?—Mr. Smith; he is dead. Old Mr. Smith.

43,263. Richard Smith?—Yes.

43,264. Did you ever vote before that?—No, not at the borough election.

43,265. (Mr. Anstey.) Whom do you mean by old Richard Smith?—The old gentleman that has been dead a good many years.

43,266. You mean the father——?—The father of Mr. Richard Smith.

ISAAC LOVELL sworn.

43,267. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

43,268. Where do you work?—At the iron foundry, Hennett and Spink's.

43,269. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

43,270. How?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,271. What did you get?—Nothing.

43,272. Did you get any promise?—No, nothing whatever.

43,273. Did you ever vote before last time?—No, never.

(Mr. Anstey.) Has anybody returned this man?

43,274. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there anybody else of your name?—No, not that I am aware of.

43,275. Did not you know money was going in the afternoon last time?—Oh, I had been to poll then.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

13 Oct. 1869.

JOHN LEE sworn.

J. Lee.

43,276. What are you?—An innkeeper.

43,277. (Mr. Coleridge.) Of what inn?—The "Star" inn.

43,278. Where is that?—Eastover.

43,279. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

43,280. How?—Mr. Westropp.

43,281. Westropp and Gray?—Westropp.

43,282. Westropp alone?—Yes.

43,283. What did you get?—Nothing.

43,284. Any promise?—No.

43,285. Had you any bill for treating?—No.

43,286. Did you vote at the elections of 1866?—Yes.

43,287. Both of them?—Yes.

43,288. Both times for Mr. Patton?—Mr. Patton and Mr. Westropp.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, no.

43,289. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Mr. Patton twice over, both times when he stood here?—Yes.

43,290. What did you get?—10*l.*

43,291. Each time?—Yes.

43,292. Who from?—I cannot say.

43,293. Where did you get it?—I got 10*l.* from——.

43,294. The "Golden Ball"?—No, not the "Golden Ball;" in John Street, the "Golden Lion."

43,295. Did you vote in 1865 for Westropp?—I voted four times altogether.

43,296. Well, did you vote for Mr. Westropp?—Yes, I always voted for Mr. Westropp.

43,297. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—I got 10*l.*

43,298. (Mr. Price.) Who from?—I cannot say.

43,299. Where?—A man brought it to my house: some person brought it into the house.

43,300. Did you vote in 1859, when Padwick and Westropp stood?—No.

43,301. Well, that is four times. That is all you voted?—Yes.

H. Fisher.

HENRY FISHER sworn.

43,302. What are you?—Foreman at Spiller and Company's foundry.

43,303. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

43,304. How?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,305. Did you get anything?—No.

43,306. Any promise?—No.

43,307. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you give anybody anything?—I let two men have the money, 10*l.* each.

43,308. Who?—John Hole and Abraham Hawkins.

43,309. At the last election?—Yes.

43,310. Where did you get that money?—From Mr. Bussell. The men were there, and I told him they would not go without money, and he gave it to me.

43,311. What time of the day?—About half-past 3, or from that to 4 o'clock.

43,312. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866?—No, I had no vote before.

43,313. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay any men in 1866?—No, I had 30*l.* from Allan for the purpose, but I returned it to him.

43,314. How was that?—The men I was going to give it to did not come.

43,315. Was that at Vanderbyl's election?—Yes.

43,316. Did you get anything for your trouble?—Yes, 2*l.*

43,317. Did you get anything for your trouble last time?—Nothing.

43,318. At Bagehot's election, did you get any money then?—No.

43,319. And the election before?—I was not there then.

H. Morrish.

HENRY MORRISH sworn.

43,320. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A smith.

43,321. Where do you work?—In the carriage department.

43,322. How did you vote at the last election?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,323. Did you get anything?—No.

43,324. Any promise?—No no promise; and no money.

43,325. Did you vote at the election of 1866?—No, I never had a vote before.

43,326. Had you any money to spend upon other people?—No.

43,327. Do you know a man called Philip Gilbert?—Yes.

43,328. Did you get any money from him?—No.

43,329. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get any money for him?—No.

43,330. (Mr. Price.) Philip Gilbert, junior?—I know him well.

43,331. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he offer you any money?—No, no one never offered me any money.

43,332. Did you ask him to get you something if it was going?—No, I did not.

43,333. (Mr. Price.) Did he ever speak to you about it?—No, I have never had any conversation with him about money.

43,334. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your name?—Henry Morrish.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is there another of that name here?

(Superintendent Lear.) No.

(Mr. Price.) He has been returned on a list, it seems, of Philip Gilbert, somehow or other.

43,335. (To the witness.) You have been returned upon a list by Philip Gilbert who had money to pay away in bribing. Your name seems to have been returned by him?—I can only account for it by my being in the district or near the neighbourhood where he has been living. He came and said to me something about voting, or how I was going to vote, and I told him, of course, I did not know how I was going to vote, because I was rather curiously situated.

43,336. (Mr. Anstey.) How do you mean?—In working at the carriage works. Of course I did not know how we should vote; still we had an option, every man to use his own mind.

43,337. (Mr. Price.) Still you thought it was very doubtful?—I voted according to my own principles. No one said I should not.

(Mr. Price.) That will do. That is the reason you are called here, Mr. Morrish, because you happen to be on Philip Gilbert's list.

T. Dyer.

THOMAS DYER sworn.

43,338. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A carpenter.

43,339. Where do you work?—I am working at the canal now.

43,340. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

43,341. How did you vote?—For Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

43,342. Did you get anything for it?—Yes.

43,344. Who from?—Robert Garrett.

43,345. Did you vote in the elections of 1866?—No.

43,346. You had no vote?—No.

43,347. The first time you voted was the last election?—Yes.

43,348. (Mr. Anstey.) What are you; a householder?—Not now; I was at the time.

JAMES PODGER sworn. J. Podger.

43,349. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Podger?—A carpenter.

43,350. Where do you work?—Mr. Roberts's.

43,351. The carriage factory?—Yes.

43,352. How did you vote at the last election?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,353. Did you get anything?—Yes.

43,355. Who from?—Robert Garrett.

43,356. Was that the first time you ever voted?—Yes. Mr. Allan stated that he gave me 10*l.*; that was false.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

43,357. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Allan, what do you say to that?—He is returned in my list by the men who kept check at the "New Inn."

43,358. Did you pay him 10*l.*?—I do not know. I cannot swear.

JAMES PODGER recalled. J. Podger.

43,359. (Mr. Price.) Who do you say paid you?—Robert Garrett.

43,360. Where?—At the "Queen's Head."

43,361. You were one of those paid at the "Queen's Head"?—Yes.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan

43,362. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that one of your houses?—No; I had nothing to do with the "Queen's Head."

JAMES PODGER recalled. J. Podger.

43,363. (Mr. Price.) You say Allan returned you, and did not pay you?—Yes.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

43,364. (Mr. Price.) Where were you sitting, Allan?—I was upstairs in the bedroom of the "New Inn."

JAMES PODGER recalled. J. Podger.

43,365. (Mr. Price.) Did you go to the "New Inn" at all?—During the day I was there.

43,366. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you get paid twice?—No.

43,367. (Mr. Price.) Were you shown up into a room?—No.

43,368. Where Allan was?—No, I never spoke to Mr. Allan until the morning when he had given his evidence, and I then went to his house and told him that he had given wrong evidence.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

(The witness.) This list would show that he had it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Somebody might have taken his name, and got the money.

43,369. (Mr. Price.) Probably somebody might have personated him?—That is a matter for Stacey and Culliford. They can explain that.

(Mr. Price.) Are either of them here?

(Superintendent Lear.) No.

WILLIAM KING sworn. W. King.

43,370. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. King, what are you?—Cordwainer.

43,371. How did you vote at the last election?—For the Liberal party, Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,372. Did you get anything?—Nothing at all.

43,373. Of any kind?—Nothing at all.

43,374. Neither promise nor money?—Neither promise nor money.

43,375. Did you vote before at any election?—No, the last was the first.

43,376. Has your name been returned, do you know, as having been bribed? Were you on Philip Gilbert's list?—Not as I am aware of.

43,377. Are there several of your name in the place?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) We have got hold of the wrong man.

GEORGE LUCKES sworn. G. Luckes.

43,378. (Mr. Price.) What are you you?—A mariner.

43,379. Did you vote at the last election?—No, I was not in the town.

43,380. Did you vote at the elections of 1866?—I did.

43,381. Both of them?—Mr. Vanderbyl's.

43,382. What did you get then?—10*l.*

43,383. Who from?—Captain Bussell.

43,384. Did you vote when Mr. Bagehot was here?—I did.

43,385. Did you vote for Mr. Bagehot?—Yes.

43,386. What did you get?—Nothing.

43,387. Did you get anything between the two elections?—Nothing whatever.

43,388. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything afterwards?—No.

43,389. How was that?—I do not know.

43,390. Did not you ask for it?—No.

43,391. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865?—Bagehot?

43,392. No, Westropp?—No.

43,393. Kinglake and Shelley?—No, Vanderbyl.

43,394. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote when Kinglake and Shelley were candidates?—No.

43,395. Did you vote before 1866?—No, I voted for Mr. Bagehot. That was the first election.

43,396. Before that did you vote?—No.

JOHN HILL sworn. J. Hill.

43,397. (Mr. Price.) What are you? What is your trade or calling?—I voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,398. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are you?—A cordwainer.

43,399. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

43,471. Where do you work ?—Carriage department.
43,472. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.
43,473. Who did you vote for ?—I voted for Mr. Westropp.
43,474. Did you get anything ?—No.
43,475. Any promise ?—No.
43,476. Did you vote at the time of Patton's election ?—Not for Mr. Patton, but for Mr. Westropp, in 1865.
43,477. Did you vote at all in 1866 ?—No.
43,478. How was that ?—I had no house.
43,479. In 1865 did you vote for Mr. Westropp ?—Yes.

43,480. What did you get?—10*l.*
43,481. Who from?—From Mr. Batten.
43,482. Did you vote in 1859?—No.
43,483. You had no vote? That was the only election?—I voted for Follett a long time back.
43,484. 1852 was that?—Yes. I voted for him twice, I think.
43,485. What did you get then?—No money at all. I had a little money for refreshment.
43,486. How much?—21*l.*, and I waited 12 months before I got the money.
43,487. You kept an inn?—Yes.
43,488. What inn?—The "Bull and Butcher."
43,489. You kept the "Bull and Butcher" in those days?—Yes.
43,490. How long after was it that you were paid?—Oh, 12 months. Then I voted for Follett again and had only 3*l.* 10*s.* for refreshments.
43,491. Besides that, have you ever had any money at other elections?—No.
(Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever have anything to do with giving money?
43,492. (Mr. Price.) With bribing?—Oh no; nothing.

JOHN SPENCER recalled.

(The witness.) I misunderstood, sir, in your talking. I voted for Mr. Vanderbyl once.
43,493. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—I never got anything for my my vote. I went and voted independent. There was something brought to my wife afterwards.
43,494. How much?—I do not know. I cannot tell.
43,495. Was it 10*l.*?—Perhaps it was. I never asked.
43,496. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you must send her here to tell us?—She is dead.

HENRY WILLIAM BATTEN recalled.

(The witness.) This is the witness of whom I spoke about giving 10*l.* to vote for Mr. Patton; and it was returned to me afterwards because he voted on the other side.

JOHN SPENCER recalled.

43,497. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then it was more than 10*l.* you got; 15*l.* was not it?—No, I do not know exactly what it was. I never asked her.

CHARLES CAVILL sworn.

43,498. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A wheelwright.
43,499. Where do you work?—Bristol and Exeter carriage department.
43,500. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.
43,501. How?—For Mr. Westropp and Gray.
43,502. Did you get anything?—No.
43,503. Did you vote at either of the elections of 1866?—I did.
43,504. Both of them?—Yes.
43,505. How did you vote each time?—I voted for Mr. Patton.
43,506. How much did you get?—10*l.* each.
43,507. Each time?—Yes.
43,508. Who from?—From Mr. William Henry Batten.
43,509. Did you vote in 1865 for Mr. Westropp?—I did.
43,510. Did you get anything then?—10*l.*
43,511. Who from?—Mr. William Henry Batten.
43,512. Did you vote in 1859?—No, I had no vote.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

(The witness.) Spencer, the witness before last, was paid 10*l.* at the first election by a Mr. Morrish.
43,513. (Mr. Price.) That might be to his wife?—It was had on the day of election.
43,514. (Mr. Price.) Yes; it may have been given to his wife?—Yes, it may have been.

JOHN SPENCER recalled.

43,515. (Mr. Price.) Did you get any 10*l.* on the day of Vanderbyl's election from Mr. Morrish?—No.
43,516. Did your wife ever tell you that Mr. Morrish had left something for her?—No.
43,517. Did you ever hear of the name of Morrish?—No. I never received any 10*l.* from Mr. Morrish.
(Mr. Price.) This man returned his 10*l.* he had from the other side, so I think we may trust him so far.

DAVID BROCK sworn.

43,518. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Brock?—Storekeeper in the carriage department.
43,519. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.
43,520. How?—Westropp and Gray.
43,521. Did you get anything?—No, nor no promise of anything.
43,522. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.
43,523. Mr. Patton?—Mr. Patton.
43,524. Each time?—Each time.
43,525. What did you get?—I got 10*l.* from Mr. Batten.
43,526. Both times?—Both times.
43,527. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes, for Mr. Westropp.
43,528. How much did you get?—10*l.* from Mr. Batten.
43,529. Did you vote in 1859?—I had no vote in 1859.
43,530. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had not any vote before that?—No.

WILLIAM STOCKER sworn.

43,531. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Stocker, what are you?—Clerk.
43,532. Where?—At the carriage department.
43,533. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.
43,534. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.
43,535. All you men from the carriage department appear to have voted one way?—No.
43,536. Nearly?—No, a great number voted on the other side.
43,537. Did you get anything?—No.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

W. Stocker.

13 Oct. 1869.

43,538. Did you vote at either of the elections of 1866 ?—Yes, both.

43,539. What did you get ?—10*l.* each.

43,540. Who from ?—Mr. Batten.

43,541. Did you vote in 1865 for Westropp ?—I had not a vote.

43,542. Did you have a vote before ?—No, not since I have been in Bridgwater.

43,543. (Mr. Coleridge.) Batten is your foreman ?—No.

43,544. What is he ?—A clerk, the same as myself.

43,545. Head clerk, is not he ?—No, Mr. Jarman is the head clerk.

T. Williams.

THOMAS WILLIAMS sworn.

43,546. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—I work in the trimming department of the carriage works.

43,547. Did you vote last time ?—I did.

43,548. Did you get anything ?—Nothing.

43,549. Who did you vote for ?—Westropp and Gray.

43,550. And you got nothing ?—No.

43,551. Did you vote in 1866 ?—Yes.

43,552. Who did you vote for ?—Westropp ; oh no, Patton.

43,553. What did you get then ?—10*l.* each.

43,554. Who from ?—From Mr. Batten.

43,555. Both times ?—Yes.

63,556. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.

43,557. Who for ?—Westropp.

43,558. What did you get then ?—10*l.*

33,559. Batten paid you then ?—Yes.

43,560. You must have looked upon Batten as the regular almsgiver. Did you vote before that, in 1859 ?—No, I had no vote.

W. Bird.

WILLIAM BIRD sworn.

43,561. (Mr. Price.) You voted at the last election ?—Yes.

43,562. Did you get anything ?—Nothing.

43,563. Did you vote for Vanderbyl and Kinglake ?—Yes.

43,564. Do you know your name was returned on Philip Gilbert's list as a man who received a bribe ?—I am sure I never had anything.

43,565. Did your wife get anything ?—Nothing at all.

43,566. Did you get a present afterwards ?—Nothing at all ; not a farthing.

43,567. (Mr. Anstey.) Did any of your family get anything ?—Nothing at all ; not a farthing.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

43,568. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Allan, can you tell us about this : Mr. Philip Gilbert, junior, seems to have had a list. Our chief clerk has got down here opposite a number of names, of which the last witness's is one, "Moneys received to bribe with but not bribed." Do you know anything about it ?—No, he had no money from us in the last election ; he must have referred to the election of 1866.

(Mr. Price.) You see this man had not a vote then.

(The witness.) Mr. Philip Gilbert had not a shilling of our money that I know anything about at the last election.

43,569. Was he employed at all at the last election ?—Not at all at either of them.

(Mr. Price.) Just look at this list, Mr. Allan, and see if you can recognize it.

H. Baker.

HENRY BAKER sworn.

43,570. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A rope-maker, only I work in a brickyard now.

43,571. Who for ?—Mr. Symmons.

43,572. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes. Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,573. Did you get anything ?—No.

43,574. Were you promised anything ?—No.

43,575. Did you vote at any election before ?—No, never.

43,576. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean to say you never got anything for your vote in your life ?—No.

43,577. (Mr. Price.) Perhaps there is some other person of your name here ?—I do not know.

G. Murray.

GOING MURRAY sworn.

43,578. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A tailor.

43,579. A master tailor, or a journeyman ?—I work for Mr. Buffett.

43,580. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes, for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,581. Did you get anything ?—10*l.*

43,582. Who from ?—I believe it was from Mr. Allan who was in the room. I could not swear it was he who gave it to me.

43,583. You were one of the persons shown up by Culliford and Stacey ?—Stacey was in the room at the time.

43,584. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were one of those who held back until the afternoon, and would not poll ?—I stopped back.

43,585. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866 ?—I did.

43,586. Who for ?—Vanderbyl.

43,587. Did you get anything then ?—20*l.*

43,588. Who from ?—10*l.* from Culliford, and 10*l.* from Bulpin.

43,589. Who paid the first 10*l.* ?—Culliford.

43,590. Did the next man know that you had 10*l.* ?—Yes.

43,591. And he gave you another 10*l.* ?—He gave me another 10*l.*

43,592. (Mr. Anstey.) How was that ?—I was told to stay in a house till what's-his-name, the baker, should see me.

43,593. Mr. Jarman ?—No, he lives just here.

43,594. Harden ?—No, Temblett. He passed by the door in the morning, and said, "Don't you go till you see me again." And during that time I happened to go out for a bit of a stroll, and I heard the market had rose, so I did not go to poll, and Culliford, he came in and wanted me to go to the poll, and I told him, no, I should not. "Well," he said, "if you will go, I will try to get you 5*l.* more." So of course I did not go on them conditions, and I went out and fell in with Bulpin, and he gave me 10*l.* and I went to poll.

43,595. At the election before, Bagehot's election, what did you get ?—10*l.* It was after the election ; from Mr. Smith.

43,596. What Mr. Smith ?—York House.

43,597. 1865 ?—I was away then.

43,598. Did you vote at any election before 1865 ?—No.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

13 Oct. 1869.

GEORGE HART sworn. G. Hart.

43,599. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A mariner.

43,600. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

43,601. Who for?—Westropp and Gray.

43,602. Did you get anything?—No.

43,603. No promise?—No.

43,604. Did you have any expenses for coming here to vote?—No.

43,605. Did you vote in 1866?—No, I never had a vote before.

43,606. Is there any other man of your name here, "George Hart"?—Not that I am aware of.

PHILIP GILBERT recalled. P. Gilbert.

43,607. (Mr. Price.) What have you got to say to this? Here are a number of men put down as if bribed. What do you mean by it?—I have not done anything of the kind.

43,608. You gave in a list, you know?—No, I have not.

43,609. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you give in a list to Allan?—No, I did not.

43,610. (Mr. Price.) Did you give any money away to anybody?—No.

43,611. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us what you did in 1866?—Yes.

JOHN ROBERTS sworn. J. Roberts.

43,612. (Mr. Coleridge.) What do you know about your daughter bribing some one?—I sent her with the money in the evening.

43,613. Who to?—To four.

43,614. Who are they?—Stoodley, Spencer, Matthews, and Hook.

43,615. What election?—1866. The second election of Patton and Vanderbyl.

43,616. Where did you get that money from?—Allan.

43,617. How much was it?—Ten and two twenties, I think. I am not quite certain about one of them, whether it was not 25*l.*, but two twenties and thirty.

43,618. And a ten?—A ten first.

43,619. 80*l.*?—Yes.

43,620. How much did you get for yourself?—None.

43,621. Have you done any bribing at other elections?—Never; not before or since.

43,622. Did you never get any money yourself for voting?—Never bribed.

43,623. What is your daughter's christian name?—Mary Anne.

43,624. (Mr. Anstey.) Is she unmarried?—She is married now, and she is living 150 miles from here.

43,625. (Mr. Anstey.) What is her surname?—Gibbon. Mr. Hook mentioned her name in giving his evidence.

CHARLES STONE sworn. C. Stone.

43,626. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Stone?—An innkeeper.

43,627. What do you keep?—The "New Inn."

43,628. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

43,629. How did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,630. Did you get anything for it?—10*l.*

43,631. Who from?—From Mr. Allan.

43,632. Had you a bill for treating besides?—Yes.

43,634. Did you have that paid?—Yes.

43,635. Who paid you?—George Finner.

43,636. Did you vote at either election of 1866?—No; that is the first I had.

43,637. Any treating in 1866?—No; I did not keep the inn then.

RICHARD HENRY HOBBS sworn. R. H. Hobbs.

43,638. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Hobbs?—A tailor.

43,639. Where do you work?—Mr. Nicholls's.

43,640. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

43,641. How?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,642. Did you get anything?—No.

43,643. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes.

43,644. How?—For Vanderbyl.

43,645. How much did you get?—10*l.*

43,646. Who from?—Mr. Searle.

40,647. Did you vote at Bagehot's election?—Yes.

43,648. For Bagehot?—For Bagehot.

43,650. Who from?—Mr. Searle, through Mr. Gold.

43,651. Did you vote in 1865?—I did.

43,652. Kinglake and Shelley?—Kinglake and Shelley.

43,653. Did you get anything?—No. That was my first vote.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Thursday, 14th October 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. C. Dare.

14 Oct. 1869.

MR. CHARLES DARE recalled.

43,654. (Mr. Price.) What do you want to say?—Betty said that I would vote for Mr. Westropp. I never said such words at all, and he said why I turned to the Liberal side was because my master was Liberal. I had no master at the time. I had nothing at all to do with any master.

43,655. (Mr. Anstey.) Was your last master a Conservative?—I believe he was a Liberal, but he named to me nothing at all about it.

43,656. (Mr. Price.) What were you before you took the Turkish baths?—A basket maker.

43,657. Under the employment of a person here?—No, my own self.

43,658. You talk of a master, were you ever in the employment of anybody?—When I came I was under Mr. Hurman at the Turkish baths, and I took it of him.

43,659. (Mr. Anstey.) He is a Liberal?—I suppose so, he never said anything to me about it.

43,660. What did Betty mean, when he said your master had been a Tory, and your present master a Liberal?—I never had any master at all. I never heard of it until he said so.

43,661. You never had a master?—I have had many, but he never said to me——

43,662. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote before the last election?—Never.

43,663. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you ever had a vote before the last election?—No.

43,664. What did you vote for, as a householder paying rates?—Yes.

43,665. Not as a ten-pounder?—No.

43,666. I do not mean as a person who receives 10*l.*, but rated at 10*l.*?—No; I vote for the house under the new franchise.

43,667. Household-rate franchise?—Yes.

43,668. (Mr. Price.) Are you on friendly terms with Betty?—Yes.

43,669. He had been in the habit of coming to you to buy baskets?—He might have been there two or three times.

43,670. Did you and he ever talk about voting?—Not to the best of my knowledge, he might have named it, but I never took any notice of it, not any conversation whatever.

43,671. You are Liberal in politics?—Yes.

43,672. What time had you voted?—Some time after dinner; about two o'clock I think, some time about that; but Mr. Westropp I told when he came to canvass me I should not vote for him, I had promised Mr. Kinglake.

43,673. I understood him to mean that some time before the election you had a discussion with him, and said you expressed your willingness to vote for Mr. Westropp?—Never in my life. I never heard of it until he said so here.

43,674. You still stick to it that he said you would have 30*l.*?—He did.

43,675. (Mr. Anstey.) I think you did not see the person with the blue fall?—No, I did not.

43,676. (Mr. Price.) You still say positively that he said you should have 30*l.* to vote for Mr. Westropp?—He did.

43,677. Did you believe that a man like Betty, a fly driver, had any authority?—Well, I do not know.

43,678. Did he tell you who had sent him?—No, he did not. He said if I would come to the "Clarence" with him I should have 30*l.* I heard what he said, and I said, "It is no use to humbug you. I have been to poll." And he said, "I hope you have done better on the other side."

43,679. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did anybody hear this?—No.

43,680. (Mr. Price.) That is the awkward part of the matter, because it is oath against oath, and as I said before it is no use talking anything about indicting a person for perjury when it would be likely to break down, the law properly requiring something more than a single oath against a single oath?—I do not wish to be hard upon the man.

(Mr. Price.) You are perfectly right to state it. There still remains the question we shall have to consider, how far Betty has sworn falsely with regard to what took place with your wife, because that may be a different matter, and there may be ground for having a prosecution instituted in respect of that.

F. Rose.

FRANCIS ROSE sworn.

43,681. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A gas-fitter.

43,682. Do you work under the corporation?—I am in the employment of Mr. Cornish, the manager of the Bridgwater Gasworks.

43,683. How did you vote at the last election?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

43,684. Did you get anything for it?—Yes.

43,685. What did you get?—10*l.* from Allan.

43,686. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time did you vote?—I should say about 10 minutes to 3.

43,687. How came you to keep back till so late?—I can hardly say why.

43,688. You waited back for the chance of money?—No, I did not.

43,689. Then what for?—I can scarcely say what I did it for.

43,690. You thought there might be money going?—I heard so in the day.

43,691. (Mr. Price.) How soon in the day did you hear that money was going?—Well, there was a general rumour all over the town that there would be money.

43,692. How soon?—I heard it as early as six in the morning.

43,693. (Mr. Anstey.) Whom did you hear it from?—I cannot give you the names, but it was a general rumour through the town that there would be money going on both sides.

43,694. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you were disappointed till three o'clock, and then you got the money and voted?—No, I was not disappointed.

43,695. (Mr. Price.) Did you get it before voting?—Yes, I did.

43,696. Did you vote in 1866?—No; I had no vote.

43,697. The last time was the first election at which you had a vote?—Yes; but not under the new franchise.

43,698. Under the old?—Yes.

43,699. You had got a house of your own?—Yes; but no vote.

43,700. How was that?—Because I had not paid rates long enough.

ALEXANDER WILLIAM KINGLAKE sworn. A. W. Kinglake.

43,701. (Mr. Price.) Before we begin to examine you, I may state that it is only after very grave and serious consideration that we have determined to examine you, and so give you an opportunity of giving an explanation, and having your certificate given you if your statements are satisfactory; otherwise we should have thought, and had for some time during the inquiry, it was our duty to treat you as we have treated Mr. Vanderbyl, namely, not to examine him at all, but leave the Attorney-General to deal with him. However, we have thought under all the circumstances of the case that we should not take that extreme course with you, and therefore we have determined on examining you. Now, before going into the merits of the election, there are one or two things which we wish to have explained. When we arrived here on the 23rd August last, we received a letter through our secretary, which was in your handwriting I presume—I hold it in my hand—which was dated August 21st, 1869, but without any address; and having read that we directed our secretary—he received it on the 23rd, the day we arrived, therefore we did not take any notice of it till after we had been here and opened the court—to write to you to the address which he had then in this neighbourhood, and that letter you got I suppose some time or other, informing you that we thought it our duty to rescind or revoke the permission we had given you in London to go to the Crimea, which you had made a special request for. We were therefore considerably surprised to get no answer whatever to that letter, and we were still more surprised when we heard, more perhaps from rumour than anything else, that you had actually left the country. You might perhaps have acted under the impression that having received our permission to go to the Crimea, and it not having been at that time revoked, you were at full liberty to go. Still we were very much surprised that you, having received from the secretary this letter, in which we rescinded the permission to you, you took no notice whatever of it, supposing that it reached you. We shall be glad to know whether it did, and why it is you had not the courtesy, to say the least of it, to write to explain you had left the country before you received our letter?—I shall be most happy to explain all the facts most fully. The letter in question, the statement, was written at Timberscombe, but when I was on the eve of going to London with the view of going abroad, taking advantage of the permission the Commissioners had kindly given me, I caused that letter to be put in the post. On the Sunday I believe, the 22nd or the 23rd, I went off to London, having requested my sister-in-law not to forward me any more letters, because I was only going to be, as I expected, a few hours in London, and I thought it would be only an embarrassment, I should not have time to answer them. Of course I had not any notion of any letter coming from the Commissioners, and accordingly the letter was kept here. When after I had executed my intention of going to the Crimea, and came, so to speak, back to Constantinople, on Monday the 4th of this month, I received a copy of that letter. I had not the smallest conception that there existed such a letter till that moment.

43,702. (Mr. Price.) A copy?—Yes; my sister-in-law had made it. She thought she might copy it, seing that it was on Her Majesty's service, and inferring who it was from.

43,703. The Bridgwater postmark would be on it?—No doubt; and instead of sending the original, which would be inconvenient on account of the post, it was copied on thin paper, no doubt an accurate copy of it.

43,704. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you receive that; what day?—On the Monday the 4th of this month, at Constantinople. The instant I received it I addressed a letter to the Commissioners, which I think they would receive to-day, because a letter which I posted at the same time has come into the neighbourhood to-day. I addressed a respectful letter to the Commissioners, saying that having received this communication——

(Mr. Price.) We have received a letter this morning, apparently with a postmark of the 6th of October, at Constantinople.

(Mr. Anstey.) You had better look at it. There is the Constantinople postmark on it.

43,705. (Mr. Price.) Two days later than you think?—It was written on the 4th; I can speak to that.

43,706. (Mr. Anstey.) But you will see Constantinople, October the 6th; first of all the stamp of the Hotel d'Angleterre, and in the next place, "Constantinople, October the 6th." That is two days afterwards?—Yes, it is the 6th, but it was posted on the 5th; that is, posted at the hotel, as is the custom there. Probably they had the custom of detaining the letters at the hotel until they know that the post is going, but the letter was written by me on the 4th, posted on the 5th, and seems to have arrived here to-day. In that letter I stated, as the Commissioners know, that I should immediately start for England; and if my health and strength should not give way——

43,707. (Mr. Price.) That is an explanation; the only thing is that it is an unlucky thing that we should not have had it before, because it would have removed any misapprehension from our minds, which you cannot be surprised at our being under?—Certainly.

43,708. That studied silence was preserved up to the present moment on your part as far as we know?—I quite see it.

43,709. Therefore that is an explanation, that it was not forwarded; but we wish we had known that, and it is an unfortunate thing that we did not. If your sister-in-law had taken the trouble to inform us, it would have removed any misapprehension on our part as to the cause of your silence?—I beg your pardon. I may be allowed to say that I have journeyed to England with most extraordinary haste.

43,710. Your relatives are very diligent in writing public comments in the newspapers; and if they knew that your letters were not forwarded, they might have done a good deal more for you by informing us than abusing us—if they had explained what was certainly very unintelligible to us, your apparently studied silence with regard to that letter, while it was utterly unexplained. It really went forth to the public as if we had let you go out of the country under the original permission; and then in your absence remarks were made which were very naturally called forth now and then with respect to parts of the evidence; of course we all the while were under the belief that having written a letter revoking our permission to you you had taken no notice of it, but in a certain sense set us at defiance?—I can quite understand that.

43,711. If proper permission had been given, your relatives, one of them at all events, must have known. Your statement was so very important that we wished to have you examined as early as we could, and therefore we revoked the permission. Anything like the notion should not have gone abroad that we were dealing in any way unfairly with you in your absence, because it ought to have been made known that we considered it our duty at that particular juncture, under the circumstances, to revoke the permission to go abroad. If the public had known we had done that, I do not think they would have been led away by statements which I think are calculated to create the idea that we let you go, and having let you go taken advantage of your absence to animadvert upon you. That disposes of that.—I hope that I may be allowed to say that I was particularly diligent in making my journey from Constantinople. I believe I made one of the most rapid journeys that ever was made—in six days.

43,712. (Mr. Anstey.) In one of those communications to which the learned Chief Commissioner has alluded, stress is laid most distinctly, I am bound to say, on the fact which I do not deny that you obtained permission to go to the Crimea, but the fact, which is as much a fact, as the other, that that permission was revoked, or intended to be revoked, and was revoked in fact, though the revocation does not seem to have been seen by you, is studiously suppressed, these communications thereby leaving the public under a false impression as to our good faith and fairness. It was very wrong of your relations to have done anything of the sort?—I was not aware of it.

43,713. (Mr. Price.) Now we propose to commence with your earliest introduction to this borough, and to examine you with regard to your contest in 1852. It is known that you are connected with the neighbourhood, and have been more or less all your life, and we understand that you were introduced here by an independent party in the borough; is that so?—Yes. Might I be permitted, before we go into what may be called the electioneering history, to deal with the portion of the case relating to the evidence which I gave before Mr. Justice Blackburn?

43,714. (Mr. Price.) You shall have the earliest opportunity afforded you of saying anything you like about it. As a matter of convenience we think it better to keep chronological order as much as possible, and think the better course would be to begin with your earliest introduction to the borough. Who was the first person who communicated with you, or with whom you first communicated as to your intention to come forward in 1852?—Mr. Bate.

43,715. You are a barrister, and were once a practising barrister?—I practised at the chancery bar for many years.

43,716. Did you also go the circuit?—I went once, as was the custom of chancery men to do in those days.

43,717. You practised at the chancery bar for some time, I believe?—Yes.

43,718. And had been practising when you were first introdnced here in 1852 as a candidate?—Yes.

43,719. You were then a practising barrister?—Yes.

43,720. The late Mr. Bate you say was the first you communicated with?—Yes.

43,721. Had he been an intimate friend of your family?—He was very well known to them.

43,722. He filled here the position of what is called a certificated conveyancer?—Yes.

43,723. Not a solicitor, but a certificated conveyancer?—Yes, and I think it would be an error to name him as what is called an agent. He no doubt was an agent for me, but he never in his life deigned to receive any sort of remuneration from me.

43,724. In that time when he introduced you did you know anything more than common of the politics of the borough, of the way in which elections were managed here, and had been for some series of years?—I knew somewhat rudely; I certainly always thought former elections here were very corrupt. Then I understood there had been a rally in that respect, and a very strong feeling prevailed on the part of those who wished to terminate what they considered a kind of intrigue, resulting in what is popularly called a return of one and one, and Mr. Bate desired to put an end to that state of things.

43,725. Who was the leading man you knew of on your side in politics who had been a party to this one and one arrangement up to that time?—Well, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, on behalf of Colonel Tynte, I have always understood rather favoured that view.

43,726. On the other side who was a leading man?—Mr. Richard Smith on the other side.

43,727. Is that the old Mr. Richard Smith?—Yes.

43,728. There are two Richard Smiths and Mr. Bealy Smith, was it the old Mr. Smith, or the one now alive?—I believe the one who is now alive.

43,729. (Mr. Anstey.) The lawyer?—The lawyer.

43,730. (Mr. Price.) That is what you knew as you say rudely. Did Mr. Bate go any further into the history of the thing with you before you came down here?—I had abundance of conversation on the subject. It was supposed that my election would be pretty easily secured if the rivalry between the Liberal candidates could be got rid of, but at that election there was a thorough Liberal candidate, Lord Henley, and the consequence was that it came to a real contest. Lord Henley and I clashed; we each unfortunately rather committed ourselves in promising to undertake to go to the poll, and that state of things could not be got rid of.

43,731. (Mr. Price.) Who was the means of introducing Lord Henley here?—Well, there had been formed a Liberal association here with a view, no doubt, to improve the conduct of elections for the borough.

43,732. Who was the moving person in that matter?—Well, there was Mr. Nicholls, Mr. Sully, and a great many of those who are now here.

43,733. Mr. James Wood Sully?—Yes.

43,734. (Mr. Coleridge.) Lord Henley at that time was more a Peelite than a Liberal, was not he?—No, I think he put forward rather strong Liberal opinions. He was in favour of the ballot at that time; I was not, and that gave him a great advantage over me.

43,735. (Mr. Price.) Was Mr. Benjamin Lovibond interested in any way in that matter?—Yes, and Colonel Tynte coalesced so to speak with Lord Henley.

43,736. Then he threw over the one and one arrangement which you understood to have existed?—Yes.

43,737. And he did that to favour Lord Henley in preference to yourself?—Yes, so that there was the strongest antagonism at that time.

43,738. Who was the earliest in the field, you or Lord Henley?—I was first in the field.

43,739. When you came into the field did you put yourself in communication in any way with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond?—No, I was most strongly opposed to him at that time.

43,740. (Mr. Anstey.) Then who was your lawyer in the matter?—Mr. Bate.

43,741. He was a conveyancer, but who was your solicitor?—Mr. Henry Lovibond and Mr. Paul Reed, and Mr. Brice at that time was Liberal.

43,742. (Mr. Priee.) Did you put yourself in communication with those gentlemen as soon as you came here?—Yes.

43,743. With a view to contesting the election?—Yes.

43,744. Was anything said by them at that time about money at all?—No, nothing.

43,745. I will ask what arrangement did you make about money, first as to legal expenses, and whether you made any other arrangements?—None whatever, because it never came to a real contest.

43,746. Did not you go to the poll?—I did go to the poll, but it was not a real contest, because we quite knew that unless one of the three Liberals could be got out, there never could be a real election.

43,747. Then you made no arragements as to any expenditure whatever?—None at all.

43,748. Were you pressed by anyone to spend money with a view to secure your success over Lord Henley?—No, nothing of the kind was thought of then.

43,749. (Mr. Coleridge.) But Colonel Tynte was returned, was not he?—Yes, Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett.

43,750. The one and one held together although there were other candidates in the field?—Yes.

43,751. (Mr. Price.) Who polled most, you or Lord Henley?—Lord Henley.

43,752. (Mr. Anstey.) When you said Mr. Brice was one of your lawyers, did you mean Mr. Brice or his firm?—No, Mr. Brice. I never knew but one Mr. Brice here.

43,753. Was not there a firm in which he was a member? I ask the question because Mr. Brice was very clear in his evidence that though he took part in one or two elections it was in his capacity as member of a firm.

(Mr. Brice.) No, I did not come till 1857. I was in the office, and succeeded to the office of Mr. Gooding in his business.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Brice says he did not come till 1857, and then he succeeded to the office of Mr. Gooding, whose business he succeeded to. When he was on his own account and had gained a vote in the place, then he declined to be agent on the Liberal side any further, saying his politics were Conservative; but during the first six months of his being here not having a vote he consented to act as agent, but that is not till 1857.

43,754. (Mr. Coleridge.) You must have been thinking of 1857, not 1852, when Mr. Brice acted for you?—Yes.

43,755. (Mr. Price.) Then is it quite certain that during that time you were never brought in communication with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond?—Not into friendly communication with him.

43,756. If not friendly communication, in what way were you brought into communication with him?—Well, he was at arm's length, as hostile as possible. I was more hostile to him at that time than to the Conservatives.

43,757. Why was that?—Because I suppose rivalry was more bitter than antagonism.

43,758. But one would suppose that Lord Henley was the man you would be more disposed to be against, because he was dividing what you call the independent party, was not he?—Well, we thought he was, and he thought I was.

43,759. And neither would give way?—Neither would give way.

43,760. (Mr. Coleridge.) Colonel Tynte was the old member?—He was the old member.

43,761. (Mr. Price.) Was any negotiation at all entered into for the purpose of inducing you to resign?—No.

43,762. Made by Mr. Lovibond or anybody on behalf of what you call the old managers of the party?—No, never, excepting canvassing. We were very often met with this, "Why do so and so, and let the Liberal party be divided? One of you ought to retire." We were naturally very often met with that.

43,763. (Mr. Anstey.) In your personal canvass did you canvass for yourself only, or for yourself and one of the two others, and if so, which of them?—Only for myself. I had a separate flag, a separate organization in every respect.

43,764. (Mr. Price.) We must ask you as a matter of form what did your election cost you? There is no supposition that there was any bribery at all proved to us, in any way, on the part of yourself, that is to say?—I think it cost me some 300*l.* or 400*l.* 300*l.* I should say, speaking from memory.

43,765. A great part of that would go to the lawyers, I suppose?—No; none of the lawyers received anything, because I was defeated then, and no lawyer received anything to my recollection.

43,766. The whole 300*l.* was expended in what were then legal expenses. Is that so?—Yes; the legal expenses were rather larger in those days.

43,767. Flags were allowed and banners, and so on?—Yes, and conveyances.

43,768. Did you pay up the whole of that before you left the place?—I paid the whole of that immediately I received the bill.

43,769. Therefore it was cleared off before you became candidate at the next election?—Yes.

43,770. Between that time and 1857 did you spend anything in the borough in the way of charities at all?—No.

43,771. When you left in 1852 did you express your intention in any way of coming forward to contest the place again?—I daresay I did.

43,772. And you intended to do so?—I intended to do so if anything should occur; but when the election of 1857 was approaching the members of the Liberal party here very wisely determined to prevent the confusion that had occurred at the first election, and to say that neither Lord Henley or myself should be candidates, in order to put an end to that ancient rivalry, and that state of things went on some week or more. I think they were looking out for a candidate.

43,773. When you say "they" tell us who the persons were who were looking out for a candidate?—The leading men of the two sections.

43,774. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond on the one side, and Mr. Bate and Mr. Henry Lovibond on the other.

43,775. Do you mean to say that Mr. Bate and Mr. Lovibond had agreed previous to that that neither you nor Lord Henley should be candidates in 1857?—Exactly. Then he found a difficulty in obtaining a candidate.

43,776. I am asking you before, you come to that, had you said anything in 1852 when you were candidate or afterwards to Mr. Bate or Mr. Lovibond to the effect that you would not spend money in corrupt purposes whenever you came to the borough, and whether that operated at all?—No, I think not.

43,777. Had that anything to do with their saying they would not have you?—No, I do not recollect they ever said so.

43,778. What do you mean to attribute it to, their determination about that?—The ancient rivalry.

43,779. They thought Lord Henley would come again as well as yourself?—Yes; they thought if both were declined it would be impossible, and the ancient rivalry would be got rid of, and as the election approached they found that they could get no candidate in time, and some one I understood said, "Why "should we be in this difficulty about a candidate "when we have two men, either of whom would suit "us, Lord Henley and Mr. Kinglake." And there was a discussion as I understood between a body of men who met for the purpose. They divided as to the choice of those two, and it was determined by a small majority that I should be the candidate. Then all Lord Henley's friends acted with the greatest loyalty in the performance of the engagement which had been entered into before that.

43,780. Who is the leading man who was Lord Henley's friend except Mr. Benjamin Lovibond?—Well, there were some of the most important men in the place, Mr. Nicholls and Mr. Sully.

43,781. Any of the lawyers?—No, I think not any lawyers.

43,782. Had Lord Henley always professed purity principles?—No, I am not aware that he had, putting it in that form.

43,783. Now as the election was approaching you say they elected you by a small majority as their candidate?—Yes. Then Lord Henley's friends became as loyal and as much attached to me as ever they had been, every man from the beginning, so that there was perfect unanimity between the party.

43,784. When you first met the united party on the footing of being a candidate, was anything said to you then about the necessity of being a candidate if there were a contest?—No, all this was after the writ had been sent down; I came down in a hurry.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct, 1869.

43,785. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you and Lord Henley's party got into accord together, what was the position between you and Colonel Tynte's party? Was it perfectly hearty sympathetic terms or not?—Entirely separate agents; a certain amount of distrust perhaps remaining, but still acting amicably together.

43,786. And when you canvassed did you ask also for Colonel Tynte?—No.

43,787. You canvassed separately?—Entirely.

43,788. Mr. Follett was the other candidate?—Yes.

43,789. Were your agents the same as before?—Yes.

43,790. Mr. Henry Lovibond?—Yes.

43,791. Mr. Paul Reed?—Yes, and it now appears Mr. Brice.

43,792. Who was then in partnership with Mr. Gooding, do you remember; Mr. Gooding was his partner?—No.

43,793. At that election you were returned?—Yes.

43,794. Mr. Follett was turned out?—Yes.

43,795. By what majority were you elected; do you remember?—I do not recollect. It was a strong majority, considering the size of the constituency at that time.

43,796. The constituency was about 500 at that time, I suppose?—Yes, between 500 and 600, according to my impression; and I think, speaking from memory, I was returned by something like a majority of 60.

43,797. (Mr. Anstey.) Eighty over the one, and 40 over the other?—I do not recollect the numbers.

43,798. (Mr. Price.) What did you spend at the election? I will come to the after expenditure presently. What did you pay yourself at the time of the election?—The sums I have mentioned in that statement.

43,799. You have mentioned a large sum; was it all one lump sum? We must have it on the notes; what were the published expenses?—I have not the figures before me.

43,800. 158*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* were the expenses paid to the election auditor?—Yes.

43,801. That was paid, of course, within a specified time, to meet the statute?—Yes.

43,802. Within a month, I suppose?—Yes.

43,803. (Mr. Anstey.) That it may appear on the notes, it may be as well to inform you that the Chief Commissioner is reading from the statement which you sent to the Commissioners?—Yes.

43,804. (Mr. Price.) I am reading the figures. We find that that was paid on June 15th, 1857, which would be a short time after the election, would not it?—Yes.

43,805. Then you put down June 19th, 1857, to Mr. Bate, that is the late Mr. Bate, this expense, "Bringing up absent voters," and various expenses which for some reason were not included in the auditor's accouni, 200*l.*?—Yes.

43,806. Now "expenses in bringing up voters;" were they brought any great distance?—That is a very considerable item in this place, because a great many of the voters are what are called captains.

43,807. Mariners?—Yes; and they are very often in a distant port, and they could not possibly afford to come to an election, and would not come unless the expense of bringing them up was defrayed.

43,808. (Mr. Coleridge.) And something over the expenses also?—I believe so; yes. I do not at all undertake to say——

43,809. (Mr. Price.) Therefore that 200*l.* may, in point of fact, not only have covered travelling expenses, but money paid besides in bribing, in fact, some of these men?—No bribes, I think.

43,810. If a man has his bare expenses, that is no bribe at that time, because it was legal; now it is illegal. But if he had anything beyond his expenses, according to Cooper v. Slade and other cases, it would be direct bribery at that time; anything beyond expenses?—I daresay in the 200*l.* there was included many little things which would not bear the light.

43,811. In that 200*l.* were there any treating bills?—No, I think not. Mr. Bate always set himself strongly against it.

43,812. Are you able to say whether there were any treating bills sent in to you at any time after that election?—No.

43,813. Or when you stood again, was any demand made against you for outstanding treating bills?—Never.

43,814. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have in the course of these proceedings heard that there was considerable bribery at that election on behalf of the Liberals; do you know anything of the way in which money was spent on behalf of Colonel Tynte; do you know he was bribing?—I have not any idea. I always understood that on his part, as well as mine, it was a perfectly pure election.

43,815. (Mr. Anstey.) You were about the town on the polling day of that election, I suppose?—Yes.

43,816. You must therefore have seen a good deal of the drunkenness or treating to which the witnesses who have been before us have deposed on that day?—I do not recollect anything of the kind.

43,817. If you did not pay the treating bills—and when I say "you," I mean your friends on the Liberal side—who did?—I had no idea that there was any treating.

43,818. It is sworn to to a considerable extent. The question is, if you did not pay them, who did?—Well, at all events, all I can say is that I never paid, or was asked to pay, anything beyond that 200*l.*

43,819. (Mr. Price.) Was any arrangement made in any way between Colonel Tynte and you, who you say were acting in perfect accord, though through separate agents, as to the proportion of the expenditure by each?—No.

43,820. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind that I know of.

43,821. (Mr. Coleridge.) Colonel Tynte was in solvent circumtances at that time?—I believe he was very much embarrassed, but his father was alive.

43,822. And was in a position to help him?—Yes, he was a man of very large estates.

43,823. We have also heard that he had a sister who assisted him at his election?—Yes, there was always money forthcoming.

43,824. (Mr. Price.) I find the next item was April 13th, 1857, which must be a wrong date; it seems to have been paid long before the election, as the election was in June; "Present to Mr. Henry Lovibond for services at the election, 100*l.*" ?—Yes.

43,825. (Mr. Colerdge.) Was that paid before the election or after?—After the election.

43,826. (Mr. Price.) Then that is a mistake in the date?—Yes.

43,827. And the total expenditure is 458*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Is that the whole sum you paid either at or after the election in respect of that contest?—Yes.

43,828. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were any demands made on you which you declined to pay afterwards?—No.

43,829. (Mr. Anstey.) Were there any demands made on you which you did not decline to pay?—No.

43,830. (Mr. Price.) Between that and the first election, a period of two years, did you pay any money, whether in respect of charities or gratuities of any sort in the borough?—As soon as I was returned I became a subscriber to several charities, but the subscription was on a moderate scale. There was a subscription which I still maintain, because it is so good an institution—the infirmary. Then there were several small subscriptions for quasi religious purposes.

43,831. (Mr. Coleridge.) And also one for racing purposes, I suppose?—Yes, there was the racing.

43,832. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any application for loans of money upon personal or doubtful security?—Not after the election of 1857.

43,833. But before it at any time?—No.

43,834. (Mr. Price.) Or any notes of hand, or anything of that kind?—No.

43,835. Were you applied to at any time by men who said they would support you who were distressed for money, and asked for it?—Not as the result of the election of 1857.

43,836. No; but between 1857 and 1859 did you have any application made in that form, or anything like that form, by men who said they were distressed, and were in want of money, and who said they were voters or your friends?—No, not within those dates.

43,837. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before you go to 1859 what did you put down as the cost of this borough annually in those two years you represented, between 1857 and 1859?—Well, I really never had a list, which one ought to have had, showing the amount.

43,838. I mean about. Mr. Westropp spent about 380*l.* a year on it?—My impression is that mine is between 90*l.* and 110*l.*

43,839. (Mr. Anstey.) Not one farthing of which you would have subscribed if you had not been a member for the borough, I suppose?—Yes; I was saying that the infirmary is an institution which I still support.

43,840. But you did not subscribe to it as a matter of fact until you became member for the borough. When I say that, you would not probably have paid any of those subscriptions if you had not become member for the borough?—No.

43,841. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Follett did not spend any money?—I believe not.

43,842. Not to any extent to corrupt the constituency?—No.

43,843. Now we come to 1859. Between 1857 and 1859 was there any greater cordiality between you and Colonel Tynte and his party, any greater unanimity?—Yes, I think it rather increased.

43,844. Was any arrangement made that in case of a future election you should be one of the accepted candidates of the Liberal party?—Yes, that was the case in 1857, and that continued to 1859, with, I should say, increased cordiality.

43,845. (Mr. Coleridge.) During those two years what was the arrangement between you and Colonel Tynte as to the Government patronage that was to be got for the borough. Did he, as senior member, arrange it, or how was it?—There never was any sort of arrangement. I think the practice was this, that the voter wrote to which of us he chose, and the one who received the application dealt with it.

43,846. (Mr. Anstey.) But during the greater portion of those two years, 1857 to 1859, neither you nor Colonel Tynte had anything to do with Government patronage. Lord Derby was a second time prime minister?—Lord Derby became prime minister in 1858.

43,847. The beginning of 1858?—Was it the beginning?

43,848. The very beginning of 1858. Then the election of 1859 was in July. That comes to a year and a half out of the two years.

43,849. (Mr. Coleridge.) There were only a few months that you could have exercised any Government patronage?—Yes.

43,850. (Mr. Price.) Now we come to the election of 1859. At that election yourself and Colonel Tynte were candidates on the Liberal side, and Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp were candidates on the other side?—Yes.

43,851. When it was known there would be a contest, Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp were coming down, and it was pretty sure there would be a contest, was there any arrangement made between you and Colonel Tynte, or those who acted for Colonel Tynte, as to what money should be spent?—No.

43,852. Nothing of the kind?—No.

43,853. Was not the question discussed as to the probability of money being spent by the Conservatives?—I daresay the discussion took place, but not to my knowledge.

43,854. I mean with you or in your presence?—I have no doubt, surmising as to whether there would or not be money.

43,855. Was there any request or intimation made to you that if money was spent on the other side, because that seems always the course pursued here, it would be necessary for you to spend money?—No.

43,856. Nothing of the sort?—No.

43,857. Did you enter into that contest then with a full belief that you were not to be called on to spend any money illegally?—Yes.

43,858. Fully impressed with that idea were you?—Yes, I went into that election as I did all others, with the hope that money would not be spent on the Conservative side.

43,859. Did not you, when you heard the name of Padwick, for instance—they say that Mr. Gray's name sounded like money—did not you think that Mr. Padwick, a complete stranger to the borough, utterly unknown to anybody in the borough, coming down here, meant it also?—I ought to have done, no doubt.

43,860. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was an ugly sounding name, that of Padwick, in the contest, I should think?—Yes.

43,861. (Mr. Price.) Now Mr. Bate was your manager, as it is called?—Yes.

43,862. Was Mr. Henry Lovibond acting for you again?—Yes.

43,863. And Mr. Paul Reed?—Yes.

43,864. Mr. Brice has told us at that time he did not take any fee on the Liberal side, he was acting himself for the Conservatives. Now the election resulted in your return with Colonel Tynte?—Yes.

43,865. And you were in a large majority?—Yes.

43,866. And tolerably early in the day, were not you? Mr. Padwick told us that he left in disgust about the middle of the day, as it appeared a hopeless thing?—Yes.

43,867. You and Colonel Tynte had a very large majority?—Yes.

43,868. Now I will take your figures which you have given us. The published expenses are 248*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*; that is very nearly double, 90*l.* more than your election expenses in 1857, when you say they were large. How do you account for that 248*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* as against 158*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Does that include anything besides what you call the legal expenses?—That does not include any agents fees, that 248*l.*

43,869. Are you sure of that?—I am sure.

43,870. Because I see afterwards Mr. Lovibond had his usual present of 100*l.* as well?—Yes, but I think it included payment of some other agents; I am not sure.

43,871. You seem to have paid in September 1859, which was, I suppose, pretty much about the same time after the election, as usual about a month?—The election was in the summer.

(Mr. Anstey.) On the 18th July was the polling day.

43,872. (Mr. Price.) How soon after that were you called upon to pay any more money?—Pretty nearly at the same time. In that same month of September 1859, about three months after the election, my brother became aware that Bate had expended a sum of money at the election.

43,873. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did your brother always act as go-between at the elections?—I do not know about that.

43,874. Did he assist you?—He was on the spot.

43,875. (Mr. Price.) The doctor?—Yes.

43,876. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was generally present with you here?—No, we were attached as brothers; he was rarely present here.

43,877. Did you pay your accounts through him in any way; did he settle your accounts?—Yes, very often.

43,878. Did he settle them and you afterwards with him?—Sometimes one and sometimes the other.

43,879. (Mr. Price.) You say he was the medium of communication between you and Bate?—Yes.

43,880. He informed you of how much had been spent. I will assist your memory with the figures here if you like. You put down here the sum you found afterwards Mr. Bate had expended, or whether you shield him from the expenditure. You say you do not believe he had expended it, but had Mr. Bate

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

or other persons who had dealt with it on your behalf expended the sum of 1,125*l.* 15*s.* ?—Yes.

43,881. That is what your brother told you ?—Yes, there is a slight over-statement. That is taken from the banker's book, but it included a small sum for interest. The actual sum expended by Bate in that way appears to be 1,070*l.*

43,882. What was the interest for ?—The sum I paid was in the following year.

43,883. Quite right ?—And I think it included a sum for interest ?

43,884. The 3d October 1860 ?—The sum I made good was the sum which the Commissioner has before him.

43,885. That is the sum ; the interest irrespective of this item, or the interest on that sum ?—The item itself, with a small sum for interest on it.

43,886. That you were informed of by your brother, how soon after the election ; you paid it about a year after the other payment. Did your brother inform you of that ?—Well, sir, what passed was this: I think the early part of 1860 Mr. Bate was seriously ill. My brother thought that it was not desirable that he should have a thing of that kind on his mind, and it would be better that it should be paid, and therefore it was paid the date you have there.

43,887. (Mr. Price.) Then did you understand from that, before the time you speak of, Bate being ill, he had communicated to your brother the engagements he had on your behalf ?—Yes.

43,888. How soon after the election did you understand that Bate had made the revelations to your brother ?—Well, sir, I have made the explanation in my statements, which corresponds to the expression I have used about it, that I gradually came to know about it, but I do not think I ever knew the actual sum until it was settled.

43,889. Then your brother may have been informed much earlier than he chose to tell you ?—Yes.

43,890. (Mr. Anstey.) What fact was it then that made that impression on your mind, that the communication between Mr. Bate and your brother had passed ?—The conversation with my brother, no doubt.

43,891. (Mr. Price.) Then equally, Mr. Bate being ill, your brother, I suppose, pressed on you that it was time to pay this ?—He paid it himself, and I settled with him.

43,892. There is no doubt whatever that you had no doubt in your mind that the 1,070*l.* of the money was spent illegally ?—No doubt the larger portion of it was.

43,893. It must, because your published expenses were 248*l.* and 100*l.* for Mr. Lovibond. It could not be anything else ?—No.

43,894. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any knowledge what amount Colonel Tynte spent at that election ?—No.

43,895. You never heard from Mr. Bate that he had paid a corresponding sum ?—No.

43,896. You were at this time on good terms with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond ?—Yes, not on confidential terms.

43,897. You never heard from him that Colonel Tynte's expenses were about the same as your own ?—No.

43,898. Then comes November 14th, 1859, the present to Mr. Henry Lovibond of 100*l.*, making the total expenditure by you at that election a total of 1444*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* ; was that the whole sum you were called on at that time, or any time afterwards, to pay at that election ?—Yes.

43,899. Now I come to the time of the petition. There was a petition threatened, was not there, or actually presented and referred to the election committee against your return ?—Yes, but abandoned.

43,900. I am going to that. How soon did you become aware, or was any communication made to you through the ordinary channel of the House of Commons, that any petition was going to be presented against you ?—My impression is that I actually heard it in the House of Commons.

43,901. The House of Commons ?—That is my impression. I would not say it with confidence.

43,902. Therefore Mr. Bate or none of your friends down here had informed you of the fact ?—No.

43,903. Or your brother ?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) It was presented to the House of Commons, according to the Journals, volume 114, folio 123a, on the 21st of June 1859, and referred to an election committee on the 2nd of August 1859, and withdrawn on the same day by letter signed Baxter, Rose, and Norton, as agents for the petitioners.

43,904. (Mr. Price.) Now having become aware, you say your impression is merely in the House of Commons of the matter, what further communication was made to you about it. I suppose you took some steps to inquire into this petition ?—The only step I took was to instruct a parliamentary agent to inquire as to the solvency of the sureties.

43,905. Who was that ?—Mr. Wyatt.

43,906. As to the sureties for the petition ?—Yes.

43,907. Did you not also communicate with your friends down here ?—Most probably it was made the subject of correspondence.

43,908. There would be a petition, I presume, charging you with bribing, they generally did it ; at all events it charged your election to have been obtained by corrupt practices ?—Yes.

43,909. Did you take no steps to inquire here of any of your friends what truth there was in the matter, whether there was any ground for imputing corrupt practices to you ?—I have no doubt there must have been conversations on the subject, but I recollect nothing.

43,910. You were under the impression, when you left the town, that it was a thoroughly pure election on your part ?—No.

43,911. What ?—No, I did not think that, when I say I became gradually aware that expenditure had taken place.

43,912. You mean as soon after the election as could be. Tell us when you first became aware of anything which led you to suspect that there had been improper practices ?—I should find it difficult to say.

43,913. Was it before the petition was presented ?—Oh yes.

43,914. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it on the polling day ?—Yes, on the polling day ; I should say that was my first intelligence that there may have been something wrong. I heard it in the congratulations of one's supporters that there was a something in the tone of congratulations of good manœuvring ; that sort of thing.

43,915. Who used such expressions, Mr. Henry Lovibond ?—No, I am not speaking of agents, of people who came up to shake hands with one, and so on.

43,916. (Mr. Price.) That being so, did not you, when the petition was presented, take any other steps besides inquiring about sureties, about resisting the petition ?—No, that is the only step I took.

43,917. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first really know what had been the money spent. Did you know that before you got Mr. Bate's letter, telling you that he wanted this extra sum of money. When did you absolutely know ?—I do not think I ever got a letter from Mr. Bate.

43,918. Or from your brother ; I mean, when did you really know that there had been some money expended in excess of the legal expenses ?—All I can say is, that I became very gradually aware of it, and I suppose it culminated to actual knowledge three months after the election.

43,919. Did your brother tell you of it very shortly after ; when was it floating in your mind first, that there had been really corrupt practices on your part ?—No, I do not recollect that.

43,920. (Mr. Price.) But were you sufficiently aware of corrupt practices on your part to such an extent that if the petition had gone on you would have thought it not wise to resist it, from the knowledge you then had?—I had no knowledge of any single corrupt act, I had only the general notion.

43,921. Do not let us dispute about the word "knowledge," it may mean actually seeing the thing done; however, knowledge may be conveyed to you by good information which to you would be as valuable as your own; but had you that kind of knowledge which at the time you heard of the petition would have deterred you from fighting the seat if it had gone on?—No.

43,922. Therefore if it had gone on with the knowledge you then had you would have thought it right to support your seat?—No.

43,923. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you or not aware that the petition charged not only personal bribery, but bribery by your agents?—I think it was in the usual form, they always charge everything.

43,924. I am drawing your attention to the last answer. You say you were prepared if not to have defended your seat to have resisted the petition; if you were so prepared you must have made yourself acquainted with the allegations of the petition, which were that not only you were charged personally, but your agents, and the question therefore is, did you inquire, knowing how far you were guilty or innocent, did you inquire how far those who were your agents were guilty or innocent?—No, the petition conveys no knowledge.

43,925. (Mr. Price.) But you can have no doubt from your after acquired knowledge that if the thing had gone on your fate in all probability would have been what Mr. Westropp's was at the subsequent election?—Still it would have been a matter of proof, I had no idea.

43,926. A matter of proof, but there was sufficient intimation given to you even on the polling day to make you suspect, and on the sifting which would probably have taken place between the petition and actual hearing, can you have the least doubt that the corrupt expenditure of a large sum of money would have been proved; Mr. Bate for instance, could Mr. Bate, which is the best test in the world, have got into the box, he in all probability must have been called?—That I do not know, but perhaps I may meet the import of the Commissioners' questions by saying frankly this, that if the petition had gone on and had ended in unseating us, I should have thought it was a just decision.

43,927. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you at that time know that Mr. Padwick had spent money on the other side?—Yes.

43,928. They did not claim the seat, I suppose?—No.

43,929. (Mr. Price.) I only want to know this, the thing was suddenly abandoned and no reason given, there was no necessity for any reason, but it was abandoned, and as far as we know there was a very strong case against you; but there could not be a doubt in the world that Mr. Bate must have gone into the box, and if he had I should think your seat would have been lost; I want to know therefore whether before the abandonment you had taken steps to write down or inquire of Mr. Bate, "What position am I in before going any further"?—There never was any compromise.

43,930. I used the word "abandoned" directly after. The reason I use the word compromise is this, that there has been a suggestion made to us that it was the result of a compromise. I will ask you about that presently. Will you say whether you took any steps to inform yourself whether there was any ground for the alleged bribery against your agents?—No.

43,931. (Mr. Anstey.) None whatever?—No.

43,932. Knowing the borough as you did, and the proverbial imprudence of agents, you took no steps to ascertain whether the agents had compromised you?—The time had not arrived.

43,933. (Mr. Price.) The committee were struck, and the committee used to come to the House directly after to be sworn?—The petition itself is a formal act, and they are always now in the same form, it conveys no sort of knowledge.

43,934. (Mr. Coleridge.) But here the committee were struck and sworn?—Yes.

41,935. (Mr. Price.) Committee struck apparently and sworn probably, and therefore would be about to appoint their sittings; had you taken no steps whatever to defend your seat up to that time?—No, none whatever.

43,936. Who did you trust to defend it, Colonel Tynte?—No, Mr. Wyatt.

43,937. Mr. Wyatt could not instruct himself. Who did you entrust to give the necessary instructions to defend the seat, and investigate the case made against you?—The petition never came to anything.

43,938. (Mr. Price.) It came to this point, a very salient point. I grant you that the new presentation of a petition, and before the committee is struck, the speaker saying he had a letter saying the petition was abandoned, well and good; but here the committee is struck and probably sworn, and they must meet directly after they are sworn; the practice was to meet directly after, and go on de die in diem, with the exception of Sundays?—I think it was probably, though I cannot charge my memory with the fact, that the fact of the petition being one to be abandoned was known before the actual abandonment.

43,939. Then were you informed at any time before the actual abandonment by the letter of the agents of the petitioners, whether there was a chance of its abandonment, and if so, by whom?—A Mr. Slade, of this circuit, was counsel, and he was on friendly terms with me, and I gathered either from something he said, or from his manner, some time before the actual abandonment of the petition, that I need not trouble myself much about it.

43,940. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether he was also retained as counsel for the defendant in either of the two prosecutions for libel which were then pending, one against the Conservative editor or proprietor of the "Bridgwater Times," and the other against the Conservative editor or proprietor of some Taunton newspaper?—No, I was not aware of it.

43,941. Both of them at the suit of Jenkins, and Heard, the petitioner against your return, being the editor or proprietor of a Bridgwater paper?—No.

43,942. The defendant, therefore, in one of the two prosecutions.

43,943. (Mr. Price.) And for which plaintiff Jenkins, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was acting as attorney?—I have no knowledge.

43,944. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any knowledge whatever, in any shape or way, beyond what Sir Frederick Slade intimated to you, that the abandonment of the petition was the result of setting off the petition against those two prosecutions for libel, or either of them?—I never knew it.

43,945. (Mr. Price.) You are quite clear about that; you never heard that in any way, but that your indifference, if I may call it by that term, to the progress of the petition was created by this private communication from Sir Frederick Slade?—I think that may have had something to do with it; my impression is that the petition was never carried so far as to make it a subject of compromise.

43,946. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was your attorney in the matter?—I had none. Mr. Bate always represented me.

43,947. (Mr. Price.) I can hardly understand that those who had your interest at heart, who knew of the position, who knew and who could see by the public prints that the committee were struck, or even knew that the petition was presented, did not communicate with you, or say anything about "Do not be alarmed"?—I have no doubt there were abundant communications of that sort. I have no recollection.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

43,948. Would that come from Mr. Bate? do you keep correspondence of that kind?—Yes.

43,949. Have you any letters about that time with respect to this matter?—Not to my knowledge; they exist.

43,950. One would like to see them on this point.

43,951. (Mr. Anstey.) Were not you required by the first summons which it was our duty to address to you to produce all papers, if not actually in your possession but in your power, though not actually in your possession, relating either to the last election or to any election before for this borough, or to any petition against the return for the borough, whether tried or not?—Yes, that is the language of the subpœna duces tecum.

43,952. Therefore why have not you brought them or forwarded them to this Commission?—I came direct from Constantinople without going through London. The papers are in London. If there is any paper the Commissioners desire to see, or any paper at all, it shall be obtained.

43,953. (Mr. Price.) Then, Mr. Kinglake, we shall be glad to have any information which you can give us, which any of your letters will disclose. We quite admit your excuse for not bringing them here, in consequence of your not having come here through London; but as no doubt we shall have to adjourn to London, you will have an opportunity of producing them there. I suppose you will be in or near London, so that we may communicate with you?—Yes.

43,954. (Mr. Anstey.) In the meantime this part of the examination will not be pressed, but I want to draw your attention to the words of the subpœna in extenso, which convey to you what we require you to produce before us:—"The Commissioners do further "require you, in particular, to bring with you, and "produce before them, all accounts, letters, vouchers, "and instructions in writing, received by you from "anyone with whom you were engaged, or whom "you employed, or from any other person, connected "with the last or any previous election at Bridgwater, "or connected with any petition against the return of "any person or persons at any election for Bridgwater, "whether prosecuted or not, and any instructions "given by you to counsel, connected with any such "petition or petitions, and all memoranda in your "possession or control, whether made by you or any "other person, in any matter connected, directly or "indirectly, with the last or any other election at "Bridgwater, or any such petition or petitions as "aforesaid, together with all your bankers' pass books "from and since the 1st day of January 1865, up to "this time; and all accounts, vouchers, and cancelled "drafts returned to you by or received by you from "any banker or bankers during the same period, "whether such books, accounts, and vouchers be in "your own name, or that of any other person, and "whether relating to a joint or a separate account"?—Yes. I read that.

43,955. I have a strong wish, and so I am sure have the other Commissioners, to have all those papers that are now in your power to produce, whether they are in your possession or not?—Yes. Do I understand that the Commissioners would desire to have them in mass, or do they desire me to make a selection?

(Mr. Price.) No. You had better do this, as has been done in the other cases, you had better intrust the whole mass of documents to our secretary, who will then have an opportunity of looking through them with reference to the elections.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We do not mean all your correspondence.

43,956. (Mr. Price.) We do not want all your private correspondence?—That is what I mean.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No. All your correspondence with Mr. Bate or Mr. Lovibond, or anybody here.

43,957. (Mr. Price.) Or elsewhere, in connexion with the election petition?—Very well.

43,958. Whether private or not. We must have all those letters, whether private or not; we must have an opportunity of looking at those. If there may be some that are even private among those, we must have an opportunity of looking at them?—I must mention to the Commissioners what my habits have been with respect to the letters relating to the borough. Not at my first election, but after my first election, I became rather methodical with regard to them, and they were tied up in bundles for each year. I cannot undertake to say when that began.

(Mr. Price.) That will make it more easy for you to give us what we want. And supposing that was not the case with regard to the election of 1859, you will be good enough to hand us all your papers with regard to the election of 1859, and any other election.

43,959. (Mr. Anstey.) And with regard to those papers, or any part of them, which relate to private matters, I need not say you may depend on the honour and secrecy of the Commissioners not to make use of them?—Quite so. With reference to the banker's pass books, and so on, I suppose the Commissioners would desire to have some indication of the items?

43,960. (Mr. Price.) With regard to the banker's pass books, I rather gather from what appears here, that that applies more especially to 1865 and 1866; and therefore we must adhere to our determination to have your pass books of 1865 and 1866?—I do not wish to keep them back. I did not know whether you would rather like me to give you an indication of the items.

(Mr. Price.) We do not wish this to pass without giving you a full opportunity of explaining it.

43,961. (Mr. Anstey.) You are not bound to do more than to bring them with you; but it would very much facilitate your views, and I am sure those of the Commission, if you would do what other witnesses have done, and that is, to hand over your documents to our secretary, a few days or a week before appearing to give your evidence, and then we shall be able to point out what we wish to have specified, and you can point out what you wish to have specified?—That shall be done. I am much obliged to you for the suggestion.

(Mr. Price.) When we return to town, and require those documents, we will take care that ample notice shall be given to you.

43,962. (Mr. Coleridge.) As far as that petition went, what was the cost of it to you?—20*l.*

43,963. That was all?—20*l.* or 25*l.*

43,964. Did you pay anything to the other side for the compromise?—No.

43,965. Because we have had some evidence of 1,200*l.* being paid to the other side. Mr. Padwick denied it, but it has been stated two or three times.

43,966. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear that there had been a sum paid on behalf of yourself or Colonel Tynte?—Oh no, sir.

43,967. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you no conversation with Colonel Tynte as to what you were to do as to defending your seats, when you were threatened with this petition?—No.

43,968. Do you mean to say you never met Colonel Tynte and discussed with him what measures you were to adopt in order to defend your seats?—I do not remember anything. I daresay when we met in the lobby of the House we would refer to it. I do not think——

43,969. (Mr. Price.) Were you and Colonel Tynte on friendly terms?—Oh yes, quite so.

43,970. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not finish your sentence?—I do not think we had any personal knowledge of matters of that sort.

43,971. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you in the lobby of the House on the day when the petition was withdrawn, the 2d of August?—I cannot charge my memory with that.

43,972. To refresh your memory, you know that according to the forms of the House, the striking of the committee, or rather, the Speaker's announcement of the names of the committee, the striking, and so on, takes place early in the afternoon, about 4 o'clock, or soon after?—Yes.

43,973. Then, immediately after that, at least not immediately, say an hour or so after that, he rises from his chair and informs the House, according to folios 328 and 330 of the same volume of the Journals, that he has received the letter from Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton, withdrawing that petition which had been already referred to the committee. Well, it is stated in Hansard, volume 105, page 862, that thereupon Colonel Tynte, your colleague, rose in his place and delivered himself of a speech on the question that the order be discharged; and in that speech he is reported to have said that everybody in Bridgwater knew from the first that it was brutum fulmen, or something to that effect, that it was frivolous and vexatious, and he was only sorry that he and his colleague had not had an opportunity of showing the utter groundlessness of the petition at a trial, and in fact spoke throughout in that high and lofty tone. Did you hear that speech?—No, I did not hear that speech; but now that you mention it, sir, it comes back to my memory, not as having heard it, but as having, I suppose, seen it in the newspapers the next day.

43,974. (Mr. Price.) Knowing what you do now, and what your suspicions were then, and knowing what Colonel Tynte's far superior knowledge was, connected with Bridgwater, do you think that is, as I ventured to describe it the other day, a specimen rather of parliamentary impudence?—Well, I should not like to make such a statement myself.

(Mr. Price.) So much, therefore, with respect to that election of 1859.

43,975. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did the borough cost you annually between 1859 and 1865?—Nothing but subscriptions.

43,976. About the same amount as you told us before?—About the same amount as those I suggested before. Of course, now and then, there would be some applications from some poor men who had fallen into trouble, but all in a small way.

43,977. (Mr. Anstey. Did you, in the interval between 1859 and 1865, receive any applications for loans on personal or doubtful security?—I received one.

43,978. To what amount?—100*l.*

43,979. From whom?—Well, sir, I should be sorry—— (the witness hesitated.) I do not know whether the Commissioners think it is a duty upon me to mention the name?

43,980. It is my duty to press for the name?—Because I am bound to give it?

43,981. Yes?—What occurred was this——

43,982. What was the name, sir, please?—The name was Mr. Haviland.

43,983. A lawyer or a doctor?—A doctor.

43,984. Go on. What were the circumstances?—Well, Mr. Bate mentioned to me the circumstances that made it—— that he was very embarrassed.

43,985. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Kinglake, you are bound to tell; therefore do not suppose it is any breach of confidence to tell us, because, under the circumstances, you are bound to tell the thing; and therefore there cannot be the slightest reason why (however unpleasant it may be) you should refrain from disclosing it?—Well, sir, it was simply that he was in need, and he had been the gentleman who proposed me at one election. Mr. Bate was very much pained at his state, and put it to me whether I would lend him this money, and I said, "Certainly."

43,986. (Mr. Anstey.) You did lend it?—I did.

43,987. On personal security?—Yes.

43,988. You said that he had opposed you at a former election?—No, proposed me.

43,989. Then that was stated by Mr. Bate?—Yes, it was.

43,990. Was that money ever repaid to you?—No.

43,991. It has never been repaid to this hour?—No.

43,992. Was there interest charged upon it, or paid upon it?—No, sir.

43,993. What was the date of the application to you for the money, about what time?—My impression is, soon after the election of 1859.

43,994. A day or two?—No, months I should think.

43,995. A month?—Probably months, but I am not certain.

43,996. How many months do you suppose, one or more?—I do not recollect, but my impression is that it may be from one to six months after.

43,997. And was it at that election that he had proposed you?—No, I think not.

43,998. Which election was it?—I think it was in 1857.

43,999. But he had voted for you in 1859?—Yes.

44,000. Was that the only application for a loan made to you between 1859 and 1865?—Yes, the only one that I recollect. There were, I daresay, applications from poor men who were in distress, asking if they were not to have something, but they were rarely complied with. I think I rarely complied with applications of that sort.

44,001. (Mr. Price.) I will just ask you with regard to that election, Mr. Kinglake. When you did become fully aware, when you had the fullest knowledge of the sums which had been expended, did you in any way remonstrate with Mr. Bate for having put you in a very embarrassing position, to say the least of it, considering there had been a petition at one time threatened, as to what had been done?—No.

44,002. As well as rendering you ineligible, if there had been another election that year, if all that had come out?—No, I am bound to say, candidly, I never did.

(Mr. Price.) Now we come to the election of 1865.

44,003. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the average amount; or if you cannot state the average, what was the highest amount you were called upon to pay between 1859 and 1865, in the borough, in the way of gratuities, of loans, of subscriptions to institutions, and so forth, altogether?—My impression is that it went upon the scale I mentioned before, and I put it something like 90*l.* or 100*l.*

44,004. With the exception, of course, of this one sum?—Yes; I was not including in that 90*l.* or 110*l.* the many little acts of individual charity.

44,005. But I particularly refer to them; how much did they come to in the course of a year, individual charities?—Well, I should think there may have been——

44,006. (Mr. Price.) Another 100*l.*?—Oh no; I was going to say 10*l.* or 20*l.* a year; something of that sort. I could not be sure that it was so much.

44,007. Then between 1859 and 1865 I suppose you had then full opportunity, of course, of disposing of the government patronage? With reference to the question put by my learned colleague, Mr. Coleridge, to you, how was that arranged in that interval between you and Colonel Tynte?—We never had any arrangement. When I received an application from a voter——

44,008. Did you receive applications at all from your political opponents?—No, I do not recollect receiving any.

44,009. Only from your political friends?—I was able generally to comply with all the applications for what is called nominations, because the competitive system of examination had come on, and that cleared the lists so much that the Secretary of the Treasury was generally able to give one a nomination.

44,010. (Mr. Price.) That is to say, any person you nominated would have to go through a competitive examination before he could secure the object of his wishes?—Yes. So that although I obtained a considerable number of nominations, my impression is that there were not more than two or three Bridgwater men——

44,011. Who got through the sieve?—Holding office.

44,012. Before 1865 Colonel Tynte, I suppose, had announced his determination not to come forward again ?—Yes.

44,013. How long before the election, do you know ?—Very late.

44,014. When did you first become aware that the gentlemen were in London, looking for a second candidate with yourself ? Did they come to you to inform you ?—Oh yes ; they were in communication with me.

44,015. And you consented that you should have a colleague, if possible, of your own politics ?—Yes.

44,016. Then do you know how they arrived at the name of Sir John Shelley ? We have heard it was mentioned to them by Mr. Travers Smith ; are you aware of that ?—I think I originated the idea of Sir John Shelley. I was sitting one day near him in the House of Commons——

44,017. We have had an extraordinary document produced before us, which was found amongst Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's papers, which appears to have been in the handwriting of his clerk ; and, according to the statement made in that paper, when they were on this search for a candidate in London, Mr. Travers Smith was applied to, and several names were given, including Sir John Shelley and Mr. Bagehot, who became a candidate at a subsequent time.

(Mr. Anstey.) Also including one or two names of persons who would certainly sit on the opposite side of the House of Commons to where such advanced reformers as Sir John Shelley and Mr. Bagehot would sit ; they were advanced reformers, and equally eligible, because they were rich, and in a good position.

(Mr. Price.) " Sir F. Halliday, Palmerstonian and rich."

44,018. (Mr. Anstey.) And not only Palmerstonian, but moderate Palmerstonian. Had you mentioned Sir John Shelley ?—I think I originated it. One day I was sitting near him in the House of Commons, and I knew he was not going to sit for Westminster, and I said I thought there might be an opening or there was an opening at Bridgwater, and he rather welcomed it. I suggested to him that there was or likely to be an opening for him, and he might be an acceptable candidate, and he rather welcomed the suggestion.

44,019. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell him at that time, or any other time, before he came down here, that you yourself had reason to know that bribery had been practised on your behalf at the preceding elections ?—Yes. I spoke quite candidly to him about former elections.

44,020. Just tell us what you said ?—But I conveyed to him what was then my hope or belief that there would be a pure election.

44,021. I want to know upon what that belief was grounded and that hope was grounded, assuming there was a contest again ?—Well, it was a hope that was always springing up.

44,022. But you had not remonstrated with Mr. Bate, you know, for his expenditure ?—No. But I am speaking of the hope that there was that no money would be spent by the Conservatives. We always considered that if no money should be spent by the Conservatives, that the return of the Liberal candidates by a large majority was absolutely certain.

44,023. Now we go back to the ground of your hope. You had Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp against you before, and you knew that they had spent largely ?—Yes.

44,024. Well, what guarantee had you that they would not do the same thing again ?—Well, the reports that Mr. Padwick gave, that he considered he had been involved in the most preposterous undertaking, that he had spent a very large sum of money without any result whatever.

44,025. Two thousand pounds. Only 1,000*l.* more than you had spent. It was not so very much more preposterous than yours ?—We always believed it had been much larger.

44,026. So we were given to understand ; but Mr. Padwick distinctly and positively assures us that it was the only sum he spent, and Mr. Westropp said he only paid 200*l.*, and that was the only sum he agreed to pay ?—Our people made calculations which went to show that the Conservatives, in order to carry an election, must corrupt a very large number, a much greater number than the number of voters we had over them.

44,027. A much greater number than your party need corrupt ?—Oh yes, much larger than that ; but I mean much larger than would seem to be required by the difference between their strength and ours ; because it was always considered, that if they once entered upon an undertaking of that kind, that their own most attached supporters would go from them unless they were paid.

44,028. The result of our inquiry is, that that applied equally to both sides, there is really not a pin to choose between them. I want to know this. You say you were under that impression ; had you never heard at that time of what are here denominated " balance-men ;" there are always a certain lot who are called balance-men " ?—Oh yes.

44,029. And a certain other lot which are put down by the bribe agents as " doubtful f 's " which meant " doubtful for " a particular candidate, and there were others who were put down as " doubtful against " a particular candidate ?—Oh yes.

44,030. You knew that ?—Yes. But the term " balance-men " had become rather obsolete in my elections.

44,031. At all events, there were parties here of that sort on both sides, that is to say, " doubtful for " on one side, and " doubtful against " on the other side ?—Yes.

44,032. That being so, I fail still to see what possible hope you could have had. However, you told that to Sir John Shelley. Did Sir John Shelley say anything about his determination to spend no money when he came down here, but to stand on purity principles ?—Yes.

44,033. He told you that ?—Yes.

44,034. Did you communicate that to the gentlemen who came to London to look for a candidate ?—Yes, as did Sir John Shelley himself. He was very resolute on that subject.

44,035. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you point out to Sir John Shelley the difficulties, or probable difficulties, in which the knowledge of that intention would place him when he came down to Bridgwater, namely, that a great many people would withhold their support, even if they did not go over to the other side ?— I do not recollect cautioning him in that way."

44,036. (Mr. Price.) These " doubtful fors," and " doubtful againsts," were men who generally turned the election, there is no doubt about it ?—Yes.

44,037. Then any gentleman coming down here as a stranger, and not informed of that, would certainly be fighting at a great disadvantage.

44,038. (Mr. Anstey.) We have had it in evidence that one of your supporters, Henry Chapman Bussell, felt that so strongly, that as soon as he learned that it was Sir John Shelley's intention to conduct his contest upon purity principles, he thought it unsafe to let that intention be known for a few days ; and he not only concealed it from the voters, but even went so far (although quite unauthorized) as to say he would see it all right, or something of that kind. That was the impression made on the mind of the man who knew the borough well ; and with reference to Sir John Shelley's supporters and your supporters, did you not point out to Sir John Shelley that he must make up his mind to lose some of those votes, or at least to lose them in this way, that they would not be given for him, if they were not given against him, unless he was prepared to do as had been done before, to buy them in the market ?—No sir. I think that my communications to Sir John Shelley were exactly of the kind that I had received myself.

44,039. (Mr. Price.) Did he come down here, then, as far as you know, under the impression that he had a fair chance of fighting the borough upon purity principles, even if there were a contest?—Provided that the Conservatives should enter upon the contest without spending money.

44,040. I say provided there were a contest; because you could never trust to the Conservatives not spending money, because from your experience you would know the contrary?—Yes. After the election of 1857 we were always in hopes of having something like that election again.

44,041. (Mr. Anstey.) You were in hopes in the election of 1865 that the precedent of 1857 was going to be followed?—Oh yes.

44,042. (Mr. Price.) That is the state of knowledge, so far as you know, of Sir John Shelley; but were you present at any time—because this was a very serious matter with regard to Sir John Shelley—were you present at any time when these gentlemen distinctly gave him the pledge which he exacted from them, as men of honour, that is to say, Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham, I think, I do not want to do any of them injustice, but I think I am right, and Mr. Reed in all probability, that they would not have recourse to corrupt practices?—I do not recollect being present at any interview of that kind, but I have no doubt that that was the fact.

44,043. Did Sir John Shelley ever communicate to you that he had said to them, "Consider my position "in the House, and the manner in which I have "expressed myself as to corrupt practices; I will not "go down there" (that is about the substance of it) "unless I have your distinct understanding that you will not involve me in anything of the kind," and that they were pledged as men of honour to him?—I think what I gathered from him was that he was determined not to sanction anything of the kind. I do not remember about his obtaining a pledge from them. It was probably something of that kind, but I do not recollect that it was exactly in the same form.

44,044. I do not wish to put it in the exact words; but that was the understanding, as has been put to us, beyond all question?—Yes.

44,045. (Mr. Anstey.) The evidence in question goes to this in particular; but there is also general evidence of what has been stated by the Chief Commissioner, but there was evidence in particular that a conversation between Sir John Shelley and Mr. Henry Lovibond, or Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, I think it was Mr. Henry Lovibond, was had, immediately on the arrival of the baronet in this borough, and that he had distinctly laid down this as the basis and the only basis of the operation; and that Mr. Lovibond undertook to carry out that intention of Sir John Shelley, and gave a solemn pledge that it should be done, and that it was on that understanding only that he went on to canvass; and I recollect repeatedly asking witnesses, and amongst others Henry Chapman Bussell, whether the general expectation of the voters was at all qualified by the knowledge which they must have had of that declaration and pledge, and Bussell's answer was that he had heard of it himself, but he thought it expedient to conceal it from the voters?—Yes.

44,046. (Mr. Price.) There can be no mistake about it at all, I think, on the part of anybody who has heard the evidence, that Sir John Shelley made, as clearly as any man can conceive, a most honourable compact with these men, as men of honour, not to involve him in corrupt practices. Now we go on to the elections. We will take the result, you and Mr. Westropp were returned, and Sir John Shelley turned out?—Yes.

44,047. I will take first your return of the expenses, and go into the other matters afterwards. You returned your published expenses, September 9th 1865, 207*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* Then you returned on October 23rd, 1866, a sum of 110*l.*, which you paid to Mr. Bate. There was a sum of 110*l.* which you learnt was for getting up absent voters, which Sir John Shelley would have been asked to pay, but he had died in the meantime, and therefore you had to pay the whole of that 110*l.* That is in 1866. Well, then on May 18th, 1867, Mr. Lovibond again has his 100*l.*, only that he has made it guineas; he gets 105*l.*, making the total 422*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* Now, do you know how much Sir John Shelley spent at the election?—I think almost exactly the same as my published expenses.

44,048. He would not give 100 guineas to Mr. Lovibond, but to some other agent probably?—No. Of course he was not returned.

44,049. I know. Still the lawyers would have their fees, I suppose. There is no evidence that they did not exact their fees. You did not pay them the first time, but still on other occasions they have been paid. Those three sums you seem to have paid at different times. The first sum you seem to have paid within a very short time after the election, September 9th. Those are the published expenses. Mr. Bate seems to have paid 110*l.* more than a year after; can you explain how that was? We know that there was a petition in the interval; we will come to that presently. Had the fact of the petition being presented anything to do with your postponement of that payment to the voters, because there was a counter petition against you?—No; I do not think that had anything to do with it, except in this way. Yes; I think that pending the petitions all claims were put aside for the moment, I think so; that might have made it come in later than it otherwise would.

44,050. In 1865, if I mistake not, or in 1866, when the petition was heard, I think you would have found these expenses had been illegal. Cooper v. Slade had been decided, and I think you would have found, or your agents would have known, that such an expenditure as 110*l.* would have brought you under the decision of Cooper v. Slade?—Yes.

44,051. Who acted for you besides Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Bate at that election in 1865.

44,052. What, old Mr. Bate?—Yes.

44,053. I thought he had died?—He died in 1867.

44,054. Old Mr. Bate, Mr. Henry Lovibond, Mr. Barham?—Yes.

44,055. (Mr. Anstey.) And Messrs. Reed and Cook?—And Messrs. Reed and Cook.

44,056. (Mr. Price.) Did you pay them anything?—Yes.

44,057. That is not put down here. What did you pay those other gentlemen?—It must be in the published expenses, I think.

44,058. It is 207*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*?—They were very small sums.

44,059. 25*l.* each to Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook, I think?—Sir John Shelley and I went over them together——

44,060. Probably he paid part?—We paid each exactly the same, except in the instance, I think, of Mr. Edgar Haviland, a young man who had lately come into practice, and I think he was put down as an agent for Sir John Shelley, and not for me; but, with that small exception, I think we divided the amount, exactly the same sum for each. They were not in very considerable sums at all. They were small sums.

44,061. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not Mr. Benjamin Lovibond also acting for you at that election?—No, I did not consider that he was. He was very friendly, but I never considered that he was.

44,062. (Mr. Price.) He had not then retired from public life, had he?—No.

44,063. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not ask you whether you considered him in the eye of the law what the law calls an "agent," but, as a matter of fact, was he not acting, busying himself on your behalf at that election?—I think that could hardly be said.

44,064. (Mr. Price.) Wait a moment, Mr. Kinglake. Let me just remind you that your own statement contains this phrase, "At this election Sir John Shelley had the services of my agents?"—Yes.

44,065. I will read the sentence to you and you will hear, "And also the special support of Mr. Benjamin

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

Lovibond." Do you mean Sir John Shelley had the special support, as distinct from your having the special support?—Yes.

44,066. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Benjamin Lovibond withhold from you an equal share in that zeal of his?—No; I think he acted quite loyally. It was considered that we were canvassing together, and that I was the first candidate.

44,067. That is to say, that if either of you were to be returned, your return at all events was to be certain?—Yes.

44,068. You having introduced Sir John Shelley to the borough?—Just so.

44,069. I ask you, were you not accompanied by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond upon occasions when you canvassed the electors?—Yes, several times.

44,070. Amongst others, there is a very notable case, is there not, of your having done so when that episode of the notorious William Heal occurred, about which there was much controversy in 1866, at the trial before the House of Commons; Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was with you then, was not he, when you saw William Heal?—Yes; I recollect our canvassing with him.

44,071. And also was he present when Temblett the baker's case occurred? Do you remember that case?—No, I do not.

44,072. Well, the case is this, and we have taken evidence upon it, that Mr. Paul Reed is stated to have said to Temblett in your presence, when he was asked and refused to vote for you, that is, when Temblett was asked and refused to vote for you, Mr. Paul Reed then said words to this effect, "If the franchise went "up, and the ballot went up, what do you say to a little "sugar?" were you present on that occasion?—No.

44,073. How many times was Mr. Benjamin Lovibond present when you were canvassing voters?—Not often; he was lame; he could not walk.

44,074. Was he as often with you canvassing as he was canvassing with Sir John Shelley?—Yes.

44,075. Therefore there was no outward and visible distinction between you?—No.

44,076. (Mr. Price.) And you have no doubt, have you, that if there had been ground for going on with the petition against you, which you believed there was not, if there had been good ground for going on, anything which had been traced to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond would have endangered your seat, according to the law of Parliament?—I think it would have been so.

44,077. As we all know, the law of agency, according to parliamentary law, is very different from the common law of principal and agent; but have you any doubt, according to election law, that anything which had been done by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond of a corrupt nature would have endangered your seat?—No doubt it would have done so. It was a joint canvass.

44,078. (Mr. Anstey.) But it was in point of fact, was it not, to rebut the legal presumption of agency that you were asked those questions, both with regard to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond and with regard to Henry Chapman Bussell, namely, in each case, "Was he your agent?" and then you, taking a legal view of it, said he was not. I am speaking of the trial before the election committee?—Of 1865?

44,079. 1866. I will read you the questions first, and ask you whether you were not called for the very purpose of breaking or rather preventing the formation of that chain of evidence, the first link of which at one end would be the proof of agency on the part of Mr. Lovibond and on the part of Mr. Bussell; and first, with regard to Mr. Lovibond, you are asked, "Was Mr. Benjamin Lovibond your agent at all "during that election?—A. Never." And then again, "Your evidence is, that at the last election he did "not act as your agent?—A. Certainly not, and never "at any election." Then secondly, with regard to Mr. Bussell, "Do you know Mr. Henry Chapman "Bussell?—Oh yes. Did he frequently accompany "you on your canvass?—Never. He was a man, I "recollect, that was always at his door; he kept the "'Anchor' Inn, and when we came canvassing in "that part of the town he used to stop us, and come "out with something to tell us, as to who was at home, "and that sort of thing, and he would walk on, according to my recollection, for some yards without "his hat. I have no recollection whatever of his "going with his hat on and forming part of the canvassing expedition. Did you ever meet him in the "committee room?—I never saw him there to my "knowledge; but I think it is probable he should "have been there amongst one's general supporters, "because it was crowded." And then the next question is, "Do you know John Smith?—Oh yes; he "is a great friend of mine. Did he accompany you "occasionally and canvass with you?—Never to my "knowledge; I cannot recollect a single instance; he "was always in his shop with his apron on. Did you "see him in the evening at the committee room?—I "do not recollect it, but, as I said before, I should "imagine he would be there, because he was a great "partisan." Now that I have read the questions and answers to you, which all go, you know, not to the fact charged of corrupt practices on the part of these men, but as to the character in which they mixed themselves up in them, namely, the legal character of agent to you, I must ask you whether the questions I have read to you were not put to you with a view solely of bringing out the facts as they were with regard to that issue of agency or no agency?—Yes.

44,080. And you are aware that the committee found that you were duly elected a burgess the day after you gave this evidence?—Yes.

44,081. So that, in point of fact, your seat was maintained not upon disproof of the corrupt practices in question, or any corrupt practices, but upon disproof, or, which is the same thing, non-proof of agency on their part, agency to you?—I am not aware of that. I understood that the committee considered that as the canvass was joint, that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond would be regarded as the agent of each.

44,082. (Mr. Price.) Your examination rather tends to throw over that theory, Mr. Kinglake?—Yes. My examination went to the matter of fact. What I say is, as matter of fact, I never considered Mr. Benjamin Lovibond as my agent; but I could not shut my eyes to the fact that constructively he could be held to be an agent.

44,083. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not think your recollection is right as to that, considering that you admitted that Mr. Lovibond was canvassing in your joint interest, for these were the questions which were asked you, and these are your answers with reference to that: "Used you to call on Sir John Shelley at Ben- "jamin Lovibond's office?—I used to go with Sir "John Shelley there from time to time. Frequently? "—I should hardly say frequently. I was there "several times. Used Mr. Lovibond to accompany "you often on the canvass?—No, hardly ever, because "he was, as I think the committee has learnt already, "lame, and it was physically impossible for him to go "about from house to house canvassing. He used to "come out on horseback occasionally, but he never got "off his horse." Then comes this, "He went out "canvassing occasionally on horseback with you?—I "should rather say that he would meet us at a portion "of the canvass, and he would ride on from door to "door?"—Yes.

44,084. You see that was not in the condition of a joint canvass, or anything like it. Have you any doubt that the case against you failed for want of proof of agency on the part of John Smith the grocer, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, and Henry Chapman Bussell all three who have been proved to our satisfaction, I think, to have been guilty of the grossest acts of bribery and corruption at that election which have ever been committed in Bridgwater?—I have no idea that the decision of that committee depended on that. The decision of the committee I imagine——

44,085. (Mr. Price.) You see they seldom give their reasons, and very wisely, as I heard one of the judges say in a late election inquiry, that the judges would be very glad to escape in the same way as the committees in the House of Commons formerly escaped; but one cannot shut one's eyes to the fact that there was a strong effort to disprove agency, and the member was declared seated, though there had been evidence given of corrupt practices. One cannot very much doubt that that is the point, the point of agency?—The Commissioners will remember, and that is what I think the decision of the committee turned on very much, that I was not engaged in a contest.

44,086. Well, it shows that, I think?—There were only two seats to the borough, and only one Conservative candidate. My seat was secure, as Sir John Shelley would not be in my way.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Supposing Sir John Shelley had spent a large sum of money, as Mr. Westropp did, he might have endangered your seat?

44,087. (Mr. Price.) Such a thing might have happened?—Such a thing might have happened.

44,088. (Mr. Coleridge.) I mean, if Sir John Shelley had spent 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.*, Sir John Shelley might have come in, unless you had spent money also?—Yes. But I assume that Sir John Shelley as a man of honour, as he was, would not have done anything to interfere with my seat. Therefore I did not consider I was engaged in a contest.

44,089. Take it in this way. Supposing Sir John Shelley, thinking you were safe, had spent 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* to try and oust Mr. Westropp, you might have fallen to the ground without his wishing to oust you?—Just so; but he would not have done such a thing.

44,090. (Mr. Price.) And seeing it was a joint canvass, and he was standing jointly with you, if any acts of bribery had been proved against him you would have been unseated; as in the case of Nottingham, where Mr. Morley was the sitting member, and stood jointly with Mr. Paget, and acts of bribery being found against Mr. Paget, Mr. Morley was unseated?—Yes; I understand you.

(Mr. Anstey.) And supposing Sir John Shelley had been returned through such means as those, you could not have petitioned with any effect against his colleague, Mr. Westropp; because the cases of bribery against Sir John Shelley, would have been used against you, and which bribery would, in point of fact, have been taken to have been used for you, you having stood jointly with Sir John Shelley.

(Mr. Price.) The committees of the House of Commons have always held, in a joint canvass, that when one has bribed and the other has not, and if the votes were split, that the bribery of the one candidate would enure to the benefit of the other candidate who did not bribe, and he would be unseated.

(Mr. Coleridge.) At Windsor they unseated Sir Henry Hall for acts done by Mr. Labouchere.

(Mr. Price.) I think the evidence must have failed as to agency.

(Mr. Anstey.) I have gone through the case against you, and your case, and I think it is perfectly clear that they could not have stopped the case where it was except on that ground, because there was no rebutting evidence, and Bussell himself was not called.

(Mr. Price.) They were afraid to put Bussell in the box.

44,091. (Mr. Anstey.) You were examined on the 24th of April, and then there is some medical evidence given by Mr. Winterbotham as to the state of health of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond. That is all that day. And then Mr. Benjamin Lovibond is examined on the following day, notwithstanding his illness. On the 25th April he is examined to contradict something stated as to one case, the case of Hayward the hairdresser, and that is the last witness examined on the 25th of April; and on the same day, as I stated just now, the House was informed that the committee had determined that you were "duly elected as a burgess to serve in this present Parliament." You see it was on the question of agency. It must have been, I think?—I think if you look through the evidence, you would find that there was no proof of any corrupt practice. That is how my memory informs me on the subject. There was a great deal of proof of corrupt conversation, but no single corrupt act was proved; I think so.

(Mr. Anstey.) Yes; they proved this one case of Hayward.

44,092. (Mr. Price.) They proved the case of Hayward, but there was no primâ facie proof of agency?—There was proof of conversation, but no direct act of bribery proved.

(Mr. Price.) Quite enough to satisfy the House of Commons, if only agency had been proved, I think.

44,093. (Mr. Anstey.) Fenner says in his evidence before the committee that Mr. John Smith came down to his warehouse, and the first word he said to him (Fenner) when he came into the wareroom was, "Fenner (pointing to a sugar cask), that is going to win our election," and he said, "If you choose to vote "for Shelley and Kinglake, you may have some of it if you like"?—If it had been followed by action of any kind no doubt that would have been sufficient.

44,094. (Mr. Price.) In the Northallerton case, which was one of the cases tried the same year, and in which I happened to be counsel, the only proof at all on which Mr. Mills was unseated, was the proof of the fact that the man who had been his agent, and whose agency he could not dispute, had offered a man to use his influence with his landlord to lower his rent; the man was a tenant renting under Lord Harwood, Mr. Lindsay's brother-in-law; and another case was in which a man asked him to get him some land. It was said that he had promised that he would use his influence with the landlord to get the rent of the one lowered, and he would do his best to get the land for the other, and that was said to be quite sufficient. The only question is, whether the thing is done corruptly to influence the man's vote. The words of the Act are, "to promise or give corruptly"?—It is very difficult to prove a promise unless it is followed up.

44,095. I do not know. We have had it proved before us; when I say proved, I mean we have had it in evidence before us, and I was going to ask you about that presently, whether you recollect such a circumstance as this; I cannot charge my memory with the name of the witness who said it, but he told us distinctly that actually Sir John Shelley himself, in your presence, whether you heard it or not I do not know, but when you were canvassing, that he gave a most distinct promise of money, in distinct terms. I do not say that we believe that, but, at all events, there is the evidence. Sir John Shelley is dead, and he cannot contradict it. Now, have you any recollection of anything of that sort?—Oh, no.

44,096. I do not say anything about the probabilities of the story, but I only mention it to show that evidence has been given?—Oh, no; I was not aware of it.

44,097. Now we come to another very important matter with regard to that election. We have had the most conclusive testimony that treating to a very great extent went on, and was paid by a subsequent candidate, by Mr. Vanderbyl. Bills for banners and a number of other things to a considerable amount were run up in your name and Sir John Shelley's, and that those were all paid.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And one bill was by Mr. Nicholls actually entered to you.

44,098. (Mr. Price.) And Mr. Nicholls actually offers to return you a cheque for the amount. Perhaps you would like to know that. You may not have seen that in the public prints, having been abroad. Mr. Nicholls' conscience seems to have been aroused, when the thing was put to him in plain terms that he had 12*l.* of Mr. Kinglake's money, in respect of ribbons and colours, and other such like paraphernalia, and he offered to return it to you. Now, that evidence was conclusive, and my learned colleague, Mr. Anstey, put it pointedly how on earth all this, which would have unseated any member in the kingdom, was never touched upon before the committee. Were you aware of such a thing going on?—Not in the least.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

44,099. (Mr. Anstey.) How did your lawyers obtain their instructions, admitting, as they have done, in their briefs to counsel, upon the trial of this petition in 1866, that there had been treating at some of the public-houses, as there always had been treating. Who instructed them to that effect?—I do not know at all. It is quite new to me that there was any treating at that election.

(Mr. Price.) There is no doubt about it at all.

(Mr. Anstey.) As you are a member of the bar, of course you know the meaning of the term, but did you ever see the particulars furnished according to the practice of election petition trials, of cases on which the petitioners meant to rely, after the day of their trial had been fixed.

44,100. (Mr. Price.) After the first day of the sitting of the committee had been fixed?—No; I do not think I ever saw that.

44,101. (Mr. Anstey.) You know what I mean?—Yes.

44,102. The petition generally alleges bribery and corrupt practices, and particulars are furnished?—Yes.

44,103. Are you not aware that there were no less than four cases of corrupt treating of this kind, houses kept open during the election for the purpose of treating the voters, and that one of them was this very man, Henry Chapman Bussell, who is the landlord of the "Anchor," whose name and house were mentioned before you, and about which you were examined before the committee, and whose name was mentioned to you as a canvasser and a warm supporter of yours, although you never allowed him to canvass. Were you not aware that his name was put before you? I have read it from a brief, furnished long before the trial, and you must have read the particulars?—I do not think I ever saw it.

(Mr. Price.) Then Bussell was very anxious to be called, and was not called, and it is quite evident why he was not called, from the evidence we have had here before us.

(Mr. Anstey.) He could not have rebutted the case of treating, but he said if he had been called he would have been obliged to confess to a case of bribing which he had been privy to.

(Mr. Price.) I have done Mr. Nicholls a certain amount of injustice. He did not offer to refund the cheque to you, but to Mr. Vanderbyl.

44,104. (Mr. Anstey.) It was to Mr. Vanderbyl. You have stated to-day, the same as you stated before the committee of the House of Commons, in answer to a question of mine, that supposing only one Liberal had got in, as the case happened to be, that you knew from the first that you were safe, that you would be that one. Well, I need not tell you that we have had it stated very positively, and almost angrily, by one of the bribers—the managers I must call them—on the Liberal side who took a part in that election, that it was utterly untrue; that you had no such reason to flatter yourself, and that he thought, and so did many more, that Sir John Shelley had a better chance than you, and that your election and not Sir John Shelley's took many by surprise. Have you ever heard of that?—No.

44,105. That has been stated here positively, I forget by whom, but it was one of the active men?—Sir John Shelley spoke in such strong terms to me of the baseness of which anyone would be guilty in going down with another by whom he was introduced to the borough——

(Mr. Price.) He does not impute anything to Sir John Shelley. It was the opinion of this man that you did not stand in any more favourable position in this town—whether that is to your credit or not I do not know—that you did not stand in any more favourable position than Sir John Shelley.

(Mr. Anstey.) It happened thus. I asked him the question, "Why should it be Mr. Kinglake, Mr. "Kinglake was sure of getting the election in any case; "the contest was between Mr. Westropp and Sir John "Shelley." "Not at all," he said, and he made that answer almost angrily.

44,106. (Mr. Price.) There are one or two other sums you have given here, and which you must give an explanation of. I have read to you the 422*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* Now you say you paid, and this would be the matter about which you will have, if you please, to give us your banking book, besides the sums you mentioned there, you paid 300*l.*, 250*l.*, and 110*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.* Well, with regard to the two first of those sums, that is, the 300*l.* and the 250*l.*, you have stated here that your impression is that they were paid in respect of the petition. Is that your present opinion?—Yes.

44,107. Probably that may or may not be corrected by anything you may find in your book; but that is your impression?—That is my impression.

44,108. That they were paid in respect of the petition?—Yes.

44,109. There was a subscription got up to defray the expenses of the petition, was there not?—Yes.

44,110. The whole burthen of the expenses was not thrown upon you or Sir John Shelley?—There was nothing got up to defray the expenses of my petition. There was a large subscription got up to defray Mr. Westropp's petition, but no subscription got up with regard to mine.

44,111. Then nothing was done with regard to you as was done with Mr. Patton, that he was called upon, when he sat in 1866, to pay the expenses of the petition that was against you?—No.

44,112. Mr. Bagehot was not called upon to pay any part of the expenses?—No; I paid all.

44,113. Then with regard to the 300*l.* and the 250*l.*, you paid more than that, or did that include the expenses of defending your own seat?—I think that would include all.

44,114. That would exclude nothing but the expenses of the petition against Mr. Westropp?—No.

44,115. 550*l.* it cost you to defend your own seat?—Yes, I think so.

44,116. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you not get the costs?—No.

44,117. Were not the costs awarded to you?—No.

44,118. Did you not ask the committee?—Well, I remember a friend of mine in the House of Commons asking the committee.

44,119. (Mr. Price.) It was not dismissed as frivolous and vexatious?—No. He said, "I hope you will find that the petition is frivolous and vexatious," and the chairman's answer was, "There was nothing frivolous about Bridgwater."

44,120. That was a very pregnant answer. I think therefore, that adding that to what we have already said, there could be little doubt that you saved your seat by want of proof of agency. Well, now, as to the 110*l.*, you say here that you think the 110*l.* must have been for subscriptions which Mr. Bate had paid for you?—Do I say that of the 110*l.*?

44,121. Yes?—I thought it was as to another sum I said that.

44,122. You say here you think the two sums of 300*l.* and 250*l.* were to defray the expenses of your petition, and then you say, as to the 110*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.*, that it "must have been for subscriptions which he had "paid for me. I made many payments to Mr. Bate "for that purpose, and in one or two instances for "little matters connected with landed property of "which I am the owner." 550*l.* for defending the petition, and 110*l.*, that would make 660*l.*, which added to the 422*l.*, would that represent the whole of what you paid in respect of that election?—Yes.

44,123. Everything you paid?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) We have got you to the end of 1866, and we will proceed to the election of 1868 after the adjournment.

(A short adjournment then took place.)

(Mr. Anstey.) Before you go on to the next election I wish to ask you a question or two about the election of 1865.

44,124. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Kinglake, I understand your sister-in-law, Mrs. Kinglake, is under the impression, from the remarks which I made to you at the commencement of your examination, that we attributed blame to her for keeping back from you the letter which we sent to you. It was not my desire to convey any such notion at all. She was anxious to be examined about it. I said only that it was unfortunate that she had not forwarded it to you; but we understand that she did not really know your address. I do not know how that is. You can probably tell us?—Yes; I can tell you exactly how that was. The only address that I was able to give from the uncertainty of the direction which I should have to take—the only address that I was able to give at all for certain was Constantinople. I intimated that they might address a letter to Saltzburg, but that the only place to which I could have letters sent of any importance was Constantinople.

(Mr. Price.) Very well, then that explains it; but there was no desire on my part or on the part of my colleagues, I am sure, to hint that Mrs. Kinglake had wilfully kept the letter from you. All I said was that it was unlucky, or that it was unfortunate, that letters had been written attributing to us what really amounted to bad faith, and that the letter which had been written had not reached you; but I never intended in any way to say or to insinuate that Mrs. Kinglake could purposely have kept it from you, because there could be no object in doing so.

(The witness.) I assure you I did not gather that to be the purport of what you said.

(Mr. Price.) It was her impression, and therefore I wanted to clear the matter up.

44,125. (Mr. Anstey.) Nobody supposed, I am sure, that we thought that any lady had written those dishonest letters with regard to you. I was going to ask you about the election of 1865, and the proceedings of Benjamin Lovibond, John Smith, and Henry Chapman Bussell. You will recollect the passages I read to you just now?—Yes.

44,126. From that it clearly appears that for some reason or other Henry Chapman Bussell, who was a great friend of your side, and of you in particular, then and afterwards, nevertheless abstained carefully during the whole of that contest from accompanying you or being seen with you, except when you happened casually to pass his door, and then he spoke to you, but always took the precaution of not having his hat on, so that nobody could say he was with you even in the street. Now, was that by arrangement between you and him?—No. I always understood that he was a man engaged in his business, that he could not afford the time for canvassing with us. Whenever he came near he would come out and tell us about the neighbours, and so on; but according to my recollection he never undertook the expedition of coming out to canvass; and in such a busy place as Bridgwater it was very difficult to find people who would canvass.

44,127. But you knew, did you not, that he was a most active man on the Liberal side, both he and his father before him, at that and at former elections?—Yes, I did not doubt that he was a strong partisan.

44,128. Then did it not strike you, unless you knew the reason why, that it was very odd that so active a man, and so zealous a Liberal, should be precisely the one who of all others abstained from being with you, and giving you the benefit of his countenance and advice whilst you were engaged in the arduous canvass?—No, it did not strike me as at all strange, because I imagined him always engaged in his business. I did not know that he could.

44,129. But did you not imagine also that he was engaged in electioneering business?—I imagined him to be a busy partisan. I did not know more than that.

44,130. Then being a busy partisan, though nothing more than that, and not being with you when you were seeing the voters, and not even putting on his hat so as to seem to be with you in his own street, was there not some reason for that; was it not arranged between yourself or your committee and him that he should not too much appear on your side?—Not to my knowledge.

44,131. To your belief?—No.

44,132. Is it not your belief that that is so? I will put it to you more plainly. Is it not a fact that for some reason or other (I won't ask now what reason it was) it was considered too dangerous for you to appear in the same group or circle with Henry Chapman Bussell?—No; it can hardly have been so, because, upon the inquiry before Mr. Justice Blackburn, it was proved that he was canvassing with us.

44,133. I am talking of the election of 1865, Mr. Kinglake, when you laid great stress in your evidence, which rebutted the evidence of agency, on the fact which you considered and your counsel considered, went far to negative all proof of agency, that, so far from accompanying you on your canvass even, he never appeared in the street with you except when you passed his door, and then he had always his hat off, as if he had just come out of his public-house and meant to go back again?—Yes, as was the fact.

44,134. Well, now, I ask you again, was not that by management that that was done?—No, I think not.

44,135. You think not?—I have no reason for supposing that it was.

44,136. Do you not know, Mr. Kinglake, that that Henry Chapman Bussell was grand briber, grand master of bribery for the Liberal party, as Murlis was for the Conservative party, for many many years past, and was notoriously such throughout Bridgwater?—I had an impression that that is so.

44,137. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first know that?—Well, I really could not say.

44,138. I mean, did you know that at this time that my friend is asking about?—In 1865?

44,139. Yes?—I can hardly trust my memory to say when it was that I began to have that impression. Probably I did.

44,140. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you had that impression. Now, have you the slightest doubt, that being your impression, that it was the impression of other people too?—Oh, I have no doubt.

44,141. Well, that being a common impression of yours and those who were most concerned in securing your return, and defending your seat if impeached afterwards by a petition, have you any doubt that, acting on that impression, they so contrived matters, if you did not, as to prevent Henry Chapman Bussell from appearing publicly with you or in your company, so as thereby not to furnish to the enemy the means of connecting you together in the relation of principal and agent?—I quite agree that it would have been a prudent act on the part of my advisers to do so.

44,142. Well, have you any doubt that that was done? We have had his evidence on the point?—You are speaking now only of the election of 1865?

44,143. No doubt. Have you any doubt about it?—I have no knowledge upon it.

44,144. Have you any doubt that was the object? It was a very extraordinary state of things. I will read it to you again: "Q. Do you know Henry "Chapman Bussell?—A. Oh yes. Q. Did he fre- "quently accompany you on your canvass?—A. "Never. He was a man, I recollect, that was always "at his door. He kept the 'Anchor' inn." (That is one of the four houses that were kept open for treating, he said himself.) "And when we came "canvassing in that part of the town he used to stop "us and come out with something to tell us, as to who "was at home, and that sort of thing; and he would "walk on, according to my recollection, for some "yards without his hat. I have no recollection what- "ever of his going with his hat on and forming part "of the canvassing expedition. Q. Did you ever "meet him in the committee room?—A. I never saw "him there to my knowledge, but I think it probable "he would have been amongst one's general supporters, "because it was crowded." Well, now, having read that again to you, and recollecting what you do of your impression and the general impression as to him, which impression has been proved to demonstration by his own evidence and the evidence of others before us, have you the slightest doubt that this was prudentially managed, so as to disconnect if possible you and him, and to deprive the opposite side of the opportunity of connecting you together as principal and agent?—I quite see that it would have been extremely prudent to prevent his canvassing with us, and I might infer, if he were an idle man, that his not canvassing with us was an abstention artificially obtained; but certainly my impression was that he was a man always serving out the drink in his own public-house.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

44,145. But you knew whose son he was, did not you?—No.

44,146. The son of the man who got made governor of the gaol, bailiff of the county court, weight-master, and I know not what else, for no services at all but for taking part in a riot, defending the riot in articles in a Bath paper, and performing a most blasphemous and indecent parody of the Church of England burial service in the year 1832. And this man's mantle descends upon his son, who becomes in his stead the chief bribe master of the Liberal party, and that function he continued to fulfil down to 1868, when his services in that capacity deprived you of his seat. You are aware of all that?—No, I never heard that in my life.

44,147. You have heard something of that, of course, because you are aware, for instance, that you lost your seat through him?—But with regard to his father I never knew it.

44,148. At all events you heard that his father had left the service 30 years before, and therefore he was himself in 1865 the briber on the part of the Liberal party, the man to whom Benjamin Lovibond, as Henry Lovibond after Benjamin Lovibond (your supporters), looked; and you yourself have an impression that you knew all about Henry Chapman Bussell's character. Well, then, you do not say that you are ignorant of these things as far as regards Henry Chapman Bussell in 1865?—I have an impression that he took part in the illegal transactions that occurred in former elections.

44,149. Then he is precisely the man whom you would rather not see at all in your canvass; or if you saw him you would rather see him with his hat off than his hat on in your presence?—Yes.

44,150. Well, just so. Then have you the slightest doubt that John Smith's being always in his shop with his apron on when you saw him was also part of that arrangement?—No, I have no idea that it was.

44,151. Why you say of John Smith yet more than you say of Chapman Bussell. This is what you say of John Smith: "Q. Do you know John Smith?—"A. Oh yes. He is a great friend of mine." That follows immediately after the evidence about Bussell. Bussell you only know, but of John Smith you say, "He is a great friend of mine." Well, then you are asked in cross-examination, "Did he accompany you "occasionally and canvass with you?" to which you answer, "Never to my knowledge. I cannot recol-"lect a single instance." Then you add this yourself, because you are not asked it, "He was always in his "shop with his apron on." Then you are asked, "Did you see him in the evening at the committee "room?—A. I do not recollect it." Well, now, if John Smith, who was always very active at all the elections in bribing and promising bribes, was a great friend of yours, and yet never accompanied you in your canvass, nor saw you without the outward and visible signs of his being engaged in his own private business of grocer, that is to say, wearing his apron, and so forth, and being in his shop; do you at this time of day say that that also was not by arrangement, by management, and this for the purpose of disconnecting you and him if possible in the public eye, and preventing people establishing a case of agency against you on his account?—No, I am not aware of it. My answer in respect to Smith must be very similar to the one I gave with regard to Bussell. A tradesman engaged in carrying on his business cannot spare the time for canvassing. It is difficult to get any busy men at that time, but I quite agree that prudence might have made it quite right if he had been otherwise; if he had been an idle man it would have been quite prudent to prevent his canvassing with us. But it seems he being a busy man that the exigency never occurred.

44,152. (Mr. Price.) It so happens that the three most active men on the Liberal side, and also on the Conservative side, are men who are in business. There is Mr. Allan, who was in a certain business of his own, and besides that kept through his wife a shop in the town. That did not require his own personal supervision; still he had an employment of his own. John Smith had an employment of his own. Mr. Bussell had also an employment of his own, and yet they were three men who could devote and did devote all their time, all their energies, not so much in canvassing, but in doing what was more important?—Yes; but I did not think they could spare the time for canvassing.

44,153. (Mr. Anstey.) I ask you simply, were you not quite conscious that John Smith was a great briber at the time that you stood in 1865—John Smith the grocer?—No, I was not.

44,154. Were you not aware that "sugar," an article in which he is supposed to deal as grocer, was the term by which bribery money was denoted in this corrupt place?—I have heard the term used in a humorous way.

44,155. Well, to denote bribery money, humorously or not?—I never knew any instance of its being used as the phrase for conducting an actual engagement.

44,156. An actual what?—An actual engagement of a bribing kind.

44,157. You never heard of such a case?—No.

44,158. Why there was evidence given before the committee in 1866, which I will read to you: "Now, "in your experience in Bridgwater had you acquired "a knowledge of what sugar means politically?—"Yes. What does it mean politically?—It means "money." This is with reference to a conversation with that same corrupt person, Mr. John Smith, whom you describe as being a very great friend of yours. Well, now, have you the least doubt that you knew in 1865 that "sugar" meant bribery money?—Oh, surely, I knew it was the phrase.

44,159. Well, I am asking you, have you the least doubt that in 1865 you knew that the allusion to "sugar," or rather that the allusion in the use of the word "sugar" for bribery money consisted in the fact that the principal briber, the principal treasurer of bribery money I would rather say, at that time known to the Bridgwater people was a grocer of the name of Smith?—No, I did not know that was the object of the term.

44,160. Well, at all events you knew enough to satisfy you, I suppose, that John Smith was a very dangerous person to be seen canvassing with?—Well, I think he was.

44,161. Well, did not your abstention, or rather his abstention from your canvass, originate in that feeltng of danger, that sense of danger that it was thought better he should not go with you, and should not appear with you at the committee room?—No; my impression really is that it originated from the cause I have mentioned, his being too busy a man for canvassing.

44,162. He was not, surely, nor was Bussell, too busy a man to spend hours and days in bribery—bribery on behalf of the Liberal cause—not bribery on his own behalf. You are aware of those facts. You were aware, were you not, that their zeal induced them to forego considerations of private interest, and to spend hours, and if necessary, days on behalf of the Liberal cause, and expose themselves to bribery penalties, which are very heavy, and were heavy even then?—I have no doubt of it.

44,163. Well, then, that being so, do you still persist in saying that you thought that the only reason why they were not by your side, openly and honestly canvassing along with you, was that they were attending to their private business?—That may have been the reason.

44,164. I cannot reconcile the two answers?—I did not know that to have been the reason. I said from first to last, that I think it would have been quite prudent, if these men had had their time at their disposal, to take care that they should not canvass with the candidates; but my impression is, that a reason other than that—a more cogent reason, namely, the necessity that they had for attending to their business—was the actual cause which prevented them from thinking of canvassing.

44,165. But everybody that went with you had affairs of his own, I suppose?—No, not always.

44,166. (Mr. Price.) But Mr. Nicholls canvassed with you?—Mr. Nicholls?

44,167. Yes, the large draper.—No, he never set out regularly canvassing.

44,168. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. James Wood Sully canvass with you?—Yes.

44,169. Did not the Sealys canvass with you; Sealy the banker?—No, never went out in a regular canvass with us. He might have joined us on an occasion in the street, but I do not think he ever canvassed with us.

44,170. But they were at your committee rooms, I suppose?—No. They would attend a public meeting if there was one held. We had no committee room, properly speaking, because there was no committee.

44,171. Mr. Hurman the draper canvassed with you, did not he, or went to your meetings?—Went to the meetings.

44,172. Yes. And yet from all these occasions these two persons who were precisely most zealous on your side, namely, John Smith the grocer and Henry Chapman Bussell the publican, were invariably absent. Do you mean to say that it was because of their affairs that they were absent, and not rather because of the prudential consideration you have before spoken of?—I have not said that they were absent from the meetings. I said that I did not recollect seeing them there.

Well, then, it is the same thing. As far as you know they were absent.

44,173. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you agree with what Mr. Allan and Mr. Bussell said on the one side, and Mr. Westropp said on the other, that the canvass is here all a humbug?

(Mr. Price.) It was Mr. Bagehot.

44,174. (Mr. Coleridge.) With Mr. Bagehot; that the canvass means nothing?—Well, I have heard it questioned. It was very much questioned at the last election.

44,175. Whether it was worth while to canvass at all?—Whether the canvasss was really an advantage or not; and we determined at one time that we would not canvass, and there was a sort of understanding with the other side that they would also abstain. When that was announced numbers of the busy active men who would take part in the elections came and protested most strongly against that.

44,176. When you say the active busy men, what class of men do you mean? Not the Bussells, and the Allans, and that class?—No.

44,177. Who? Lovibond, and that class?—No, I am not speaking of them.

44,178. Whom do you mean by the busy active class? Mr. Nicholls?—No, I should not speak of him as one. One man occurs to me. I recollect one who remonstrated against not canvassing—Jarman.

44,179. Jarman?—Yes.

44,180. (Mr. Price.) You see there are only or almost only two classes in this borough. Naturally there are the lawyers; and there are the tradesmen who (without being uncomplimentary to anybody) graduate from Mr. Nicholls downwards; that is to say, he has got a very large establishment here, and seems to be in a very large way of business. Therefore I hardly see who you could have. Then there would be the bankers. A banker would be a most important person to go round on a canvass in a town like Bridgwater, doubtless—almost the most important person you could have. I do not see who you could have to canvass for you in Bridgwater except the lawyers—that would be natural—if you did not have the leading tradesmen?—As a matter of fact we had hardly any canvass.

44,181. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you all agreed that really the canvass was humbug. Bussell has said distinctly that he never believed in a canvass in his life?—As I have said, there was a division of opinion about that. When we came to the resolution to abstain from the canvass, some men came and remonstrated against the decision in the strongest way.

44,182. Then you gave way?—Yes.

44,183. When did you first know that Bussell was a man who was connected with corrupt practices? Did you know it in 1859?—I think I knew it soon after the election of 1859.

44,184. Did you know the same thing of John Smith soon after the election of 1859?—No.

44,185. When did you first know that he was mixed up in corrupt practices?—I could not say.

44,186. Did you know it at the time you gave that answer in the House of Commons that he was a special friend of yours?—I cannot say when I first knew it.

44,187. You see, there would be no election between 1859 and 1865, so unless you knew it from what occurred at the election of 1865, you must have known it from something that occurred in 1859?

44,188. (Mr. Price.) It was a dangerous answer to give if you knew it?—I cannot call to my mind the time.

44,189. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know it during the election of 1865?—No; I cannot recollect.

44,190. Before the petition?—No; I cannot recall to my mind, in fact.

44,191. I mean at the time, because it is rather a striking thing to say that he was a friend of yours?

(Mr. Anstey.) A very great friend.

44,192. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the time you gave that answer did you know that he had been mixed up in the same way as Bussell and Allan, and these other men, in corrupt practices?—No.

44,193. You did not?—No.

(Mr. Price.) Allan was not concerned in them till 1866.

(Andrew Allan.) 1866.

44,194. (Mr. Price, to the witness.) You lodged at what is now Allan's?—Yes.

44,195. Whose house was it then? Was it Allan's in 1865?—I think so.

44,196. It was the hereditary lodgings, was not it?—Well, it was a very convenient place.

(Mr. Price.) I mean you had always lodged there. Before Allan came you went there. Allan rather attributes his fall to the fact that the bribery seems to have descended with the habitation; that having been the person that had taken the house that was always occupied by the Liberal candidate, he can only attribute his being asked to engage in these matters to the fact that he had succeeded to the house of somebody else who had done similar things to these—the house where the Liberal candidate lodged.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And that the bribery came ratione tenuris, you know.

44,197. (Mr. Price.) What do you say to that?—When I first occupied that lodging, I think it must have been in 1859, and my impression is that Mr. William Knight was then the proprietor. I never knew that he was a man actively engaged in the business of the election.

(Mr. Price.) I think he was.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

A. Allan.

14 Oct. 1869.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

44,198. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Allan, can you tell us about that? Did not you say so? Was not that your evidence, that you thought that the fact of your having taken the house induced Mr. Lovibond, or whoever it was, to put himself into communication with you?—Yes, but I did not implicate Mr. William Knight. I did not say it was so with my predecessor.

44,199. Merely the fact that you were the landlord?—I bought the house. That was my first introduction to the Liberal party in the borough.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

Mr. ALEXANDER WILLIAM KINGLAKE recalled.

44,200. (Mr. Anstey.) I think you said that before the the election of 1865 you knew enough of Benjamin Lovibond to make you distrust him. You said from the first you had heard that which you did not like of Benjamin Lovibond. Had you the least doubt in 1865, when he was interesting himself on your behalf, as well as on behalf of Shelley, that he was a man quite capable, according to his uniform antecedents, of using corrupt practices of any kind to carry his object?—My belief is that he, in former times, had done so; but he was an extremely cautious man, and his caution increased; and I should very much doubt whether in any late election he had ever done any act——

44,201. (Mr. Price.) What do you mean by any late election, Mr. Kinglake? Even at the time when he was incapacitated by paralysis, do not you believe, from all you have heard, and all that has been disclosed here, that he was the head and front of the whole thing?—Yes, but I do not think that he would be taking any part himself. He was an extremely cautious man.

44,202. Not himself. We know, of course, these things are done very differently by very skilful men. Himself he never would give a bribe certainly. Himself he never promised anything, certainly. But that he pulled the strings up to the last moment, and had his agents scattered through the place, there can be no doubt?—I think your expression of pulling the strings exactly strikes the truth.

(Mr. Price.) Then he is responsible.

44,203. (Mr. Anstey.) You, with your eyes open, neither in 1859 nor 1865 declined this corrupt man's co-operation and assistance, did you? — I did not consider him as my agent at all. It was perfectly friendly.

44,204. I did not use the word "agent." But you never declined his co-operation and assistance?—No, I could not have done it.

44,205. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose any Liberal candidate who did decline his co-operation and assistance might just as well go away?—No one could decline the assistance of the head agent of Colonel Tynte, with whom he was standing.

44,206. What I mean is this: had he not that sort of influence in this place that nobody could have got on without him?—Yes, I think there was a great deal of that.

44,207. (Mr. Price.) No candidate would dare to decline Mr. Lovibond's services?—No one standing with Colonel Tynte could possibly decline to receive the assistance of Mr. Lovibond.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then if that is so, what becomes of the purity professions of such men, who have not the moral courage to do their duty? I should like to know what you think of that. You say nobody would dare to do it. I say, then, if so, what becomes of their purity professions, such being the state of their moral cowardice?

44,208. (Mr. Price.) You see, if Mr. Lovibond, as you state, pulled the strings at every election, and that was known to every candidate, during the time that Mr. Lovibond was in working order, would it have been possible for any candidate to come forward on purity principles with any chance of success?—Yes, if he had determined to conduct the election upon such principles.

44,209. Then he must have thrown over Benjamin Lovibond?—No; but I say if Mr. Lovibond had determined to conduct the election as he did in the case of Shelley, the election of 1865. He no doubt determined, whether rightly or not——

44,210. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know that he spent very large sums, or ordered them to be spent, in treating in 1865?—I was not aware of that.

44,211. And all those things when you read the evidence you will find were afterwards paid by Mr. Vanderbyl.

(Mr. Anstey.) And Henry Chapman Bussell allowed the voters to remain until the last moment with the impression that money was going to be spent, and also at a later time, after the petition time was past.

44,212. (Mr. Price.) Perhaps you are of opinion, Mr. Kinglake, that if the canvass, the day of nomination, and public-houses were closed on the polling day, there might be some chance in small boroughs of a great deal of impurity being done away with?—It would be a great advantage.

44,213. It would be a great saving of expense to the candidates, and there would be a possible chance that they might be relieved of a great deal of the importunity which results in bribery?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Well, I think the strongest confirmation of that was what you said yourself, that it was a question whether you would canvass at all.

44,214. (Mr. Price.) Now, I think in the election of 1866 we have had Mr. Bagehot's account; you had nothing to do with Mr. Bagehot coming here?—No.

44,215. Well, now, in the subsequent election of 1866, before we come to 1868, I want to ask you this: it has been said, Mr. Bagehot tells us that he had two reasons for not coming forward. One was that he thought on the whole that Mr. Patton ought not to be opposed, and the other was that he was very much disgusted with the state of things, and would rather defer coming forward till a future time. He had not given up all hope of coming forward again, but he did not wish to come forward so soon again. But it has been stated that you on several occasions urged on the contest against Mr. Patton. I think it right to give you an opportunity of speaking of that?—No, sir, I did not.

44,216. But it has been said again, or somebody has said, that you were urgent for it. How was that?—I can tell you the exact thing. I have a very clear recollection upon that subject. Mr. Henry Lovibond, and I think Mr. Barham, came up to London to find a candidate, and they met, I think, with some rebuffs. They had gone to one or two.

44,217. They had been to Mr. Bagehot we know?—Yes, and I think they got a rebuff, according to my recollection, from Mr. Travers Smith.

44,218. Mr. Travers Smith tells us this, that although he acknowledged that there was a kind of understanding that a gentleman should not be opposed upon taking office, yet he considered that always applied only in cases where they were quite certain that the former election had not been gained corruptly, and that is his excuse for urging them to contest the seat, because he knew that Mr. Patton had gained his election by corruption. There is no doubt he spent a large sum of money, and therefore Mr. Travers Smith thought there was no mercy to be dealt out to him. That is what he says. Now tell us what you did about it. It is only with a view to that. If you say that you were not the person who urged on the contest, that is really all that is necessary?—I did not urge it; I did not desire it in the least. I considered it my duty as the sitting member for the borough to put any facility in their way for finding a candidate that I could, and I introduced them to Sir William Drake.

44,219. Yes?—That is the only step that I took. He, I think, gave them an introduction to someone else who did not stand, but ultimately Mr. Vanderbyl stood.

44,220. That was the part you took in it?—That was the whole part that I took.

44,221. The only reason why I asked you that——? —And really as a matter of duty——

44,222. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you known anything of Mr. Vanderbyl before?—No, I had not.

44,223. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Brogden was the gentleman Sir William Drake first mentioned?—Yes.

44,224. The only remark that passes through one's mind as to anyone who is ancillary to getting up a contest at all unnecessarily here, if there can be such a thing, is that he is ancillary to bribery taking place, and to continuing the corrupt practices and corrupt state of the borough. It seems to me that every time there is a contest it is a dead certainty that there will be bribery?—Personally, I should have much preferred that there should not have been any contest.

44,225. Now we will pass on to 1868?—Whilst the Commissioners are upon that last election——

44,226. The second election of 1866, Vanderbyl's election?—Yes, the second election of 1866. It may be worth while to observe that it had one important result upon me, one of a very painful kind—that I lost the exclusive advantage of my agents. They, with my assent, and with perfect propriety on their part, became at that election in 1866 the agents of Mr. Vanderbyl, and then when the election of 1868 came on I could not ask them, of course, to say they would not act for him and to come back as agents for me alone.

44,227. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then as a counterpoise to that you had the advantage of Mr. Vanderbyl paying the expenses that were outstanding, that were incurred at your election in 1865?—I never heard of that.

44,228. (Mr. Price.) When did you first hear of it? —To-day.

44,229. (Mr. Anstey.) But had you no communication with Mr. Henry Lovibond, or with Reed and Cook, about their joining themselves to Mr. Vanderbyl at the second election of 1866?—No.

44,230. Do you not remember that they said anything to you about having paid off part or any of the demands?—No.

44,231. They concealed it from you? — Yes, effectually. I never heard it until to-day.

44,232. Therefore I need not ask you my next question. Were you any party, or were you party or privy to the alteration that has been spoken of in the books of some tradesmen, of Mr. Nicholls and others, by which the debit (which of course became a credit) was altered from the name of Shelley and Kinglake, or the name of Kinglake and Shelley, as the case may be, was altered to Lovibond or Vanderbyl, or some more recent name?—No.

44,233. Therefore if that was done it was done by the parties paying and receiving the money, and not by you?—Not by me.

44,234. (Mr. Price.) Had you any personal communication with Mr. Vanderbyl before he came down the first time in reference to Bridgwater?—No, he left a card for me at the club before he went down, and then I think I saw him after the election.

44,235. You did not come down here?—I do not think I saw him—no, I did not come down, and I do not think I saw him before the election, though I certainly think he left a card.

44,236. Did he ever inform you after that election, and before the election of 1868, that he had been called upon to pay these bills?—No.

44,237. These outstanding bills?—No.

44,238. Did he ever complain to you of the money that he had had to spend before he stood again in 1868? Did Mr. Vanderbyl ever complain to you of the large sum of money that he had had to spend in 1866, or were you at all aware of it?—Yes, I did hear him make a complaint.

44,239. Well, now tell us, if you please, what he said about it. He was returned, you know, and then he would take his seat, and you would be brought into communication with him?—The conversation occurred when he was going back to London, in the midst of the canvass, to be examined; and he came down. I was staying at the "Railway" hotel, and he came down there. It wanted some minutes, a quarter of an hour or more, to the time when the train would go, and he sat with me in my room.

44,240. Tell us exactly what took place. I did not hear you at all; when was it?—It would be in that way, when he was going back to be examined upon that case.

44,241. Oh, the National Bank business. He was subpœnaed?—Yes; where he was subpœnaed. He then seemed a little out of humour at something that had occurred (I did not know what), and he said, "I am quite determined that I will not be humbugged." That was his expression. I really did not know at first what he meant by the expression. I asked him, and then he told me that he had had to pay a very large sum of money at the former election, and he was quite determined not to do anything of the kind again.

44,242. He did not then hint to you that he had had to pay these outstanding accounts?—No, I did not hear a word of it.

44,243–4. Did he say how much he spent?—I have heard how much he spent, but whether the knowledge came from him or from others I could not undertake to say, but I think I have heard of 4,000*l.*?

44,245. (Mr. Anstey.) At that time you had heard of it—when he spoke to you?—I could not charge my memory with saying that.

44,246. About that time. You had heard of it about that time?—Yes, not far from that time. I heard that he had spent a large sum, and he said that he was quite determined that there should be nothing of the kind.

44,247. (Mr. Price.) And he used the expression that he would not be humbugged?—Yes; and he interpreted that in that way to say that he would not pay any illegitimate expenses. He said, "I am quite "ready to pay everybody all that is due to them for "their services on the most liberal scale, but I will "not consent to pay anything else."

44,248. Did you know at that time that Mr. Brogden, his friend, had actually gone to Bristol and brought a thousand sovereigns in a carpet bag back from Bristol the very day after he had arrived?—No.

44,249. You did not know that?—No.

44,250. (Mr. Anstey.) You therefore, like poor Mr. Bagehot, did not know that Mr. Vanderbyl and his friend, Mr. Brogden, took the initiative in corruption; got the money, and brought it down here? —No.

44,251. (Mr. Price.) And that Mr. Brogden drew several cheques himself to a large amount. You did not know that at that time?—No.

44,252. Then that being so, did any further conversation take place between you and Mr. Vanderbyl before you stood together in 1868 about money matters; before you came down?—No, I think that was the last. I strongly applauded his determination in that respect, and then the conversation dropped.

44,253. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before the election of 1868 was any arrangement made between you and Mr. Vanderbyl about Mr. Vanderbyl's expenses?—None.

44,254. No arrangement?—No.

44,255. (Mr. Price.) You know the dissolution was pending, we may say, from the time of the passing of the Reform Bill. It was only a question of time, and of course from that time people, candidates, and members would be talking of their chances, and so on. Had you any conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl as to what should be done in the case of a contest down here?—No.

44,256. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you, on the other hand, direct communication to be opened on your behalf with Mr. Westropp, or with Mr. Westropp's friends, some months before, some time before the dissolution

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

of Parliament, to the effect that you and he were to coalesce in order to squeeze out Mr. Vanderbyl, and be returned one and one without a contest ?—Never; never.

44,257. If Mr. Lovibond made any such proposal as that on your behalf—"a long time," says one witness, "some months," says another witness—before the general election of 1868, it was behind your back, without your knowledge, and against your consent ?—Certainly.

44,258. (Mr. Price.) Would you have condescended, Mr. Kinglake—I put it in those terms—would you have condescended to any such thing ?—Surely not. It would have been an act——

44,259. I put the word "condescended." As a gentleman would you have condescended, for the sake of a seat in Parliament, to any such arrangement ?—It would have been most treacherous.

44,260. That is the reason I put the word "condescended."

44,261 (Mr. Anstey.) Have you not heard it has been stated here, first by a witness of Conservative opinions, and secondly by a witness of Liberal opinions, both of whom have been examined at length before this Commission ?—No, I am not aware.

44,262. And that it has not been contradicted by anybody, for you only repudiate your part in it ?

44,263. (Mr. Price.) No such suggestion was ever made to you before you entered the town, Mr. Kinglake ?—Never.

44,264. In any way whatever ?—No.

44,265. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you, in canvassing at that election, ask Mr. Lear, one of the electors of this borough, on his declining to promise his vote, did you fall behind the rest and say to him, "Will you "give me one vote ? you may give the other to Mr. "Westropp if you like," and obtain his promise, "With pleasure, Mr. Kinglake" ?—Never, sir. I am very glad that the Commissioner has asked that question, because it enables me to state the exact truth with respect to Lear and several other Conservative voters whom I canvassed. Both in the case of Lear and several Conservative voters it was my custom to ask all, whether they were known to be Conservatives or not, and we would go in together, and the voter would say, "Well, sir, I have promised Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray," and then I have said (I remember saying that at Plowman's), I said, "Sup-"posing Mr. Gray should not go to the poll, may I "have the honour of one of your votes in that case ?" and in several instances the men said, "Certainly, sir." I did that in instances where the statement of the man's promise to Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray was accompanied with an expression of civility and good will towards myself. I then naturally said, "Well, if Mr. Gray does not stand, will you give me a vote ?" and in every instance where I did say that, the promise came; that contingent promise.

44,266. (Mr. Price.) Was that the case with Lear ?—That was the case with Lear.

44,267. What he says is substantially true, only he kept back—at all events he did not tell us, I won't say kept back—that you put it in that way, supposing Mr. Gray did not stand ?—Yes.

44,268. Are you quite sure that in every instance where you heard they were pledged to vote you put it in that way ?—Yes.

44,269. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then were there reports about that Mr. Gray was not likely to go to the poll ?—Oh yes, we believed in the early stage that he was not at all likely.

44,270. That bears out what Mr. Toogood said to us. Mr. Toogood (who was Mr. Gray's agent) told us that they had great difficulty in preventing his going away two or three times in the midst of the election ?—Yes, immediately after his coming down.

44,271. (Mr. Price.) Well, you having heard that, I will ask you this. It has been also stated that several of your agents said that Mr. Gray's being here meant money. Had you ever heard that ?—No; I never had the least idea that the candidature of Mr. Gray meant the spending of money.

44,272. That has been told us over and over again, that there were several consultations held by your party, and that they all hinged upon this question, that Mr. Gray being here meant money. The evidence is as strong as it can possibly be, and your impression seems to have been very much in accordance with the evidence, that there was great difficulty in persuading Mr. Gray to stand ?—Yes, I have always understood that. Another candidate was expected at one time.

44,273. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was that ?—A person of a very different description; a gentleman who had maintained very expensive contests in another borough.

44,274. Who was that ?—I do not know whether the Commissioners would desire me to mention the name.

44,275. Oh yes ?—It might give pain unnecessarily.

44,276. No, there is no reason why it should ?—Mr. Treby, who had contested Lyme, it was said confidently was going to stand with Mr. Westropp, and when that had been announced it was followed two days afterwards by a positive statement from Bridgwater that that was going to be the case. I then determined that I would not stand.

44,277. (Mr. Price.) If Mr. Treby came forward; because you really did think that that meant money ?—Yes, because I believed that that meant money, and I then came to the determination that I would not stand. I came and consulted my cousin on that occasion, and he quite agreed in the view that if Mr. Treby and Mr. Westropp stood together there would be every——

44,278. (Mr. Price.) Of course, Mr. Westropp we know ?—Yes.

44,279. (Mr. Anstey.) There would be every what ?—There would be every reason to believe that money would be spent on a large scale by the Conservatives.

44,280. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have just said that you did not at all understand that Mr. Gray's name meant money. Did not you think that Mr. Westropp's name meant money ?—No; I was inclined to think not, if he stood with a man who was not going to spend money, because I fancied that he relied very much upon the favourable impression which he had produced by his former election.

44,281. (Mr. Coleridge.) One of his agents had told him that his popularity was not worth ten votes against money ?—I did not know that. I believe there was a strong feeling in favour of Mr. Westropp on account of his being unseated.

44,282. (Mr. Price.) Yes, that is so; an unseated candidate is often very popular. There is a feeling that some wrong has been done him ?—Yes; that was very strongly the feeling here, and therefore I thought that he might be relying upon it.

44,283. After what you have told us now, had you any reason to suppose but what Mr. Westropp would endeavour to sail in upon his popularity ?—That was exactly my impression; but if he had stood with Mr. Treby I should then have expected a very different result.

44,284. Well, that being the state of things, it has been stated to us, as I have told you, Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham and Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook had laid their heads together, and, choosing to assume that Mr. Gray meant money, had begun themselves to consider what your position was, and Mr. Vanderbyl's, and what should be done. Now will you tell us, if you please, whether they had put themselves into communication with you with respect to the expenditure of money in the event of money being spent on the other side ?—Never.

44,285. Never ?—No.

44,286. Was your brother here present with you during the contest ?—No; he from time to time——

44,287. Did he come over constantly from Taunton, and was he in frequent communication with your agents ?—Yes, with one of them, Mr. Henry Lovibond.

44,288. Did you consider Mr. Henry Lovibond as more especially your agent at that election ?—I think I did; I considered him my head agent; he was the only one with whom I communicated as a rule.

44,289. Personally ?—Personally.

44,290. And with whom your brother therefore would be brought into personal contact most naturally? —Yes.

44,291. Well, now you say that nothing of the kind was ever hinted at to you. Now the evidence is distinct that they began to consider then the absolute necessity of being prepared to spend money. The evidence is as clear as possible. Did they never intimate that to you at any stage whatever before the polling day ?—No. On the contrary I was led to believe, even up to the morning of the polling day, that no money would be spent by the Conservatives, and we always assumed that if no money was spent by the Conservatives we were sure of being returned by a large majority.

44,292. Do you mean to say that the impression conveyed to you by your agent, Mr. Lovibond, was that he was under the impression that no money was going to be spent by the Conservatives up to the polling day ?—Yes.

44,293. The evidence, you know, is directly to the contrary, that they felt convinced that Gray meant money. Was that never said to you in any way? —Oh no; the impression on my mind was exactly the other way, and I understood that the people who were out watching at night (it is the custom, I believe, to watch at night, to see what is done in that way) reported that nothing was done by the Conservatives.

44,294. Was that report conveyed to you officially, as it were ?—No, not officially; but some busy man, I forget who it was, met me in the street, and said, "They have done nothing." It is the phrase for that.

44,295. Well, did you remain under that impression then, as you say, up to the morning of the polling day? —Yes.

44,296. That no money was spent or announced or promised to be spent, or likely to be spent, on the part of the Conservatives ?—Yes.

44,297. And that therefore no money was requisite on your part ?—Yes.

44,298. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you came to Bridgwater at all, Mr. Kinglake, had you not conversations with your brother, Dr. Kinglake, about the expediency of being prepared with a fund of money against such a contingency as that ?—No.

(Mr. Price.) None ?

44,299. (Mr. Anstey.) Recollect, as to raising money in Taunton ?—No, never.

44,300. As to raising money out of Taunton ?— No, never; nothing of the kind.

44,301. Did he tell you that he had endeavoured to raise the sum of 1,500*l.*, or the sum of 1,000*l.*, in Taunton, and had failed to do so ?—No.

44,302. It was before you met the attorneys, before the polling day. Did anything of this sort occur after you had communications with the attorneys ?—No.

44,303. Will you positively say, Mr. Kinglake, that none of the attorneys told you, what appears probable they must have been told by the clients who instructed them about your seats, that from the moment Mr. Gray was announced and the contest was certain, it was fully expected that the Conservatives meant to bribe ?—No, I always believed the contrary.

44,304. Did you believe that upon their statement, or did they make you no statement one way or the other ?—Chiefly upon the absence of any statement, I think. I was continually saying, "Does anyone know "anything of Mr. Gray? Does anyone know any- "thing of the antecedents of Mr. Gray?" and the answers always were very imperfect, but that he was a very respectable merchant, and not at all a person who would be likely to enter upon bribery.

44,305. (Mr. Price.) From what you say now, do you wish to represent to us that it therefore must have been a well-planned reticence on their part towards you with regard to money? Knowing what you do now, that there had been preparations made for what was done, which resulted in your being unseated, do you wish to represent to us that there was evidently a determined reticence on the part of Mr. Lovibond and others ?—I suppose so.

44,306. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you first speak to your brother on the subject of your approaching contest ?—I could not say at all. I was constantly speaking on the subject when I saw him.

44,307. At Taunton ?—Before he came home.

44,308. Where ?—At Timberscombe.

44,309. I mean out of Bridgwater. Do you mean to say, that in none of those conversations nothing was said about raising money for the election ?—Never I assure you.

44,310. Was anything said as to how much the election would probably cost you? — Never anything.

44,311. Or your friends ?—Never.

44,312. Were you provided at that time with money yourself sufficient to answer the exigencies of the election ?—The legitimate expenses.

44,313. Well, how much money were you prepared yourself then to expend; I will put it in that way, how much money had you made up your mind to expend if necessary ?—I do not think I had asked myself a question upon the subject as to what sum would be necessary, but I was perfectly ready to pay them on the most liberal footing for all legitimate expenses; the same sum as in the other elections.

44,314. Were you perfectly ready under the name of legitimate expenses, supposing they had been so named to you, to have paid 1,500*l.* for instance ?— No.

44,315. I ask you again, what limit did you, as a prudent man, propose to yourself; I mean one not to be exceeded ?—I proposed to myself no limit other than such as is found in the sums that are before the Commissioners.

44,316. What ?—Sums similar to those that are before the Commissioners.

44,317. (Mr. Price.) Which you had paid at the other elections ?—At the election of 1857.

44,318. Four or five hundred; to that extent you would have gone ?—Oh yes.

44,319. Well, if any person had proposed to go to the extent of 1,500*l.* what should you have said ?—I should have utterly refused.

44,320. Suppose that person had been your own brother, and that he told you he had actually raised the money, or taken measures to raise it, what should you have said ?—I should have advised him to do no such thing, and to retract any movement that he had made in that direction. I should have thought it the most absurd thing in the world.

44,321. (Mr. Price.) When did you first become acquainted with the fact that he had made an arrangement at Sealy's bank for a credit to the amount of 1,500*l.* ?—On the 4th of October, this month, at Constantinople.

44,322. You never knew it till you then read it in a letter or in a newspaper ?—A newspaper was sent to me.

44,323. Then you were not aware until that time that your brother had been in communication with Mr. Prior, one of the partners of Sealy's bank, and had arranged with him the night before the polling day that there should be a credit by his giving his cheque, I think, upon Stuckey's bank, and that it should be drawn upon by Mr. Henry Lovibond the next day, if necessary ?—No, I did not.

44,324, (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you suppose the money upon which you were unseated in the last election had come from ?—The money upon which I was unseated ?

44,325. Unseated at the last election; the 500*l.* that Mr. Lovibond got from the bank ?—Well, I really never knew. I thought it may have been supplied to Mr. Vanderbyl, but I never knew.

44,326. Has there been any application made to you from Sealy's bank to you for any money that was advanced to you ?—Never.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. A.W.Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869

44,327. (Mr. Anstey.) Has any application been made to your brother, or to any of your family that you have heard of, upon the subject ?—I never heard of it.

44,328. I wish now to ask the question publicly, is it your intention that if applied to by Sealy and Prior, or anybody else on their behalf, for the repayment of that sum of 500*l.*, to repay to them one farthing of the money so applied ?—I cannot conceive that any manner of claim could be made upon me for that.

44,329. But if they do make a claim, how shall you meet it ? If they appeal to you and say, "You are in honour bound to pay back this sum," shall you in that case honour that custom, or shall you honour it rather in the breach than in the performance, by refusing to pay these men a farthing of the money so improperly applied ?—Well, I think I should be disposed to exercise my judgment in that respect vicariously, as is usual where questions of honour are concerned. I should like the question to be submitted to some friend of mine who would take the fairest and broadest view as to what are called debts of honour.

44,330. (Mr. Price.) The position in which it stands is this, the evidence before us is that your brother had made that arrangement the night before the polling day. There is evidence that on the polling day he went to the bank again, that he then had a conversation with Mr. Prior, which may bear two interpretations ; but whatever took place between him and Mr. Prior was not communicated to Mr. Lovibond, and that Mr. Lovibond having been aware of the arrangement he had made the night before drew to the extent of 500*l.* on the supposition that your brother's credit was pledged to that amount proved by word of mouth. That is the sort of position in which the matter stands without going further into detail. Assuming that is the correct version of the way in which the matter stands, then you see your question of honourable liability may arise ?—What I understand by that is, that my brother went into the bank and asked whether anything had been advanced on this sum, was told no, and then he said that determined it, and tore up the cheque.

(Mr. Anstey.) That we have our own opinion about.

44,331. (Mr. Price.) That we shall exercise our own judgment upon ; but assuming that matter nevertheless not to have been communicated to your special agent, Mr. Henry Lovibond, he, in ignorance of that, but knowing the previous arrangement, drew 500*l.* of the money by word of mouth at that time, of course ; supposing your brother's authority, that would be the position in which you would stand, assuming your brother had concealed it ?—Yes ; but I do not think I should be placed exactly in that position, because Mr. Henry Lovibond had informed my brother that the election was gone, that there would be a revocation.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He does not seem to have thought so, because he afterwards sent for 500*l.*, and had it.

(Mr. Price.) He draws on that, and justifies his drawing on that by saying that he never became aware of his supposed revocation.

(Mr. Anstey.) Even assuming that revocation to have taken place.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And has added he would defend any action brought against him for the money.

(Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say, as a public man, that you would have the least hesitation as to the course you would take with regard to recouping these bribemongers ; I mean by "these bribemongers" Messrs. Sealy and Prior, who advanced the money originally ; would you have the least hesitation in coming to the conclusion that it is your bounden duty, as a public man, not to recoup them a farthing of it, but let them bear the loss of their ill-conceived and ill-contrived expenditure ?

44,332. (Mr. Coleridge.) And to avow it openly ? —I should like to place it, if the question ever occurred, as I said, in the hands of a man of honour.

(Mr. Price.) The danger of course, in this sort of thing, which cannot escape a man of your observation, is, that in any case whatever the bank of the place becomes actually the bribe fund, if the candidate afterwards sanctions such a grossly irregular proceeding as that which took place with regard to this 500*l.* ; the bank then becomes the fund. You must see that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And every single bank here at one time or the other has done it.

(Mr. Anstey.) Unfortunately it is the money of the depositors, who perhaps in their hearts abhor and detest the infamous purposes to which their money is applied, and never find out the business perhaps until the bank, from its prodigality, has come to grief.

44,333. (Mr. Price.) All this matter has come to you by surprise I understand. Since the 4th of October you have heard of the whole of this ?—Yes.

44,334. (Mr. Anstey.) We may state to you the fact. I do not state openly in court what this will be, but you will see what the whole bearing will be ? —I think I have answered it.

44,335. (Mr. Price.) You wish to put it in the hands of some third party ?—Yes, a man of honour.

44,336. Before we get to the polling day there is one important thing I wish to ask you about, and that is the negociations which are said to have taken place. You have already been asked by one of my colleagues whether, before you came down, two months before, any negociation was opened to you as to a compromise and coalition between you and Mr. Westropp. Now, coming down to the election itself, two days before, the two important days of Saturday and Sunday, were you aware at all of negociations going on, conducted on the one side by your agent, and by Mr. Vanderbyl's agent also, and on the other by Mr. Westropp's agent, and by Mr. Westropp personally, as to a compromise, either by way of throwing Mr. Vanderbyl over or throwing you over ?—I never heard anything of any sort of negociation, having the object of throwing Mr. Vanderbyl over. I have the other, the opposite negociation, for throwing me over. That I heard of.

44,337. When ?—I heard it from Mr. Westropp.

44,338. When ?—When a meeting took place after the election.

44,339. Did not Mr. Henry Lovibond inform you, before you came down here, that he had received from Mr. Vanderbyl himself a letter to the effect, "I am "sick of my agents, Reed and Cook. I will throw "them over and make you my agent, provided you "become my agent and promote my interest instead "of Mr. Kinglake's ;" did he tell you that ?—Yes.

44,340. Before the election ?—Yes.

44,341. How long before ?—I could not say how long before, but I think it may have been a fortnight before. I think his language was that Mr. Vanderbyl proposed to retain him.

44,342. Did you take any action at all, or do anything at all, in consequence of that very important communication from Mr. Lovibond ?—Yes, I became very uneasy altogether about the election. I found it a most embarrassing thing to conduct an election.

44,343. My question is, what did you do beyond being embarrassed by this communication ; what step did you take in consequence ?—Well, for several weeks I continued to put great pressure upon Mr. Henry Lovibond to bring about separate action, and to put an end to the idea of a joint candidature.

44,344. (Mr. Price.) Between you and Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Yes ; what I desired was to have Mr. Henry Lovibond as my agent, and Messrs. Reed and Cook, or whoever Mr. Vanderbyl might choose, should be his agents, but, however, that there should be an entire separation. However, that was found impracticable. I was urging that, and desiring it for a long time.

44,345. What reason did you give for that when you were urging it ; did you tell him that you thought it incompatible, under all the circumstances, that you could fight cordially together ?—Yes.

44,346. That you found would not answer. How did you find that would not answer—would not answer the views of the lawyers?—The agents consulted about it, and determined that that would be impossible, and that if any separation took place they would not act at all.

44,347. You mean that they would give up the whole thing on both sides, both you and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

44,348. (Mr. Anstey.) Who said so?—Mr. Henry Lovibond told me that was his decision.

44,349. Who else?—It met with the approval of Mr. Barham; he said he had consulted Mr. Barham, and they had determined, if I press the separation, that they would not act.

44,350. Then you authorized them, I suppose, to consult again with Messrs. Reed and Cook on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes, went on with the joint action.

44,351. Did not you at any time during the contest, during the poll, that is, any time before the election, hear that there had been any overture made on the part of some people, whether they wished well to you or wished ill to Mr. Vanderbyl, to squeeze out Mr. Vanderbyl altogether, and promote your election and that of Mr. Westropp without any contest, as one and one?—No.

44,352. I will specify on the Sunday night before the election?—No.

44,353. On the Monday, then, the nomination day, had you heard of it?—No.

44,354. (Mr. Price.) Did you know of those interviews with Mr. Vanderbyl, where discussions had taken place, in reference to these disclosures about the National Bank and the Lundy Granite Company; did you know that a deputation had waited on Mr. Vanderbyl with a view of getting him to retire?—No.

44,355. (Mr. Anstey.) That there had been a meeting held just before to consider whether he was a fit person to stand?—No.

44,356. Did not you hear there were other persons who thought that the man who would stand on purity principles, as Mr. Vanderbyl was determined to do, was for that reason alone, independent of Lundy Island Granite and National Bank, quite unsuited to the borough?—No.

44,357. You did not hear that?—No.

44,358. (Mr. Price.) Where were you staying on the Saturday and Sunday?—I was living at the "Railway" hotel, which is very much, as the Commissioners know, out of the town, out of the focus.

44,359. (Mr. Anstey.) It is within the borough?—It is within the borough, but at a distance from the centre of the town.

44,360. But you retained your sitting room at Allan's, we have heard?—Yes, as a place to go in the day; but I never used it, I think, until the polling day.

44,361. Did not anybody tell you that there was this awful discord even as late as one on Monday morning. You understand the position is said to be this: first of all there were people who honestly objected to Mr. Vanderbyl because of his letter about rigging the market in the Lundy Island case; then there were those who objected to him because he was not going to spend money, and because they were afraid that you would not, because they thought if neither of you spent money the other side would easily return Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and those persons are said to have laid hold, as a pretext, the objection which was bonâ fide urged by the other class of persons, namely, Mr. Vanderbyl's alleged dishonourable conduct in the Lundy Island affair, and having whitewashed him at one meeting, when they did not know he was not going to bribe, brought on the question at another meeting after they knew he was not going to bribe, and sent up a deputation composed of their leaders, to Mr. Vanderbyl, who saw him late on Sunday night, they having occupied themselves on Sunday in these proceedings, some of them deacons of chapels, and others who nevertheless used the Lord's day for that purpose, when they appeared before him with this pretext about the Lundy Island Granite, and so forth, and had to submit to the reproach, "Gentlemen, it is money you want; it is all hypocrisy and humbug." That is the story. Do you mean to say you never heard of that at the time, or afterwards, until now?—I did not hear of it at the time; I have heard vaguely of it before to-day, I think.

44,362. When did you first hear of it?—I could not say at all.

44,363. Before the trial of the election petition?—I could not say.

44,364. (Mr. Price.) Did you know of Mr. Fennelly being down here with Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

44,365. (Mr. Anstey.) Then that may account for your language. I am quoting from Mr. Vanderbyl's address which is put in evidence before Mr. Justice Blackburn. It is his, though it is called Mr. Kinglake's: "Our Tory friends wished to make it appear "that my honourable friend, Mr. Kinglake, and "myself are not working together. I am glad that "Mr. Kinglake has expressed himself so clearly on "this subject, and I take this opportunity of also "assuring you that we both put our shoulders to the "wheel, and that we work together most cordially. "There has never been one word of discord between "us, and I may tell you that I feel proud to have as "my colleague a man of such ability, and with a "European reputation." That was put in evidence by Mr. Serjeant Parry along with a report, which I have not got, of your address, and to which this report refers. Did you believe at the time that you published your address, and this address of Mr. Vanderbyl apppeared, that there was this hearty co-operation going on between you?—That is after the canvass, is not it?

44,366. I do not know when.—We canvassed very heartily together; nothing could have been better than the spirit with which we canvassed together. I began it, and came down certainly greatly distressed and very repugnant altogether to a joint canvass, but it went on very well. He was perfectly fair in all he did during the canvass, and I was fair towards him as I considered. It clearly went on very well, the canvassing part.

44,367. After the canvassing was over there were speeches made at meetings, were not there?—Yes, sir.

44,368. By you and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes, sir.

44,369. Mr. Vanderbyl's brief, prepared from his own instructions, as Mr. Cook tells us, contains this passage: "On Saturday the 14th of November, that "is Saturday immediately before the nomination, "of course all parties had a full knowledge of the "examination"—he means the examination which discloses Mr. Vanderbyl's supposed guilt in that affair of the Lundy Island Company—"yet proceedings go "on the same, and no division is caused between Mr. "Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl on the subject, as in "the course of their speeches each refer to the other "in pleasant and friendly terms." Is that true as far as you were concerned?—Our public speeches were always perfectly friendly.

44,370. I mean, is the whole of that true, that you were of course aware of the examination, and that it caused no division between you, and that you continued to refer to him not only in pleasant but in friendly terms?—Certainly. I think I rather, perhaps, considering that he was somewhat run upon on account of that examination, made it a duty to be more friendly in my manner towards him than I was before.

44,371. (Mr. Price.) Did you think at that time that Mr. Vanderbyl had not had an opportunity of explaining then the circumstances which were alleged against him?—I do not think he had.

44,372. (Mr. Anstey.) I will read to you his own account of it, if you like, deliberately written afterwards, and incorporated with the brief by Messrs. Reed and Cook?—The fact was that the examination

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

was a hostile one, and he was examined about matters extending over five years, upon which his memory at the time was an entire blank, as, for instance, he denied having written a certain letter which was afterwards produced to him, when he of course immediately admitted that it was his letter, in which—and this is the point I want to ask your attention to—in which (that is in the letter), there are expressions about dealing with some of the shares of the Lundy Island Granite Company and rigging the market. Now that is an unequivocal and unqualified admission on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl two months afterwards that he had written this letter, and that this letter did contain the imputed words about rigging the market in the shares of the Lundy Island Granite Company.

44,373. (Mr. Price.) Were you aware of that, that he really had confessed, in fact there is no other words for it, that he rigged the market?—I think I kept myself in a state of intentional ignorance on the subject. According to my recollection I received an anonymous communication, apparently with a view of exposing him, and I intentionally and deliberately avoided meeting him. I thought that that was the becoming thing for me to do.

44,374. Had you made up your mind to act loyally to him whatever he did to you?—Yes, I certainly was determined to.

44,375. Did it come upon you by surprise that he entertained propositions which would have had the effect no doubt, if they could have been carried out; for instance such as this,—if you, Mr. Westropp, will agree to thow over Mr. Gray, Mr. Vanderbyl will meet you half way and throw over Mr. Kinglake. That is the effect of it?—Yes.

44,376. Does that come upon you by surprise?—Yes, very much to my surprise.

44,377. Were you aware that there was any ill-feeling between Mr. Lovibond, your agent, and Messrs. Reed and Cook?—Yes, I had always understood it.

44,378. No friendly feeling between them?—Yes.

44,379. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present at any conversation between Mr. Lovibond and Messrs. Reed and Cook, or any attornies, at which Bridgwater elections were spoken of or discussed in language such as "Taunton" instead of "Bridgwater," "Berkeley and James" instead of "Kinglake and Vanderbyl," and so on?—No, I never heard any conversation carried on like that.

44,380. Did you ever see any letters containing any such disguises?—No.

44,381. Did you hear at the time that there had been, that that was the way in which the professional men on your side discussed certain matters connected with the election?—I think I did once, there having been that expedient used.

44,382. (Mr. Price.) When did you hear that?—I could not say at all, not with reference to anything particular.

44,383. But during the pending contest?—No, it was afterwards. It was I think at the time there were negociations about the petitions, the first time.

44,384. Before the election inquiry?—Yes.

44,385. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you sure it was after the polling day that you heard first that this sort of cypher spoken or written was used?—I never heard of the fact.

44,386. Did you hear of the fact that there was a a cypher or disguise of that kind used, or any kind used, in speaking of election affairs; did you during the election hear that any form of speech was used to disguise the conversation on the subject?—No, certainly not.

44,387. (Mr. Price.) To disguise the realities?—No.

44,388. Then, we understand, up to the polling day you were utterly ignorant in the first place of your brother having had transactions in the place, and utterly ignorant of any negociations that had taken place with a view of inducing Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp to coalesce together and put you out?—Yes.

44,389. Up to the poll day you remained entirely ignorant?—Yes.

44,390. Did you know at all that there had been a great difficulty, even up to the last moment on the hustings, to get anybody to propose and second Mr. Vanderbyl?—I did not know there was a difficulty.

—44,391. Actually on the hustings the gentlemen were pressing for the service?—I did not hear it.

44,392. (Mr. Anstey.) On your canvassing on that occasion were you frequently applied to by persons, when you asked for their vote, or told by them that they wanted money?—No.

44,393. Or that they would not vote without money?—No.

44,394. Or that they would vote for the person who paid most?—No. I heard of those phrases, but I did not hear them used myself.

44,395. Not used to you?—Not used to me.

44,396. Now we come to the polling day. The voting as we know in the morning was very adverse, indeed up to half-past 12 in the day the majority was 240, or something of that kind, over you, and a larger majority over Mr. Vanderbyl?—Very much.

44,397. With reference to your last answer nothing of the sort was said to you, I want to know, between 1865 and the election in 1868, had you gone on paying to institutions and charities, and to individuals, and so forth, as you had done before?—Yes.

44,398. On what scale?—The same scale as before.

44,399. Had you during that time received any applications for loans on personal or doubtful security?—No.

44,400. You had made none?—No.

44,401. Did you continue to make those payments to institutions, charities, and individuals down to that time?—Yes.

44,402. (Mr. Price.) That was the state of things about half-past 12?—At 12, I think.

44,403. The return was given about those intervals; at a quarter past 12 it appeared that that was the majority, which certainly looked a very formidable one?—Yes.

44,404. It is also stated that you left the town by the 1.37 up train to London?—The 1.32 train.

44,405. And you stopped at the "Railway" hotel some time; but it also appears by the return that before you could have left the station, I do not say before you actually left the streets of Bridgwater, the majority had very considerably dwindled away at a quarter to two, which would be after you left probably, although the train is always late according to my experience, it was reduced down to 70; but even before half-past one, at a quarter past one, it had dwindled away certainly by 100 or more.

(Mr. Anstey.) At one o'clock it had dwindled away by more than 100; it was only 143.

44,406. (Mr. Price.) Were you aware of that?—No, in entire ignorance of it.

44,407. Did not you take the trouble between a quarter past 12, to consult the returns of the poll, up to before you left the town?—Now, sir, on this part of the case I must really ask, if I may venture to do so, an almost exceptional amount of attention from the Commissioners.

44,408. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you answer the question first which the learned Chief Commissioner asks you; did not you, before you formed such an extreme resolution as that to leave the town, consult the latest returns of the poll?—Oh, surely, I heard the latest returns.

44,409. Did not you on seeing the latest returns observe that the majority in one hour had been decreased by 100, that instead of being 250 or something, it was only 143 at one o'clock?—No; because when I got to the railway station I was entirely separated from Bridgwater.

44,410. (Mr. Price.) We will concede that. I am giving you the time, a quarter past 12 I think is the return of a majority of 240. Now, assuming that you left the town, that is the streets of Bridgwater, as I put it before, and I must tell you that we have it in evidence that before one, and after half-past 12, you, Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Mogg, and your brother and Mr. Reed were all in the street somewhere near the "Globe," and that Mr. Lovibond was left behind, and had some conversation with your brother; and I also think it fair to tell you that the expression which Mr. Lovibond used when he rejoined Mr. Reed was, "Do you know Mr. Kinglake's family are tremendously anxious," or words to that effect, "excessively anxious about the return of Mr. Kinglake?" Now up to that time we have it in evidence that you were in or about the town, and assuming that it would not take very long to get to the railway, nor to go to the hotel and write out your farewell address, I think we are not extravagant in supposing that you did not leave the streets before one o'clock?—I place it about a quarter or 20 minutes before one.

44,411. I think it is hardly that, because I think we have got it now; there was a question whether a certain fly had gone back again to the bank with your brother after one o'clock.

(Mr. Anstey.) The only question is between one and half-past one. But all agree, even Hodge of the "Railway" hotel agrees that it was after one that you came up to his hotel, 10 minutes past one he thinks, and some say nearer half-past.

44,412. (Mr. Price.) I only tell you that is the state of things. You say you pray for exceptional attention; there is no occasion to use the word "exceptional," because we have given the most undivided attention. You may say whatever you like about that?—Well, I have gathered that the Commissioners had a doubt as to the good faith of my departure from the town, and I certainly could not complain of them if they are sceptical on that subject, because I am bound to say when I have mentioned the matter even to my personal friends there has been an inclination to smile, as if it were some election manœuvre; and when I have asserted to them on my honour that I went away from the borough absolutely despairing as to the election, they then thought that some trick had been played on me by my agents.

44,413. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your agents have told us you took a point of law afterwards. Your absence from the town as a point of law created, or rather did away with any sort of authority which you had given them, so that any corrupt practices by your agents after you had gone away would not affect your seat?—Yes, I had a strong opinion certainly on that.

44,414. (Mr. Price.) And that naturally gave rise in our minds to a suspicion I do not want to use at all an offensive expression; you say your friends said an electioneering manœuvre, that is polite language for what I should say, vulgarly speaking, looked like a dodge?—Now what I respectfully undertake to do, as a man of truth, is to convince you that my departure from the town was in perfect good faith, and in absolute despair of the election.

44,415. (Mr. Anstey.) I must tell you that my difficulty comes much earlier in the day. It is stated in evidence to us that for some reason yet unexplained, you in your quarters, and Mr. Vanderbyl in his quarters, took the very unusual course of shutting himself up, each of you sealing yourself, as it were, from the eyes of the electors at the very time that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray were walking abroad and showing themselves to all men, and that this sort of concealment lasted in the case of Mr. Vanderbyl until he was told that you and he were at the head of the poll, and in your case until you went forth and had the conversation in the street already spoken of, and then proceeded to the railway station. I should like you to give an explanation of that, a very minute history of all you did with reference to the election, with reference to committees during that day, from the time you awoke until the time of your departure?—I am very much obliged to the Commissioners for that question, because it reminds me of an important effect which on Mr. Vanderbyl's account it would be right for me to state, if not on my own account. When the numbers were rapidly going against us, I think at the time when Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray came out and were thanking the electors, Mr. Vanderbyl came to me and said, "Do not you think we ought to "go out and show ourselves and try to restore con- "fidence?" and I said, "Well, I think this is a very bad "moment for it." I take on myself the responsibility of that; I said, "I suppose the next return of the poll will show some great change in our favour," because I was assuming all the time we had a great majority, "and "when that change occurs then we can go out with a "better grace, with much more advantage to our- "selves;" and I do not know whether he thought right to accede to that, but nevertheless he adopted that view, and went back to the inn where Mrs. Vanderbyl was then. I should think about half-past 11 my brother came in very pale, and told me that Mr. Henry Lovibond said that the election was lost, and not long afterwards Mr. Lovibond came in and confirmed that statement, and said the election was gone. I of course was very much shocked at this, and it was not without a good deal of resistance on my part that I at all accepted it, but the more I pressed him the more firm he was on the subject, and he said the election was absolutely and irretrievably lost.

44,416. (Mr. Anstey.) Who said?—Mr. Henry Lovibond. It was in answer to something he had heard suggested by someone else, that any attempt to retrieve it by illegal means would be absolute madness.

44,417. Who made the suggestion?—I do not know at all.

44,418. You say in answer to someone's suggestion?—I think from the language which he held it was originated by something he had heard.

44,419. You do not mean that it was said by anybody present?—Not by anybody present; no, merely saying that those who would suggest such a course would be quite mad. I said, "There is not a possibility of both seats being gone;" and he said, "Yes, one the same as the other; they are hopelessly gone." Then I said, "According to this I have nothing to do but to make my bow." "Well," he said, "let it be so;" and the next thing was this. I said, "Supposing the "election was lost, do you think it would be becoming "in me to remain to the end as I did when defeated "in 1852, to face the thing out as well as I could, to "meet the electors in the hall and make my bow, "however disagreeable the thing might be, and in "what I might consider a becoming way." He said all the circumstances were against it, that the people were all very angry, that the Conservatives were in, and were in a very triumphant humour, and amongst the Liberals the collapse of the election had naturally produced great indignation and disgust. Everybody was angry with everybody else. It seemed to me that I should be made the medium of crimination and recrimination amongst the Liberals. Everybody would be coming to me and saying, "It is more so-and-so's fault;" and altogether my remaining there would be objectionable. And I found there was a train which would start at 1.32, and I said I was disposed to go off by that train. Mr. Lovibond said he could not see any reason why I should not. Then some friends came into the room.

44,420. Who was that?—I think Mr. Bate and Mrs. Bate, and they, seeing Mr. Lovibond with me, said, "We will not interfere; here is business." I said, "No, there is no more business, the election is is lost." And I now in the presence of this court declare solemnly that I firmly believed the election was hopelessly lost; and I declare that if at Highbridge, for instance, I had seen a score of voters who had told me that at any considerable inconvenience to themselves they were going to vote for me at the election, I should have said, "For heaven's sake do no such thing; the election is hopelessly lost;" so that my real conviction was—I am not trying to gain any legal advantage from it now, of course—that substantially and actually I had ceased to be a candidate. I was not a candidate. I was no longer seeking the voices of the electors. Well, that I state in the most positive manner.

44,421. (Mr. Price.) There is only one thing a candidate can do that shows that conclusively he can communicate with the returning officer to save any further trouble?—Yes; but I was not in a state of mind for doing anything so wise as that.

44,422. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said you went to the "Railway" hotel on your way to the station?—Yes; but I have not come to that.

44,423. Could not you on your way to the railway station have written one line to that effect?—I did.

44,424. You wrote your parting address?—I wrote my parting address there.

44,425. (Mr. Price.) But that would have to be printed, and would not appear probably until the evening after the poll was over; but the question of my learned colleague following upon me is this: whether there was a mode then of really doing it?

44,426. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did not you publish your parting address in manuscript at once; it would soon have been printed by the "Bridgwater Mercury" press?—That did not occur to me.

44,427. (Mr. Price.) There would be another thing you might have done, I do not say it was imperative, you might have said, "I am going by the train; let it "be freely known in the town that I am going to no "further expense"?—Yes, that is the substance of what I wrote.

44,428. (Mr. Anstey.) But then that was not to appear until you were advised of the true state of the poll at four o'clock?—Yes, because Mr. Bate was showing this to everyone as he went up.

44,429. What?—I gave this farewell address of mine to my friend, Mr. Charles Bate.

44,430. But it was not to be used until after the final state of the poll was declared?—Yes, immediately, and it was, because he showed it to everyone.

44,431. (Mr. Price.) Did you communicate to Mr. Vanderbyl your going away?—I did not.

44,432. Before going to the railway station, will you explain anything of that part of the transaction in which it is said you were in the street near the "Globe," your brother, Mr. Henry Lovibond, and Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook, and what was the purport of that conversation, because it seems there was this conversation. Mr. Reed represents that he walked on and left Mr. Lovibond to talk to you privately, and afterwards Mr. Lovibond says, "You have no idea how anxious Mr. Kinglake's family are about his return;" and then after that suddenly there was a very great change in the poll?—I believe I was never out of the room.

44,433. You do not remember being in the street?—No, certainly. I was not, according to my recollection, out of Allan's house from the time I first came into the house; it may have been nine or half-past nine until I stepped into the fly which took me to the station.

44,434. (Mr. Anstey.) Now I want to ask you on that, were you aware that your brother had paid a visit to the bank, according to Mr. Prior's evidence, just about the time you are now speaking of? Other persons who have been called put it later, but were struck with seeing your brother going to the bank, and made the natural observation, "Depend on it there is "something up and we shall soon see a change in the "poll;" and accordingly there was about a quarter to two a very visible change. Now, were you aware that your brother was going to the bank?—Yes.

44,435. What time do you fix it?—I put it half-past 12 to a quarter to one.

44,436. (Mr. Price.) Did you know he was going to the bank?—I will tell the Commissioner, what occurred. As soon as I had determined to go off by the express train, I put my hand into my waistcoat pocket to see whether I had my journey money, and I found I had not enough, and I asked my brother to go across to the bank and bring me some money. He went across, and in two minutes he came back with 10*l.*

44,437. (Mr. Price.) That was one occasion, at all events, on which he visited the bank on that day. Are you aware of any other business he had there except that, apparently you asked him to go?—Yes, I asked him, but he was back in two minutes.

44,438. You were at Allans at that time?—Yes.

44,439. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure that that was the only occasion on which to your knowledge your brother Dr. Kinglake, went that day to Sealy's bank?—No, I know on the contrary now; because I know now I did not know it at the time, that at a time which he fixes at 10 o'clock he went there and asked for that cheque which is spoken of as cancelled.

44,440. You are mistaken as to your facts as to what he stated, but that is not my question; my question is, putting apart what you have learnt since from the evidence taken here, and speaking of your knowledge as it was on that day, was the occasion of which you speak, when he went across and got you 10*l.* for your personal expenses, the only occasion that day when according to your knowledge at that time he went into the bank?—That was, according to my knowledge.

44,441. Therefore it was perfectly plain from your evidence that your brother went into Sealy and Prior's bank after you had made up your mind to proceed immediately to town?—For that purpose.

44,442. Because the fact that you wanted the money for your personal expenses fixes it. Then was it immediately after you got the 10*l.* that you proceeded from Allan's to the "Railway" hotel on your way to the station?—Yes, almost immediately after; certainly after that, and my brother with me.

(Mr. Price.) I think you are under a misapprehension as to the time at which your brother went, if anything took place about the cheque, because Mr. Prior is as distinct as possible that it was half-past 12 that took place, but he may be wrong.

44,443. (Mr. Anstey.) Did your brother tell you, besides getting the money for your personal expenses, he had said anything to him about another transaction?—No.

44,444. About a money transaction?—No.

44,445. (Mr. Price.) Was he there long enough, to your recollection, to have gone into the parlour and had a conversation to the extent which we have heard, and had the cheque given up, and that sort of thing?—No; my impression is, that he was back immediately.

44,446. (Mr. Anstey.) You will understand that I am giving no opinion about the matter whether you are right, though I have my own opinion about that, or whether deliberate concealment has been practised on us by those who came before us and should have known better; but I only want to fix your statement at present, so that we may be able to come to about what is the latest moment you give your brother for the return from the bank with the money as near as you can tell?—I think I have already informed the Commissioners that my impression is, that we must have driven up to the "Railway" hotel at a quarter before one; that is my impression, and then fetching the journey money; I do not know how many minutes, but some time before that. I cannot fix an hour.

44,447. If you find we have correctly stated to you (and we have done so) the effect of all the evidence as to the real time of your arrival at the hotel, namely, that it was past one, will you be positive in thinking it was before one in the face of so much evidence?—Well, my estimate as to the time by my recollection of the quantity of things said and done, first at the "Railway" hotel where several people came, and there were it seemed to me very long conversations and painful lamentings, and then there was the composition of this farewell address, and then some moved down and other people came up. The scene was of such a kind that I am afraid I should hardly convey it to the Commissioners; big stalwart men sobbing like children at the collapse of the election.

44,448. Still you had nearly half an hour for all that, even if the train kept its time for a wonder?—Well, I estimated it rather more than that, and if I estimated six or seven minutes for the time the fly would take in getting to the railway station, I do not know whether that would be accurate.

44,449. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then someone has told us that you went out of the room and gave orders to the servant to pack up your things?—At the "Railway" hotel I ordered the servant to pack up what things he could. I think there was some at the wash, and he was to bring on the others by a later train. Now, I wish very much to convey to you the strong conviction which I had myself as to the perfect good faith of this renunciation of the election, not only on my part, I hope the Commissioners will not hesitate to believe, but also on the part of everyone present. I venture to say everyone at that scene would give the clearest and strongest evidence as to the faith of the whole thing. There was nobody present who could have doubted that my despair of the election, and Mr. Lovibond's despair of the election were perfectly genuine. It is not within the power of actors to play such a comedy as was performed, if there had been any pretence in it; for I assure the Commissioners there was absolute despair and final renunciation of the election on my part, and also, as I firmly believe, on the part of Mr. Henry Lovibond.

44,450. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you to say, nevertheless, you did not go through the form of revoking Mr. Henry Lovibond's authority to act for you in your absence?—No, I did not go through any form of that sort.

44,451-2. You left him behind you in this place with a knowledge, I presume, of the part he had acted in corrupting voters at Mr. Bagehot's unsuccessful contest, and again, which is more important, at Mr. Vanderbyl's your colleague's triumphant return, if I may profane the expression?—But also with a knowledge that he considered it would be absolute madness, for he said so, to attempt it.

(Mr. Price.) A very temporary hallucination passed over his brain; he very soon recovered sanity.

44,453. (Mr. Anstey.) Then before any period of this, I know not what to call it, I do not mean the election strictly so called, but any period of this long transaction commencing with the first anticipation of a contest, and then going down to the close when you left and went to London, was there any understanding, tacit or expressed, between you and him that he was to be, or Mr. Barham, or your brother, or young Mr. Bate, or someone in fact was to be the person to whom communications about money, about the delicate politics of the election, as someone calls them, were to be addressed, who was to answer, whether by refusal or concession does not signify, but who was to answer all such applications and not expose you to the difficulty and embarrassment of having to answer?—No, there was no arrangement of that sort.

44,454. No understanding?—No.

44,455. As a matter of fact you were never applied to for money?—No.

44,456. By anybody in the contest?—No.

44,457. And we have it literally by everybody usque ad nauseam, that the claims for money were so great, especially on the Sunday the demand was so great that they had to go open-mouthed first to your representative, Mr. Lovibond, and then to Mr. Vanberbyl, or the person representing Mr. Vanderbyl, and you it appears were kept perfectly in the dark as to the demands on Mr. Lovibond and the demands on Mr. Vanderbyl, I understand you to say?—Yes.

44,458. Then that being so I ask you again, was there nothing from which Mr. Lovibond and the others may have inferred, and reasonably inferred, though the fact may have been false, that all you wished was not to be troubled with any person, that you preferred to appear by deputy in the matter, the deputy being Mr. Henry Lovibond, and perhaps Mr. Barham, or one of the two; was there nothing from which anybody could have surmised that?—No.

44,459. Was not your shutting yourself up that morning a pregnant fact from which sanguine or suspicious minds might have formed such an opinion?—Not justly I think at all. I had no reason whatever for shutting myself up except the state of the poll.

44,460. I do not say whether it was reasonable or unreasonable, that the fact was so or not, but it is the curious fact that you alone, it appears, were not told about this universal expectation that money was wanted to gain the victory; for if money was not forthcoming Mr. Vanderbyl must go, and there would be a disgraceful compromise, or if there was not that compromise there must be a disgraceful defeat, thanks to the superior liberality of the Tories, that this was concealed from you?—Yes.

44,461. Nothing of it known to you?—No.

44,462. It was all known to Mr. Vanderbyl and his friends Mr. Fennelly and others; it was all known to your representative, Mr. Henry Lovibond, for he was the prime actor in this corruption. Again I ask you, can you account for it that there was not a single person in Bridgwater who enlightened your mind in the matter?—I think they understood electioneering too well for that. I think the Bridgwater people have always understood they ought not to approach a candidate with——

(Mr. Price.) But they approached Mr. Vanderbyl very strongly.

44,463. (Mr. Anstey.) Finish your answer; they always understood that they should not approach a candidate with what?—With any appeals for money.

44,464. That is what I say; therefore there was a kind of understanding that that should not be done with you?—There was a general understanding.

44,465. Very well. Who was the buffer that was to keep off disagreeable applicants, or the man with the white staff to do the Lord Treasurer's duty and drive them away, Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Barham?—Nobody was appointed for the purpose, because the intention was to contest the election legitimately, but I suppose the people who had negociations of that sort to make would go to any of the agents they thought of.

44,466. Just so. Then there is this fact, your two agents were Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham, just as Messrs. Reed and Cook were agents of Mr. Vanderbyl, and we have this fact, that Mr. Henry Lovibond, who knew what he concealed from you as you say, and I daresay may be the truth of the transaction about the 1,500*l.* at Stuckey's, Taunton, and elsewhere, was left behind with his powers unrevoked; in fact powers enhanced by the simple fact of your absence, because you were not there to check or control him, and the moment you had gone, and he on the one side was emulating the zeal which Messrs. Reed and Cook even before you had gone had begun on the other side to show with great success, that is to say, bribing and debauching voters, of whom we have it in evidence no less than 34 consented to be debauched, and to commit a fresh kind of offence, violating a solemn promise given in accordance with their own political principles for Westropp and Gray. Those are the facts to which I wish to direct your attention, and ask you whether you can throw any light upon them, no matter whether the evidence you are going to give on the subject will bring Mr. Henry Lovibond to ruin, or Mr. Anybody to ruin, and bring disgrace upon every person but yourself who has been examined here, from Messrs. Sealey and Prior downwards, no matter; I press for an answer. I wish to know can you throw any light whatever on these most suspicious facts?—I gather from the earlier part of the learned Commissioner's question, that he desired to know whether it was not the fact that Mr. Henry Lovibond remained at Bridgwater with power to act, and so on. Well, what I respectfully submit to the Commissioners is this, that the contrary of that is the fact, that after Mr. Henry Lovibond had deliberately told me the election was lost, and had as it were sent me away, or assented to my going away, it amounted to a determination of any authority which he had.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

44,467. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is the point of law again?—Yes, but it is a question of fact also, because it answered the question of the learned Commissioners as to whether Mr. Henry Lovibond was not left with his whole authority here.

44,468. And his plenipotentiary powers in fact?—Yes, I test it by liability to perfectly legitimate expenses. Supposing when Mr. Henry Lovibond saw the state of the poll was changed he had ordered the printer to print a quantity of cards so as to bring the men to poll, and that the printer had sued me for the money, I should respectfully submit to the Commissioners he would fail, because there would be a determination of the authority.

44,469. (Mr. Price.) That authority you had never revoked, and therefore it is just like husband and wife in one sense. Mr. Lovibond might have gone forth to any shop in this town, clothed with your authority, to order any legitimate expenses, cards or addresses, and clearly any judge in the world would have told the jury that you had not revoked that authority, and consequently you would be liable?—I will bow to the decision of the Commissioners on that matter.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We have already considered this point before when we heard of it.

44,470. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you want to add anything in answer to my question? It was a pretty comprehensive one. I asked you to throw light on the point which appeared to me to be a most salient one, and as to which I am perfectly satisfied a most wicked concealment and perversion of the truth has been practised upon us by persons who ought to have known better, who have been examined before us. The other point, as to the remarkable coincidence of time between your departure and the opening—not to go over what I said just now—the opening of the fire from two distinct points, first of all half an hour before your departure by your colleague, Mr. Vanderbyl, or copartner, as the phrase is down here, and secondly by yourself, represented by the notorious briber, Mr. Henry Lovibond, a few minutes after your departure from another point, with the effect of converting an overwhelming majority into a miserable majority on your side within a short space of time. I want to know what light you can throw on that, the post and the propter which will relieve my mind of its present conviction that it was not accidental but designed?—My belief has always been—I may have been imperfectly informed on the matter—that the rally which took place about half-past one, or whatever the time was——

44,471. Between 12 and 1?—Whatever the time was, the rally was not brought about by corrupt means.

44,472. (Mr. Coleridge.) You see we have now got in evidence that there was a sum of 1,200*l.* in hard gold of Mr. Vanderbyl's in the town at this time; do you not really believe that that was brought about by some portion of the money being expended which we have not been told about, knowing Bridgwater as you do now?—I have not learnt anything to change the impression which has been on my mind, that was certainly that the rally had been won by other means; that is, despair of getting anything on the part of a great number of men, they came and voted as represented to me by hundreds and hundreds.

44,473. But, knowing Bridgwater as you know it, do you believe anything in the world but money would rally those men?—Yes, I do.

44,474. (Mr. Price.) What else?—I think that the moment they knew that money was not to be got they would come.

44,475. But at 12 in the day they did not know it, and the evidence has been that in those cases where bribery has been resorted to in the extreme there are a certain number of men who hang back. You must have heard this to-day from one or two witnesses who have been called?—Yes.

44,476. They hang back to the last moment almost that they have a chance of going to the poll. Now, the earlier they realize the gold, of course the earlier they go to the poll, and coupling this fact established before us with a very pregnant remark made by Mr. Reed that it was not fair to bleed from one lung only, meaning Mr. Vanderbyl——

(Mr. Coleridge.) We are strongly of opinion that Mr. Vanderbyl's lung was exhausted in the way which showed the change of the poll at 1 o'clock.

(Mr. Anstey.) And Mr. Cooke says, "Where the devil is Lovibond?" That was at the time you were thinking of going away, and when that majority was considerably being reduced, and he plainly implied their money had succeeded so far, but that your 1,500*l.*, which your sponsor had promised and vowed in your name should be forthcoming, was not forthcoming.

44,477. (Mr. Price.) It is quite clear that you had prepared. Your agent, Mr. Lovibond, distinctly said that you were prepared on your side. I do not know whether you are aware of that?—I think I saw it.

44,478. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to know whether you can throw any light on the remarkable coincidence that when the majority began to decline you began to meditate on your departure; Mr. Vanderbyl had begun to bribe, and you, that is your representative, was about to begin to bribe, and of course all tending to one and the final result at 4 o'clock, which cannot at all coincide with the perfect innocence of yourself and Mr. Henry Lovibond—I do not put it in the alternative—the perfect innocence of yourself or Mr. Henry Lovibond, but I want to know what is it you mean to convey, that Mr. Lovibond was guilty of gross violation of the trust reposed in him by you when he began to bribe, or is it simply he performed his miserable duty, as the man conceived it to be, that is, to keep a wicked promise to debauch the voters according to it; which is it we are to believe? Did he violate the solemn promise to you when he began to bribe?—I can only say that his assurances to me, and assurances made voluntarily long before the election, were that no consideration should induce him to engage in any illegal transaction.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But you see he and your brother had arranged it all the night before.

44,479. (Mr. Price.) When were the assurances given to you; not since the election, surely?—No, before he came up to London.

44,480. To revert back really to the question, do you or not consider that he having assured you, which makes all the more pertinent the question that nothing would induce him, I think that is your expression, to have recourse to the illegal practices, knowing what you do now, in what he did that afternoon, betrayed the trust reposed in him?

44,481. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes or no; do answer the question?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) In the same way as he did Mr. Bagehot, because nothing could be more complete than the promise which Mr. Bagehot says was given him beyond all question and doubt as to purity.

44,482. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not there this great distinction between your case and Mr. Bagehot's, that Mr. Bagehot had had no previous trial or experience of that notorious man, Mr. Henry Lovibond, but at the time he came to be your plenipotentiary in 1868, he was notorious not only to you but everbody here, as being one who was not to be trusted even after having made a solemn promise not to bribe, and yet you took him to your heart of hearts, and made him your representative, by virtue of which he became for a season your sole representative in your absence, and used—will not say abused—but used the opportunity thus created in the way we all know. Is not there that immense distinction between your case and that of Mr. Bagehot?—No doubt I have had more experience of Bridgwater elections.

(Mr. Price.) And of Mr. Lovibond.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It seems to me there is another distinction. Mr. Bagehot did go and pay all this money, and you prefer leaving it to a third person to say whether you shall or not.

(Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Bagehot also said if peradventure he had been returned—that is another distinction, is not it—and if the expenditure made without his knowledge had resulted in his return, he should have applied for the Chiltern Hundreds on discovery of the foul means which had been used, and refused the election, whereas it needed a petition in your case to put you out. That is his own statement to us yesterday. I asked him how he could reconcile himself to the payment of money, and he said if he had been returned he would not have paid the money, because he would have applied for the Chiltern Hundreds.

44,483. (Mr. Price.) You have told us that, and then you went away to London, and you had a telegram and came down. I do not know that we need go into that part of the thing, but what we want to know is, that when you came down and left the place, assured over and over again by Mr. Henry Lovibond that the thing was hopelessly—your expression very emphatically repeated to-day in your parole testimony—was hopelessly and irretrievably gone, and to your immense surprise therefore you found yourself elected when you came down here, how is it it did not occur to you to inquire as to how this marvellous defeat had been turned into a victory?—I can inform the Commissioners very clearly on that subject. When I came down I was received with great ovation; an enormous concourse of people came to meet me at the station, and there was a sort of chairing, a carriage with four horses, and so on. The gentleman who took the greatest part in this ovation was Mr. James Sully. He sat by my side in the carriage, and the first thing he told me was to say that he could congratulate me on the perfect freedom from all corruption with which the election had been carried on. I am sure he believed it himself, because he is a truthful man. What he stated was that the working men after their dinner, in the middle of the day, spontaneously rallied, and that they were the men who had carried the election, and that no thanks to the lawyers were due. That is the statement with which I was met when I had to make my speech, accepting the congratulations of the people at the end of every sentence. "Oh, it "is the working men who have done it, no thanks to "the lawyers."

44,484. (Mr. Anstey.) Who said this?—The crowd.

44,485. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Sully told you?—Mr. James Sully informed me of this.

44,486. (Mr. Anstey.) Then he did not tell you that Mr. Vanderbyl had taken the Sunday night for counsel, and on the Monday morning it was found unnecessary to trouble Mr. Vanderbyl, for he had acceded to the understood but not expressed wishes of the deputation?—I am sure that Mr. Sully did not know, because if he did I am quite convinced he had not made the statement to me he did as to the purity of the election.

(Mr. Anstey.) That is to say, he made to you a statement entirely inconsistent with that hypothesis.

44,487. (Mr. Price.) He was a man very much in the confidence of the party, and I suppose a prominent man?—Exceedingly popular.

44,488. A very prominent man?—Yes. I observed the agents did not take part at first in this sort of ovation; they appeared later. I understood that to be because the people were out of humour with them; that they had mismanaged matters.

44,489. (Mr. Price.) That brings back my question, did you have any communication with your agent? You know Mr. James Wood Sully's representations were all very well in their way, but he does not pull the strings except on other occasions, but I want to know what your agents, the legal gentlemen, said?—I do not recollect what they said.

44,490. Mr. Lovibond left you with the fullest impression that you were irretrievably defeated. Did you discuss with him and say, "Now, Mr. Lovibond, how about this?"—I gathered rather, I think, from his manner than anything he said on that day the election had not been so entirely free from objectionable circumstances as I had supposed during the early part.

44,491. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you state what he did say, and then we shall gather. Did he say, "There "has been wholesale bribery committed on our side, "and I am in for it"?—No, nothing of the sort.

44,492. (Mr. Price.) What did he say really. "Do "not lay the flattering unction to your soul which "Mr. Sully has endeavoured to administer, because "we, the lawyers, have done the thing for you," or anything of that kind?—No, it did not go that length. I do not know at all what the words were, but they were enough to tend to disenchant me with the impression which Mr. James Sully's statement had produced.

44,493. Did not you think it worth while to probe the thing a little further?—No, I did not that day.

44,494. Did you afterwards?—Afterwards the necessity for probing it further——

44,495. Did certainly arise, did it not, when the petition came?—Unfortunately.

44,496. That was superseded by graver matter?—A day or two after the election I learnt that a man named James Palmer had denounced an attempt to bribe him by Henry Bussell, and when Mr. Lovibond spoke to me about this I observed that he did not speak of this as being an exceptional thing altogether, and I then began to fear there had been organized corruption, because I could not understand how a man in the position of Henry Bussell should be offering 10*l.* to anybody, unless there had been more.

44,497. More than one 10*l.*?—No, that was my inference.

44,498. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Lovibond tell you that the case of Palmer was more the case of an offer of 10*l.*? Did he tell you that hundreds of your money had been actually paid by Bussell into the hands of men like Palmer; not offered, but actually paid?—He did not tell me it was my money, of course.

44,499. (Mr. Price.) But did he tell you that the money had been paid him?—Well, I quite understood.

44,500. (Mr. Anstey.) It was not an offer?—It was spoken of as a trap.

44,501. The difference was this: Palmer took the money, but you did not take the vote, for he broke the promise, and went and voted on the other side.

44,502. (Mr. Price.) You judged from that, not unnaturally, that when 10*l.* was given it would not be solitary?—I began to fear so.

44,503. Then very soon after that a still graver matter arose; there came the petition?—The petition began to be threatened, and then soon after that Mr. Lovibond began to speak of the ruin and misery that would be inflicted on professional men if the petition went on.

44,504. Did he say why?—Because I gathered that they had been engaged in illegal practices; he did not say that, but of course I gathered it. I did not understand that he included himself.

44,505. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not he also tell you that Mr. Prior, the junior partner in the bank of Sealy and Prior, had been and asked him to pay back the 500*l.* which the bank had given to Allan by the hands of Mr. Mogg?—No, he did not state that.

44,506. He never told you that?—No.

44,507. (Mr. Anstey.) Is the period of which you are speaking, when Mr. Lovibond came to you and told you the professional men here, not including himself, would be ruined by the revelations which would take place, after the petition was filed?—No, I think before the petition had been filed.

(Mr. Price.) With a view to what, then?

44,508. (Mr. Anstey.) What did he want you to do in order to avert that?—When he made this statement to me about the misery it would inflict, I said that was too harmful to think of, and I should wish to avert it by all sacrifices. He said he was quite sure that was what my answer would be, and in the result I became willing that both seats should go rather than that the petition should be presented.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

14 Oct. 1869.

44,509. (Mr. Price.) Did you authorize Mr. Lovibond to negociate with that view ?—Yes.

44,510. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that down here, or did he come to you in London ?—No, that was in Somersetshire.

44,511. (Mr. Price.) This is in Somersetshire. Where ?—Not in this place.

44,512. Where then ?—At Taunton.

44,513. (Mr. Anstey.) Was any member of your family present when this was being discussed ?—No.

44,514. I mean of your blood ?—No.

44,515. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Lovibond tell you at that time that it was possible that your brother, Dr. Kinglake, would be dragged into it ?—No.

44,516. Never informed you of what had taken place at the bank at all ?—No.

44,517. (Mr. Anstey.) Did anybody inform you that your brother, Dr. Kinglake, had been concerning himself about you and your election down to the time you are speaking of ?—No.

44,518. Down to that time you had no idea of what he had done ?—No.

44,519. When did you first hear he had been so concerning himself, or that he had been concerning himself at all ?

44,520. (Mr. Price.) Beyond canvassing with you ?—Beyond canvassing with me and communicating with the agents, and so on ?

44,521. Beyond that, when did you learn ?—As I have stated some hours ago, the 4th October.

44,522. (Mr. Anstey.) But as I understood you to say at the beginning of this day's examination, not only in 1859, but always, he has been in the habit of managing money matters for you, and accounts had passed between you from time to time at elections ?—Frequently, not always.

44,523. Had you any money account with him at this election ?—No.

44,524. Or before the election with reference to it ?—No, none whatever.

44,525. Or after it ?—None whatever.

44,526. Is he a man of great wealth ?—No, he is a man very well off; he is richer than I am, I think.

44,527. Is he a man who on his credit in Taunton could raise the sum of 1,500*l.*, merely on his personal credit ?—I do not know what the bankers may be willing to do on personal credit of men, but he certainly is a man of considerable property; bankers might advance a much larger sum to him.

45,528. On his personal credit ?—On his personal credit, certainly.

44,529. You have never heard he is considered in Taunton, I do not say embarrassed, but in not very flourishing circumstances ?—I never heard a statement or insinuation of the kind until it came from Her Majesty's Commissioners; never in my life.

44,530. Did you never hear that Dr. Kinglake himself had stated to one who repeated the statement on oath before us, that person being Mr. Henry Lovibond, I think also Mr. Prior, but it was one or both of them who said it, that his reason for coming here to endeavour to raise the money which was needed for the purpose of bribery at your election, was that he had tried to raise that money, or a smaller sum, I think he said 1,000*l.*, in Taunton and had failed, he could not obtain it there ?—I never heard it until I saw a report of the evidence.

(Mr. Price.) It is apparently an invidious topic, but that is a justification for any remark that may have fallen from the Commissioners with regard to your brother, that here it was deposed on oath by persons supposed to be in very confidential relation with the family, if not Mr. Lovibond, certainly Mr. Prior, that your brother had said he had failed to raise money at Taunton; therefore it would be very invidious, seen by the first light, to make any observation on your brother's pecuniary circumstances. You can now see that your brother had so expressed himself.

44,531. (Mr. Anstey.) My next question, therefore, to you is, supposing your brother unable to raise the money in Taunton on his credit, to what quarter could he possibly look to recoup him the money, supposing he borrowed the money here, but to you ?—His own property.

44,532. Supposing he has to borrow it for others, not for his own purposes but for your supposed interests; supposing your political interests purchased by such means, and then the quarter who lends him the money applies to him to have it back, I ask can you name any person to whom he can look to make that money good but yourself ?—I know of no one else.

44,533. That is the meaning of my question about embarrassed circumstances.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Friday, 15th October 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

GEORGE HARWOOD sworn.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

G. Harwood.

15 Oct. 1869.

44,534. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A master mariner.

44,535. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

44,536. Who does your vessel belong to ?—It is the "Victor;" it belongs to Mr. Jowell.

44,537. Is thatthe steam-tug ?—Yes.

44,538. Are you going away to-day ?—Yes.

44,539. How did you vote at the last election ?—For Westropp and Gray.

44,540. Did you get anything for it ?—No.

44,541. Any promise of any kind ?—No.

44,542. Did you get any expenses for your coming here ?—No, I was here.

44,543. Did you vote at either of the elections in 1866 ?—Yes.

44,544. How did you vote each time ?—I voted for Bagehot.

44,545. That was the first election in 1866 you voted for Bagehot?—Yes.

44,546. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

44,548. Who from?—Bussell.

44,549. Did you vote when Mr. Vanderbyl came forward?—Yes.

44,550. Did you vote for him?—Yes.

44,551. What did you get then?—20*l.*

44,552. Who did you get it from?—Smith.

44,553. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

44,554. How did you vote then?—For Mr. Westropp.

44,555. What did you get then?—Nothing.

44,556. Did you get any promise?—Yes.

44,557. Who promised you?—Waddon.

44,559. Did you never get it?—No.

44,560. Did you ever claim it of him afterwards?—I got 10*l.* when Mr. Patton put up. I reckon that in part payment.

44,561. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were paid on both sides?—I had 10*l.*

44,562. What made you vote in 1865 for the Tories, and then for the Whigs in 1866, and then again for the Tories in 1868?—I had a right to use my own mind; any person may if they like.

44,563. Did you vote in 1859 for Padwick and Westropp?—No.

44,564. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever vote before 1865?—No.

44,565. You got altogether how much?—40*l.*

44,566. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is what you call using your opinion?—Yes.

CHARLES WILLS sworn.

C. Wills.

44,567. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A master mariner.

44,568. What vessel do you work?—My own.

44,569. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

44,570. How did you vote?—Kinglake.

44,571. Did you get anything?—No.

44,572. You did not vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

44,573. Did you get any promise of any kind?—No promise of any kind whatever.

44,574. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

44,575. How did you vote at the second election of 1866?—For Vanderbyl.

44,577. Who from?—Captain Bussell, and 10*l.* from Charles Bulpin.

44,578. Which did you get first?—From Bussell.

44,579. Did Bulpin know that you had had 10*l.* from Bussell?—No.

44,580. You never told him that?—No.

44,581. Did you vote at the first election in 1866, when Mr. Bagehot was here?—Yes, for Mr. Bagehot.

44,582. What did you get then?—5*l.*, some time after the election; five or six weeks after the election.

44,583. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that all?—Yes, that is all.

44,584. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865?—Yes, that is the first vote.

44,585. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get your 5*l.* after the second election?—After Bagehot's election.

44,586. Was it also after Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—No, before.

44,587. Then it was not five or six weeks. Had you any row with the Liberal party about your succeeding in getting two bribes instead of one?—No.

44,588. Then if that is so, what is the reason you did not vote for Mr. Vanderbyl when he had given you as much as 20*l.* at the last election, but preferred to plump for Mr. Kinglake?—Well, I had no particular reason for it.

44,589. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who asked you to do it?—No one.

44,590. Did they know before you told us to-day that you had had 10*l.* of each of those men?—No.

PHILIP POWELL sworn.

P. Powell.

44,591. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An engineer.

44,592. On board a vessel?—Yes, the "Petrel."

44,593. Are you a Jew or a Christian, which?—No, I be not.

44,594. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

44,595. How did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

44,596. Are you a foreigner?—No, a Welshman; that is what I am.

44,597. How did you vote last time?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

44,598. What did you get for it?—Nothing the last time.

44,599. Were you paid any expenses for coming?—No.

44,600. Did you vote in 1866 for Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes, I did.

44,601. What did you get?—My daughter got 30*l.* from some person; I do not know who.

44,602. I suppose you got it?—She got it; I have not seen it.

44,603. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Mr. Bagehot?—Yes.

44,604. What did you get then?—My wife had it from Captain Allan.

44,605. Does your daughter know who she got the 30*l.* from?—No, she says she don't.

44,606. Did you vote in 1865?—No, I think not.

44,607. Had you a vote then?—Yes; I did not vote.

44,608. Did you vote in 1859?—No, I did not.

44,609. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get anything in 1865 for not voting?—No, I did not.

44,610. (Mr. Price.) Were you here?—Yes.

44,611. How was it you did not vote?—Well, I do not know; I did not care much for it.

44,612. You say in 1859 you did not vote?—Which is that?

44,613. Padwick and Westropp on one side, and Tynte and Kinglake on the other?—No, I did not. I only voted for Vanderbyl, that is all.

44,614. Did you vote in 1857?—No, I did not; that is the last one.

44,615. No, 1857, when Mr. Follett was here?—No, I did not.

44,616. In 1852?—No, I did not.

44,617. Did you ever vote besides?—For Mr. Follett the first time he was here.

44,618. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything?—No.

44,619. How much did you get altogether for your vote?—Altogether 40*l.*

Mr. EDWIN PHILLIPS sworn.

Mr. E. Phillips.

44,620. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a linendraper.

44,621. Carrying on business on your own account in this town?—Yes.

44,622. Have you a shop?—Yes.

44,623. And people under you?—Yes.

44,624. How many do you keep in your employment?—I have about 16 in the shop, and about 16 workmen out of the shop.

44,625. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

44,626. How did you vote?—I always voted for the Conservative party.

44,627. Did you get anything?—Certainly not.

44,628. Did you have any bill?—I had.

44,629. What was your bill for?—My bill was a large amount; the last election nothing.

44,630. You had no bill then?—No, none.

44,631. In 1866 did you vote for Patton?—I did.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. E. Phillips.

15 Oct. 1869.

44,632. Both times ?—Yes.

44,633. What did you get each time; did you get anything ?—Certainly not.

44,634. Had you a bill at either of those elections ?—Yes.

44,635. Which ?—That election; both.

44,636. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did it amount to ?—70*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.*

44,637. (Mr. Price.) What was it for ?—Ribbons, colours, flags, decorations, payment of banner men, painting the flags, lettering them, poles, painting poles, and other particulars.

44,638. Have you your bill ?—Yes.

44,639. Has it been paid ?—Yes, it has.

44,640. Who paid it ?—It was paid by Mr. Lilley, on February 29th, 1868.

44,641. Do you mean to say you supplied 70*l.* of goods ?—Yes.

44,642. And that you would have charged 70*l.* at any other time than the election for what you did ?—Most emphatically; every charge was just and righteous.

44,643. In 1865 did you vote for Westropp ?—Yes, I did.

44,644. Did you get anything yourself ?—Certainly not.

44,645. Did you have a bill then ?—Yes.

44,646. How much did it amount to ?—You have it.

44,647. (Mr. Coleridge.) 56*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* ?—Yes.

44,648. (Mr. Price.) Was that paid ?—It was paid.

44,649. When was it paid ?—It was paid on June 1st, through Stuckey's, in the name of Belphegor.

44,650. June 1st of what year ?—1866, through Stuckey's bank, by cheque. It was an order in the name of Belphegor, saying that such a cheque lay at Stuckey's bank to my credit.

44,651. (Mr. Anstey.) That was after Mr. Westropp's election had been set aside, and you knew that another candidate was coming down ?—I did not know.

44,652. You concealed the year just now, stating June 1st, and any person would have understood by that 1865, but it was 1866 ?—Oh no, it did not occur to me.

44,653. Another election was then on; will you swear positively that you had no communication with anybody about the bill between the time it had been incurred and the time it was paid ?—I swear it positively.

44,654. Then why did you abstain from communication with the person lawfully bound to pay it, namely, Mr. Westropp, all that time ?—I had no communication whatever. I had sent in the bill according to the instructions of Mr. Bealy Smith.

44,655. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay anybody else's bills ?—I did. You have them there.

44,656. What is this: "Hayward, Crocker, and Badger wanted 31*l.*" What does that mean ?—It is not 31*l.*

44,657. Explain what those memoranda on the back mean ?—Those are in 1865. Charles Hayward, I promised him 20*l.*

44,658. What for ?—If he would vote on the Conservative side.

44,659. You mean you bribed him ?—No, I did not.

44,660. But you did if you offered him money ?—Very well.

44,661. What did you offer the next man, Hook ?—Hayward's was not for himself, Hayward's was for a man next door to him called Crocker, and he was to endeavour to get a man called Badger.

44,662. Where were you to get the 20*l.* from ?—I gave his name to Mr. Bealy Smith.

44,663. The next ?—Hook.

44,664. (Mr. Price.) That is the famous Hook, the provision dealer ?—Yes.

44,665. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you promise him ?—20*l.*

44,666. What for ?—To get a man named Sutcliffe, and a man called Roberts. I never saw them.

44,667. The next ?—Hensley, at the "Sloop."

44,668. What did you promise him ?—10*l.*

44,669. The next ?—Isaac Hooper, Polden Street.

44,670. How much ?—10*l.* Poole, senior, and Poole, junior living in St. John Street; one keeps an inn, and the other is a tailor.

44,671. What did you promise ?—10*l.* each.

44,672. Did you send their names to Mr. Smith ?—I took them to Mr. Smith myself.

44,673. Did they get the money ?—I believe they did, or I should have heard of it.

44,674. Did you give it to them ?—I did not, certainly; I never gave anyone.

44,675. (Mr. Price.) Did you put any pressure at all on the party to pay the bill which was incurred in 1865 before you voted in 1866 ?—Not in the slightest degree. I never asked for it.

44,676. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you not speak to Mr. Bealy Smith, or the person you looked to for payment, during the whole time the petition was pending, or threatened against Mr. Westropp; why wait until it was decided, and a new election on ?—Because I did not want the money, nor did I apply. You say "until." I did not apply before or afterwards.

44,677. I say "until." If you have a better word in the English language I will use it. You got the money on June 1st, 1866, and if your story is true, you supplied goods bonâ fide and lawfully, and yet before that, and during the whole of that time, although Mr. Westropp might have died and a new candidate have come, you abstained, you say on your oath, from asking anything about it, and I want to know why ?—Most distinctly and emphatically I had abstained, and if I had lost the whole amount I should have been glad to give it up for the good of the cause.

44,678. For the good of what cause ?—The Conservative cause.

44,679, That is what I say; you would have been glad to have given it up for the Conservative cause ?—I never thought of applying.

44,680. You have just convicted yourself out of your own mouth, that you abstained for the good of the cause, and would have lost that money willingly, and therefore it is for political purposes you abstained ?—I bow to the decision.

44,681. (Mr. Coleridge.) Look at the other names.—They are merely a memoranda of different drapers' bills who supplied the other side.

44,682. How came you to give those ?—You will see in the evidence.

44,683. (Mr. Price.) In 1859 did you vote for Padwick and Westropp ?—Yes.

44,684. How did you vote then ?—Always for the Conservatives.

44,685. Did you get anything then ?—Certainly not.

44,686. Had you any bill ?—None.

44,687. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you promise any people money ?—No, I did not; I never promised before 1865.

44,688. In 1857 did you ?—I had not a vote then.

44,689. Did you promise anyone in 1866 ?—No.

44,690. Either election ?—Nor 1868.

W. Bond.

WILLIAM BOND sworn.

44,691. What are you ?—A labourer.

44,692. How did you vote at the last election ?—I had a vote at the last election.

44,693. How did you vote ?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

44,694. What did you get for it ?—Nothing.

44,695. Any promise ?—No.

44,696. Whose employment are you in ?—Messrs. Brown and Company.

44,697. Did you vote in 1866 ?—I never had no vote before the last election.

44,698. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote at the last election at the request of any person connected with your masters, Brown and Company, or did any of them request you to vote?—I cannot hear.

44,699. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who told you how to vote the last time?—I voted of my own accord, to please my own fancy.

44,700. (Mr. Anstey.) Who asked you?—No one did not ask me.

Mr. A. W. KINGLAKE recalled.

44,701. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you proceed with your narrative I wish to ask you a few questions arising out of your evidence which you have already given. First, with respect to the distribution of patronage, I wish particularly to ask you can you give me the names of persons, if any, whom you have at any time recommended to the notice of the Government for the purpose of receiving the commission of the peace for the borough?—I could by reference to papers give you the names.

44,702. If I read the names of the existing commission and of the last commission to you, would you be able to recognize them?—Yes, sir, I believe I should.

44,703. I will proceed to that immediately, but, in the meantime, the next thing I want to ask you about is this. In 1866 you were aware, I presume, that both Allan and Bussell had distinguished themselves in a most deplorable manner as principal agents in the bribing of voters at the election of Patton and Vanderbyl. Now I want to know, that being so, why did you in 1868 resume your old quarters at the house of one of those notorious persons, if you had held bribery in the horror which you in your representations to Mr. Lovibond would have him believe?—I had no notion of the fact of Allan having been engaged in transactions of that kind in the election of 1866. I am very much surprised; I cannot understand how my agents could have allowed me to go to Allan's if they knew that he had been engaged so; I had no knowledge at all.

44,704. Then I may take it so, that until the polling day at the last election you had never heard that Allan had been in any way employing himself in bribing voters at any previous election?—I cannot recollect that I ever heard such a thing. I feel very confident of this, that if I had known and had it present to my mind that Allan was a person employed in transactions of that kind I should have said, "That is "one house, at all events, where on no account should "a candidate go."

44,705. Just so; and that being so, if you had no suspicion at all of Allan, why did you remove your sleeping quarters to the "Railway Hotel," at the same time that you kept up your head-quarters at Allan's house; why had you two residences?—Well, sir, there were several reasons that operated with me for having quarters at the "Railway Hotel;" one was that I thought it very desirable at an election to have a place where I could be a little retired for a time, to have more command of my time than if I were in the focus of the election business; and a principal reason, and I think the principal reason which governed me, was the necessity of being at a place where I could have nutritious food, for I was in rather a delicate state of health. Allan's was only a lodging; and I was told, "Whilst you are undergoing all this work of the election you must take care to live well;" and I was very well suited in that respect at the "Railway Hotel." Then it was very inconvenient to me to have only quarters there, and to have no place where I could sit down and see people, if necessary, in the town; therefore I proposed to keep the room for the purpose of a sitting-room.

44,706. (Mr. Price.) To keep a room at Allan's?—To keep a room at Allan's. My impression is that, although I wished to have it, I never used it until the polling day. On the polling day I used it; I was reading Shakespeare, I recollect, while the election was going on.

44,707. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not think the point of my question has precisely occurred to you. Having a room at the "Railway Hotel" you required no residence or any room in the town; therefore I want to know was not the room, or rooms, which you took at Allan's intended for the business purposes of the election?—No.

44,708. Then for what could they be intended?—For my own use, when it was convenient for me to be in the centre of the town.

44,709. I say for the purpose of your contest and poll, and so on?—For my personal convenience.

44,710. In the conduct of the election?—I can give one instance, I think, or two instances, in which I used the rooms during the canvass, which were of this kind. We had worked a canvass for hours, and then I said we would go in and have a cup of coffee at my lodgings, and accordingly we went in there and had coffee, and then proceeded again with our canvass. That was the use I made of the room during the latter part of the canvass.

44,711. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is, for your own personal convenience you had a room at Allan's?—Yes.

44,712. (Mr. Anstey.) It was for your personal convenience; however, you used the term in the conduct of your own canvass, not for other purposes?—No.

44,713. When you were not engaged in canvassing, or on committees, you did not use those rooms at all?—No.

44,714. Then you say you particularly meant them for the poll day?—I particularly used it on the polling day.

44,715. More particularly?—More particularly, yes. I practically made much less use of it than I expected to make.

44,716. Was not it particularly and especially because Allan was one of your active partisans, agents I call them, but active partisans you call them, that you took those rooms?—No, indeed, the reverse of that is true; because if I had had it present to my mind that he was a man engaged in the mysteries of the election I should have said, "That is the very last person to whose house I can go."

44,717. Why?—Because it would have been obviously not prudent.

44,718. If he was an active partisan his house would have been the last to which you should go, do you say?—That if he were a person engaged in the transactions to which the Commissioner was referring.

44,719. You are going ahead of my question. I am not asking that, but was not it because you knew him to be an active partisan of yours that you took these rooms?—Certainly not; I took them because they suited me.

44,720. But you would not have taken them if you knew he was an active partisan on the other side?—No; but I should have taken them if neutral, as I had at the former election.

44,721. (Mr. Price.) Would you have taken them if he had not been a voter?—Yes; at the first election I did exactly that. I wanted rooms as nearly as possible at that spot, and there was a man named West, whom I believe took no part, but who certainly was not on my side, and notwithstanding that I took the rooms for my use at my election.

44,722. (Mr. Anstey.) You were aware, I presume, that he was active in getting voters for you up to the poll, or was going to do so?—No, I was not at all aware of that.

44,723. Did he never tell you that he was your supporter?—I knew he was friendly to me, but he was a man I had very seldom seen; he was a man engaged in business away from Bridgwater; I saw him very rarely.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

15 Oct. 1869.

44,724. Then with regard to Bussell, you were aware, I presume, that Bussell was acting with zeal for you during the contest, and on the polling day?—I should assume it. I knew he was a partisan.

44,725. And were not you then aware, I am speaking of 1868, of the discredit under which he had fallen at the two elections in 1866 as a briber?—Yes.

44,726. Then how came you, having a horror of bribery, to sanction the employment of such a man, or not to protest against him?—I never sanctioned the employment.

44,727. You did not protest against him, did you?—I do not know that circumstances occurred to induce me to make a protest. I know nothing about it.

44,728. I thought you said you assumed he was going to, or was being employed on your behalf at that contest?—I assumed that he would be busying himself in what I supposed was to be a pure election.

44,729. That is not my question. How came it that you did not protest against any person being employed in what you wished to be a pure election, whose antecedents showed that he could not be trusted to make it a pure election?—My answer is, that I did not know he was being employed.

44,730. I thought you said you assumed it?—That he would be an active partisan of his own motion, but not employed by anybody.

44,731. Did you speak to him?—No.

44,732. You did not say anything to caution him not to resort to impure practices?—No.

44,733. Nothing of the kind?—No.

44,734. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then, if I understand, when you first of all went to Allan it was before Allan was engaged in the election of 1865?—Yes, I had no notion.

44,735. And you had not heard anything up to the time that you stayed there?—No.

44,736. And if you had known that he was a partisan, or, as you say, engaged in the mysteries of the election, I understand it would have been the last place that you would have gone to?—Just so.

44,737. (Mr. Anstey.) Are these the justices in 1852; Thomas Ford, esq., did you recommend him?—No, I was not in Parliament at that time.

44,738. Then in 1864, James Haviland, did you recommend him?—Yes, I think so.

44,739. Is that the gentleman who shortly before obtained, without security for the repayment of the principal, except his own, and without interest, a loan of 100*l.*, which you spoke of yesterday?—It is the same gentleman; but I am not sure that the Commissioner has the dates before him.

44,740. Yes, 1864; Carey Bailey Mogg, did you recommend him in the same year?—I think so.

44,741. William John Ford, that is another Mr. Ford, in the same year?—I do not recollect that; but I may say I think those who were nominated as magistrates at that time were nominated under my recommendation.

44,742. Then the other is Henry Frederick Nicholls, that is the draper?—Yes.

44,743. Did you recommend him?—Yes; you may take it all those nominated at that time were nominated under my recommendation.

44,744. Then, coming down to 1868, there is but one I will ask you to—John Baptiste Hammill; did you recommend him last year?—No, I did not recommend him. Let me see, his name was one of those suggested at the time of the first batch, but I did not recommend him separately.

44,745. He stood alone in 1868; there were two Conservatives with him?—What part of the year?

44,746. It does not say; but the three are Dr. Farmer, Conservative, Mr. Lilley the auctioneer, we know who appointed him, and then John Baptiste Hammill, merchant?—No, that must have been during the period when the Whigs were out of office.

44,747. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Hammill was appointed by the late Government?—Appointed by the late Government.

44,748. (Mr. Anstey.) That is the borough. Now I will only ask you as to one justice of the peace for the county; did you in 1861 recommend John Brown, merchant, as a county magistrate?—Yes.

44,749. Going back to your evidence of yesterday there was one thing which I entirely forgot to ask you about, and that is, first of all, the petition of 80, signed amongst others by this Dr. Haviland, and Mr. Sealy, the same whose name has been before us with regard to the 500*l.*, and a number of other persons in 1866. It is said that it was prepared at your suggestion, or that such a petition was recommended by you when the question was should a parliamentary writ issue, or should a Commission go on Mr. Westropp's being unseated, in the spring of 1866; do you recollect that?—I very much regretted the presentation of the petition. The petition was presented by those who were my friends and supporters; I did nothing to prevent the presentation of the petition, but it was a subject of regret to me personally.

44,750. You were opposed to its being presented?—I regretted it; it would not be quite accurate to say that I was opposed to it, because I felt it my duty not to oppose it in any way. I was perfectly neutral; but my wish would have been that no such petition should have been presented.

44,751. Then do I understand that you refused to present it yourself?—I did not present it myself. I do not recollect that I refused; I do not recollect that I was asked to do so, and I did not subscribe to it.

44,752. Without troubling you for your reasons at present as to why you objected to it, I will ask you, did you when the parliamentary writ was moved for, and Sir Harry Verney moved as an amendment that an address should go under the 16th of the Queen, praying for a commission, did you on that occasion vote for the original question, for the amendment, or did you abstain from voting altogether?—My impression is that I abstained from voting altogether; I certainly did not vote for the Commission, and I do not think that it went to a vote myself.

44,753. Oh, yes, it went to the vote; I can give you the numbers?—The division lists would show, of course, but my strong impression is that I did not vote either way.

44,754. The motion is made, according to the Commons' Journal, volume 121, folio 355 B, on the 4th of June 1866, and this amendment is moved to leave out all the words, &c. for the purpose of inserting the words of the address, which is in strict conformity with the tenor of the Act of Parliament, and then by a large majority the amendment is rejected, and the original motion carried, and the writ goes. However, you say that if you were there you certainly did not vote for the amendment?—Certainly.

44,755. And you are not quite clear that you did not vote against the amendment, and for the writ?—My strong impression is that I abstained from voting.

44,756. May I ask you why did you take that course; I will premise my question by reminding you that the committee had found "there is reason to believe "corrupt practices have extensively prevailed at the "last election for the borough of Bridgwater"?—Yes.

44,757. That being so, may I ask why you did not support the proposal that a commission should go when the issue was distinctly asked, aye or no, on that question?—My opinion was rather the same as that of the chairman of the committee, who did not wish that a committee should go.

44,758. How did you know that was his opinion?—He stated it himself.

44,759. To you?—In the House of Commons.

44,760. No; I have looked in vain for any speech. He was asked a question on the subject by Sir Harry Verney, and it appears by volume 183 of Hansard, in 1866–7, that the Speaker ruled that the question could not be put, and ought not to be answered; therefore, if you heard that it must have been from him personally?—I know, as a matter of fact, that he was a man who disapproved of the issuing of commissions, rightly or wrongly I cannot say; but he disapproved it. The terms of the Act made it incumbent upon the committee to report one way or the other as to whether corrupt practices had extensively prevailed, and in simple obedience to that exigency of the statute he reported that there was reason to believe that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed, but it was not his opinion, from what he had seen of the evidence, that a commission should issue, or that a commission was desirable. That is what made it differ from all other cases; the person who moves the commission under ordinary circumstances is the chairman of the committee, but he said he would not move the commission.

44,761. Were not you told distinctly by the petition of 80 that it was made a subject of discussion of the House that the chairman was in no position at all to pronounce on the general effect of the evidence, inasmuch as the case of the petitioners had been stopped when a few cases only had been heard. There were altogether 110 cases of bribery specified in the particulars of corrupt practices, and only a few, about half a dozen, of those were heard; and, with that fact before him, Sir Harry Verney made his motion in the House, and complained that it was a great hardship that the committee had neglected their duty in not inquiring further, and not reporting corrupt practices. Were you not aware of that?—I do not recollect it.

44,762. (Mr. Price.) It could not have been on his view of the evidence that the chairman's objection to a commission was founded, for he refused to take the evidence?—I think the chairman had made a speech in the House of Commons against the issue of the commission, and was acting rather in pursuance of that view in declining to move.

44,763. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you aware that is the only instance in which the committee of the House of Commons has, since the Corrupt Practices Act, reported that corrupt practices extensively prevailed, in which a commission has not issued?—I think it is the only one.

44,764. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you express yourself to Mr. Baxter privately or otherwise, or make known your opinion adverse to the commission going?—No.

44,765. (Mr. Coleridge.) And, as you know, the fact of your being seated made no difference whatever as to the propriety of a commission going, because at Berwick-on-Tweed both members were seated, and at Totnes one member was seated, and yet commissions went; therefore the fact of your being seated made no difference?—No.

44,766. (Mr. Price.) Up to that time Mr. Baxter seems to have been under the impression that no practical good resulted from petitions. There had been a suspension of the writ for Gloucester for a certain time, and nothing done by the House of Commons or by the Attorney-General to vindicate their sincerity?—No.

44,767. There had been several commissions out, which had resulted in nothing; that was so?—Yes.

44,768. There were some prosecutions at Wakefield, which I was engaged in, against Mr. Leatham and Mr. Charlesworth and others, where there were convictions, but never any punishment passed.

44,769. (Mr. Anstey.) But in that year, 1866, when Mr. Baxter neglected what some people thought was his formal and ordinary duty, to move, namely, an address to go and so forth, in that same year four commissions were issued under similar circumstances respecting the same general election, and the result of those four was that early in the following year four corrupt boroughs—not nearly so corrupt as Bridgwater perhaps—were disfranchised. Is not that a commentary upon the soundness of Mr. Baxter's opinion as to the intention of the House of Commons?—(No answer.)

44,770. However, with regard to the next point arising out of your evidence, I wish to ask you whether Mr. Vanderbyl, having told you that he had spent a lot of money in 1866, more than he looked to have spent, did you never inform him and expostulate with him about what was going to happen in the event of your coalescing or joining with him at the general election for Bridgwater, which we all know from history was expected, and to which the government had pledged themselves for about two years before it took place. Did you never say to him, "Mr. Vanderbyl, if "I am to go down with you to that borough, where "you have spent so much, I must have some under-"standing with you that you will not be guilty of like "practices again"?—I do not recollect having any conversation with him on that subject until the one I referred to yesterday, when he originated the undertaking, not under any circumstances to submit to any illegal expenditure. I detailed that conversation to the Commissioners yesterday, and I warmly assented to the propriety of the decision which he had come to.

44,771. That being so, I should like you to tell me what was the nature, precisely and minutely, what was the tenor of the papers and instructions which you gave to Mr. Henry Lovibond in contemplation of the contest, as far as you were concerned?—The instructions I gave to Mr. Henry Lovibond were those we arranged from his statement to me in Westminster Hall, which I think I referred to yesterday. He came up to London when the election was drawing near, and came to see me. I was coming out of the House of Commons, and he met me in Westminster Hall, and said that the election was drawing near, and it was time for people to consider what they would do, and so on; and he said he had come to the firm determination that under no circumstances would he engage in any kind of illegal expenditure, and he also told me that he believed that to be the decision of the other professional men.

44,772. (Mr. Price.) How long before the election was that conversation?—I should think that must have been—may I ask when the election took place?

44,773. The election took place in November?—Then this was whilst Parliament was sitting, before the prorogation of Parliament. I said to him, "That "is a most wise decision. In the present state of the "law and public feeling on this subject, it will be "madness to engage in acts which have been done in "former times;" and I applauded his decision; and it was in that form of approval of what he had determined to do that I gave my instructions to him.

44,774. (Mr. Anstey.) My question rather refers to powers. I do not mean to ask you about your own intention and his, or the mode of exercising powers, but did you give him the fullest powers to act on your behalf at the election, or did you control or restrain those powers in any and what way?—No, I never used any language either extending or controlling his powers. He had been my agent at former elections, and I did not say anything to control him further than by expressing to him my warm approval of the decision to which he had come.

44,775. Now particularly with reference to providing or raising money, observe I am not saying for what, for legal purposes if you like; had he any authority on your behalf to provide or take measures towards the providing of money?—Oh no.

44,776. If, therefore, he went to your brother, and entered into any arrangement about money with him, even for legal purposes, was that a violation of your instructions, or in excess of your authority, or what?—Certainly in excess of the authority derived from me.

44,777. Then who was to provide the money that would really be wanted for the election, irrespective of legal or illegal, who was to do that?—I think no money was wanted. Bills came in, and the moment I received a bill and was told to pay the account I was always ready to pay it. My impression is that no money was required for the election.

44,778. You knew it was a new constituency, and even under the old constituency sums varying from 200*l.* to 600*l.* had been considered necessary by you to be expended in election expenses. I want to know, either 200*l.* or 600*l.* is a large sum, who was to provide the money?—I was to provide the money.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

15 Oct. 1869.

44,779. That is what I want to know?—Yes, decidedly.

44,780. Then do I understand that Mr. Lovibond, not even to the extent of 200*l.*, had anything to do with providing money?—Quite so.

44,781. Therefore, when he came and told the other attorneys, "We are provided with money on our side," referring to him and your brother having so provided the money, referring as we are told to that, it was clearly a statement which he had no right, as far as you are concerned, to make?—Quite so.

44,782. Did you therefore at any subsequent time, down to this very minute at which I am speaking to you, have any conversation with Dr. Kinglake, whether in the way of expostulation or otherwise, on the subject of what he had done?—No.

44,783. Have you never spoken to your brother on the subject?—I never was aware what he had done until the 4th October last.

44,784. Did you write to him on hearing of it first of all?—Not until I wrote to say that I was returning with all speed to England. I made no comment.

44,785. Did he write to you?—No, his wife, Mrs. Kinglake wrote to me, my sister-in-law.

44,786. Have you had any communication, oral or written, with him since your arrival in England?—I am staying at his house.

44,787. Then have you had any oral communication with him on the subject of this money, what he has done?—Yes, generally.

44,788. Then tell me what account he gave you in conversation about this money, or what he did with regard to this money?—Well, I should think it a hearsay statement.

44,789. No, it is a personal question, it is not hearsay; he is the person himself, and I should like to hear it.

(The Commissioners conferred).

44,790. Can you make any statement about what your brother said to you, any conversation that you can separate in your own mind from so much of the statement that may possibly criminate your brother? My want refers to Mr. Henry Lovibond's part, and if you can separate that part from the part that criminates your brother, I should like to hear; if not, I do not wish to press my question?—Very good.

Can you do so? My idea is to get at the fons et origo mali; how it was that Mr. Henry Lovibond and your brother were put in communication together? If you can tell me that without criminating your brother, I should like to know; if not, I do not press the question.

44,791. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or without criminating Mr. Lovibond, who is in the same position?—I hardly know how I could get through any sentence which might not by possibility be used against Mr. Henry Lovibond; but as to my brother I think it would hardly be; but I am in the hands of the Commissioners, if they will ask me any question I ought to answer.

(Mr. Price.) I think you are entitled, considering the position in which your brother stands, you know that we decline to examine him, to say that you wish to take the opinion of the Commissioners whether you ought to say anything which might be used against your brother, and I think under those circumstances we should not be inclined to press it.

44,792. (Mr. Coleridge.) Being an ex post facto matter, if this had been before the course we have taken with regard to your brother, I should have thought differently; but then the other conversation is one of the res gestæ, and therefore not ex post facto. The conversation in the street deposed to by Mr. Reed, and confirmed by Mr. Cook, when in your presence, I think, if not in your hearing, it was said, "Even now the election may be saved if we had 1,500*l.* or some other sum of money"?—No sir, there is no foundation whatever for that impression.

44,793. Do you recollect four or five person who had been interlocutors with you on that occasion, moving on or falling back, so as to leave you in uninterrupted conversation with Mr. Lovibond?—No. What period is the said transaction said to have occurred?

44,794. (Mr. Price.) At 12 o'clock near the "Globe"?—About 9 I think——

44,795. You were not in the street about that time at all?—I was never in the street at all; the fly drove up quite close to the door.

44,796. I think it fair that you should know that, you may not have seen that part of it, and therefore it is fair you should have an opportunity of explaining it. The expression said to be used, I think, was this, by Mr. Lovibond, who joined Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook afterwards, or some one at all events said, "You have "no idea how exceedingly anxious the Kinglake "family are for the return of Mr. Kinglake?"

(Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Barham said so.

44,797. (Mr. Price.) When Mr. Barham said they were exceedingly anxious, the question was, "What "did you understand by that, that they were so "particularly anxious for Mr. Kinglake's return?" And the answer was, "I suppose with a view to "office." I think it fair that you should have an opportunity of saying whether any suggestion was possibly made by your relations that you had a view to office?—It is quite impossible, certainly, that any such suggestion should be made. Everyone who has known me in the House of Commons knows that the line I took there was exactly that which was intended to exclude me from office.

44,798. But sometimes troublesome members are dealt with?—Yes, but I do not think my troublesomeness was quite of the kind.

44,799. However, there is no truth whatever in that?—None.

44,800. That you ever expressed to anybody your desire for office, or that you looked to office?—Quite so. I am very much obliged to the Commissioners to give me an opportunity of saying that.

44,801. (Mr. Anstey.) I did not understand Mr. Barham to say that you looked to office, but that your family were very anxious that you should get in, that they looked to you getting office?—He was equally mistaken.

44,802. Now pursuing this, what happened that day in the street? Do you remember being told amongst those several things you were told as the causes of failure, that Brown and Company's men were hanging back from the poll?—No, I do not recollect being told that Brown's people were hanging back, but I recollect being told that one of the causes of despair was that people were hanging back generally, not Brown and Company's. I did not hear them distinguished.

44,803. This was between twelve and one?—Earlier than that, I think.

44,804. My question is binding immediately to that hour, between twelve and one; were you told either in particular, or that voters in general were hanging back?—I was told it at the time. I was surprised at the loss of the election. It was stated as a circumstance that accounted for the collapse of the election.

44,805. Were you also told, or not told, that any of them were hanging back because they wanted to be paid?—I gathered that.

44,806. Who told you that?—Mr. Henry Lovibond.

44,807. What did he say? What were the words from which you gathered that meaning?—Well, he spoke of them in terms of abuse, as scoundrels hanging back and refusing to vote without money.

44,808. What did you say to him; did you say anything?—Well, I think what I asserted yesterday. "Do you mean to say the election is possibly gone? Are both sides gone?"

44,809. But you said nothing about payment or nonpayment?—No, because that was anticipated, that any attempt to retrieve the election in that way would be absolute madness.

44,810. You had said that?—No, Mr. Henry Lovibond.

44,811. He himself had said that, and therefore you said nothing about it?—No.

44,812. Then soon afterwards you went to the Railway Hotel, and you prepared something you call your farewell address. Have you a copy of that farewell address?—I have it in London, and I think Mr. Charles Bate is here.

(Mr. Price.) Have you it, Mr. Bate?

(Mr. Bate.) I have the original at my house.

44,813. (Mr. Anstey to the witness.) With reference to that, I wish to ask you what instructions did you give as to what was to be done with the draft when you drew up the address and settled it, and then handed it to some one—with what instructions?—With the instructions to get it printed at once, and with these additional instructions, to send a copy, not to all the electors, but to every elector who had voted for me. I recollect drawing that distinction, being in anger at the time with the constituency generally, and in a great state of disgust. I said, "Do not send "it to the others, but send it to those who have sup-"ported me."

44,814. Therefore when giving those instructions you contemplated the certainty, not the possibility, but the certainty, of its not being out of the printer's hands until after the election?—I did not make any calculation as to that. In Bridgwater they are pretty quick. This was half-past one, and I should have thought——

44,815. It was only two hours and a half then to take it from the railway station until its going forth?—Printers here would answer that question better than I could; but I should imagine, knowing how quick they are sometimes in producing those things, not a number, but producing one and showing it in the window, that about a quarter or half-past two there might have been a copy in the window, but I would rather that question was asked of a printer.

44,816. Is a printer here?

(A person in court.) Certainly by that time.

(Mr. Price.) Are you a printer?

(The person.) Yes, I am.

44,817. If you like to come and give evidence——?—I merely confirm the statement of Mr. Kinglake, that it could have got in time enough.

44,818. (Mr. Anstey to the witness.) As a matter of fact, I want to know whether it circulated before the close of the poll?—You will hear the fact from Mr. Charles Bate, if he is examined on the subject, that he had shown it to no one on his way up; and then he heard of the rallying, and of course suppressed the circulation then.

44,819. Was it circulated in the sense of being printed?—It was never printed at all.

44,820. Then it was not circulated?—No.

44,821. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did the state of things appear that you would come in, and so there was no need of circulation?—Yes.

44,822. (Mr. Anstey.) That is my question. You assent to the question of my colleague, that there was no need for the circulation, because you would come in. Now I ask you the same question, whether it was an understood thing that it was not to be circulated until the fate of the election was decided?—No, I again say positively my despair of the election was absolute and unreserved. I had no notion of the possibility of my return.

44,823. I only ask you this, because you assented, by nodding your head, to what the Commissioner said, and I thought it was not consistent with what you had said before; therefore it does appear that the circulation of the document did not depend at all on the fate of the election?—Certainly.

44,824. I want to know on that, can you account for this fact, that it is a fact we have on the sworn testimony of persons who appear as witnesses, that Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook, and above all Mr. Barham—I do not think Mr. Lovibond was asked any questions about that, because we broke off his examination for reasons which we had,—but those three being asked, positively said, each in his turn, he was perfectly astonished to hear that you repudiated all knowledge of the fact that corrupt practices had existed, without saying on whose part, whether on Mr. Vanderbyl's or your own. How do you account for that, that those three, who were your zealous agents and supporters, were not only under that impression, but continued in it before us?—The Commissioner is no doubt referring to my evidence before Mr. Justice Blackburn.

44,825. Not at all; I am referring to their evidence before us. Each of them was asked the question, and each said that they were very much astonished that you said you were ignorant; others, not of the same mark as themselves, but of inferior position, said in like manner that you must have known what was going on in the borough with reference to the meeting of that Sunday; and some qualified that statement by saying that "if Mr. Kinglake denies it, of course it cannot be true." Having taken the course you state was taken, how do you account for the universality, or at least the general prevalence, of that impression, not among your enemies or friends, but amongst your own immediate supporters?—I suppose it all turns on the question of the time when I became aware that corrupt practices had prevailed. I had hoped that in my statement yesterday I had conveyed pretty fully a narrative of the process by which the knowledge was brought to me. I came down as I said, and was received by Mr. James Sully with a statement which I firmly believed at the time, that all had been perfectly pure. I then informed the Commissioners that I found there was a difference between the congratulations of the lawyers and of the men who had first received me, and I gradually began to see that the election had not been conducted so satisfactorily as Mr. James Sully believed; then the first knowledge I had of any corrupt practices having been had recourse to was the knowledge of the attempt to bribe James Palmer. That transpired a day or two after the election; and then, as I informed the Commissioners, no explanation having been given to me of the circumstance under which Henry Bussell became possessed of this 10*l.*, I began to draw very painful inferences, and to imagine the thing to have been——

44,826. (Mr. Price.) That there were other tens?—Yes, that there were other tens.

44,827. (Mr. Anstey.) I will come to those cases presently, but my question is intended to bring out from you if you know any fact which will explain the error, not of the world at large, but of your own immediate supporters, who thought you must have been aware, generally at least, that this sort of thing was going on?—I cannot account for it. I think if any of them were asked here, you will find that they were speaking of some period other than the one you imagine them to refer to.

44,828. (Mr. Price.) With regard to your address I find Mr. Bate's evidence is this—you will be able to say whether it accords with your recollection. He says, "There was very little conversation, for this "reason, that I was entirely broken down by the idea "of my old friend being turned out, that I could "hardly speak; and Mr. Kinglake was standing at "the chimney piece writing his farewell address while "I spoke to him, and I went away feeling that I "could hardly speak to him at the time. I said to "him, 'Allow me, as the last thing that I can do "for you, to have that address published.'" That accords with your recollection?—That is in minute accord, even to the fact of the place where I was writing.

44,829. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you gave it to him?—Yes, I gave it to him with the request which the honourable Commissioner read.

44,830. Now with reference to that, you sent a telegram, or rather a telegram was sent to you?—I also sent a telegram, certainly.

44,831. The telegram I speak of was the one sent to you to inform you that the luck was changing or had changed?—Yes.

44,832. How many telegrams did you receive that day after your departure?—I only received one. I heard others were sent to me, attempting to catch me on the road.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

A. W. Kinglake.

15 Oct. 1869.

44,833. That is what I wished to know?—But I never received any one of those.

44,834. You were told the telegrams were sent to you on the road, addressed to you how—sent to you in the railway carriage or to some station?—I think I heard that one was addressed to Paddington station, and one to some intermediate station, I think.

44,835. (Mr. Price.) Very probably Swindon?—Very possibly, but I never received one.

(A person in court.) One was sent to Reading.

44,836. Where did you receive the telegram, if you did receive it?—At my lodgings in London. I had telegraphed to the lady of the house in these words: "I am defeated; I shall be in London at six or half-past six." I came up about that time, and I was condoled with at the loss of my election; and then I was told, "There is a telegram for you;" and I opened it and found it was from Mr. Charles Bate, or purported to be from Mr. Charles Bate, and contained these words: "Come back; you are at the head of the poll."

44,837. (Mr. Price.) You thought it a hoax, I believe?—My first idea was that it was a hoax; then I was a little driven from that impression by the christian name of Mr. Charles Bate; he calls himself C. Robert Bate, and everyone calls him Charles Bate; and I observed that this telegram was from C. Robert Bate, which gave me the idea it was likely to be authentic, and not a hoax.

44,838. At that time had the point about your having ceased to be a candidate occurred to you, that legal point?—When?

44,839. At the time you were informed you were at the head of the poll by this telegram, were you already impressed with that legal opinion which you have expressed, that you were no longer a candidate from the moment you had withdrawn from the borough?—All that was long after, when the troubles began, and a petition was threatened, that I began to consider the legal effect of my position.

44,840. That is what I want in justice to yourself to ascertain. Did that idea occur to you at any time on the polling day, that you were no longer a candidate?—No, I never thought of that at all; but I think I have said that to the Commissioners, and perhaps I need not repeat it; but certainly I had the opinion of the election being gone so strong in my mind that if I had seen voters going to poll at any inconvenience to themselves, I would have told them not to go.

44,841. Then did anybody ever tell you, with regard to that, that a candidate has been defined by the barons of the Court of Exchequer to be one who goes to the poll, that that is the only true definition there can be?—Yes, I think I have observed that, and I think I also observed that in the Act of Parliament which constituted the election tribunal there was a statutory definition of the word candidate which would interfere with my theory I observed that, so that I was a candidate, even if my theory was quite sound, I was still a candidate within the terms of that statute.

44,842. Then you are quite clear that no such view as that had suggested itself to you before the election?—Oh, quite so.

44,843. About the time when this point occurred to you, I think you said that to save your professional friends from utter ruin you were prepared to agree to a compromise, even though it should involve your giving up both the seats. That is what you said?—Yes, there was no limit to the sacrifices that were to be made.

44,844. Had you Mr. Vanderbyl's authority for that?—Oh, no; I was merely stating my own opinion.

44,845. Not that you were prepared to agree to the compromise?—No, not at that time.

44,846. Then I must ask you, had Mr. Vanderbyl been consulted to your knowledge at that time by anybody as to the compromise being made or the petition being allowed to go on?—I believe that communications with him similar to those made to me had taken place, and that he was as willing to make the sacrifice as I was.

44,847. You were told so?—I was told so.

44,848. By whom?—Mr. Henry Lovibond.

44,849. By Mr. Vanderbyl himself you have never been told so?—No.

44,850. Have you ever had any communication, friendly or hostile or otherwise, with Mr. Vanderbyl about this matter?—I have scarcely seen him since. I cannot charge my memory with any conversation on the subject. I have seen him once since, I think.

44,851. Was it one of the terms of the compromise which, for the reasons given you, you say you were prepared to accede to, that the cost of the election petition, or any cost involved in the compromise, should be borne by the sitting member, whoever that was, who was to be allowed to retain the one seat, if either seat was to be retained?—That was so. That was thrown out as what would be the fair arrangement, but no such arrangement was ever made, because the compromise failed.

44,852. Did you ever know that Mr. Vanderbyl or his agent and friend, Mr. Fennelly, agreed to that part of the compromise?—I understood that they would be willing to.

44,853. Were you ever told that Mr. Fennelly had informed Mr. Westropp about the time, or informed anyone, that Mr. Vanderbyl's reason for agreeing to that was that he knew you had no money, and that therefore they would have to bear the expense, and consequently according to the terms of that part of the compromise it would be you and not Mr. Vanderbyl who would have to go out?—No, sir, I never heard that view of the matter. I always rather believed and understood that he expected the contrary; that I as the senior member would keep the seat, if there was one to be kept.

44,854. (Mr. Price.) We have heard of the disloyalty before the election; was there the same system of disloyalty to you pursued, from what you have learnt since, on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl in the matter of his compromise?—No, I am not entitled to say that I know of any disloyalty.

44,855. Supposing Mr. Fennelly said, as he is reported to have said by Mr. Westropp, "We know "perfectly well what it means, the payment of money "in respect of costs to the petitioners; we know that "Mr. Kinglake has no money; we know therefore "that is made a condition that Mr. Vanderbyl would "pay the money, and of course retain his seat." What would you say to that?

(Mr. Coleridge.) So Mr. Fennelly has told Mr. Westropp.

44,856. (Mr. Price.) Does that look like a little disloyalty?—I should be obliged to consider that disloyal.

44,857. (Mr. Anstey.) There is only one thing more on your evidence already given that I have to ask you about, and that is with regard to the question of honour. I wish, for my own satisfaction, to know this: Do you really mean to say, Mr. Kinglake, that if any one person to whom you may think fit to refer it, is of opinion that you are honourably bound to recoup this sum of 500*l.* to those who have advanced it for purposes admitted to have been illegal, and admitted to have been forbidden by you, that you will be prepared to consummate the act of bribery by becoming a party to it after the fact, and not to set the example to other persons in like cases of cutting off this, the most dangerous and the most fruitful branch of bribery, by repudiating all part in it, and leaving the loss where it has already, by the hands of Providence, been cast?—Yes. I am bound to say, that if I had placed the question in the hands of a man of honour, and he had told me that, as a man of honour, that I was bound to make this payment, that, even after all that the Commissioners have enumerated, I would make the payment.

44,858. (Mr. Price.) I do not know that there is very much more to ask you about, but I should like to ask you this question: at the time this compromise was being effected, or rather not effected, but was being discussed, you say you were willing to accede to it in consequence of Mr. Lovibond's appeals to your merciful consideration to prevent the odium and ruin that might be brought upon him in his professional career? Was it urged upon you also, as a reason to induce you to enter into the compromise, that if the thing went against you that such a result might take place as has taken place, that is, the issuing of a commission?—I do not think I carried my anticipations of evil down to the event of a commission, but I wish distinctly to have it understood that I do not claim the merit of any special generosity in desiring the compromise, because I quite understood that the ruin of these professional men—personal friends of mine, for whom I had a great regard—carried with it a certain loss of the seat to me, and therefore I do not consider there was any generosity in what I did.

44,859. (Mr. Coleridge.) All chance of being tried before a committee was at an end, and you were going to be tried before a judge. Did it not occur to you that things must come out at Bridgwater, if inquired into, that would cause what has taken place?—I do not think it did. I considered the loss of the seat so deep a misfortune that it was quite enough for my contemplation at the time. I do not think it had entered into my mind to look at the subsequent dealings.

44,860. Not after the very narrow squeak Bridgwater had had of a commission on the last occasion?—No, I do not think it entered into my mind.

44,861. (Mr. Price.) You say you do not think you carried your anticipations of evil so far as that?—I think I have often, in conversations on the subject, referred to the event of a commission as a blowing up of the ship, and a thing that would bring pain upon everybody.

44,862. Were you more inclined or not to entertain the question of compromise by being impressed with the idea, as you say you were, that you felt yourself free in every sense whatever, directly or indirectly, from any complicity with the corrupt practices?—I felt myself personally quite free.

44,863. Therefore there was a certain sense of hardship, I suppose, pressing upon your mind at your having to pay the penalty of being unseated, when, as you say, you had done everything to prevent, as we understand, the result being brought about by corrupt practices?—Quite so; and I am bound to say that the Chief Commissioner has quite appreciated my feeling upon the subject. The Chief Commissioner spoke of the fact of my entering into a compromise of that kind—one that would be of a humiliating sort in a sense—and I quite appreciated and agreed in the view thrown out by the learned Commissioner on that subject. The truth is that I was a man in a scrape which had been brought about, I considered, by the imprudence of others; and for their sake, and my own sake, there was nothing better for me to do than to endeavour to get out of it, if I could, by negotiation.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Did you take counsel with Mr. Glynn?

44,864. (Mr. Price.) I was just going to ask you that. Mr. Westropp has said it is all nonsense, your discussing the question with the whip of your party, Mr. Glynn?—Yes. I spoke to Mr. Glynn, and he said, "We will do all we can do for you." He was very civil.

44,865. And Mr. Westropp said he saw you afterwards, and you gave him no great amount of information, and I made a remark as to whether you had made a very long-winded story about the thing before you came to the point, and he said you never did come to the point about it?

(Mr. Anstey.) He said you began to state what Mr. Glynn said, and then you broke off, and then you began to say what you said, and then you broke off again, and you told him nothing of what was said on either side.

44,866. What is your account of that conversation?—I have not a very clear impression about it. My impression was, that the time of the meeting was principally occupied by Mr. Westropp.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Westropp's account is, that you made confusion more confounded.

44,867. (Mr. Price.) You say you really had nothing to communicate to him from Mr. Glynn?—No, I had nothing.

44,868. Then in taking counsel with Mr. Glynn, was it with a view to stave off an inquiry in case the petition went on? I want to know whether you consulted him upon it as a party matter, so as to stave off an inquiry into Bridgwater practices if the thing was compromised, or whether it was a right thing for you to do otherwise; do you recollect how that was? What I mean is this: was your object in consulting Mr. Glynn, as one of the chief men of your party, to ask him, "Well, shall I get into any trouble if I go into this matter?" and that you might take his advice upon that, or Sir William Drake, or any person in his position, or might you have said to Mr. Glynn, "Well "now, there are very awkward things that have come "out, and it may be very awkward for Bridgwater"? Was anything of that kind said to Mr. Glynn?—No. I do not think I consulted Mr. Glynn as to the prudence of anything of that kind, but it was with the view chiefly of satisfying myself that no difficulty would be thrown in my way by the Government.

44,869. (Mr. Coleridge.) In the way of accepting the Chiltern Hundreds?—Yes.

44,870. (Mr. Price.) That is what I mean; as to whether it would be improper for you to accept the Chiltern Hundreds?—It was not contemplated I should be the member to move for the Chiltern Hundreds, but it was the other way.

44,871. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you any conversation with Mr. Glynn as to the possibility of drawing the wires in the old-fashioned way, and setting off one petition against the other?—No.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Because that has been done in a great many instances in spite of the present state of things.

44,872. (Mr. Price.) There is only one other matter I wish to ask you about. This was broken off, it came to nothing in the end?—Yes.

44,873. Did you from the beginning to the end remain under the impression that, although you were willing that both seats were to go, yet, that if only one was to go, you were to be the person to retain the seat?—Exactly.

44,874. You went to the conference with Mr. Westropp on that footing?—Yes.

44,875. And you remained under that impression up to the time that the whole thing went off?—Yes.

44,876. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you more than one conference or conversation with Mr. Westropp upon the subject?—No, sir, only one, according to my recollection. I was invited to it, according to my impression, by Mr. Westropp.

44,877. Do you remember this difficulty being started; though they might and probably would rely upon your word to ask for the Chiltern Hundreds, supposing you were the person to go out, that if it were decided that Mr. Vanderbyl was the person to go out, and he was to break his promise, and refuse to ask for the Chiltern Hundreds, what then? Do you remember that difficulty being started?—Yes, I do, very well.

44,878. And how did you meet it?—That was in the negotiation which nearly came to an agreement before the one with which I personally had to do. It seems that an agreement was all but come to, which was to the effect that Mr. Vanderbyl was to give up the seat, but that then an objection was taken by Mr. Westropp, founded on his want of knowledge of Mr. Vanderbyl, and want of confidence in the execution of the agreement, and in that stage I was asked to say, as Mr. Westropp did me the honour of stating, that he placed confidence in me, whether I would, as it were, guarantee the execution of the agreement by

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

15 Oct. 1869.

Mr. Vanderbyl, by saying that if he did not act upon the engagement I would.

44,879. I see. You said just now that very soon after the election day you heard of what you persist in calling the "attempt" to bribe Palmer, which was not an attempt, but a consummate fact, and so found by Mr. Justice Blackburn. When did you first hear of any other acts of the same bribery, on which the petitioner relied equally with the case of Palmer, and which were also proved to Mr. Justice Blackburn's satisfaction, and found by him in these words: "That Henry Chapman "Bussell was proved to have been guilty of bribery "in paying 10*l.* each to James Palmer, William "Crocker, and James Hayward, to induce them to "vote for Messrs. Kinglake and Vanderbyl, and by "offering a similar sum to William Luckes." When did you first hear of those cases?—In this hall, when the inquiry was going on. I never heard a word of any of those cases until they were disclosed in my presence before the learned judge.

44,880. Palmer's case you had heard of?—Yes, and the reason. I have no doubt that my expression may be wrong, as the learned Commissioner disapproves it, but the reason I call it an "attempt" instead of an act of bribery is, that James Palmer did not vote in that direction.

(Mr. Price.) Bribery does not consist in the way in which the vote is given, but bribery consists in the promise or passing of the money.

44,881. (Mr. Anstey.) I will tell you what Mr. Justice Blackburn said, he having taken precisely the distinction which the learned Chief Commissioner has very properly taken. He says, in giving his judgment, "Upon the evidence as it stands, Henry Chapman "Bussell was shown to have been guilty of bribery. "With respect to the case of the man Palmer, though "he received the money, I do not think he can pro-"perly said to have been guilty of bribery, because "he never took the money with the intention to "influence his vote"?—Yes.

44,882. You see he finds the briber guilty of bribery, but the bribee not guilty, although probably, if he had had the evidence before him which we have had given before us, he would have thought differently?—I think, with the exception of Palmer's case, that everything that passed before the judge was entirely new to me.

44,883. (Mr. Price.) I was going to ask you about that, because it is only fair that you should have the fullest opportunity of explaining it. You see we could only judge from the knowledge we had, and the evidence we have had given here before us, evidence given by your own supporters, which left the strong impression on my mind (speaking for myself), as coming from your own supporters, that you had a much greater knowledge of what actually has taken place than you disclosed or admitted before the learned judge. But I think it is due to you now to say, that you are at liberty to add anything you like about that. You have now stated that with the exception of Palmer's case, you were absolutely ignorant of any other kind of taint with respect to the election?—Yes.

44,884. Whatever your suspicions may have been as to the majority, as a fact you did know of nothing except Palmer's case when you gave your evidence?—Yes, quite so.

44,885. Now, as you assent to that, I want to know whether you were in consultation at all with your counsel, Mr. James?—Scarcely at all.

44,886. We are aware that he came here under the impression that it was a good fighting case. He was not here at the opening of the trial, but he came in the course of that evening. The case had been opened by Mr. Serjeant Parry, and he had opened a strong case no doubt; and, at the consultation, you were not present then?—No.

44,887. Mr. James stated that he thought he had come down to a good fighting case, but he had quite altered his opinion, and the sooner he got out of it the better. That is the effect very much of the conversation. Was that all communicated to you by Mr. James, or by the attorneys, the next day, or as the inquiry proceeded?—I gathered that the result of the consultations was, that on account of the impossibility of the agents going into the box, that the case was up—was lost.

44,888. Then, as to your going into the box yourself, was that by desire of Mr. James, or did you desire to be called?—It was by the desire of Mr. James; and, according to my recollection, I was not even apprised of his intention of calling me before; and I gave him no instructions whatever.

44,889. As to any speech that he made?—As to any speech that he made.

44,890. That was left to his own discretion as counsel?—Quite so; and I gave him no instructions whatever with respect to any anxiety on my part to let the inquiry go on. It was quite opposed, I may own, to the whole of my feelings that there should be any such inquiry.

44,891. Is there anything you wish to add in any way?—Yes. I should like, as my evidence before Mr. Justice Blackburn was questioned, to have an opportunity of repeating the words which I used, and of submitting to the learned Commissioners that the words were minutely accurate.

44,892. We have them before us on the shorthand writer's notes; and I thought I would intimate to you that, until your statement here before us to-day, that your own statement before the learned judge was inconsistent with what your own friends have stated—was inconsistent with their knowledge. But after what you have stated to-day I may say for myself I do not wish to have any further explanation from you.

44,893. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you the printed words?—Yes. I should like to read them, if you will allow me.

44,894. (Mr. Price.) Yes. If you like to read them, do so by all means?—Yes, I should like to do so, because very much turns on the exact words; and, fortunately, they are very accurately reported.

44,895. What are you referring to?—This is a printed copy of the shorthand writer's notes, as I understand. Probably the Commissioners have a copy before them.

44,896. (Mr. Price.) Yes. You can have a copy to read from if you like?—Yes; I would rather read it from the authorized printed copy.

44,897. There is an authorized copy—the Queen's printer's copy (handing it to the witness).—Yes, this is minutely accurate. There was an important letter rather that I missed in the printed copy that I had; I am glad to find that it is in the original. "You "have represented this borough in parliament since "the year 1857, I believe?—Yes. As we are aware, "you were a candidate at the last election, in con-"junction with Mr. Vanderbyl, in the Liberal in-"terest?—I was. From the state of the poll, and "other things, I believe you left the town by the mid-"day train?—Yes." Now, the Commissioner observes, that that fixes the time to which they are referring. The time I left the town was by the mid-day train. "Had you the slightest knowledge, directly or indirectly, "of any corrupt practices existing, or being about to "exist, at this election?—I believed that I knew the "reverse at the time of my departure." That is with reference to the statement which I made to the Commissioner, which I firmly believed to be true, that not one shilling, at the time that I went away, had been spent. "Had you taken every step, by directions to "everyone about you, to secure a pure election here, "whatever might be the result?" I answer, "I "think I must do the justice to Mr. Lovibond." Then I am checked by counsel, and he says, "Just take it "generally, please." Then I answer thus, "The "determination to conduct the election within the "strict bounds of legality originated, I must say, with "Mr. Henry Lovibond, my head agent." Then Mr. James says, "If you will pardon me, we will take "you very shortly through this. Had you any know-"ledge whatever, from instructions given, or from "communications, that there was the probability or

" the possibility of Bussell, or any one, resorting to any " corrupt practices ?—None whatever. Did you strive, " by direction and by personal interference in every " way you could, to secure a pure election in the " borough ?—I did. This evidence has brought facts " to your knowledge of which you were perfectly " ignorant ?—Entirely."

(Mr. Price.) Yes. There is no doubt that that, at first, looked inconsistent with the statement of your friends. They gave us to understand, that you must have been aware of facts which were not consistent with your statement.

(The witness.) The Commissioners are now satisfied, I understand ?

(Mr. Price.) Yes. I may take the liberty of saying, you have cleared up everything most satisfactorily,

44,898. (Mr. Anstey.) I should like you to explain the last answer that you gave in the inquiry before the learned judge, " This evidence has brought facts to " to your knowledge of which you were perfectly igno- " rant ?—Entirely." And I wish to draw your attention to that, that it was upon that answer, and that answer alone, that I founded the disagreeable impression that I formed ; because, whilst the words will literally convey this meaning, that you received in the course of the trial further evidence, or evidence as to further facts, new facts besides those which you knew already, these words also seem to convey the meaning that until the evidence was given in court that day before Mr. Justice Blackburn you had been perfectly ignorant of every one of the facts, which, of course, would include Palmer's case ?—No, sir.

44,899. And that, of course, is not so ?—No, sir. The words are, not all the facts, but, " This evidence " has brought facts to your knowledge of which you you were perfectly ignorant ? " And my answer is, " Entirely." And I wish to say, that the evidence I there gave is minutely and literally accurate in every respect.

44,900. Then, you know, Mr. Vanderbyl is examined, and his counsel thinks it politic to link him with you in one question : " Did you, as well as Mr. " Kinglake, give to your agents instructions to avoid " all such irregularities as might place the election in " jeopardy, if you succeeded ?—I did. Had you any " personal knowledge of these matters at that time ; " these transactions by Bussell and other parties ?—I " had not. Did you give any instructions or autho- " rity to any person in the world who could have " sanctioned them ?—I never did." And upon that point we have it in evidence that his own attorney called out to the attorney who was conducting the petition, " For God's sake do not cross-examine " Vanderbyl."

44,901. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear that said ?—No, I did not hear that said.

(Mr. Anstey.) The misfortune for you has been that Mr. Serjeant Sargood took the course of coupling you in that question with Mr. Vanderbyl. As to Mr. Vanderbyl, there was never any doubt, and there never could be a doubt ; and, so far as you are concerned, I am happy to say you have removed from my mind any doubt that I had with regard to you.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I quite agree with the expression which has fallen from the other Commissioners. I had that opinion myself, that it was almost impossible to reconcile what you said before Mr. Justice Blackburn with the state of facts ; and I am happy to say that what you have said here to-day has entirely removed that feeling. Any feeling I had against you is entirely removed.

44,902. (Mr. Anstey.) There is only one thing I desire to ask you. It is the same question I put with regard to the same period between the last election and the present. You stated that you continue to be a subscriber to the infirmary to this day. I wish to ask, have you since the election of 1868 continued your subscriptions to institutions, to charities, or your individual bounties on the scale with which they were before ?—No. I had intended to stop the other subscriptions, but I retained my subscription to the infirmary because the large proportion of the very little property that I possess is land near Bridgwater ; and it is considered a sort of duty for landed proprietors to subscribe, according to their means, to the infirmary, one of the best of all charities.

44,903. You have stopped your other contributions ?—The others I shall or have stopped.

44,904. There is only one thing I omitted to ask you at the proper time, and that was, what was the object of having Mr. Sealy at one of your conferences, at one of which, I believe Mr. Westropp was present ; why was Mr. Sealy there at all ?—Well, he is a very attached personal friend of mine, and I imagine that it must have been very much out of regard for me that he came. He knew what my feelings were on the subject.

44,905. Had he no concern of his own ? Did he suggest that he was personally interested, or otherwise interested in that ?—No.

44,906. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think, amongst those charities, the races have stopped altogether, have not they ?—Yes. The races were so dependent——

44,907. On the members ?—On the franchise of the borough.

44,908. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you had any application for loans on personal security, or doutful security, since the last election ?—No sir. I should be anxious to do exactly what the Commissioners desire with regard to papers, and perhaps the Commissioners would direct their secretary to communicate with me in writing.

(Mr. Price.) Certainly. We have leave from the Secretary of State to adjourn (when we adjourn here) to the 2nd of November, at Westminster Hall. When we do adjourn from here we intend to adjourn, in all probability to Westminster Hall, on the first day of term, and then when we have arranged for a room, probably one of the committee rooms of the House of Commons, for the purpose of continuing our sittings, we shall then examine Sir William Drake and one or two other persons. We will communicate with you before then, and in the meantime you can look out the papers we spoke to you about yesterday, and have them sent under cover to our secretary, at his chambers in the Temple, which of course will be confidentially treated, and then we will give you notice of the day on which we shall ask you to attend.

Mr. John Frederick Norman sworn.

Mr. J. F. Norman.

44,909. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—The manager of the branch of Stuckey's Bank at Taunton.

44,910. Were you the manager of Stuckey's Bank in the year 1868 ?—I was.

44,911. We understand that a cheque was paid in by Dr. Kinglake, drawn upon Stuckey's Bank at Taunton, to the amount of 1,000*l.*, and handed in to Mr. Prior, Mr. Sealy's partner here, as security to be drawn against, if necessary, by Mr. Lovibond, in November last, just before the election, the day before the polling. Have you got your book here showing whether at that time, or not, Dr. Kinglake had credit at your bank to that extent, 1,000*l.* ?—I have an abstract of Dr. Kinglake's account.

44,912. Will you produce it ? If it has been made under your supervision it is true ?—It has been so made.

44,913. Then will you produce it ?—It is not to be read in court, is it ?

44,914. Oh, it is indeed. There is no delicacy in the matter. There is no privilege for a banker.

44,915. (Mr. Anstey.) You have no privilege in any court, and if you had, you would have no privilege here ?—I can tell you.

(Mr. Price.) You must tell us.

(Mr. Coleridge.) All we want to know is, what was the amount of his balance there on the 17th November, or the 16th November ?

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. J. F. Norman.

15 Oct. 1869.

(The witness.) I have to inform the Commissioners that we have three accounts in the name of Dr. Kinglake, kept in three separate books, for his own particular purposes.

44,916. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are these three accounts? How are they divided?—One is called his general account, and the other his private account, and the other is an executor account.

44,917. (Mr. Price.) An executor account, a private account, and a general account. What is the distinction between the general account and the private account?—Well, I do not know what is the distinction in Dr. Kinglake's mind. The distinction he gave was, to keep the accounts separate; with no other object, I fancy.

44,918. It is very unusual, is it not? An executor account I could quite understand?—Oh, no. Many gentlemen keep a private account, or a business account; two or three accounts.

44,919. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long had he kept those three accounts?—Oh, many years.

44,920. What was the state of the balance of his private account; that is the most material one to start with?—Then, at that time, it was 2,400*l.* against him on his private account.

44,921. Now take the general account?—There was 1,060*l.* in his favour.

44,922. On the general account?—On the general account.

(Mr. Price.) We need not trouble you about the executor account.

44,923. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had he, shortly before the 17th November, tried to raise a sum of money from your bank at Taunton?—Certainly not.

44,924. Had he tried to cash a cheque at your bank for that amount?—Certainly not.

44,925. (Mr. Price.) Had he given you notice, before he came to Bridgwater, that he would draw a cheque upon you?—Yes.

44,926. Supposing that cheque had been presented to you, what would you have done?—Honoured it, without the least hesitation.

44,927. (Mr. Coleridge.) Although you knew he was 2,400*l.* in your debt on his private account?—We knew he was a gentleman of honour, and that he had real and personal property, and there was no need of his being under an obligation to the bank for one moment.

44,928. (Mr. Price.) Would you have let him have the money without requiring collateral security?—Yes.

44,929. Without the lodging of deeds?—Certainly.

44,930. Upon his mere word?—Yes. He is a considerable shareholder in the bank, as well as being a man of large property, and we should have the law in our own hands.

(Mr. Price.) I do not know that that entitles him to be trusted by the bank without security more than any other customer of the bank.

44,931. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the value of his shares?—I can hardly tell you, but many thousand pounds.

44,932. That would account, therefore, for your giving him such credit?—No, it does not. His other means were quite sufficient to meet it.

44,933. I am only quoting what you yourself said, that you would have the law in your own hand?—That was in answer to the question of one of the Commissioners, if we did it without security.

44,934. (Mr. Price.) I see what you mean.—My answer is, we had ample security, even as a shareholder.

44,935. (Mr. Anstey.) Then it is a joint stock company, limited?—A joint stock company, not limited.

44,936. (Mr. Price.) Under the old Act?—Yes.

F. Best.

FREDERICK BEST sworn.

44,937. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A pawnbroker.

44,938. Carrying on business in this town?—I am.

44,939. Are you a voter?—I am.

44,940. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

44,941. How?—Conservative.

44,942. What did you get for it?—Nothing at all.

44,943. Any promise?—Certainly not.

44,944. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay anybody, or promise anybody?—No, I did not pay anybody.

44,945. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 did you vote?—I did.

44,946. At both elections?—I did.

44,947. How did you vote?—I voted on the 7th of June 1866, when Mr. Patton and Mr. Bagehot put up (referring to a paper); I believe that is right.

44,948. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes?—For Mr. Westropp.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No.

44,949. (Mr. Price.) You bring out your document, and you say when Mr. Bagehot stood you voted for Mr. Westropp?—I did.

44,950. For Mr. Westropp?—When they put up.

44,951. (Mr. Coleridge.) No. Patton and Bagehot and Westropp never stood at the same election?—Then it is my mistake. I voted on the 7th June 1866 for Mr. Westropp.

44,952. Mr. Westropp did not stand then?

(Mr. Anstey.) You may have done it by mistake.

44,953. (Mr. Coleridge.) You must have voted for Mr. Patton. It was Mr. Patton who was down here in 1866?—Yes, I beg your pardon, it was.

44,954. (Mr. Price.) You voted for Mr. Patton?—I did.

44,955. Did you get anything for it?—Certainly not.

44,956. Did you vote at the second election of Mr. Patton's?—Yes.

44,957. Did you vote for him then?—I did. There was money brought by Bussell when I was away from the shop.

44,958. How much?—I believe there was 20*l.* brought by Bussell to the shop, but to whom it was given I do not know.

44,959. By Robert Bussell?—By Robert Bussell.

44,960. You have kept the 20*l.*?—I have not.

44,961. Your wife has?—She has not.

44,962. What has become of it?—I have disposed of it by giving it for suppers, and so on, to the members of——

(Mr. Anstey.) Do not talk such nonsense.

44,963. (Mr. Price.) How much did you spend in suppers?—Those suppers? Well, it has cost me 50*l.* altogether.

44,964. ((Mr. Coleridge.) You got 20*l.*?—I did not get 20*l.*

44,965. (Mr. Price.) You say you got 20*l.* from Robert Bussell?—My wife did not get any money at all. The money was brought to my shop when I was away to the county court. My partner will be able to tell you about it.

44,966. What is your partner's name?—Robert Gibbs.

44,967. In 1865 did you vote?—Yes.

44,968. What did you get?—Robert Bussell brought me in 20*l.*, and I said, "What have you got there?" He said, "It is money." I said I would not have anything to do with it; and he took and threw it into my drawer, and there it remained for two months.

44,969. (Mr. Anstey.). In your own drawer?—Yes.

44,970. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever send that 20*l.* back again?—Certainly not.

44,971 (Mr. Price.) What has become of that 20*l.*?—Spent for Mr. Westropp's party.

44,972. How?—How? why, by spending it in suppers, and so on.

44,973. Do not be insolent in your manner.—I beg your pardon. I am not aware that I am.

44,974. But you are. Do you mean to say you spent the whole of that 20*l.* in treating?—I mean to say——

44,975. Listen to me, will you? Do you mean to represent that you spent the whole of that 20*l.* in treating?—I mean to say I spent 50*l.* altogether.

44,976. Will you answer the question? Do you mean to say you spent the whole of it?—Certainly.

44,977. You mean that?—Yes; I spent the whole of it for Mr. Westropp, in going to London.

44,978. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you a voter in 1859?—No.

44,979. (Mr. Price.) How much do you think you are out of pocket?—I should think I am 40*l.* out of pocket.

44,980. And 40*l.* in?—How do you make that out?

44,981. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do not be insolent?—I have a partner who can speak to this.

44,982. Whose house was this money brought to?—To our house.

44,983. Whose house was it?—At the shop.

44,984. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the business carried on there?—There are two businesses.

44,985. What is the business?—A pawnbroker's Gibbs and Best.

44,986. (Mr. Price.) Is your partner a pawnbroker?—He is the same as me.

44,987. Is he here to-day?—He will be here in a few minutes, if you will send for him.

44,988. (Mr. Coleridge.) Those were the only elections at which you voted?—Yes.

44,989. And you, or you and your partner, got 40*l.* between you?—Decidedly.

44,990. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you applied to anybody for the money which you say you are out of pocket?—I have not; and I can prove it.

44,991. If you have not applied to those who ought to pay it, why did you come and tell us of it?—You asked me about it.

44,992. You say you have spent 40*l.*, besides that which you have received?—Yes. I did not require any money to be given to me.

44,993. And you never asked anybody for it?—Certainly not.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

C. H. Bussell.

44,994. (Mr. Price.) What do you wish to say?—This man promised to vote for Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake before he got the money from Mr. Westropp. The first time he voted he was a stranger in the town, carrying on a respectable trade, or he professed to do so, as a pawnbroker.

44,995. When, in 1865?—Yes.

44,996. He promised to vote for Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley?—Yes; he was a strong supporter of Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley.

44,997. Then he got the money to vote for Mr. Westropp?—Yes, and he voted for him.

44,998. Do you know of any other money he got?—No; except that he went up to London to get the petition forced on.

44,999. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he get any money for it?—No. He was one of the men who went up to London to force Mr. Westropp on with the petition.

FREDERICK BEST recalled.

F. Best.

45,000. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you canvassed by Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley?—Yes.

45,001. Did you promise either one of them your vote?—Certainly not. I promised no living person on the face of the earth.

45,002. Then you left yourself open?—I beg your pardon.

45,003. You left yourself open?—I am a Conservative, and my father was a Conservative; that is no reason why I should be.

45,004. Answer my question. According to your statement you left yourself open?—I did not.

45,005. Then you promised Mr. Westropp?—I did not. I and my partners intended to vote for Mr. Westropp.

45,006. (Mr. Price.) And you got 20*l.*?—You are perfectly right; and I spent 60*l.*, understand that.

45,007. We have no proof of that?—I can bring proof of it.

45,008. We are not inclined to believe that a pawnbroker here would spend 40*l.* out of his own pocket for Mr. Westropp, and never ask Mr. Westropp, who is a notoriously liberal and open-handed man, to refund it to him?—Yes, that is so; I have never asked him.

45,009. (Mr. Price.) Did you do any treating at the last election?—I believe so.

45,010. Surely you must know?—I believe I did at the "Lamb." When I was at the "Lamb" I was very liberal, more liberal than a good many Liberals I know of in this town.

(Mr. Anstey.) More shame for you.

(Mr. Price.) You require a certificate to protect you from further proceedings by the Attorney-General, and that certificate is only given to you if you answer the questions truthfully; and yours is a case that deserves to be taken up by the Attorney-General, for there is a case against you.

45,011. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us what you did in the way of treating at the "Lamb"?—When I did the treating I belonged to the association, as I do now——

45,012. What amount did you spend, I want to know?—I cannot say.

45,013. Was it 10*l.* or 20*l.*?—I cannot say it was neither of those sums.

45,014. Was it 5*l.*?—No.

45,015. How much?—It might have been 30*s.* or 2*l.*

45,016. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the Conservative Working Men's Association you just now alluded to?—Yes. I am the president of it. If you wish to read our rules——

45,017. (Mr. Price.) We do not want to see them. You had better send your partner here. He is the next man on the list?—He will be here in a few minutes.

EDWARD GIBBS sworn.

E. Gibbs.

45,018. (Mr. Price.) You are a pawnbroker here?—Yes.

45,019. And a voter?—Yes.

45,020. And you are in partnership with Mr. Best?—Yes.

45,021. How did you vote at the last election?—That would be 1868?

45,022. Yes?—I voted purely.

45,023. (Mr. Coleridge.) For whom did you vote?—For Mr. Westropp.

45,024. (Mr. Price.) Alone?—Yes, I voted alone.

45,025. Did you vote for Mr. Westropp alone?—Yes.

45,026. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or Westropp and Gray?—Yes, Westropp and Gray.

45,027. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the elections of 1866, when Mr. Patton was a candidate twice over?—Yes, I did.

45,028. How did you vote then?—For Mr. Patton.

45,029. At both elections?—At both elections.

45,030. Did you get anything for it?—Bussell came and gave me 10*l.* in 1866.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

E. Gibbs.

15 Oct. 1869.

45,031. At which of the elections?—In 1866.

45,032. (Mr. Coleridge.) There was 20*l.* brought by Mr. Bussell, who was that for?—That was for my partner.

45,033. (Mr. Price.) For his vote?—Yes.

45,034. And 10*l.* for your vote?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Then your partner has told a distinct lie, and the question is, whether he will get a certificate.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is also a question whether his certificate will prevent an indictment for perjury.

(The witness.) In this case I will mention this. Mr. Bussell came in, and asked if I had voted, and I said, "No;" and he went out, and came in a few minutes afterwards, and he said, "Here is 20*l.*" He knew, in fact, that we were going to vote for the Conservatives.

45,035. Did you give 10*l.* of that to your partner and keep 10*l.* yourself?—It was placed by Bussell in a drawer.

45,036. (Mr. Price.) Did you divide it between you?—Yes.

45,037. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the former election Bussell also came and threw 20*l.* down into a drawer?—Yes, he did.

45,038. And did you divide that between you?—Yes.

45,039. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

45,040. For Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

45,041. Did you get anything?—Yes, 20*l.* That was the first 20*l.*

45,042. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many 20*l.* did you have?—Two.

45,043. Had you any other money at other elections?—No.

45,044. That was the first election at which you had any money?—Yes.

45,045. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1859?—No; I was not here. 1865 was the first election I voted at.

W. Johnson.

WILLIAM JOHNSON sworn.

45,046. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a cutter to Mr. Phillips.

45,047. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

45,048. How?—For Westropp and Gray.

45,049. Did you get anything?—No.

45,050. Any promise of any kind whatever?—Nothing whatever.

45,051. Did you vote at the elections in 1866?—Yes.

45,052. At both of them?—Yes.

45,053. How did you vote each time?—For Mr. Patton.

45,054. Did you get anything each time?—10*l.*

45,055. Each time?—No; only once.

45,056. Which one?—Vanderbyl's election.

45,057. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything afterwards?—No.

45,058. (Mr. Price.) From whom did you get the 10*l.*?—From Mr. John Waddon.

45,059. Did you vote in 1865 for Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

45,060. Did you get anything then?—Nothing at all.

45,061. Anything after the election?—No.

45,062. Did you vote in 1859, for Padwick and Westropp?—No; I was not here then.

45,063. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much have you had altogether?—10*l.* It was given to me in two little bits of paper.

G. Dowden.

GEORGE DOWDEN sworn.

45,064. What are you?—A bricklayer.

45,065. Where do you work?—I work for myself.

45,066. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

45,067. How?—For Mr. Westropp.

45,068. Westropp and Gray?—Not Gray; Westropp.

45,069. Westropp alone?—Yes.

45,070. Did you get anything?—Nothing.

45,071. Any promise of any kind?—Nothing.

45,072. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

45,073. How did you vote then?—For Mr. Patton.

45,074. Both times?—Both times.

45,075. Did you get anything?—10*l.* each time.

45,076. From whom?—Mr. Jarman 10*l.*; and the other gentleman, I do not know who he was.

(Mr. Coleridge.) From the "Bull and Butcher"?

45,077. (Mr. Price.) Or the "Three Crowns"?—No; John Street.

45,078. Did you vote in 1865?—Never before that, sir.

B. Stokes.

BENJAMIN STOKES sworn.

45,079. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A hawler.

45,080. Whom do you work for generally?—Different people.

45,081. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

45,082. How?—Westropp and Gray.

45,083. Did you get anything?—No.

45,084. Any promise?—No.

45,085. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

45,086. How, for Mr. Patton?—At both elections.

45,087. For Mr. Patton?—Yes.

45,088. How much did you get?—10*l.* each time.

45,089. From whom?—One from the "Golden Lion," I do not know who from; and the other from Jarman.

45,090. Did you vote in 1865?—No; that was all I voted at.

H. Starkham.

HUMPHREY STARKHAM sworn.

45,091. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A labourer.

45,092. Do you work for anybody?—I have worked for different parties. I worked for Mr. Coombes last, the builder.

45,093. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

45,094. How?—For Westropp and Gray.

45,095. Did you get anything?—No.

45,096. Any promise?—No promise.

45,097. Or employment?—No.

45,098. Or any treating?—No, not whatsoever.

45,099. Did you vote at the elections of 1866?—

45,100. When did you vote before?—I voted before at the time when Padwick and Westropp stood.

45,101. In 1859?—Yes.

45,102. Did you get anything?—Yes; 10*l.* from John Murlis.

45,103. How did you vote between whiles?—I had no vote.

45,104. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote before 1859?—No.

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

45,105. Can you tell us whether William Crossman got anything at the last election?—He got 10*l.*

45,106. And he requires a certificate?—Yes. He was here the other day.

45,107. You are sure that he had 10*l.*?—Yes.

45,108. Is there more than one William Crossman in Bridgwater?—There is a man called William Walkem; he is likewise away.

45,109. Is there more than one William Crossman?—There is only one.

(Mr. Price.) When he comes home he is to be informed that there is a certificate for him.

(The witness.) There is Walkem, who is likewise away, and a man of the name of Pearce.

45,110. (Mr. Price.) Walkem and Pearce were called on other days, and they are both at sea?—Yes.

45,111. Did they get anything at the last election?—Yes.

45,112. What did they get?—10*l.* each.

(Mr. Price.) They will be entitled to a certificate if they present themselves and do not deny it.

RICHARD HOOPER sworn. R. Hooper.

45,113. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

45,114. Whom do you work for?—I work for myself. I work for Mr. Babbage as well.

45,115. Are you a voter?—Yes.

45,116. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

45,117. How?—Only for Mr. Vanderbyl.

45,118. Did you get anything?—Yes.

45,119. From whom?—The "New Inn."

45,120. Did you vote in 1866 at all?—Yes.

45,121. For Vanderbyl?—I voted for Vanderbyl.

45,122. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

45,123. How much?—10*l.* on the polling day, and 2*l.* after.

45,124. From whom?—From Mr. Temblett.

45,125. Did you vote for Mr. Bagehot in the previous election?—No, I did not. I voted for Mr. Patton.

45,126. What did you get?—10*l.* from Bussell, and I gave it up at the "Clarence."

45,127. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you got some money in the place of it?—13*s.* 6*d.*

(Mr. Anstey.) When was that?

45,128. (Mr. Price.) The first election in 1866, when Mr. Patton stood?—Yes.

45,129. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to vote for Mr. Patton?—I cannot tell you.

45,130. Did you vote in 1865?—No, sir; I had no vote then.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled. F. C. Temblett.

45,131. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say?—He had his 10*l.* again after.

RICHARD HOOPER recalled. R. Hooper.

45,132. (Mr. Price.) You did not tell us the truth about that. Temblett says you got the 10*l.* again after that?—Yes, after the election.

(Mr. Anstey.) You left that out.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is just the thing to prevent you getting a certificate.

(The witness.) I did not intend to leave it out. You did not ask me about it.

(Mr. Anstey.) You are sworn to tell the whole truth, and you ought to tell the whole truth.

JOHN DAVIS sworn. J. Davis.

45,133. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A dyer.

45,134. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

45,135. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Kinglake.

45,136. Did you get anything?—No.

45,137. No promise?—No.

45,138. Did you vote in 1866, at Patton and Vanderbyl's election?—Yes.

45,139. For Vanderbyl or Patton?—Vanderbyl.

45,140. Did you get anything?—Yes.

45,141. How much?—10*l.*

45,142. From whom?—From the Liberal party.

45,143. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who gave it you?—Gilbert. No, I beg your pardon, you mean the election before that.

45,144. Vanderbyl's election?—That was Charles Bulpin.

45,145. (Mr. Price.) Why did you not vote for Mr. Vanderbyl the second time he stood? You had had had 10*l.* of his money once?—That was on a previous election.

45,146. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did you not vote for him last time?—Because I thought I should please all parties, I voted one and one.

45,147. Did you get money from both parties?—No.

45,148. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at Patton and Bagehot's election?—Yes; for Bagehot.

45,149. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

45,150. How much?—10*l.*

45,151. From whom?—Mr. Gilbert.

45,152. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

45,153. How?—For the Liberals.

45,154. Kinglake and Shelley?—Kinglake and Shelley.

45,155. Did you get anything?—No.

45,156. No promise?—No.

45,157. Nothing after the election?—No.

45,158. Did you vote in 1859?—No.

45,159. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever vote before?—No.

JOHN SUTCLIFFE sworn. J. Sutcliffe.

45,160. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A dairyman.

45,161. How did you vote at the last election?—I voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

45,162. Did you get anything for it?—No.

45,163. No promise?—No promise.

45,164. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

45,165. Did you vote for Mr. Vanderbyl then?—Yes. I have always voted for the Liberal party.

45,166. Did you get anything then?—In 1866?

45,167. Yes; when Vanderbyl came the first time?—Yes. I had 10*l.*

45,168. From whom?—5*l.* Mr. Boucher gave me, and 5*l.* Mr. White—after the election—12 weeks after or two months after I might get this.

45,169. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote for Mr. Bagehot at the election before?—Yes.

45,170. What did you get?—Nothing.

45,171. Nothing afterwards?—No.

45,172. Did you vote in 1865 for Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes.

45,173. What did you get then?—Nothing.

45,174. Did you vote in 1859?—No.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

45,175. (Mr. Price.) What do you wish to state?—James Parker, whose name was last called out, was paid at the last election.

45,176. Is he in the town?—Yes.

45,177. If he does not choose to come he will not get a certificate. He is returned by you?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Then if he does not choose to come he must take the consequences.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Dr. J. Haviland.

15 Oct. 1869.

Dr. James Haviland recalled.

45,178. (Mr. Anstey.) You have been an elector in this borough, how many years ?—For the last 50 years.

45,179. Were you a voter at the election of 1859 ?—No question about it.

45,180. Then you voted for Tynte and Kinglake, I think ?—Yes.

45,181. In 1865 did you vote for Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes.

45,182. In the interval between 1859 and 1865 did you obtain 100*l.* from Mr. Alexander Kinglake ?—Yes.

45,183. Through Mr. Bate ?—Through Mr. Bate.

45,184. Without security, except your own personal security ?—My own personal security.

45,185. And without being required to pay interest for the advance ?—No. I had to pay interest. It was not so worded, but it was payable with interest.

45,186. But Mr. Kinglake said you were not to pay interest, that you have not paid interest, and that the principal is not paid ?—Truly.

45,187. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever paid any interest ?—No.

45,188. (Mr. Anstey.) What year was this ?—In the year 1859 ; I expect so ; about 1859.

45,189. Had you any other claim upon Mr. Kinglake, except being his political friend and supporter ?—None whatever. I will explain this little matter, if you will allow me.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, certainly.

(The witness.) In the year 1858 my son, Mr. Alfred Haviland, and partner, got into difficulties, so much so that he had to compromise with his creditors. At that time, as a partner, I became liable for a certain amount of his debts. My liabilities were 1,100*l.* I paid 900*l.* out of it, and I consulted my friend Mr. Bate to raise me the other 200*l.*, which he did. I consider it quite a mercantile transaction ; 100*l.* that he raised was from a departed friend, which I have paid to his executors, and the other 100*l.* he told me that Mr. Kinglake had advanced for me. I had no request to make to Mr. Kinglake about it. I was perfectly indifferent where he got the money. It was quite what I call a mercantile transaction between me and my lawyer.

45,190. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said it was worded in a peculiar way, to be paid off with interest, that is what you mean ? Is the interest to be added as compound interest, and to be paid off with the principal at a given date ?—No ; I had no idea of that. I suppose it was a note of hand in the usual way, with interest.

45,191. You say you have paid no interest ?—I have paid no interest.

45,192. And seven, eight, or nine years have elapsed ?—Yes.

45,193. (Mr. Anstey.) And it is barred by the statute ?—I will explain, if you will allow me.

45,194. Yes ?—About two years after that occurrence Mr. Bate intimated to me that I need not trouble myself at all about that 100*l.* I drew the inference, however right or however wrong, that my friend Mr. Kinglake had generously forgiven me the debt.

45,195. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever thank him for it ?—I have thanked him.

45,196. And he acceded to the idea that he had forgiven the debt ?—Well, he shook me kindly by the hand.

45,197. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you thank him, what year ?—Very shortly after I had that intimation from Mr. Bate.

45,198. How long after the election of 1865 ?—I know nothing about elections. I had nothing to do with elections. All I can say about elections is this——

45,199. How long before 1865 was it that you thanked him for foregoing the claim which you had incurred in 1859 ? You say you incurred this liability in 1859 ?—About two years afterwards I think it was.

45,200. And you say it was a mercantile transaction. Let me ask you how could that be, seeing that you were not to be called upon to pay interest ?—I considered so.

45,201. Mr. Kinglake said you were not ?—What ?

45,202. To be called upon to pay interest. I was not called upon. I was never asked for it.

45,203. And I suppose you knew that Mr. Bate was the leading agent or representative of Mr. Kinglake in this borough, and had been so for electioneering purposes ?—Yes.

45,204. Did you go to him with that knowledge ?—Not a bit of it.

45,205. You knew he was on your side ?—I went to him as I would to any other lawyer.

45,206. But you were aware of that ?—Yes.

45,207. Do you know whether you could have obtained the advance from the Conservative lawyers on the same terms that you got them from Mr. Bate ?—I have no doubt I should. I have no reason to suppose I should not. My credit was very good at that time, until my son broke it down for the time being.

45,208. I understood you to say that your son had broken you down a year before this, in the year 1858 ?—In the year 1858.

45,209. Then it could not have been very good at that time. Were you one of those who signed the petition in 1866 to the House of Commons, praying for a commission of inquiry into corrupt practices at the election of 1865 and previous elections ?—I forgot all about that circumstance.

45,210. Here is "James Haviland, surgeon, &c." ?—Yes, I forgot all about that circumstance until the second day of the commission I heard my name called over by our worship the mayor. He was reading over several of the names, and my name was included in the list, and I have no doubt it was the correct one.

45,211. (Mr. Price.) You wanted to say something about the elections just now ?—I never interfered in my life about elections. I have simply done this : I have simply recorded my vote early in the morning at every election during the last 50 years ; and I had the honour, I may say, of seconding the nomination of my friend Mr. Kinglake twice during that time.

45,212. (Mr. Anstey.) You also signed the petition in 1852 ?—I dare say I did.

45,213. (Mr. Price.) You had always voted in one way ?—Oh, yes.

45,214. (Mr. Coleridge.) Always Liberal ?—Always Liberal.

45,215. What was your first election ?—I think Astell's was the first.

A short adjournment here took place.

P. Headford.

Philip Headford sworn.

45,216. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—Foreman.

45,217. Foreman where ?—At a brickyard.

45,218. Whose ?—Browne and Co.'s.

45,219. Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes. The first election I voted at was for Kinglake and Shelley.

45,220. We will go to that afterwards ; we will begin at the last. How did you vote at the last election ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

45,221. Did you get anything ?—No.

45,222. Any promise ?—No.

45,223. Were you taken up with anybody else to vote ?—No.

45,224. Did you go up under Dudderidge's care ?—Whose care ?

45,225. Dudderidge's ?—No, nor no one else's.

45,226. What time in the day did you vote ?—

About 10, I think. As soon as I found that they were going a little behind I went to poll.

45,227. Did you vote at the elections of 1866 ?—I did.

45,228. How did you vote when Mr. Vanderbyl was here first?—I voted for Vanderbyl.

45,229. Did you get anything then ?—At the first of Mr. Vanderbyl's elections Mr. White came to me in the morning——

45,230. Henry Cornelius White ?—Yes ; and he asked me whether I knew any person that I could get. I said I thought I could get Kerle, and he gave me 10*l.* to get him, and he asked me whether I wanted any for myself, and I said I had been twice before without any, and I intended to go again. I would not have any. About a month afterwards Mr. Bulpin met me, and said he had got 10*l.* I said I had refused to take any at the election, and he said, "It is a present ;" and I took the 10*l.*

45,231. Did you pay the other 10*l.* to Kerle ?—I did.

245,32. Then you are both briber and bribee. Did you vote when Mr. Bagehot was here ?—I did.

45,233. How did you vote then ?—For Bagehot.

45,234. What did you get ?—Nothing.

45,235. Did you vote in 1865 ?—I did.

45,236. For Kinglake and Shelley ?—I did.

45,237. Did you get anything then ?—Nothing.

45,238. Did you vote in 1859 ?—No, 1865 was the first time I had a vote.

HENRY PEARCE sworn. H. Pearce.

45,239. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A labourer.

45,240. A jobbing labourer, or do you work for anybody ?—Browne and Co.

45,241. How did you vote at the last election ?—I had not any vote.

45,242. Not last time ?—Not last time.

45,243. Did you vote in 1866 ?—Yes.

45,244. Did you vote for Vanderbyl ?—Vanderbyl.

45,245. Did you get anything ?—10*l.*

45,246. Who from ?—Mr. Bulpin.

45,247. (Mr. Coleridge.) Anything from the other side ?—No.

45,248. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Bagehot ?—Yes.

45,249. How much ?—10*l.*

45,250. Who from ?—Bulpin.

45,251. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.

45,252. For Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes.

45,253. Did you get anything ?—No.

45,254. Did you vote in 1859 ; Padwick and Westropp, Kinglake and Tynte ?—No, I never had no vote then.

JAMES BAINES sworn. J. Baines.

45,255. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A carpenter.

45,256. Whom do you work for ?—Browne and Co.

45,257. Did you vote at the last election ?—I had no vote.

45,258. How did you vote in 1866 ?—Vanderbyl.

45,259. What did you get ?—10*l.*

45,260. Who from ?—Mr. Bulpin.

45,261. Did you vote for Mr. Bagehot ?—Not at that election.

45,262. (Mr. Coleridge.) No, no ; the election before ?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Did you get anything ?—5*l.*

45,263. Who from ?—Mr. Bulpin.

45,264. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing more afterwards ?—No.

45,265. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865, Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes.

45,266. Did you get anything ?—No.

45,267. Did you vote in 1859 ?—I did ; Kinglake and Tynte.

45,268. Did you get anything ?—Nothing.

45,269. Did you vote in 1857, Kinglake and Tynte ?—Yes.

45,270. Did you get anything ?—No. All the money I have received was 15*l.*

45,271. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever got anything the other side ?—No, I have never looked for it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Sometimes it comes without looking for it.

JOHN MITCHELL CLAVEY sworn. J. M. Clavey.

45,272. What are you ?—A potter.

45,273. Where do you work ?—For Browne and Co.

45,274. How did you vote at the last election ?—For the Liberals.

45,275. Did you get anything ?—No.

45,276. Nothing at all ?

45,277. (Mr. Coleridge.) No present ?—No present.

45,278. Nor promise ?—No.

45,279. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl first came ?—I did.

45,280. Did you vote for him ?—Yes.

45,281. How much ?—10*l.*

45,282. Who from ?—Bulpin.

45,283. Did you vote for Bagehot ?—Yes.

45,284. How much ?—5*l.*

45,285. Who from ?—Bulpin.

45,286. Did you get anything afterwards ?—Whatever I got was after the election.

45,287. Never more than 5*l.* ?—No. On each occasion it was after the election.

45,288. Did you vote for Kinglake and Shelley in 1865 ?—I did.

45,289. Did you get anything then ?—No.

45,290. Anything afterwards ?—No.

45,291. Any treating ?—No.

45,292. Did you vote at any election before that ?—No, I had no vote before.

WILLIAM HEX sworn. W. Hex.

45,293. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A farrier.

45,294. How did you vote at the last election ?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

45,295. Did you get anything ?—No, nothing at all.

45,296. No promise ?—No promise.

45,297. Did you vote when Mr. Vanderbyl first came here in 1866 ?—Yes.

45,298. For him ?—Yes.

45,299. How much ?—I had two 10*l.* then.

45,300. 20*l.* ? Who from ?—10*l.* from Searle, and 10*l.* from Bulpin.

45,301. Which paid you the first ?—Searle.

45,302. Did you tell the other man that you had 10*l.* ?—No, there was no question asked ; neither side ; nothing said at all.

45,303. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you bribed on both sides ?—No, I never voted the other side in my life.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But you might have been bribed on that side without voting ?

45,304. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Mr. Bagehot ?—Yes.

45,305. Did you get anything then ?—No, nothing at all.

45,306. In 1865, Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes.

45,307. Did you get anything ?—No.

45,308. Nothing at all ?—No.

45,339. Who for?—For Tynte and Lord Henley.
45,340. Did you get anything?—Nothing. Yes, I beg your pardon, I had 5*l.* then.
45,341. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you voted for Lord Henley?—Yes.
45,342. Who gave you that?—Foster.
45,343. Did you ever get anything from any of the Tynte family?—Nothing.
45,344. Nothing for your vote from the old gentleman?—No; 20*l.* was all I had for voting, and I voted seven times.

C. Collings.

Charles Collings sworn.

45,345. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An engine fitter.
45,346. Where do you work?—I do not work anywhere; I am out of work; I don't work now.
45,347. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your house?—Why what I voted for was the "Queen's Head." I was keeping the "Queen's Head."
45,348. (Mr. Price.) How did you vote at the last election?—I did not have a vote at the last election.
45,349. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.
45,350. How did you vote?—For Vanderbyl.
45,351. What did you get?—Nothing for myself. I had 30*l.* from John Smith for three parties.
45,352. Did you pay them?—Yes.
45,353. What were their names?—Ten I paid of my own money, which he paid me afterwards. They were Richard Hooper, Henry Harris, William Sendall, and, I believe, the other was William King.
45,354. Were you keeping the inn then?—Yes.
45,355. Did you have a treating bill?—No.
45,356. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for your trouble?—12*l.*, afterwards.
45,357. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Bagehot?—Yes.
45,358. How much?—Nothing.
45,359. Did you give any money away that time?—No.

45,366. Did you get anything?—No.
45,367. Did you vote in 1866 for Vanderbyl, when Vanderbyl first came?—Yes.
45,368. Did you vote for him?—Yes.
45,369. What did you get then?—10*l.*
45,370. Who from?—John Smith.
45,371. Did you vote for Bagehot?—Yes.
45,372. How much?—10*l.* from John Smith.
45,373. Did you vote in 1865, Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes; I voted for Westropp.
45,374. How much did you get?—Nothing.
45,375. No promise?—Yes; I was promised 10*l.* by Harden.
45,376. Was that the reason you went and voted for Bagehot?—I voted for Westropp.
(Mr. Coleridge.) What made you turn round?
45,377. (Mr. Price.) You voted on a promise for Westropp and you did not get your money, and then you voted on the other side?—I previously used to vote for the Liberals, but I was working for a Conservative firm at that time, and I rather wished to vote that way to please my employers.
45,378. Who were they?—Hennett and Spink.
45,379. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they ask you?—They did not press me.
45,380. Did they ask me?—They did not ask me.
45,381. (Mr. Price.) You understood it would be better for you?—I thought it would be better for me.
45,382. Was that the feeling amongst the men?—That was the feeling I had myself.
45,383. Did you vote in 1859?—Yes.
45,384. How did you vote then, Padwick and Westropp?—No; Kinglake and Tynte.
45,385. Did you get anything?—10*l.*
45,386. Who from?—I think it was from Faun.
45,387. Did you vote in 1857?—No; I voted in 1847, I believe.
45,388. 1847; how did you vote then?—I voted for Gaselee.
45,389. Did you get anything?—No.
45,390. Was that the first time you voted?—The first time I voted.
45,391. You did not vote between 1847 and 1857?—I did not.

J. Hodge.

John Hodge sworn.

45,395. Did you get anything?—No.
45,396. Did you vote in 1866 for Vanderbyl?—Yes.
45,397. How much?—10*l.*
45,398. Who from?—John Smith.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

J. Hodge.

15 Oct. 1869.

45,399. Did you vote for Bagehot ?—Yes.
45,400. How much ?—10*l.*
45,401. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who from ?—John Smith.
45,402. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865, Kinglake and Shelley ?—Westropp.
45,403. How much ?—Nothing; only a promise.
45,404. Who promised you ?—Frederick Harden.
45,405. And did not pay you ?—No.
45,406. (Mr. Anstey.) How much did he promise you ?—He did not promise me anything, only the same as the rest.
45,407. (Mr. Price.) Was that the reason you voted for Bagehot afterwards ?—Well no, not particular.
45,408. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the first time you ever voted ?—Yes.

R. Wilkins.

ROBERT WILKINS sworn.

45,409. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A shipwright.
45,410. How did you vote at the last election ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.
45,411. How much ?—Nothing.
45,412. No promise ?—No.
45,413. Whom were you working for at that time ?—Watson and Co.
45,414. Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl came first ?—Yes.
45,415. Did you vote for him ?—Yes.
45,416. How much ?—10*l.* was paid to Mrs. Wilkins for me.
45,417. Do you know where it came from ?—Yes.
45,418. Whom ?—John Smith.
45,419. Did you vote for Bagehot ?—I did.
45,420. How much ?—10*l.* paid to my wife.
45,421. By the same man ?—By the same man.
45,422. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.
45,423. For Westropp ?—No.
45,424. For Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes.
45,425. Did you get anything ?—No.
45,426. Did you get anything after the election ?—No.
45,427. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything promised ?—No.
45,428. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1859 ?—That is the first time I had a vote; Kinglake and Shelley.

Mrs. M. A. Wilkins.

Mrs. MARY ANN WILKINS sworn.

45,429. (Mr. Price.) You are the wife of Nathaniel Wilkins ?—I am.
45,430. What is your husband ?—A master mariner.
45,431. Is he at sea ?—Yes.
45,432. Did he vote at the last election ?—Yes.
45,433. How did he vote ?—On the Liberal side. He always did for 16 years.
45,434. Did you get anything ?—No.
45,435. Nothing ?—Not last time.
45,436. No ribbons ?—No, not last time. I bought a bit, what I had.
45,437. Did he vote in 1866 for Vanderbyl ?—Yes.
45,438. How much ?—I received 20*l.* from Mr. Smith; 10*l.* for Robert Wilkins and 10*l.* for myself.
45,439. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is for your husband ?—My husband knew nothing of it till after Mr. Bussell came into this court.
45,440. (Mr. Price.) He went and voted ?—He did always before.
45,441. Did he vote for Bagehot ?—Yes.
45,442. How much ?—Mrs. Wilkins, three weeks after, she had 20*l.*; that was 10*l.* for her husband and 10*l.* for us.
45,443. (Mr. Price.) Who is Mrs. Wilkins ?—Robert's wife.
(Mr. Coleridge.) You had a sort of partnership ?
45,444. (Mr. Price.) Did she pass 10*l.* to you ?—She did. I was at sea at the time. My husband had voted for Tynte and Kinglake before.
45,445. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were at sea ?—Yes, with my husband.
45,446. (Mr. Price.) In 1865 did he come home and vote ?—Yes.
45,447. For Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes.
45,448. Did you get anything ?—No; no promise or anything.
45,449. (Mr. Coleridge.) Any expenses ?—No. I said rogues and honest men are so much alike in Bridgwater; that is the reason I took the money the other time.
45,450. Did you get any ribbons at either of these elections ?—I got a flag from Mr. Burrage.
45,451. What is that for, to hang up in the ship ?—Yes, to hang up in the ship and in the house.
45,452. (Mr. Price.) No ribbons ?—No.
45,453. Did your husband vote in 1859 ?—Yes.
45,454. How much ?—Nothing.
45,455. No ribbons ?—I might have had a pocket handkerchief. He never wore a colour in his life, and never had more than a glass of beer.
45,456. (Mr. Anstey.) How many pocket-handkerchiefs did you have ?—I had, perhaps, one or two at different times.
45,457. (Mr. Coleridge.) With devices on them ?—No, plain handkerchiefs. My husband never wore a colour in his life. I was the Radical.
45,458. (Mr. Price.) Have you always made him vote your way ?—Yes.
45,459. You made him ?—He had his own mind.
45,460. But you never let him exercise it.
45,461. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he vote in 1857 ?—Yes.
45,462. Your way ?—Yes.
45,463. How much did he get then ?—Nothing.
45,464. A handkerchief or a flag ?—I had a flag. Not at all times.
45,465. (Mr. Price.) Have you made them into a patchwork quilt ?—No; I was told to by my neighbours. A woman in this court now told another woman (she is sitting here) that my husband had had 10*l.* at all the elections. It is only two. I dare her to——
(Mr. Coleridge.) Well, don't get out of temper about it. You say it is only two elections.
45,466. (Mr. Price.) It was your tongue made him vote, not the money ?—Perhaps so. I won't be insulted by her.
45,467. In 1852, how did he vote then ?—The same.
45,468. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he get anything ?—No.
45,469. In 1847 did he vote ?—Yes.
45,470. Your way ?—Yes.
45,471. (Mr. Price.) When were you married ?—I have been married 32 years.
45,472. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have kept your husband pretty straight ever since ?—What do you mean ?
45,473. Politically straight.
45,474. (Mr. Price.) You have made him always vote your own way ?—Yes. I was brought up in the neighbourhood of the Tyntes; and though I never had anything from them ever since I was a child, I have always hung out and wore the ribbons.
45,475. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have always been a Tynteite ?—I have.

D. Heron.

DENNIS HERON sworn.

45,476. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—An innkeeper.
45,477. What inn ?—The "Queen's Head."
45,478. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.
45,479. How ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.
45,480. Did you get anything ?—Nothing.
45,481. Had you any treating bill ?—Yes, at my house.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

D. Heron.

15 Oct. 1869.

45,483. Is it paid?—It has not been paid at all.

45,484. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did you send it in to?—I sent it in to Mr. Boyles's office, to Mr. John Smith.

45,485. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl first came?—Yes.

45,486. How ?—For Vanderbyl.

45,487. Did you get anything yourself?—Nothing.

45,488. Had you a bill then?—No.

45,489. Any treating ?—Nothing whatever.

45,490. Did you vote for Bagehot ?—Yes.

45,491. Had you any treating bill then ?—Nothing.

45,492. Nor anything for yourself? — Nothing whatever.

45,493. Did you vote in 1865 ;—Yes; Mr. Westropp and Sir John Shelley.

45,494. How much did you get ?—Nothing.

44,495. Did you have a treating bill ?—Nothing.

45,496. How did you come to split your vote ?—Because Mr. Westropp—I supported him when he got into the House of Commons, but he voted on two measures there that I did not approve.

45,497. Who did?—Mr. Westropp.

45,498. I say why did you split?—When Mr. Westropp came I promised him ; for some previous time before.

45,499. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you vote for Sir John Shelley ?—I voted for Sir John Shelley simply because my political creed is Liberal.

45,500. Why did you vote for Mr. Westropp ?—Because I made a promise.

45,501. Why did you make a promise?—It was in the course of conversation with a friend of mine. He was asking about some officers in the Crimea, gentlemen who belonged to the same regiment that I was in ; and in course of conversation this friend of mine asked him if he would stand in the borough again on another occasion, and he said he would ; and this friend of mine, Serjeant-major Fisher, who is now dead, said he would support him, and I said, " I will give you one vote."

45,502. (Mr. Price.) Afterwards, you say, he voted in the House in the way you did not like?—Yes.

45,503. What was that, for flogging in the army ?—I was nine years in the army.

45,504. I say what did he vote about?—The Roman Catholic Oaths Bill was one, and I think the Roman Catholic Relief Bill was brought into the House then, and he voted right against them.

45,505. Did you vote in 1859 ?—No.

45,506. Had you anything then ?—No.

45,507. You had one treating bill at the last election ?—Yes.

45,508. (Mr. Coleridge.) And that you have not been paid?—I have not been paid.

W. Marels.

WILLIAM MARELS sworn.

45,509. (Mr. Price.) What inn do you keep ?—Neither one.

45,510. Did you keep one at the last election ?—No.

45,511. What are you, then ?—A blacksmith.

45,512. Did you manage any inn?—I did.

45,513. What inn ?—The " Bath Bridge" inn.

45,514. How did you vote at the last election?—I never had a vote.

45,515. Did you have any treating going on at the house you managed ?—There was.

45,516. Who for ?—For Philip Gilbert.

45,517. On whose side ?—Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl's.

45,518. How much was the bill?—I think after all it made up about 18*l.*

45,519. Have you sent it in ?—The landlady has.

45,520. Has it been paid ?—It has never been paid.

45,521-2. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the landlady who has been married since?—Yes.

45,523. What was her name then ?—Cave.

45,524. (Mr. Price.) Have you ever had a vote ?—Never.

45,525. (Mr. Coleridge.) The only thing you have ever done at any election is, that you were managing this place when the treating went on ?—Yes.

J. Sharman.

JAMES SHARMAN sworn.

45,526. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A master mariner.

45,527. Did you vote at the last election ?—I was not at home ; I was at sea.

45,528. Did you vote in 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl first stood ?—Yes.

45,529. How did you vote then ?—For Vanderbyl, the Liberal side.

45,530. Did you get anything?—10*l.*

45,531. Who from ?—Henry Chapman Bussell.

45,532. Did you vote for Bagehot?—Yes.

45,533. How much ?—5*l.*

45,534. Who from ?—Henry Chapman Bussell.

45,535. Did you get anything afterwards ?—Not the slightest.

45,536. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.

45,537. For Mr. Westropp ?—No.

45,538. Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes.

45,539. Did you get anything ?—10*l.*

45,540. Who from ?—William Heal.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then you must have voted for Westropp on that occasion.

(Mr. Price.) Are you sure it was Kinglake and Shelley?

45,541. (Mr. Anstey.) William Heal on that occasion was gone to Westropp, and was his principal witness at the petition against him?—Perhaps I may be wrong. Tynte and Henley were up.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, no, that was a long time before.

45,542. (Mr. Price.) Whom did you get the 10*l.* from ?—I got it from William Heal.

45,543. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it Hill or Heal?—Heal.

45,544. Heal the brewer?—At that time he was foreman of the pottery of Mr. Browne.

45,545. That is William Heal, and he was bribing on Westropp's side in 1865, and before on the Liberal side.

45,546. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you sure you did not vote for Mr. Westropp on that occasion ?—No, indeed I am not.

45,547. You did vote for Westropp, did not you ?—I cannot say. It was Heal who paid me the money.

45,548. (Mr. Price.) In 1865 you got 10*l.* from William Heal for your vote ?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) You voted which way Heal wished you to vote?

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

45,549. (Mr. Price.) Bussell, do you know anything about this?—I do not know anything about it.

J. Sharman.

JAMES SHARMAN recalled.

(The witness.) I voted on Westropp's side, and had 10*l.* from Robert Ford, but I am not certain whether it was Tynte and Henley, or how it might stand; whether it was before or after.

45,550. (Mr. Price.) When you voted for Westropp, did you get 10*l.*?—Yes.

45,551. Very well ; that would be from Ford?—That was from Ford.

45,552. Did you vote in 1859 for Tynte and Kinglake?—No, I do not think I did.

45,553. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or for Padwick and Westropp?—I think that must be so.

45,554. (Mr. Price.) That would be the time you got the 10*l.* from Ford?—Yes.

45,555. (Mr. Coleridge.) No, no; from Heal. It is Heal who gave it to you in 1859?—That is it.

45,556. And you voted for Padwick and Westropp?—No, no.

45,557. Tynte and Kinglake?—On the Conservative side. Ford gave me the money, but I am not quite certain of the date when Heal's was; but, however, that was the amount.

45,558. For Tynte and Henley?—I fancy it was.

(Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1857?

45,559. (Mr. Coleridge.) Kinglake, Tynte, and Follett?—Yes, I think I did.

45,560. Which way did you vote then?—For Follett.

45,561. Did you get anything?—No.

45,562. Were you a Conservative then?—I was a Conservative then.

45,563. Then you have been backwards and forwards several times?—No; I only changed once.

45,564. (Mr. Price.) In 1852, did you vote for Tynte and Henley?—No.

45,565. How did you vote then?—Lord Henley. I voted for the Liberals since 1859.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled. F. C. Temblett.

(The witness.) In Lord Henley's election, I think he had money from Heal.

JAMES SHARMAN recalled. J. Sharman.

45,566. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get 10*l.* at that election of 1852?—Yes.

45,567. Who from?—Heal, I think.

45,568. You say you have only changed once. You voted for Follett in 1857?—No, I did not. I may have made a mistake, but I never changed but once.

45,569. How much have you got altogether?—35*l.*

45,570. A great deal more than that you have told us of?—No, 35*l.* 10*l.* from Heal, 10*l.* from Ford, 10*l.* from Bussell, and 5*l.* from Bussell. 35*l.* is all I received for voting.

WILLIAM MORRISH sworn. W. Morrish.

45,571. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A carpenter.

45,572. Who do you work for?—I am working at Browne and Co.'s at present.

45,573. At the last election did you work for them?—The last election I did.

45,574. How did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

45,575. Did you get anything then?—No.

45,576. No promise?—No.

45,577. Were you asked by your employers to go and vote?—Never.

45,578. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

45,579. When Mr. Vanderbyl first came?—Yes.

45,580. How did you vote then?—Vanderbyl.

45,581. Did you get anything?—Yes.

45,582. How much?—10*l.*

45,583. Who from?—Mr. William Bradford Gold.

45,584. Did you vote for Bagehot?—Yes.

45,585. How much?—10*l.*

45,586. Who from?—Bussell.

45,587. Henry Bussell?—Yes.

45,588. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

45,589. How?—Kinglake and Shelley.

45,590. Did you get anything?—No.

45,591. Nothing afterwards?—No.

45,592. Did you vote in 1859?—No, I had no vote.

GEORGE KNIGHT sworn. G. Knight.

45,593. (Mr. Price.) Are you a brewer, Mr Knight?—I am.

45,594. On your own account?—Yes.

45,595. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

45,596. How?—For Kinglake and —— for the Liberal side.

45,597. Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

45,598. I should have thought Vanderbyl's name would come pretty ready on your lips. Did you get anything?—Nothing at all.

45,599. Had you any bill against them of any sort?—Nothing at all.

45,600. Did you vote when Mr. Vanderbyl first came here in 1866?—Yes.

45,601. For him?—Yes.

45,602. Did you get anything yourself?—Nothing at all.

45,603. Did you receive any money from anybody to bribe?—Yes.

45,605. Who from?—Mr. Allan.

45,606. To whom did you give it?—John Jefferies and Crocker.

45,607. Are they tenants of yours?—Yes.

45,608. Are they the same men to whom you gave money at Bagehot's election?—Yes.

45,609. How much?—20*l.* each.

45,610. 20*l.* each at both elections?—No, no; 20*l.* each at Vanderbyl's and 10*l.* at Bagehot's.

45,611. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you give these men the money yourself?—I did.

45,612. Did not you take your own rent from it?—No.

45,613. Was not there some rent owing?—No it was paid up.

45,614. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything for your trouble?—No.

45,615. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes, always in the Liberal interest and never had anything, to do with bribery except that time.

JOSEPH FURZLAND sworn. J. Furzland.

45,616. (Mr. Anstey.) Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

45,617. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A lime burner.

45,618. Where do you work?—I am my own master.

45,619. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you get for your vote?—At the last election?

45,620. Yes?—Nothing at all.

45,621. (Mr. Price.) No promise?—No promise.

45,622. Did you vote for Vanderbyl in 1866?—Yes.

45,623. How much?—10*l.*

45,624. Who from?—Searle.

45,625. Did you vote for Bagehot?—Yes.

45,626. How much?—Nothing.

45,627. No promise?—No promise.

45,628. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing afterwards?—Nothing afterwards.

45,629. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865; Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes?—That is the first time I ever voted.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

J. Furzland.

15 Oct. 1869.

45,630. What did you get then ?—Nothing.
45,631. No promise ?—No promise.
45,632. Nothing after the election ? — Nothing after the election.
45,633. You have only been paid once ?—Only once.
45,634. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has your wife been paid ?—No.

CHARLES DAY sworn.

C. Day.

45,635. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A shoemaker.
45,636. How did you vote at the last election ?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.
45,637. Did you get anything ?—No.
45,638. No promise ?—No.
45,639. Did you vote when Mr. Vanderbyl came in 1866 ?—Yes.
45,640. Did you vote for him ?—Yes.

45,645. Who from ?—Searle.
45,646. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.
45,647. For Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes.
45,648. How much ?—Nothing.
45,649. Any promise ?—No.
45,650. Nothing after the election ?—No.
45,651. In 1859 ?—I cannot remember no farther.

WILLIAM PREECE recalled.

W. Preece.

45,652. (Mr. Price.) Have you been examined ?—I have.
45,653. What are you ?—A builder.
45,654. A master builder, I suppose ?—Yes.
45,655. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.
45,656. Have you been examined about your vote ?—I have. Mine was a voluntary statement, if you remember, nearly three weeks or a month ago. When Golds gave their evidence they accused me of receiving money. I set my case straight then, and you have heard it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You are not the person we want ; it is a mistake.

(The witness.) I find my name is wrongly spelt, but I thought I would appear before you, as it is named a second time in the list.

EDWARD DENNER sworn.

E. Denner.

45,657. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A retired tradesman.
45,658. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.
45,659. Whom for ?—Westropp and Gray.
45,660. Did you get anything ?—Nothing.
45,661. Any promise ?—No promise.
45,662. Did you attend any of the meetings ?—I did not.
45,663. Did you attend at the "Clarence"?—I did not.
45,664. Did you vote in 1866 when Mr. Vanderbyl came ?—I did.
45,665. How did you vote then ; Patton or Vanderbyl ?—Patton.
45,666. Did you get anything ?—Nothing.
45,667. No promise ?—No promise.
45,668. Did you vote when Bagehot stood against Patton ?—I did.
45,669. How did you vote then ?—For Patton.
45,670. Did you get anything then ?—No.
45,671. Did you get anything after the election ?—No.
45,672. Was there any promise made to you ?—No, not at all.
45,673. Did you vote in 1859 for Westropp ?—Yes, I did.
45,674. Did you get anything then ?—No.
45,675. Any promise ?—No promise.
45,676. Was anything paid to your wife, if you have one ?—No.
45,677. Or any of your family ?—No, not that I am aware of.
45,678. Did you vote in 1859 ?—I did.
45,679. How did you vote then ; Padwick and Westropp ?—Yes, I did.
45,680. Did you get anything then ?—10*l.*
(Mr. Anstey.) Who from ?
45,681. (Mr. Price.) Who did you get it from ?—Murlis.
(Mr. Anstey.) Was that the first time you voted ?
45,682. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1857 ?—I think I did.
45,683. How did you vote then ; Follett ?—I think Follett and Mansell.
45,684. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get anything for your vote then ?—Nothing at all.
45,685. (Mr. Price.) Is that the only time you have been paid ; that 10*l.* by Murlis ?—Yes, that is the only time.

Mr. BATE recalled.

Mr. Bate.

45,686. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you brought the manuscript Mr. Kinglake gave you at the "Railway Hotel," when taking farewell of the town ?—Yes.
45,687. The farewell address. Will you read it, if you please, that it may be on the shorthand writer's notes ?—(Reading.) "Bridgwater Election.

"To my friends and supporters.

" Gentlemen,

" Let me offer you my most grateful acknowledgments for the support which you have given me at this election. The remembrance of your kindness, and, particularly, let me say, the remembrance of the affectionate interest with which my old friends have stood by me will be my best consolation in the defeat which we have suffered.

" Believe me your attached and faithful servant,

" A. W. KINGLAKE."

45,688. When he gave it you did he tell you what to do with it ?—Publish it.
45,689. Print it first ?—Yes.
45,690. Did you get it printed ?—I did not.
45,691. How was that ?—I told him it would be useless to have it printed at once, because until several days after the election we should not know who his friends and supporters were.
45,692. You told him that at the time ?—I did.
45,693. You took it away with the intention of printing and publishing it a few days after the poll ?—Yes.
45,694. Of course it was unnecessary to print or publish it when you found what the state of the poll was at the close ?—Certainly.
45,695. (Mr. Price.) You told us before, Mr. Bate, that you said, " Allow me, as the last act of friendship I can do, to take this address and publish it" ?—I did. I went back for that purpose. I had left the house. I then went back and asked him to let me do it.
45,696. And then he said, "Have it printed at once" ?—I said, " I cannot do that, you see, because " you have addressed it to your friends and supporters, and we shall not know who are your friends and " supporters until after the election."
45,697. But Mr. Kinglake's idea was to have it done at once ?—Yes.
45,698. (Mr. Coleridge.) You showed it to—— ?—I showed it to Mr. Sealy that afternoon, and some half dozen people the next morning.
45,698. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not show it about the streets that day ?—Not about the streets, no.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

45,708. For Patton?—For the Liberal party.

45,709. What?—I voted for the Liberals.

45,710. For Vanderbyl, then?—Yes.

45,711. What did you get?—10*l.*

45,712. Who from?—I got it once down to Newton's.

45,713. Did you vote for Bagehot?

(Frederick Charles Temblett.) He made a mistake, sir; he voted for the Conservatives.

45,714. (Mr. Price to the witness.) Did not you get 10*l.* from Temblett?—Yes.

45,715. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get it both sides?—No.

45,716. You said you got it from Newton?—I voted for the blue party every time.

45,717. (Mr. Price.) Did you get 10*l.* from Newton as well?—Yes.

(Frederick Charles Temblett.) That was another election.

45,718. (Mr. Price.) Another election?—Yes.

45,719. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many 10*l.* did you get in your life?—Four.

45,729. Did you get anything?—Nothing at all.

45,730. Had you a treating bill?—Yes.

45,731. How much?—15*l.*

45,732. Is it paid?—No.

45,733. Has it been sent in?—I have never sent it in.

45,734. Did you vote in 1866 for Vanderbyl?—Yes.

45,735. Anything then?—No.

45,736. Had you a treating bill?—Yes.

45,737. How much?—I cannot say.

45,738. (Mr. Coleridge.) About?—About the same amount.

45,739. (Mr. Price.) Is it paid?—Yes.

45,740. Who paid it?—Mr. Lovibond.

45,741. Did you vote for Bagehot?—Yes.

45,742. How much did you get?—Nothing.

45,743. Did you have a treating bill?—Yes.

45,744. Is it paid?—Yes.

45,745. Who paid it?—Mr. Lovibond.

45,746. Did you vote in 1865 for Shelley and Kinglake?—Yes.

45,747. Did you get anything?—Nothing at all.

45,748. Had you a treating bill?—Yes.

45,749. Is it paid?—Yes.

45,750. Who paid it?—Mr. Lovibond.

45,751. When was that paid?—Some long time after.

45,752. Was that paid when Vanderbyl came?—I really cannot say whether it was before or after.

45,753. It was not paid till just about that time, just before Vanderbyl's election?—I think it was sometime before that.

45,754. Was it paid before Mr. Bagehot came here?—Yes, it was.

45,755. Did you vote in 1859?—I did not. I first voted in 1865.

JOHN W. HELLARD sworn.

J. W. Hellard.

45,756. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A bricklayer.

45,757. Whom do you work for?—Kitch Brothers.

45,758. How did you vote at the last election?—I voted for Mr.——

45,759. Which side? if you know anything about sides?—The Liberal side.

45,760. Kinglake and Vanderbyl, I suppose?—Yes, that is it.

45,761. What did you get?—10*l.*

45,762. Whom from?—Mr. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

A. Allan.

45,763. (Mr. Price.) Is he on your list, Allan?—Yes.

JOHN W. HELLARD recalled.

J. W. Hellard.

45,765. What did you get?—20*l.*

45,766. Who from?—Bulpin.

45,767. The whole of it?—Yes.

45,768. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to get 20*l.*?—Because he gave it to me.

45,769. I mean did you stand out for it? Did you refuse to take less?—Yes.

45,770. What did he offer you first of all?—10*l.*

45,771. What did you say?—I said I wanted more.

45,772. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Bagehot?—Yes.

45,773. How much?—10*l.*

45,774. Whom from?—Bulpin, about a month after I voted.

45,775. Did you vote in 1865?—No.

45,776. Had you a vote then?—No, I had no vote.

45,777. No vote before 1866?—No.

45,828. You got 10*l.* for voting, and you also had a treating bill ?—Yes.
45,829. 12*l.* ?—Yes.
45,830. That is unpaid ?—That is unpaid.
45,831. Did you make any claim before you voted at the last election for it ?—No.
45,832. How was it ?—I sent in a bill. I applied several times for the money, but Mr. Lovibond was out of town or engaged.
45,833. Have you never made any claim upon him since ?—No.
45,834. That 12*l.* is still owing ?—Owing still.
45,835. You voted for Bagehot ?—Yes.
45,836. No money ?—No.
45,837. No treating bill then ?—No.
45,838. Did you vote in 1865 ?—No, that was the first vote I had.

C. Halliday.

CHARLES HALLIDAY sworn.

45,839. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—I am the manager of the district for a life assurance office in London.
45,840. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.
45,841. How ?—For Messrs. Westropp and Gray.
45,842. Did you get anything ?—No.
45,843. Any promise ?—No.
45,844. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay anybody ?—No.
45,845. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866 ?—I did.
45,846. For Patton ?—For Mr. Patton.
45,847. Both times ?—Yes.
45,848. Did you get anything either time ?—No.
45,849. Any promise ?—No. If you will allow me, I have always voted on the Conservative side. I have never taken any particular interest ; I have always given my vote free and independent.
45,850. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever received a present afterwards ?—I have not.
45,851. Or your wife ?—No.
45,852. (Mr. Price.) Have you ever bribed anybody ?—Well, as you ask me the question, in 1859 I was asked by Mr. Murlis if I would endeavour to get three or four men to vote for Padwick and Westropp from the carriage factory.
45,853. Were you then employed at the carriage factory ?—No ; I was superintendent at the station of the railway where I have been for 23 years. Seven packages were sent down to me, and seven men came up from the factory to see me at my office. They came in one at a time, and I said, "If you vote for "Padwick and Westropp you can take up one of "those packages."
45,854. (Mr. Coleridge.) You bribed seven men in 1859 ?—No, I did not bribe them ; they took it off the table.
(Mr. Coleridge.) Your name will appear as a briber.
45,855. How many did you let them take ?—Four. The other packages were sent back to Mr. Murlis.
45,856. Did you get anything for your trouble ?—Not a farthing.
45,857. Not one of the packages ?—No.

J. Bailey.

JAMES BAILEY sworn.

45,858. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A hammerman.
45,859. Where do you work ?—At the carriage works.
45,860. How did you vote at the last election ?—Westropp and Gray.
45,861. Did you get anything for it ?—No.
45,862. Any promise ?—No.
45,863. Were you asked by your employers to go and vote in that way ?—No.
45,864. Did you vote in 1866 ?—No, never before.
45,865. What was it induced you to go and vote ? Was any inducement held out to you ?—No, nothing.
45,866. Did you attend the meeting at the "Clarence ?"—Yes, I was at the meeting.
45,867. At eight o'clock in the morning ?—Yes.

45,868. Did you hear Mr. Hodges promise anything ?—No.

45,869. Did you hear him speak ?—Yes, I heard him speak.

45,870. Did he say anything about 15*l.* ?—No.

45,871. Did you understand that if you voted on that side you would be paid afterwards ?—No.

45,872. (Mr. Anstey). Did anybody at that meeting say anything about employment ?—No, nothing at all.

45,873. Or about doing good to the town ?—Nothing at all.

45,874. (Mr. Price.) You were then in the carriage works ?—Yes.

45,875. Are you quite sure nothing was said by anybody over you to influence your vote ?—Never a word to me.

45,876. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there to others ?—I cannot say. There was nothing to me.

(Mr. Price.) Your name has been returned somehow or other.

(The witness.) It may be the wrong one.

(Mr. Price.) Is there another ?

(The witness.) There is another James Bailey.

45,877. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever receive anything at any time ?—No

James Tilly sworn.

J. Tilly.

45,878. What are you ?—A hairdresser.

45,879. Are you a tenant of Joseph Richard Smith ?—I am.

45,880. Did you vote at the last election ?—No.

45,881. Not at all ?—Not at all.

45,882. Had you a vote ?—Yes, I had.

45,883. How was it you did not exercise it ?—Because I received such information from two parties that led me to believe if I had I should have lost my shop.

45,884. Give us the history of it ?—Some time before the election Mr. Charles Dyer, a retired tradesman, came into my shop and told me he had received such information that he thought if I had voted I should have lost the shop ; and I said "Who informed you ?" and he would not tell me the name. I never thought anything more about that until two or three days before the election, and then young Humber came into my shop and told me that he thought I had better not vote at all; he thought I should lose my shop.

45,885. Is Humber a man on intimate terms with Mr. Joseph Richard Smith ?—Humber and his son work for Mr. Smith.

45,886. (Mr. Anstey.) Humber and Charles Dyer, are they both of the Conservative party ?—Yes, they are both in the Conservative interest.

45,887. (Mr. Price.) What are your politics ?—In my early days I voted Conservative.

45,888. How would you have voted last time if you had not been under the impression conveyed to you by those two men ?—I should have voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

45,889. You are sure about that ?—Yes.

45,890. (Mr. Coleridge.) Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—No, I do not mean that.

45,891. You said so ?—Oh, yes, Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

45,892. (Mr. Price.) The last time, if you had exercised your privilege of the franchise freely, you would have exercised it on behalf of Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—I should.

45,893. Now go on, if you have anything more to tell us about the last election.—No. They never told whose name or who informed them.

45,894. Why did not you go in a straightforward manner, instead of taking it from those fellows to Mr. Smith, and ask him whether he had authorized such a thing to be done; or were you afraid ?—No, I was not afraid. That was the thing I should have done, but I did not do it. The reason I did not do it was that I really thought it was an improbability, and would turn out a mere nothing after all.

45,895. But you did not vote ?—I did not vote.

45,896. (Mr. Anstey.) You have not yet told us what Mr. Smith did. Are you his tenant ?—Yes.

45,897. Did you hold your shop of Joseph Richard Smith ?—I did.

45,898. Therefore the meaning of the intimation was, that if you voted for the Liberals Mr. Smith would dispossess you ?—No, they did not mention any name, only held out.

45,899. (Mr. Price.) There was only one person who could disposses you ?—I am quite aware of that.

45,900. Then why did not you, like a man, yourself go and ask Mr. Smith what he meant by it ?—Well, I did not.

45,901. Have you ever said anything to him since ?—I have never, nor Mr. Smith to me; and I have seen him several times.

45,902. Did you vote before that in 1866 ?—No.

45,903. Never before ?—Yes, 1847.

45,904. Why did not you vote in 1866 ?—Because I had no vote.

45,905. Had you no vote between 1847 and 1868 ?—Yes ; I voted in 1852.

45,906. (Mr. Coleridge.) How ?—One and one.

45,907. What did you get in 1852 ?—I had 10*l.*

45,908. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1859 ?—I did, one and one for Tynte and Follett.

45,909. Did you vote for Vanderbyl in 1866 ?—I had no vote.

45,910. Did you vote for Bagehot ?—I had no vote.

45,911. Did you vote in 1865 ?—I had no vote.

45,912. Did you vote in 1859 ?—I had no vote.

45,913. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have told us that you had ?—No, in 1852.

45,914. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1857 ?—No.

45,915. In 1852 you did ?—Yes.

45,916. And had 10*l.* ?—Yes.

45,917. Who gave it you ?—William Heal, the brewer.

45,918. Did you vote in 1847 ?—Yes.

45,919. How did you vote ?—For Broadwood and Follett.

45,920. Did you get anything then ?—I did not.

45,921. At that time you were Convervative ?—I was partly Conservative and partly Liberal.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Broadwood, Tynte, and Gazelee were the three candidates, not Follett.

45,922. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Tynte and Broadwood ?—Yes, Tynte and Broadwood.

45,923. What have you got altogether ?—10*l.*

45,924. There is no mistake about this, that Charles Dyer and Henry Humber represented this to you ?—Yes.

Charles Sprankling sworn.

C. Sprankling.

45,925. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—An innkeeper.

45,926. What inn do you keep ?—The "Ship Aground."

45,927. How did you vote at the last election ;—For Westropp.

45,928. And Gray ?—Yes.

45,929. Did you get anything ?—Not a farthing. I never asked for anything.

45,930. Had you a treating bill ?—No.

45,931, Did you vote in 1866 ?—Yes.

45,932. When Mr. Patton was here ?—Yes.

45,933. At both elections when Mr. Patton was here ?—Yes.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

C. Sprankling.

15 Oct. 1869.

45,934. For whom did you vote ?—For Mr. Patton, both times.

45,935. Did you get anything ?—Yes.

45,936. How much ?—Mr. Temblett gave me 5*l.* out here on the pavement, after the election ; I suppose it would be two or three months.

45,937. (Mr. Coleridge.) Some one else gave you 10*l.*, did not he ?—I will tell you directly. Waddon met me on the other side of the bridge, and gave me 5*l.*, that is the first election of Patton, and then the second time they sent for me to come down to Pimm's, and gave me 10*l.* out at the hole in the wall.

45,938. You got 10*l.* then ?—I had 10*l.* then.

45,939. Did you vote in 1865 for Mr. Westropp ?—Yes.

45,940. Did you get anything then ?—No.

45,941. Did you vote in 1859 for Padwick and Westropp ?—Yes, I believe I had.

45,942. What did you get then ?—I think Murlis did not give it to me, but gave my daughter 10*l.*

45,943. Did you vote in 1857 for Follett ?—I never had without it was that.

45,944. When was the first election you voted at ?—Astells.

45,945. Did not you vote in 1857 then ?—I voted every time there was a vote this last 42 years ; I cannot mind the names.

45,946. In 1857 it was Follett, Tynte, and Kinglake ?—I had nothing.

45,947. How did you vote then for Follett ?—I voted the blue side, I do not know whether it was Follett.

45,948. Did you vote in 1852, Follett and Mansell were the blue party ?—Yes.

45,949. Did you get anything then ?—No, only a dinner ; I think it was down at Murlis's.

45,950. A tenner or a dinner, did you say ?—A lot of us there went to dinner at that time, that is all I had.

45,951. Did you vote in 1847 for Broadwood ?—Yes.

45,952. How much did you get ?—Nothing.

45,953. That was your first election ?—No, Astell's was my first election.

45,954. In 1841, did you vote for Broadwood and Forman ?—Yes.

45,955. How much did you get ?—Nothing.

45,956. In 1853, did you vote for Broadwood and Courtenay ?—That I do not know ; I voted for all of them along these 42 years.

45,957. How much did you get altogether for your vote ?—Altogether I think about 35*l.*

45,958. More than that, was not it ?—Not much more, I think.

45,959. (Mr. Price.) Had you a treating bill during the 42 years ?—No, only one.

45,960. Thirty-five pounds you have had ?—Stop ; I had a treating bill at one election, but I cannot tell you which election that was, and that was Bussell came up.

45,961. Which Bussell ?—Jim Bussell.

45,962. The old man ?—No, the young man, at the time he was leaving with Mr. Smith, and that I never had.

S. Hayward.

SAMUEL HAYWARD sworn.

45,963. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A shopkeeper.

45,964. How did you vote at the last election ?—For Westropp.

45,965. And Gray ?—Yes.

45,966. Did you get anything ?—No.

45,967. Had you any expenses, or any bill ?—No, no promise, and nothing.

45,968. Did you vote for Patton ?—Yes.

45,969. Both times ?—No, once I did, and once I missed.

45,970. Which was the time you voted for him ?—The first time.

45,971. And the second time you missed voting ?—Yes, I was at the "Clarence," and the names came in that the election was over, and I went home.

45,972. Did you get anything when you did vote ?—Yes, I got 5*l.* from Newton on the morning of the first election, and the night before Mr. Patton came down again I had 5*l.* from Temblett and 10*l.* in the morning from a stranger ; I did not see his face.

45,973. Then you got 20*l.* ?—Yes that is all.

(F. C. Temblett.) No, the 10*l.* he got was on the morning of Vanderbyl's election, although he did not vote, and after he got the 10*l.* he said he would go and have a walk.

(The witness.) Yes, I was in the "Clarence" about 12 o'clock.

45,974. (Mr. Price.) Then you got 10*l.* once and never gave your vote ?—That is it.

45,975. Did you vote in 1865 ?—No.

45,976. You went out to take a walk instead of voting ?—I came back to the "Clarence" about 12.

45,977. Did you ever vote before that ?—When Patton came first ; I had not a vote before that.

J. Dyer.

JOHN DYER sworn.

45,978. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A nurseryman.

45,979. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you the son of Ambrose Dyer ?—I am.

45,980. (Mr. Price.) And now carry on your business in Taunton ?—Yes.

45,981. You were formerly residing in Bridgwater ?—Yes.

45,982. Were you a voter at the last election for Bridgwater ?—Not for Bridgwater.

45,983. Were you a voter in 1866 ?—I was.

45984. Did you vote for Patton or Vanderbyl ?—Vanderbyl.

45,985. Did you get anything for it ?—Yes.

45,986. Who from ?—From Ambrose Dyer.

45,987. That is your father ?—Yes.

45,988. How much ?—10*l.*

45,989. Did you vote for Bagehot ?—Yes.

45,990. How much did you get ?—10*l.*

45,991. Who from ?—Father.

45,992. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes.

45,993. How much did you get ?—Nothing.

45,994. Who did you vote for ?—Kinglake and Shelley.

45,995. Do you remember dining at the Petherton race dinner ?—Yes.

45,996. Was that about the time that your father had given evidence ?—Well, I cannot say.

45,997. Was it the other day since we have been here ?—Yes, last month, I think.

45,998. Did you say, "Thank goodness, I have now "ceased to have any connexion with the disreputable "borough of Bridgwater" ?—Not that I am aware of.

45,999. And now belong to a place I am not ashamed to mention ?—No.

(Mr. Coleridge.) What is the place ?

46,000. (Mr. Price.) That is Taunton ?—That is where I reside, Taunton.

46,001. Is your father a man of wealth ?—I think he is very well off.

46,002. And he took money for his votes ?—Not for his votes, I think. I took it for mine, I do not know whether his.

46,003. Did you vote in 1865 ?—Yes ; the first time I had a vote was Kinglake and Shelley.

46,004. Then you did not thank goodness that you had got away from Bridgwater ?—I do not remember such a thing.

46,005. Did you vote at the last election at Taunton ?—Yes.

46,214. Did you vote at the election before 1866?—Yes.

46,215. For Vanderbyl?—Yes.

46,216. What did you get then?—25*l.*

46,217. Who from?—Charles Bulpin.

46,218. The whole of it?—Yes.

46,219. Did you vote at Patton's first election?—Yes.

46,220. What did you get then?—10*l.*

46,221. Did you vote in 1865 for Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes.

46,222. What did you get then?—Nothing.

46,223. Did you vote in 1859, Kinglake and Tynte?—Yes, Kinglake and Tynte.

46,224. What did you get then?—I do not know as ever I had anything.

46,225. Of course you would. What did you get?—I do not know as I had anything.

46,226. Had your wife something?—No, I had no wife.

46,227. Are you sure you got nothing?—Nothing at that election.

46,228. In 1857, did you vote for Kinglake and Tynte again?—Yes.

46,229. What did you get then?—Shelley's election.

46,230. No, long past that. How often have you been paid altogether in your lifetime?—I can't say. I had nothing then I don't believe.

46,231. Have you made 100*l.* out of your votes altogether in your lifetime?—I cannot tell.

46,232. You must remember. Tell us?—I cannot recollect.

46,233. You got 25*l.* at Mr. Vanderbyl's first election?—Yes.

46,234. And 10*l.* at Mr. Bagehot's election?—Yes.

46,235. You got nothing in 1865, and do not know what you got at Tynte and Kinglake's election. Do you know who has paid you besides Bulpin in your lifetime?—Well, I had 10*l.* once from Bussell.

46,236. When?—I cannot say what election.

46,237. Was it in 1859?

(Bussell.) In 1859 I believe it was.

(The witness.) That was the time.

46,238. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have sworn once you got nothing; were you paid by Murlis as well?—No.

46,239. Did you get anything from Murlis?—No.

46,240. How did you vote in 1859?—Kinglake and Tynte.

46,241. Did you ever vote for the Tories at all?—Yes, I voted a good many years ago, and for Tynte and Kinglake every time they have been here.

46,242. What did you get the first time you voted for Tynte and Kinglake?—Nothing.

46,243. What did you get in 1852 when Lord Henley stood?—Nothing; if I had voted for Lord Henley I might have had 10*l.*

46,244. You say you might have had money if you had voted for Lord Henley?—Yes.

46,245. Who offered it to you?—I should have had it from the parties.

46,246. Tell us whom?—They were parties who came to me. I should have had money to vote for Lord Henley, but I did not do so.

46,247. In 1847, when Broadwood, Tynte, and Serjeant Gazelee stood, whom did you vote for then?—Broadwood, sir?

46,248. Yes, did you ever vote for Broadwood?—Yes.

46,249. Did you get paid?—Yes.

46,250. How much?—The first election for Broadwood; I voted for Broadwood and Martyn.

46,251. What did you get then?—I had 50*l.*

46,252. What, for yourself?—Yes, and then some could have had 90*l.*

46,253. In the election when Leader stood, what did you get?—That was the election I had it.

46,254. How did you vote?—For Broadwood and Martyn.

46,255. The next election, when Broadwood stood, and Sheridan stood, what did you get then?—Nothing.

46,256. At the next election, when Broadwood, and Courtenay, and Lethbridge, and Sheridan stood, what did you get then?—Nothing.

46,257. And when Broadwood, Forman, Drew, and Robinson stood, what did you get then?—I voted for Broadwood, and never had anything.

46,258. How often have you been paid by Broadwood?—Only once.

46,259. And then you got 50*l.*—Yes.

46,260. Did you have anything from Leader?—That was the time.

46,261. Did you ever get anything from Leader as well?—No.

46,262. Then you have had upwards of 100*l.* for your vote at one time and the other?—I cannot say.

H. Humber.

HENRY HUMBER sworn.

46,263. (Mr. Price.) Did you go before the last election, and speak to Mr. James Tilly about his vote?—No.

46,264. Never?—I did not about his vote.

46,265. What?—Not the last election.

46,266. Any election?—Never.

46,267. You never spoke to him about his vote?—When Mr. Westropp came here to a dinner, Tilly, the next day I was going out, said, "I wonder you fellows "can go about the same as you do; I saw Mr. "Westropp down the square cadging.

46,268. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the middle of last year?—Yes.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

H. Humber.

15 Oct. 1869.

46,269. (Mr. Price.) Go on?—Well, I do not know what you want.

46,270. What was said?—Well, we had a little bit of a fall out, and I told him if he did not mind what he was about, I dare say he would leave the shop.

46,271. What business had you to say that to him?—Because he was living in my shop.

46,272. Your shop?—He rented the shop of me when we took it first, and then it fell into Mr. Smith's hands.

46,273. Of you?—My father.

46,274. (Mr. Anstey.) He says he rents?—He do now.

46,275. But then at that time did he rent it of Joseph Richard Smith?—Yes, he did.

46,276. (Mr. Price.) What business had you to tell him that he would lose his shop?—Because it belonged to our house, and we could take it, I suppose.

46,277. How do you mean it belonged to your house?—The shop did.

46,278. Are you a partner of Mr. Smith?—No.

46,279. What is your story? you say it belonged to Mr. Smith; he was paying rent for it?—No, he used to pay we rent for it.

46,280. (Mr. Price.) Did you let it to him, or your father?—Father did.

46,281. He was an under tenant of yours?—Yes.

46,282. And used to pay rent to you or your father?—He did at one time.

46,283. Did he in 1868, when you had this conversation with him?—No.

46,284. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you spoken to Joseph Richard Smith on the subject?—No.

46,285. Had Mr. Smith spoken to you on the subject?—No.

46,286. Then by what authority did you, having nothing to do with the shop at that time, take on yourself to say that he had better look out?—I daresay Mr. Smith would let we have the shop again if we wanted it.

46,287. Had he told you so?—I had not asked him.

46,288, Had Mr. Joseph Richard Smith told you so?—Told me so?

46,289. Yes?—No.

46,290. Then what do you mean by saying this, when you had nothing to do with the shop, "Take "care, or you will lose your shop?"—Because we could have had it again, I suppose.

46,291. Did Mr. Joseph Richard Smith tell you so?—No, he did not.

46,292. Are you a great friend of Mr. Joseph Richard Smith's?—Well, not very great.

46,293. Do you manage any portion of his house property?—We do his work.

46,294. Of his property?—We do his work to the house property.

46,295. What work?—Carpentering work.

45,296. Then you have the management of the house and shops which he lets?—No, we go sometimes to work in the shops.

46,297. Ever anything about receiving rents or letting in a tenant?—No.

46,298. I do not understand your statement of it; it is a flat contradiction, as it seems to me, of the other.

C. Dyer.

CHARLES DYER sworn.

46,299. (Mr. Price.) What was it you said to Mr. Tilly about losing his shop if he voted?—I was in Mr. Tilly's shop; he kept a barber's shop.

46,300. When?—I cannot say the day of the month.

46,301. Before the last election?—Before the last election, and there was a conversation between people, the Conservatives there, and there was some of the Liberal party there, having a bit of a contest about it, and I went out to go home, and Humber was out of the passage door, and he said Tilly would get into a bother in that shop if he does not shut up some of that, and would have to leave his shop, that is all.

46,302. Did you say anything about it?—No, I told Tilly of it.

46,303. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that Humber who said that is all?—That is all I know.

46,304. Humber did not say that?—No, he told me if he kept on that bother.

46,305. Did Humber say, "That is all I know?"—I say that is all I do know of the concern. I told Tilly that he should say if he would not stop some of that bother in the shop he would have to leave the shop.

46,306. (Mr. Price.) You told Tilly what this fellow said to you merely?—Yes.

46,307. (Mr. Anstey.) And afterwards Humber told Tilley the same thing himself?—I do not know.

B. Crowden.

BENJAMIN CROWDEN sworn.

46,308. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

46,309. Who for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

46,310. What did you get?—Nothing at all.

46,311. Did you vote any time before?—No, that is the only vote I have had.

46,312. Did you get anything for your vote at all?—No.

J. Bell.

JOHN BELL sworn.

46,313. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

46,314. Who for?—Westropp and Gray.

46,315. What did you get?—Nothing.

46,316. Did you vote the time before?—No, that is the first time and the last.

46,317. You never voted before?—I never voted before.

46,318. And never had anything for your vote?—No; nor promised anything.

W. Thomas.

WILLIAM THOMAS sworn.

46,319. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

46,320. Who for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

46,321. Did you get anything?—Nothing.

46,322. Any promise?—No.

46,323. Did you vote before that?—No.

H. Harram.

HENRY BARTRAM sworn.

46,324. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the last election?—I never had a vote.

46,325. Did you have anything to do with the election?—I saw my name was mentioned when Searle was giving his evidence, as taking 10*l.* to give William Hicks.

46,326. Did you?—I did.

46,327. Which election?—That was Mr. Vanderbyl's first election.

46,328. That was for his vote?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Now I am going to record this public notice, which will be also posted on the outer door of the hall: "Notice is hereby given that the Com- "missioners will sit to-morrow (Saturday) the 16th, "at half-past 10, to consider the claims of persons "who have committed corrupt practices at the elec- "tion of 1868, and who wish to obtain certificates of "freedom from the consequences of their unlawful "acts. Application must be made in open court, "and will be then and there decided by the Com- "missioners." That is the business to which we intend to devote ourselves to-morrow, unless, under very special circumstances, anybody who has been called to-day can give an excuse why he was not here when called.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10.

46,505. Did you get anything?—Yes, I did.

46,506. How much?—I cannot tell.

46,507. About how much?—Well, it might be 8*l.* or 9*l.* or 10*l.*, as far as I know I had the same quantity as the rest.

46,508. Where did you get it?—At the "New Inn," at Eastover.

46,509. Did you vote in 1866?—I had no vote before the last election.

(Mr. Price.) Now, before I begin to give the certificates, I think it is right to give notice that although, as I said very early in this inquiry, we are quite amenable to comments on our conduct, yet it does not seem the sort of fairness that ought to be shown to persons who are discharging a disagreeable and perhaps invidious duty to increase the odium by putting expressions into our mouths which we have not used. We find persons who are not satisfied with doing that through the medium of the local papers have tried to get some of the London papers to insert their complaints as to language they say has been used. Now language has been used characterising the conduct of witnesses, and I think those who have been in court, and heard such disclosures as a man named Heal made could hardly be surprised at any honest man expressing his feelings in strong terms, therefore there is nothing to retract, and we should certainly express ourselves in the same way again, but it is quite contrary to the fact that we have frequently used towards witnesses the terms scoundrel or thief, or anything of that kind, it is utterly untrue, and unworthy of anybody to take the means I have alluded to of increasing the odium of our duties.

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not recollect their being used with regard to anybody, not even Heal, but I quite agree that Heal did leave the box a thoroughly disgraced man, and had no character to maintain, but it is an infamous falsehood to say that those are the specimens with which witnesses are frequently addressed. I do not believe anybody but Heal was so told.

The Commissioners then granted certificates to the following persons:—

James Cook.
Paul Octavius Haythorne Reed.
Joseph White.
Henry Chapman Bussell.
Henry Jarman.
Edward Culliford.
Andrew Allan.
William Robinson.
Robert Garratt.
William Hamson.
John Boucher.
F. C. Temblett.
Isaac Trapnell.
James Cording.
John Hellard.
James Podger.
George Stacey.
Thomas Dyer.
James Studley.
Francis William Rose.
John Hall.
Abraham Hawkins.
Francis Carver.
John Kitch.
Robert Jones Howe.
Benjamin Brewster Burton.
Richard Hooper.
William Dyke.
Charles Stone.
James Leaker.
Barnet Porter.
Eustace Barham (by J. H. B. Carslake).
Henry Guy.
William Crossman.
Philip Gilbert, the younger.
John Prior (by J. L. Sealy).
John Fackerell.
Carey Bailey Mogg.
James Trapnell.
Going Murray.
Dennis Heron.
Jonas Silke.
Walter Coles.
William Crocker.
Frederick Boys (by Andrew Allan).
Robert Walters. do.
William Dyment (by Thomas Collins).
Henry Fisher.
James Parker.
Joseph French (by Henry Hayward).
Edward Prior.
John Webber.
James Honeyball.

The following applied for their certificates, and were refused:

James Hayward, and
John Smith.

(Mr. Price.) There is one gentleman who has been very prominently brought before us throughout the whole of these proceedings, and who had an opportunity very early in the proceedings of disclosing fully and candidly all that he knew about the matter. We were sufficiently dissatisfied when he was giving his evidence, and see no reason whatever from anything which has taken place since, either from any statement he has made, or on looking carefully through the evidence, to alter the view we entertained then, and we have declined to examine him further; I mean Mr. Henry Lovibond. He has not applied for a certificate, and I conclude that he does not intend to apply for one; but think it right to give this public notice that we do not intend to grant him a certificate.

The time has now arrived until which we expressed our intention last night of sitting to grant certificates to those who required it. No one else applying now, if there are any other persons who wish certificates, they must make application to our secretary, and according to the view we take of their case, they will receive them or not receive them.

FORTY-FOURTH DAY.

16 Oct. 1869.

It is now our duty to adjourn this court. The Commission does not dissolve, because we have power, and intend to adjourn the inquiry to the 1st day of next term, the 2nd November at Westminster Hall, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and then, and on any subsequent days that it may appear necessary for us to receive evidence, to conclude this inquiry; but so far as our labours are concerned in this place, they are now at an end. We have had a very anxious and somewhat disagreeable duty to perform, and the inquiry has necessarily been a lengthened one, and not unnecessarily protracted for the purpose of satisfying the exigencies of the Commission under which we sit here.

Before we leave the town, we think it right to say that we feel ourselves indebted to the chief magistrate of the borough for the preparations which he has made for our reception, and for the accommodation which has been afforded to the gentlemen of the press, who are very necessary attendants on occasions of this kind, by granting us the use of this hall. We think, also, that our thanks are due very much indeed to Mr. Carslake, the town clerk of this borough, who has on every occasion when he has been applied to, shown the greatest readiness in giving us information, and has materially assisted us during the inquiry.

We think, also, it is our bounden duty to express our extreme satisfaction at the conduct of the police here, especially with that of Mr. Lear, the superintendent of police, and who has also had the care of this hall, whose attention to us during the whole of the inquiry has been constant, and everything that could be desired. With regard also to those under his control, though they are a small body, they have always been in attendance when required, and have endeavoured in every way to carry out our wishes with regard to the proceedings of the court, and they have on all occasions succeeded in doing so to our full satisfaction.

Under those circumstances, therefore, I now declare this Commission adjourned to Westminster Hall, on the 2nd November at 3 o'clock.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY.

Conference Room, House of Commons, 2nd November 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, ESQ., Q.C.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. W. E. Redfern.

2 Nov. 1869.

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARD REDFERN recalled.

46,510. (Mr. Price.) You told us at Bridgwater that you are a partner in the house of Fennelly, Redfern, and Vanderbyl?—Yes.

46,511. And then there is another house with which you are connected of Redfern, Alexander, and Co.; your house is Fennelly, Redfern, and Co., Mr. Vanderbyl representing the "Co."?—Yes.

46,512. We had from you information as to the mode in which a certain sum of money was arranged by a letter which you got before a certain telegram; you remember?—Yes.

46,513. Posted on the Sunday from Bridgwater and received by you on Monday morning, the Sunday before the nomination day at the last Bridgwater election?—Yes.

46,514. November 15th, I think, on Sunday, when it would be posted, and on the Monday you would receive it?—The 16th I think it was.

46,515. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you receive the letter or telegram first?—I think it is the letter first.

46,516. (Mr. Price.) "He sent you a letter before "the telegram?—Yes. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was "that?—The same morning, as far as I can recollect. "The same morning as the telegram came?—Yes. "Which came first?—The letter came first, I think. I "am not positive; they were almost both together. "(Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure that no arrange-"ment was made between you and Mr. Vanderbyl "that if he telegraphed you were to be prepared with "money?—Oh no; they both came nearly together." Then you told us the letter was destroyed?—Yes.

46,517. And you told us "bales" were to mean hundreds, and soon after the telegram came?—Yes.

40,518. Then you told us, I think, that in consequence of that you went to the bank and drew a cheque; took your clerk, Mr. Lomas, with you and got the cash, which was packed in a bag, and he took it with him. How was that cheque signed?—In the firm's name.

40,519. The cheque was signed in the name of the firm?—Yes.

40,520. Therefore of course the cheque was honoured out of the partnership money?—Yes.

40,521. The money of the firm?—Yes.

40,522. I think you told us it all came back except about 240*l.* or 250*l.*?—Yes.

46,523. Came back in money?—Yes.

46,524. And that you paid back again, I suppose, into the partnership account?—Yes.

46,525. When was the balance repaid to the partnership account?—Repaid? it has not been repaid at all.

46,526. That is still owing?—Yes; it has been debited in the account.

46,527. Who to?—To Mr. Vanderbyl first.

46,528. Have you your book here which will show us when that amount is debited?—Yes.

46,529. (Mr. Anstey.) You say it was debited to Mr. Vanderbyl first?—Yes.

46,530. (Mr. Price.) We will have first of all where does it show to be debited first, and then the alteration. What book is that?—This is the duplicate of the bank book. There it is (pointing to the item).

46,531. Under the date of November 18th. Then as it originally stood was "P. Vanderbyl, 825?"—Yes.

46,532. What does that figure mean?—That is the number on the cheque.

46,533. 240*l.*?—Yes.

46,534. That is erased?—Yes.

46,535. The words "P. Vanderbyl, 825," are erased?—Yes.

46,536. When was that done?—I do not recollect exactly when, but Mr. Fennelly erased them after he came back.

46,537. (Mr. Anstey.) From Bridgwater?—Yes.

46,538. When? This last time, or after the election?—After the election.

46,539. (Mr. Price.) What authority had Mr. Fennelly to do that?—I do not know; he did not tell me.

46,540. Did he mention it to you?—No, he merely said it was wrong, and altered it.

46,541. Did he ask you for the book?—Yes, the books are common to us all.

46,542. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who is the senior partner?—He is.

46,543. (Mr. Price.) He said, "This is entered wrong"?—Yes.

46,544. How is it that you had entered it "P. Vanderbyl 240*l.*"?—I imagined it was on his account.

46,545. Are all these entries in your handwriting?—Yes.

46,546. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you imagine it was on his account?—Because it was his election.

46,547. And you knew that the money was wanted for his election?—Yes.

46,548. There was never any intention of starting Mr. Fennelly at the election, was there?—No.

46,549. You say it was after he came back, do you mean immediately after he came back, or at a distance of some time after he came back that the alteration was made?—That I cannot be sure about.

46,550. I will give you the facts from which you can judge. You see the election took place in November, a petition was talked of in the same month, in the following month a petition is actually presented, in February it is tried, and in the same month Mr. Vanderbyl is unseated?—Yes.

46,551. First, was that alteration made after Mr. Vanderbyl was unseated in February, after the trial?—I cannot be positive.

46,552. (Mr. Price.) Will you look at it, and I will point out to you as it is obvious to anybody who looks at it that the "R. Fennelly" which is written over "P. Vanderbyl" is written in ink which is of a very different character in colour, and apparently at a different date, and in a different handwriting?—Yes, because Mr. Fennelly altered this himself.

46,553. It is apparently a different pen and everything?—That is his handwriting.

46,554. Will you undertake to say how soon it was done?—I could not say.

46,555. As near as you can?—I would not undertake to say.

46,556. Will you swear positively it has not been done since we sat at Bridgwater?—Oh, yes.

46,557. What?—Certainly.

46,558. When did you last see that book?—I see it every day.

46,559. With the erased entry?—I use this book every day.

46,560. Can you pledge yourself to when you observed first the alteration?—I will pledge myself it was before the Commission sat.

46,561. How soon before?—A considerable time.

46,562. Before Mr. Justice Blackburn sat down here?—That I do not know, but before the Commission I know.

46,563. (Mr. Anstey.) Refreshing your memory no doubt it would be talked of by your firm about the unseating of Mr. Vanderbyl. Mr. Justice Blackburn stated that he should append to his judgment such certificate as would probably make it the duty of Parliament to address Her Majesty for a commission of inquiry. As that was probably a subject of conversation with your firm you may be able to tell us whether it was after any conversation or rumour to that effect that Mr. Fennelly told you "This entry has been inaccurately made; give me the book and let me alter it"?—I could not say.

46,564. (Mr. Price.) Do try and recollect, because it is a very important matter. Were you subpœnaed as a witness before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—No.

46,565. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you see Mr. Fennelly after that?—I do not think I did. I do not remember it.

46,566. Did he say anything to you about the alteration at the time he did it?—Yes, he asked how I had entered it, and I told him, and he said, "That is wrong," and took the book away.

46,567. How long after the conversation did you see it altered?—I saw it immediately afterwards.

46,568. Then he altered it then and there?—Yes.

46,569. (Mr. Price.) Permit me to ask you, cannot you, if you look through these pages one after another, which are all of different dates, going down to the 28th January, and so on down to the time of the election in February, and then cover up the whole time from November down to February when Mr. Justice Blackburn sat down there; cannot you tell me whether the ink in which R. Fennelly's name is written above is not very much paler than any entry you have down to the end of February, when Mr. Justice Blackburn sat. Is there any ink you can point out, not the handwriting, which is at all the same in colour. You see the difference?—Yes, I observe that.

46,570. A very great difference is not there?—Yes,

46,571. A very great difference in the colour of the ink?—Yes. That might arise from one being copying ink. I sometimes use copying ink, and copying ink is much darker.

46,572. Are all your entries made in copying ink?—They may be; there is one there very light in my handwriting. (Referring to an item.)

46,573. (Mr. Anstey.) What date?—March.

46,574. (Mr. Price.) "Bills received" is exactly the same colour as "R. Fennelly," there is no doubt? Let me see again. I think that one looks rather lighter. (Referring to another item.)

46,575. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you a book keeper called Walter?—Yes.

46,576. Was he present on the occasion that alteration was made?—Yes, I think he was.

46,577. He is not here to-day?—No.

46,578. (Mr. Price.) I see other entries where Mr. Fennelly is debited, he is debited by you properly in your own handwriting. I see "R. Fennelly 10*l.*," in November?—Yes.

46,579. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you point out in that important portion of that book between the beginning of November and the end of February, any entry made that is not in your handwriting except that one which is introduced by way of amendment or alteration?—Not in my handwriting.

46,580. Yes, anyone not your writing?—That is not my writing there. (Referring to the book.)

45,581. (Mr. Anstey.) What date is that?—February 6th.

46,582. It is written between February 6th and 8th? three entries all one?—Yes.

46,583. In whose handwriting are those?—Those are Mr. Walter's.

46,584. (Mr. Price.) That is your cashier?—Yes.

46,585. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did Mr. Walters make those entries which appear consecutive and fair entries on those days; were you absent?—No; they look to me like corrections.

46,586. Being cashier, would it be his duty to make corrections in that book?—If he found a mistake; it would not be his duty exactly.

46,587. Is it the custom of gentlemen in business to keep their books as fair as possible; that is, clean and free from corrections in other handwriting, is it not?—Yes.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. W. E. Redfern.

2 Nov. 1869.

46,588. Then I ask you, is there a single case in which, to your knowledge or remembrance, Mr. Fennelly has, in his own handwriting, altered by cancellation or interpolation, an entry in the book not made by him?—No, I think not.

46,589. (Mr. Anstey.) Do each of you keep a book of that sort, or did it merely happen to be your duty?—I keep that book.

46,590. Mr. Fennelly does not keep a book like that?—No.

46,591. Nor Mr. Vanderbyl nor Mr. Walter?—No.

46,592. (Mr. Price.) This is a transcript of the bank pass book?—Yes.

46,593. It is headed "Consolidated Bank, Threadneedle Street"?—Yes.

45,594. And one side represents one side of the account, and the other the other?—Yes.

45,595. (Mr Coleridge.) That is the way you cheque your pass book in fact?—Yes.

45,596. (Mr. Anstey.) How often do you send for your pass book in order to transfer into your duplicate book the entries made since the last transfer?—How do we check it.

45,597. How often do you check it?—About once a fortnight or once a week?

46,598. Therefore it would be in any case at least a fortnight after that entry is made in the bank pass book before Mr. Fennelly would have had even an opportunity of making the correction?—Yes.

46,599. (Mr. Price.) Have you the pass book there?—Yes.

46,600. Turn to the date in the pass book of November 18th?—We do not keep this book; this is the bank book.

46,601. But your banker gives you your pass book every now and then to correct this by?

46,602. (Mr. Anstey.) He says once a fortnight.

(The witness.) It would not be altered in this book. There it is.

46,603. (Mr. Price.) "Vanderbyl, 240*l.*" That debits him with the balance?—Yes.

46,604. Now we want to see the large cheque you drew?—Here is the cheque (handing it in.)

46,605. When you draw a cheque for yourself it is merely the number of the cheque you put?—Yes.

46,606. It appears that the cheque is entered of the 18th, and this debt to Mr. Vanderbyl is to be the same day?—This cheque is the 16th.

46,607. Then account for that 18th; there are your debits, No. 820, 1,500*l.*?—I will tell how that was; Mr. Lomas came back on the 18th, and he brought this 1,500*l.* back all but 240*l.* I drew a cheque for this 240*l.* and got it cashed by the other firm.

46,608. (Mr. Anstey.) What other firm?—Redfern, Alexander, and Co. I did not wish the Consolidated Bank to know how much was gone out of it. I did not wish them to know anything about it, so the 1,500*l.* was paid back as is seems, and he was debited with the 240*l.* the difference.

46,609. Then explain that; the cheque for 1,500*l.* was cash by Mr. Redfern, and the money handed to Mr. Lomas?—Yes.

46,610. And then he brought back the whole sum minus 240*l.*?—Yes.

46,611. To make up the whole 1,500*l.* to repay the Consolidated Bank you draw a cheque for 240*l.* on Messrs. Redfern, Alexander, and Co.?—Yes.

46,612. Which you draw, Fennelly, Redfern, & Co., in the name of the house upon another bank?—Yes.

46,613. You make it payable to Philip Vanderbyl, Esquire?—Yes.

46,614. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are in both houses, and Mr. Vanderbyl is in only one?—No, I am in one, but he is in both.

46,615. Is Mr. Alexander in your house?—No, he is not.

46,616. (Mr. Price.) This is "Consolidated Bank, Threadneedle Street?"—Yes.

46,617. "Fennelly, Redfern, and Co." is the way you draw the 1,500*l.* cheque?—Yes.

46,618. And on the same bank you draw it?—Yes.

46,619. And the same firm?—Yes.

46,620. But you draw this other cheque first, "Pay "Selves & Co. 1,500*l.*" The second is drawn in your handwriting, "Pay Philip Vanderbyl, Esq., or "bearer 240*l.*?"—Yes.

46,621. Both drawn on the same bank?—Yes.

46,622. Then how would the Consolidated Bank know which account to debit it to by that cheque?—They debit it to our firm.

46,623. I thought you did not want them to know about the 1,500*l.* or any of it?—But then they would not; we paid them the 1,500*l.* before we got it from the other house.

46,624. (Mr. Anstey.) Got what from the other house?—240*l.*

46,625. No, this is the cheque for the 240*l.* drawn by you on the Consolidated Bank, and Alexander, Redfern, & Co. is the name on it.

46,626. (Mr. Price.) How does that show it is debited to the other firm?—But it is not debited to the other firm, they merely gave me the gold for this, and passed this cheque in as if it was their own.

46,627. Who?—Redfern, Alexander, & Co.

46,628. You took this cheque to Alexander & Co.?—Yes.

46,629. Where, at their place of business?—Yes.

46,630. Then you got 240*l.* from them?—From their cashier.

46,631. And you put that to the balance which Mr. Lomas had brought back from Bridgwater, and paid it all in to the credit of the firm Redfern, Vanderbyl and Co.?—Yes.

46,632. (Mr. Anstey.) What mode of payment did they give it to you in—gold or notes?—They gave me gold.

46,633. 240*l.* in sovereigns and half-sovereigns?—Yes.

46,634. I see this cheque is crossed to the National Bank; what is the meaning of that?—That is Redfern, Alexander, and Co.'s bank.

46,635. That is the bank as to which Mr. Vanderbyl was in question before the electors, and also before us with regard to the Lundy Island Granite Co.?—Yes.

46,636. (Mr. Price.) Then in point of fact it is perfectly right this cheque being drawn, "Pay Philip Vanderbyl, Esquire," the proper regular mode of doing it would be to enter it as you had entered it here, namely, that it was a cheque drawn in favour of Philip Vanderbyl, Esquire, for 240*l.*?—Yes.

46,637. Cashed by the firm to which he belonged, and to which the whole of the rest of your firm do not belong?—Yes.

46,638. You follow me?—Yes.

46,639. Therefore the proper legitimate mode of doing the thing was to debit Mr. Vanderbyl with it in these books?—Yes.

46,640. Therefore it was altogether an irregular transaction, as one firm had given you the cash for this cheque, and the other had been drawn on a different firm altogether, for Mr. Fennelly to come afterwards, and in this book which represents a different firm from what the cheque does, to alter that to "Fennelly," Esquire, instead of "Philip Vanderbyl, Esquire"?—Yes.

46,641. We will hand those cheques to our secretary; have you any other explanation to give with regard to that entry, upon further recollection?—I do not think I have anything further to say about it.

46,642. (Mr. Anstey.) You know nothing further than what you have told us?—No.

46,643. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often does Mr. Vanderbyl himself go through the books of your firm?—Never.

46,644. How often does he examine them?—Never.

46,645. When you strike the profits at the end of the year, does not he?—Not since I have been there; he has never looked at them.

46,646. He has never looked at the books?—No.

46,647. Do you mean that he has never seen any of these entries?—No, never looked at them,

46,648. When was it brought to his knowledge that 240*l.* had been debited to him?—I do not know.

46,649. When did you first bring it to his knowledge?—I do not think I saw him at all about it.

46,650. Who did?—I do not know; he never interferes in the things there.

46,651. Did he ever speak to you about it?—No.

46,652. Has he ever repaid that 240*l.*?—No; it has been debited to his account.

46,653. And deducted from his share of the profits?—Yes.

46,654. Then he has really paid it?—Yes.

46,655. Mr. Vanderbyl has?—No, Mr. Fennelly has.

46,656. (Mr. Price.) Have the profits been struck since that time—the half-year's profits?—Yes, they have.

46,657. Has that 240*l.* been deducted in taking into account Mr. Fennelly's share of the profits—deducted from his share?—Yes, deducted from his share; it has been repaid to the firm by Mr. Fennelly.

46,658. (Mr. Anstey.) When was it repaid to them?—It has been debited—when he made that alteration.

46,659. (Mr. Price.) Hardly so, because, if your recollection is accurate, you seem to think it was soon after the election?—Yes, I think it was.

46,660. If so, to Christmas 1868 the deduction would be made then?—Yes.

46,661. Have you any document to show us whether the deduction was made at the division of profits in 1868, or whether it has been made at your half-yearly profits in June 1869?—I will look.

46,662. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have not you some private letter which will explain all these matters?—No, none.

46,663. None from Mr. Fennelly or Mr. Vanderbyl?—No; in what way do you mean? I have not heard from them at all.

46,664. Have you a ledger that will show it?—Yes.

46,665. That is a private ledger?—Yes, there is the 245*l.* here.

46,666. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what this book is?—That is a private ledger.

46,667. (Mr. Anstey.) Of the firm?—There are the individual partners; these are private accounts.

46,668. With the firm?—Yes.

46,669. (Mr. Price.) 121, is that the number of the cheque, or what does that refer to?—That refers to the folio in the journal.

46,670. Look at that, "November 18th, cash 245*l.*," and tell me whether that cash, November 18th, 245*l.*, has not been put in after the other entries. November 9th is on the ruled line, and all the other entries, but the 18th is not; how do you account for that fact that, "to cash, 245*l.*," is put down there November 18th, out of its date, not on a ruled line at all?—It looks like a subsequent entry.

46,671. Whose handwriting is it in?—Mr. Walter's, the book-keeper.

46,672. (Mr. Anstey.) Whose is Novr. 9th?—The same handwriting.

46,673. (Mr. Price.) That is an irregular entry, then?—It appears so.

46,674. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know any other instance of an account being kept in that way, entries made out of date, and by interpolation in the manner that appears to have been?—Not usual, unless there has been a mistake.

46,675. Would you correct one mistake by committing another, that is, by inserting entries out of their proper date, the 18th before the 9th November?—No.

46,676. It looks therefore as if it had been done in haste, does not it?—Yes, it does.

46,677. Have you any doubt it was done in haste?—I do not know. I do not know how it was done. I have nothing to do with the book at all.

46,678. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Walter must explain about this 245*l.* It appears by this transcript of your pass book the 240*l.* is under date the 18th November, but it appears immediately under that as it originally stood before Mr. Fennelly had put his pen through, "P. Vanderbyl, 240*l.*;" you had yourself written "Ditto," which would be P. Vanderbyl, "5*l.*" In this book (the ledger) we find this irregular entry of 245*l.*; that must mean apparently the same transaction?—The same transaction.

46,679. What that 5*l.* is you cannot tell?—I think I remember when we took the money to the bank to pay it in there was 5*l.* short. We made some mistake in counting the money out. I think that is how it arose.

46,680. (Mr. Anstey.) Then Mr. Fennelly did not correct that 5*l.*?—I have not looked.

46,681. (Mr. Price.) He corrected it by making the irregular debit to himself, 245*l.*?—Yes.

46,682. (Mr. Anstey.) You have in that private account of Mr. Fennelly with your firm, a reference to which the learned Chief Commissioner directed your attention to page 121 of some journal. I should like to see the entry at page 121 of the journal to which that refers?—I have not that here.

46,683. Were not you told to bring the books?—I thought these would be sufficient.

46,684. Read your subpœna. It is not only books, "all papers?"—Here it is.

46,685. I will give you the words—not only all books, but all papers and writings. I should like to see, as no doubt my colleagues would, every scrap of paper relating to this transaction?—I thought this would be sufficient.

(Mr. Price.) You must not exercise any discretion. The consequence of it will be that on Saturday you must bring us the journal. You will see there is another irregularity, November 18th refers to 125, whatever book it is, and Novr. 9th to 120.

46,686. (Mr. Anstey.) Looking at all these transactions together, the debiting out of profits, and deducting out of profits, these questionable sums in the case of Mr. Fennelly, have you any doubt whatever now as to the exact period the alteration was made in the first book you showed us?—I cannot recollect the certain time.

46,687. I will call your attention to this: You were not certain before whether it was not after the trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn had taken place, and after it had been the subject of conversation with your firm, that there was sure to be a motion for an address. You afterwards told the Chief Commissioner that the arrangement by which Mr. Fennelly was debited with these sums must have been at the time when the alteration was made by him in the book, about the same time as that?—Yes.

46,688. On the former occasion you stated that Mr. Fennelly was debited with the expenses that were incurred by his own going away, and sending Lomas out of the way so as to avoid the exigencies of the subpœna, on which they certainly would otherwise have had to appear before Mr. Justice Blackburn. Now, have you any doubt whatever that the period at which Mr. Fennelly was debited with his own expenses and Lomas' expenses was also the period at which he was debited with the 245*l.*, and had to submit to the deduction out of his share of the profits. Have you any doubt that these were deductions made at the same time?—I do not recollect; I cannot remember.

46,689. But you can recollect positively whether there were two deductions made; that is, the first for the 245*l.*, and afterwards for the undefined sum expended on Lomas. Can you tell me that?—Some of those were at different times, and not all at the same time. I think I made some mistake. I think I found afterwards when he was away he drew upon us.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. W. E. Redfern.

2 Nov. 1869.

46,690. I am not talking of that; I am talking of the time when the sum total of the disbursements about Mr. Lomas and Mr. Fennelly himself being ascertained, you, as partner, said you certainly should not pay—you did not think it had yet been settled, you should not certainly pay Lomas' expenses. This is on the 4th September last. Down to that time, the 4th September, the amount to be deducted from Mr. Fennelly's share of the profits in respect of Mr. Lomas' expenses had not been ascertained, as you said?—Yes.

46,691. I will read to you what you said. Mr. Coleridge asks, "Were Lomas' expenses debited to "the firm or Mr. Fennelly privately?—To himself, I "think. He is not expected to pay them?—No. "Who is?—I do not think it has yet been settled. I "shall not, certainly. Then you, as a member of the "firm, will not consent to pay his expenses as part of "the expenses of the firm?—No." Now, I take you to the 4th September last. By the 4th September last had Mr. Fennelly been charged in the account of his share of the profits of the firm with the sum of 245*l.*?—Yes, he had been charged then, before that.

46,692. How long before that, because he had not been charged then in respect of the disbursements to enable Lomas to escape being examined. How long before that?—Oh, some time before that.

46,693. Do you mean a few weeks?—I should think some months before that.

46,694. At what period of the year do you ascertain, and, if there are profits to pay, divide them amongst yourselves?—At the end of the year.

46,695. When does the year begin?—The 1st January.

46,696. It is the natural year?—Yes.

46,697. Had that dividing of profits been done in 1868?—Yes.

46,698. What day had they been divided on?—The last day of December.

46,699. That would appear in some book?—Yes.

46,700. It would appear in that book also whether at that date Mr. Fennelly had been charged with the 245*l.*?—Yes.

46,701. Or whether Mr. Vanderbyl had been so charged?—Yes.

46,702. Where is that book?—This ought to show it (the private ledger). This is the entry, but it is not in the proper place. That is the entry, and it is introduced in 1868.

46,703. Surely there would be a corresponding alteration made in the result. Where is the result?—This is the result.

46,704. (Mr. Price.) This ought to show the result of those figures?—Yes.

46,705. When the balance is struck, that 245*l.* is taken into account?—When the balance is struck, December 31st; yes.

46,706. Then according to that the alteration must have been made?—Yes, before Christmas.

46,707. Then that enables you to say now the alteration must have been made very soon after Mr. Fennelly came back from the Bridgwater election?—Yes.

46,708. (Mr. Coleridge.) And before he went away?—Yes.

46,709. (Mr. Anstey.) You have looked at that, and is the result right?—Yes.

46,710. The last item, however, in the number of items which led to that result is one which I should like you to read out—the balance?—3729*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

46,711. Keep your eye on those figures. Have not they been altered, not by cancellation but erased with a sharp instrument, and possibly so as to bring the entire result in conformity with the sum total which appears as the last result at the end?—It does look like that, certainly.

46,712. (Mr. Price.) What does that 3,000*l.* and odd represent?—That represents the amount carried forward to his capital account.

46,713. (Mr. Anstey.) The balance carried forward to his capital account?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) It would be a much larger balance, supposing the 245*l.* to be debited.

46,714. (Mr. Anstey.) For the sake of the supposition, supposing the balance appearing there originally stood 3,729*l.* plus this identical sum of 245*l.*, and then a penknife had been used to remove it and substitute a sum minus the 245*l.*, and then the sum of 245*l.* had been transferred out of its order of date in the way we have already pointed out, in that case the general result would be the same, and there would be no occasion for any alteration in the general result at the foot of the figures?—No.

46,715. Who can tell us whether that case supposed by me has actually occurred?—Mr. Walter.

46,716. Nobody else?—I do not think so.

46,717. (Mr. Price.) He can tell us whether he erased that?—Yes.

46,718. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who keeps a key of that book besides yourself?—Mr. Walter does. I do not keep that key; Mr. Walter does.

46,719. Mr. Fennelly?—I think not; he can ask for it.

46,720. (Mr. Anstey.) The third of those four figures representing the balance was originally a figure with a tail and not figure 2 at all. You will see it appears under it just where the red ink line has been restored. You will see the remains of the tail of that figure 7 or 9. That is so?—Yes.

46,721. Supposing it was 245*l.* deducted that would make the very thing; that would be a figure 7, because it would then make 3,974. Have you any doubt whatever that that hypothesis of mine is a very probable one; I do not say certain. If you add 245*l.* mentally to that amount you will see 3,974*l.*; the third being a tailed figure instead of a 2?—Yes.

46,722. (Mr. Price.) Can you show us in that book Mr. Vanderbyl's private account before there was any question of that kind. You see that was originally totted up exclusively of the 245*l.* if my colleague's suggestion is right; consequently Mr. Vanderbyl's if made at that same time, ought to show the 245*l.* debited to him?—Yes.

46,723. Turn to the corresponding part of his book and see whether there is any alteration made there reducing his debit in the same way Mr. Fennelly seems to have added to his own?—Yes, it is debited to him there.

46,724. It is 245*l.* cancelled; originally under date November 18th. Mr. Vanderbyl, in comparison with the bank book, was debited with the two sums of 240*l.* and 5*l.*?—Yes.

46,725. Therefore his balance of profit would have been calculated upon that footing if it remained so?—Yes.

46,726. That has been taken out; therefore he gets the benefit of that erasure, and Mr. Fennelly takes it?—Yes.

46,727. That must have been done therefore by some one who took that book after it had been regularly made up in the proper way in your office?—Yes.

46,728. And after being properly made up, it would have shown the proper proportion of each partner in December 1868, because it seems made consecutively up to that time, and it has been altered in those two respects?—Yes.

46,729. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whose absolute custody is that book kept in?—The book-keepers and partners.

46,730. If you wanted it who should you ask for it; the book-keeper?—Yes, or take it out of the safe.

46,731. It would be in the strong box, locked up?—Yes.

46,732. Which you have each a key of?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) There is here no doubt about it; all the four figures have been altered here as they necessarily would have been altered here. It is done more carefully than the other; the tint of the writing is done more artistically than the other, but it is apparent, holding it to a strong light.

46,733. (Mr. Coleridge.) And the alteration is in Walter's handwriting. If it was any other clerk we must have him ?—It could not be any other clerk.

46,734. (Mr. Anstey.) Why not ?—No other clerk has access to it.

46,735. But Mr. Fennelly made with his own hand an alteration in the other book ?—Yes ; he is not a clerk.

46,736. Therefore it might have been a partner ?—Yes ; but I was asked as to clerks.

46,737. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whose writing is that in ?—Walter's.

46,738. (Mr. Anstey.) From whom does Mr. Walter receive his directions touching so important a matter as the alteration of entries once made in books of this kind ?—One of the partners.

46,739. Which one of them ?—Any one of them.

46,740. Therefore he may have from you ?—But he did not.

46,741. (Mr. Price.) You never did ? — I never did.

46,472. (Mr. Coleridge.) And Mr. Vanderbyl never comes into the place at all ?—No.

46,743. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure Mr. Vanderbyl did not ?—Mr. Vanderbyl did not.

46,744. Did not you answer Mr. Coleridge rather hastily just now, when you said Mr. Vanderbyl does not come there at all ?—Never on business matters.

46,745. Did not you mean to say, as a general rule he does not come in ?—I mean if he comes in it is only by accident.

46,746. You do not mean to pledge your oath to the fact that there being this very unusual transaction you have spoken of, as to which you have already said all the preceding evidence, Mr. Vanderbyl may not by accident have so far deviated from his usual practice as to come into the house without your knowing it on some occasion when you were not there ?—Well, he certainly might ; it is possible, but I do not think it.

46,747. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Vanderbyl had some capital in the concern, I suppose ?—Yes.

46,748. Would not he having capital take the trouble at the close of the year, when it came to a question of division of profits, to go through the books to satisfy himself about the thing ?—No, he never does ; and my father, who is in Redfern, Alexander, and Company, never saw the books in his life, and never will ; he never goes near the place.

46,749. (Mr. Coleridge.) But if he came in and said, "Mr. Walter, give me the key," he would have done so, the same as to you, and if he had told him to make that alteration he would have done it as much as for you or Mr. Fennelly ?—Yes, but he would have told us about it ; he would have told one of us.

46,750. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said that for some reason or other no conversation ever passed between you and Mr. Vanderbyl about this election or its expense ?—No ; I say Mr. Walter would have told us.

46,751. You still remain under the impression that you never had any conversation whatever with Mr. Vanderbyl on this subject ?—Yes.

46,752. By "this subject" I mean on the election, or the expenses of his election ?—Yes.

46,753. With Mr. Fennelly you have ?—Yes.

46,754. When Mr. Fennelly told you that this entry you had made was wrong, whereby Mr. Vanderbyl and not he was debited, just give me as near as you can recollect all that you said ; how did the conversation begin ?—He asked me who I had debited that amount to.

46,755. What amount ?—The 240*l.*, that is how it began. "By the by, who did you debit that amount to ? "

46,756. You must have had some previous conversation, or you could not have understood what he meant by "that amount." I presume you were talking of the election ?—Well, I may have specified the amount.

46,757. Knowing that he came to you to ask about this money ?—Yes.

46,758. And then you or he began the conversation ?—He began.

46,759. By talking about the election ?—I suppose he did.

46,760. You must in order to identify the particular sum ?—Yes.

46,761. How did he describe that 245*l.* ; what did he say it was ?—He mentioned it merely as the amount. He said that amount that was deficient who had I debited the deficiency to.

46,762. The deficiency in the sum ?—Yes.

46,763. What sum ?—The 1,500*l.*

46,764. Sent to Bridgwater ?—Yes ; and I said, "To Mr. Vanderbyl." He said, "That is wrong, I must alter it."

46,765. Did he tell you why it was wrong ?—No, nothing about it.

46,766. Did he not tell you it would not be safe to debit it to Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No.

46,767. Nor that it was Mr. Vanderbyl's wish ?—No.

46,768. Nor his own ?—No ; merely wrong.

46,769. What did you say ?—I made no remark.

46,770. Did you say it was done in the course of business ?—No.

46,771. You made no objection ?—No, no remark.

46,772. Would you have acquiesced so readily if he had taken the matter out of your hands, with reference to a transaction not connected with the election of 1868 ?—Yes, he has a right to do what he likes with his own. He may debit himself with what he pleases. I should not make objection to his debiting himself with anything.

46,773. Would not you make objection to destroying the fairness and cleanliness of your books unless there was some good reason for it ?—No, I should not object ; it is his own money and he can do what he likes with it. There is no rule——

46,774. I am speaking of the book ? — That is nothing.

46,775. Is it nothing. I thought that men of business prided themselves on having their books as clean and undefaced as possible ?—Private men of business are only accountable to themselves ; men in public offices do.

46,776. But what you call men in private business, large firms, &c., is it not the fact that they pride themselves upon that ?—You will see several there.

46,777. I will ask you to point out some occurring between the end of November and the end of February ?—Any alteration of any sort ?

46,778. The same kind as this,—alterations whereby a debtor appears a creditor, and a creditor a debtor, for it amounts to that ?—Yes ; but, you understand, a sum of money is drawn out by either of the partners—

46,779. Can you find such an entry ? Explain it afterwards ?—I do not suppose I could.

46,780. Now make any explanation you like ?—I mean to say there is no rule in our deed of partnership as to what money should be drawn out, but any partner having money besides what is required to be kept in business may do what he likes with it ; draw it out, or anything else.

46,781. (Mr. Coleridge.) If he leaves it there does he get interest on it ?—Yes ; but he is at perfect liberty to do what he pleases with it—to draw it out ; and supposing Mr. Vanderbyl drew out for Mr. Fennelly, or Mr. Fennelly for Mr. Vanderbyl, I should not interfere with the person to whose debit it was placed, so long as it was not mine or the firm's.

46,782. (Mr. Price.) The way it stands now is, Mr. Vanderbyl loses nothing by the expenditure of his election so far as the debiting his account goes ?—In our firm, no.

46,783. Not a farthing ?—No.

46,784. He gets his election and expenditure so far as he is concerned for nothing ?—Yes.

46,785. And Mr. Fennelly having got nothing, and not being returned as a member of Parliament, is the loser by Mr. Vanderbyl's election to the tune of 240*l.* ?—Yes.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. W. E. Redfern.

2 Nov. 1869.

46,786. That is how it stands now?—Yes.

46,787. (Mr. Coleridge.) He is a loser on the face of it?—Yes.

46,788. (Mr. Price.) As it stands on your books, Mr. Vanderbyl, who got the benefit of the election, loses nothing; and Mr. Fennelly, who certainly got nothing, loses that amount?—Yes; that is no business of mine.

46,789. We only want an explanation?—But you seem to think I should object to Mr. Fennelly debiting himself with that 240*l.*; it has nothing to do with me.

46,790. We do not object to anything you have done; you stand perfectly passively by. We only ask whether it is the result of the two partners Mr. Vanderbyl stands the contest and loses nothing, and Mr. Fennelly, who does not stand the contest, loses 240*l.*?—Yes, certainly.

46,791. (Mr. Anstey.) To make this quite complete; show me the entry in Mr. Vanderbyl's account first, the entry with the firm whereby it appears he charged and had allowed interest upon this 245*l.*, and secondly, the entry in Mr. Fennelly's account whereby it would appear that he had received no interest, and had been allowed no interest whatever on that sum. Turn to those items, which you will find in both of the accounts marked interest; show it first, and explain afterwards. First of all, show me the item of interest of Mr. Vanderbyl?—There is interest there (referring.)

46,792. Read it out.—"December 31st. By interest 220*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*"

46,793. On what sum is that calculated?—On this sum here, 10,499*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*

46,794. Does that include the 245*l.*, or is that interest calculated on what the balance appears to be before the alteration was made? You can make that calculation in pen and ink, if you like?—I am afraid it would take too long a time, because there is a good deal of calculation about it; because there are different amounts here he has paid at different times.

46,795. Do you think you will be able by Saturday next, when you will come again, to tell us whether that sum appearing there for interest due to him on the 31st of December was calculated upon a principal or a capital sum, including or excluding the 245*l.*, because, of course, that would have a material effect in determining the date of the alteration? Will you be able to do that?—Well, I will see.

46,796. Turn to Mr. Fennelly's account, and see whether any alteration was made in the sum allowed to him for interest; whether the converse alteration was made by reducing the amount due to him for interest by the sum which 245*l.* would produce. Read out the amount appearing there due to Mr. Fennelly for interest.—"December 31st. By interest 95*l.* 7*s.*"

46,797. What rate of interest do you allow to each other?—Five per cent. on capital.

46,798. Five per cent. per annum?—Yes.

46,799. Of course the charge would be in those two cases of Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl from the 18th of November?—Yes.

46,800. A pro rata charge?—Yes.

46,801. And that would be very easily calculated?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Perhaps you will do that for us by next Saturday, and then Mr. Walter will be summoned probably, and bring the ledgers and any other books you have. Of course you understand that between this and your further examination no alteration must be made in any of those books, or any book of any kind.

46,802. (Mr. Anstey.) You must not part with that out of your sight to any person for fear any other person will make alterations?—There will be no alterations made.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

Mr. Henry Lovibond presented himself.

(The witness.) Having attended this court from time to time, and given my evidence in pursuance of a subpœna from Her Majesty's Commissioners, I respectively ask them to grant me a certificate protecting me from civil and criminal proceedings.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Lovibond, you did not present yourself to us at Bridgwater, and we thought it right at that time, not intending to say anything disrespectful as to your not presenting yourself, but remarking upon your absence; but we thought it right to state in open court there that we had very deliberately come to the conclusion that you were not entitled to have a certificate. It is a very painful thing to be obliged to say so, and we still remain of the same opinion, and I can only give you the answer now which I should have given you if you had applied at Bridgwater, that we are not prepared to give you a certificate.

Mr. Fennelly.

Mr. Fennelly recalled.

(The witness.) I have a few remarks to make.

(Mr. Price.) We cannot possibly hear you. It is impossible to hear anybody, except a person who is summoned as a witness, who is on oath, and sworn to tell the truth. You have not been sworn, therefore it is quite impossible for us to hear you. We gave you to understand at Bridgwater that we did not intend to examine you. At the same time, I think, if I am right, we gave you to understand you might make any statement you liked, which would be at your own peril, but you declined to make any statement there.

(Mr. Fennelly.) You told me at the time before the Commission broke up I had permission to do so.

(Mr. Price.) Yes, at your own peril. You never wished to take advantage of the permission we gave you at Bridgwater. As a matter of convenience now, seeing the period of time we have arrived at, we think at all events we could not hear you to-day.

(Mr. Fennelly.) Let me tell you I do not want to make a statement of facts that occurred, but to address a few words to the Commissioners with regard to myself.

(Mr. Price.) That we cannot hear. We might be called upon to hear everybody's appeals, as it were, in that way to us. We are obliged to exercise our best judgment on the matters as they arise before us, and give our judgment upon them. We came to the conclusion that it was not our duty to examine you, and we told you at the same time if you liked to make a statement you might do so at your own peril, and it would be taken as a statement made not under the sanction of an oath. You declined to do that, and we also told you that you might do it any time before we broke up the Commission; therefore, if you are prepared to make a statement with regard to facts which have occurred in the course of the election, you are at liberty to do so within the same limit, and under the same conditions I have already expressed about it, but if you are merely about to make an appeal to us in any way whatever in regard to your own position we must decline to hear it. This is not a tribunal for that purpose at all. Our tribunal is constituted for a totally different purpose, to inquire into different matters, and to report upon the evidence given before us. We are not a tribunal for the purpose of trying persons, or for the purpose of judging what ought to be their position with regard to the report when it comes to be made, in any way whatever.

(Mr. Fennelly. What I have to say is as to facts which affect your report.

(Mr. Coleridge.) If you will hand them in to the secretary he will look at them.

(Mr. Anstey.) I feel if I were to listen to or read anything containing argumentative matter I should be usurping a province which does not belong to me. I feel so strongly that that at my own risk I would leave the court rather than allow any person not on oath to bring anything whatever before us, whether under colour of a statement or not, which embodied matter of argument, or the advocacy either of his own case or another's.

(Mr. Fennelly.) It is matter of fact.

(Mr. Price.) If matter of fact that is another matter, but if merely matter of appeal we cannot possibly hear it. It would be very wrong for us to be swayed in our report by any appeal, and we shall endeavour to make a report founded entirely on facts sworn to.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY.
Mr. Fennelly.
2 Nov. 1869.

Adjourned to Saturday the 6th of November at 11 o'clock.

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

Tea Room, House of Commons, 6th November 1869.

PRESENT:
EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.
Mr. H. Broadwood.
6 Nov. 1869.

Mr. HENRY BROADWOOD sworn.

46,803. (Mr. Price.) You were a candidate for Bridgwater some years ago?—A good many years ago.

46,804. I have the list of the elections, and it appears by the list which we have of the elections that you came for the first time as candidate on January 5th, 1835, when you stood with Mr. Mountjoy Martin?—That was so.

46,805. At that same election the old Mr. Tynte, now dead, and Mr. Temple Leader were your opponents?—They were.

46,806. And I believe the election resulted in Mr. Tynte and Mr. Leader being elected?—Quite so.

46,807. What we want to know from you is, what amount was spent by you at that election, or on your behalf?—I can safely say that I do not know the amount that was expended at that election.

46,808. Give us it as near as you can?—It is merely a matter of opinion now, at this distance of time; it being 35 years ago, I cannot be expected to recollect anything not of great importance, but I was with Mr. Martin in that business, and I think as far as I can recollect that my expenses at that time were something under 2,000*l.*; I think so.

46,809. You were a stranger to Bridgwater, were not you?—I was so entirely. I think it was under 2,000*l.*; I will not answer for it.

46,810. Is Mr. Martin alive?—Yes, certainly; it is Colonel Mountjoy Martin.

46,811. Can you tell us what his expenditure was?—No, I did not ask him that.

46,812. Did you join?—We were joined together.

46,813. Did you divide the expenses between you?—I do not recollect anything about the expenses of the election, more than I think it cost me something about 2,000*l.* I do not recollect.

46,814. Who was the means of introducing you to the borough?—The late speaker, Lord Canterbury. I was dining with him at his house at this very place, and he recommended me to go to Bridgwater. A deputation came to me, and Mr. Martin was there at the same time, I think, but a deputation came to me of some of the gentlemen there.

46,815. You both went down together, then?—We both went together.

46,816. How long were you at Bridgwater before the election?—I can hardly say; perhaps a few days only, I think.

46,817. Who were your agents? Had you the same agent; you and Colonel Martin?—I cannot recollect the name of the agent down there at Bridgwater.

46,818. (Mr. Anstey.) Did the same agents act for both?—Well, I think they did.

46,819. It was a joint canvass?—Yes.

46,820. (Mr. Price.) Was it Mr. Smith who was your agent?—I had no one of the name of Smith who was an agent.

46,821. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Trevor, perhaps?—Old Mr. Trevor was dead.

46,822. The sons?—The sons I think were not agents; I think they were too young at that time.

46,823. Mr. Symes?—Symes was one.

46,824. Or was he the other side?—No. I think he is dead,

46,825. Mr. James Ford?—No; he was a Liberal.

46,826. Mr. Ruddock, perhaps?—Yes, I think so. I do not know whether he was one; he is a friend of our side.

46,827. I think he said so?—Yes, I think he was.

46,828. (Mr. Price.) Now I will take you to the next election. 2,000*l.* is as near as you can say?—I think so.

46,829. You have no documents?—Nothing in the world to show for anything. Now, with regard to all the other elections, they are all mixed up in my mind.

46,830. Perhaps you can tell how much you spent in Bridgwater altogether?—No, I cannot.

46,831. Within a thousand pounds?—No; but I can tell you my impression as to the amount of each election. I mean, I put them all together, and think they generally come to something about 2,000*l.* each, with the exception of one.

46,832. (Mr. Coleridge.) That of Leader was more, was not it?—No, it was not more—less, I think, than any other. I mean, Mr. Leader was supposed to spend a very large sum of money, and I believe he did, because he came very late into the town; and although I had an immense number of promises—we know what promises are—a good many of them left me, and he beat me by eight votes.

46,833. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember a saying current, or said to be current at that contest, Leader's fifties would prevail over your forties?—I do not recollect that, but there were a great many stupid things, and that is one of the most stupid.

46,834. (Mr. Price.) In 1837 you were again a candidate; that was a contest between one and one, when Mr. Richard Brinsley Sheridan was your opponent?—I daresay it may have been. I do not know.

46,835. The fact is that Mr. Leader retired?—He retired.

46,836. To contest Westminster?—To contest Westminster.

46,837. With Sir Francis Burdett?—Yes.

46,838. Then there was a single election. At that time we are told you were a candidate, and Mr. Sheridan was against you, and you were returned?—Yes, that is so.

46,839. Can you give any idea of the money that was spent at that election?—No, I cannot give you an idea of the money spent at that election. I should think it might have been the same sum, about 2,000*l.*, or perhaps a little more, 2,500*l.* perhaps. I do not know at that election, because I was single there.

46,840. It was probably more expensive, because you were fighting single-handed?—I think that was the most expensive election I had.

46,841. Do you think it cost as much as 3,000*l.*?—No; no election of mine ever came to 3,000*l.*

46,842. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were your agents at that second contest, the first in 1837?—I cannot recollect. I should think they were the same people. I do not recollect much about it.

46,843. There was a petition presented against your return by Mr. Sheridan?—There was one, but it was dropped—never gone on with.

46,844. Did not you write a letter to the Speaker on the contrary, that it was not your intention to defend your seat?—No, I think not.

46,845. It was before the death of William the Fourth?—I do not recollect anything of the sort.

46,846. I will put it to you in this way. You were elected in May; the petition was presented in May; the first week in June is the letter which is printed in the journals and read by the Speaker the day after or two days after its date, in which you say, "Sir, I have to inform you it is not my intention to defend my return;" and then the further proceedings on the petition put off, as usual, to a later day, and then in the meantime the King suddenly dies, and then after the death of the King some electors come forward with a petition, stating that they mean to defend the return themselves. They hear the day is granted, and before that day arrives a dissolution takes place?—All that is perfectly new to me. I have not the slightest idea of the sort, but I daresay you are perfectly correct.

46,847. We have the letter?—I daresay it is so, but I have not the slightest recollection of it.

46,848. (Mr. Price.) Now I call your attention to the next election, which followed so close, which shows that my learned colleague's account of it must be correct. The election I am speaking of now was May 16th, 1837. Then on July 26th, in the same year, it appears that another election took place, and yourself and Courtenay were candidates on the Tory side, and Sir Thomas Lethbridge and the same Mr. Sheridan were candidates on the Liberal side. Do you recollect that?—I recollect they were candidates.

46,849. And you and Sir Thomas Lethbridge were returned?—No.

46,850. Then it must have been you and Mr. Courtenay?—Yes, myself and Mr. Courtenay were returned.

46,851. If you please tell us whether, between the two elections on May 16th and July 26th, besides what you paid for your expenses at the contest, did you pay anything in the interval in any shape or way in the borough for charities, or, as we have heard it called nursing the borough?—I do not recollect anything of the sort; it is just possible that some subscriptions may have been; I do not know it. I will not swear to it.

46,852. Did you leave those matters to your local agent?—I think the local agents had to do what they thought right about it.

46,853. What money was spent at that election? We know the majority for Mr. Courtenay at that election was very large indeed, and some of the constituency there had begged Sir Thomas Lethbridge to stand, having presented a requisition to him, and that he had few votes, while your number of votes came to about the same number as those who signed the requisition to Sir Thomas Lethbridge?—I daresay it was so.

46,854. They did it for the sake of money, I suppose. What was spent by Mr. Courtenay and yourself?—Less at that election than any other.

46,855. How much?—It was a very small sum of money, comparatively.

46,856. One thousand pounds?—Less than 1,000*l.*, because I recollect at the time it cost Mr. Courtenay a very small sum indeed, and it cost me a very small sum also; but it coming so suddenly upon the last election, and at the last election I had a great many friends in the town——

46,857. You concluded that what you had spent in May enured to your benefit in July?—Probably.

46,858. (Mr. Anstey.) You are speaking now entirely from recollection, not from any notes?—Yes, from recollection, not from notes.

46,859. You are aware that a petition was presented against your return and Mr. Courtenay's return; two petitions in fact charging very extensive bribery, and treating, and so forth?—Yes.

46,860. And that it appeared that some, if not all of the requisitionists, who tempted Sir Thomas Lethbridge to come forward and stand for the borough actually recorded their votes for you and Mr. Courtenay?—Very likely; I do not recollect it.

46,861. You will not, I suppose, undertake to say that a good deal of money was not spent, though you yourself do not remember you were personally charged with it?—I cannot conceive who spent any money for me. I had no friends to come forward and spend any money for me.

46,862. (Mr. Price.) It is necessary that we should ask you whether the money that you spent at each of these contests was your own money?—Yes, certainly.

46,863. (Mr. Anstey.) There was an election petition, and two petitions of a very special and extraordinary nature, both referring not only to the last election, but to your first election in that year, and praying Parliament to institute an extraordinary inquiry, and there was a debate on the presentation of those three petitions, which came off on the 1st September 1837; a long debate in which Mr. Gladstone and Sir William Follett and several other members of the Conservative party took part on the one side, and Mr. Ward, afterwards Sir Henry Ward, who subsequently presented the three petitions; and Mr. Wakeley and Lord John Russell and other Liberals also took part, and the result of the long debate was that the two extraordinary petitions were deferred until after the election petition should be disposed of, and the election petition never was disposed of, because it was dropped. Do you recollect that?—No, I do not, indeed. I do not recollect anything at all about it. It is not from a desire not to give you all the information I can, but I assure you that when you consider that I am a man in bad health, and as old as I am, and that that is 35 years ago, it is not extraordinary that I do not remember anything of that sort. I am sorry I cannot give you the information; I would if I could.

46,864. The object of my putting these questions to you is that you may have an opportunity, if your memory permitted, of contradicting and explaining what we have in evidence already, that is all?—I assure you that I do not recollect more of those circumstances.

46,865. (Mr. Price.) In 1841 you were a candidate again?—Yes.

46,866. So you had therefore sat for the borough from 1837 to 1841. During that interval are you able to say what money you spent in charities or donations?—I cannot speak with certainty, but I think I came to the understanding that some one in the town, I do not recollect who, Mr. Symes or some of the agents there, to pay a certain sum of money yearly for subscriptions; I do not recollect what that sum was; it might be 150*l.* a year, or something of that sort.

46,867. One hundred and fifty pounds?—I do not know.

46,868. Is that as near as you can recollect?—As near as I can recollect. I think it was something of that sort. I may be quite wrong; perhaps I may be called over the coals if I say so positively.

46,869. The largest sum that we have had was 375*l.* by Mr. Westropp. Do you think it was ever as much as that?—No. I may have given a sum of money to races and other things. There were races I recollect, and things of that sort, and I think I may have done something of that sort, independently of the agents.

46,870. (Mr. Anstey.) What, to individuals?—No, not to individuals. I do not know whether it was for the races or something of that sort; it may have been.

46,871. You were never asked for loans?—Never.

46,872. (Mr. Price.) In 1841 you stood a contest with Mr. Forman on the Conservative side, and Mr. Edward Drew and Mr. Augustine Robinson on the other, and you and Mr. Forman were successful?—Yes.

46,873. Can you give any idea what that contest cost?—No, I cannot, any more than a general recollection which I have of these elections, that they all cost me about 2,000*l.* each, with the exception of one which cost me less.

46,874. That is the second one in 1837?—Yes. I think I can safely say that they did not cost me more than 2,000*l.*, all those elections afterwards.

46,875. Did you and Mr. Forman divide the expenses?—I do not know whether we divided them, but it cost me the same money, I should think so. I do not recollect how it was done, but, at all events, I think it cost me the same.

46,876. You think out of your own pocket 2,000*l.* in all probability?—I think so in all probability.

46,877. You sat from 1841 to 1847, and in 1847 young Mr. Tynte, I suppose; that is the second Mr. Tynte?—The second Mr. Tynte.

46,878. The present one?—Mr. Charles Tynte.

46,879. And Mr. Serjeant Gazelee were candidates?—We were.

46,880. We have it in evidence that he was brought down as an independent party, and arrived only on the day of the nomination?—He was brought down as an independent party, and gave us a great deal of trouble.

46,881. You and Colonel Tynte were returned. What did it cost you then?—I do not know. It might have cost me the same; I daresay it did.

46,882. Did you and Colonel Tynte come to any understanding at that election?—No, there was no understanding.

46,883. Is Mr. Symes the only person you can mention as being recipient of these different sums?—I think Mr. Symes was the person who received the money. There was a Mr. Parramore there.

46,884. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he one of your agents?—He was at one time.

46,885. He was town clerk after the Conservative reaction in the borough?—I think he was town clerk.

46,886. (Mr. Price.) At the time?—No. I think Mr. Trevor was town clerk.

46,887. (Mr. Anstey.) Probably at this time, in 1847, the elder Mr. Smith, the pawnbroker, would be one of your agents?—I do not know whether he was an agent or not. I do not recollect. He was not a gentleman in the legal profession, and I think he kept a pawnbroker's shop.

46,888. (Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence that there are two pawnbrobers of that name, but Mr. Smith, the elder, the pawnbroker at Bridgwater, had acted as agent on the Conservative side at many previous elections as well as at that election?—I daresay.

46,889. (Mr. Price.) That possibly might be in a capacity which you did not choose to inquire into?—No, I had no idea whatever.

46,890. Whatever money you spent did you pay it over to your legal agent?—I paid it to no one. My London agent whom I took down at that time arranged all that sort of thing. I was ignorant of it.

46,891. Who was it?—He is a long way from England now—a Mr. Parkinson.

46,892. Did Mr. Holmes act for you at this election; we are told that both Mr. Holmes and Mr. Coppock went down in 1837?—It was a long time ago; no doubt it was. Old Mr. Holmes?

46,893. Yes, the whipper in?—Mr. William Holmes.

46,894. And Mr. Coppock was down on the other side, and was recognized in the crowd; do you recollect that?—Well, I daresay. I do not recollect it.

46,895. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Thomas Holmes, the son of Mr. William Holmes, was the parliamentary agent acting for you in all these elections?—I think not. I knew Tom Holmes very well. I do not think he ever acted as agent for me.

46,896. (Mr. Price.) 1847 seems to have been the last election you stood a contest for?—That was my last election.

46,897. As near as you can tell us how much you spent, taking 500*l.* as your outside expenses, putting it roughly at your second election in 1837, and taking the other four at 2,000*l.* each, you spent 8,500*l.* in the borough of Bridgwater?—I should think so, or rather more.

46,898. Should we put it too high that your elections at Bridgwater cost you altogether 10,000*l.*; your charities and the whole thing?—I think they must have cost me that. There were five elections—yes, they must have cost me about that.

46,899. (Mr. Price.) Have you anything more to state which you would like to state to the Commission?—No, nothing at all.

ANTHONY, LORD HENLEY sworn.

Lord Henley.

46,900. (Mr. Price.) You are a member for Parliament now for Northampton?—Yes.

46,901. In 1852 it appears that you were a candidate for Bridgwater?—Yes.

46,902. At that election Mr. Follett and Mr. Mansell were the Conservative candidates; Colonel Tynte, and yourself, and Mr. Alexander Kinglake were the three candidates on the Liberal side?—Yes.

46,903. Tell us how you were brought down to Bridgwater?—The affair was first mentioned to me by Colonel Tynte. It was mentioned to a relation of mine as a position opening, and then upon his advice and recommendation I went down to stand for the borough.

46,904. Did he tell you anything at the time about what sort of notoriety it had for expenditure?—It is very difficult to recollect a conversation that took place 17 years ago, but my impression is that he gave me some such idea. I could not say the words in which he said it, but I believe he did give me the idea of the state of affairs at Bridgwater at the time.

46,905. (Mr. Anstey.) At all events, you were aware of the state of affairs either from his information or from some other source?—I think I had no other but his. I had some idea from his conversation of the state of affairs in the borough of Bridgwater. That is to the best of my recollection.

46,906. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you had a conversation also about it with Sir William Hayter ?—No ; I do not think I ever had a conversation with Sir William Hayter. Of course, this is only an idea. I do not know it is so, but I think it possible that he may have mentioned me as a person wishing for a seat in Parliament to Colonel Tynte, but I am not sure whether I had a conversation with Sir William Hayter, or not.

46,907. Had you any knowledge of him before then ?—No.

46,908. Did he introduce himself to you on this subject ?—He first spoke to a relation of mine respecting it at Brighton, and then I think upon the subject I was brought to his acquaintance.

46,909. (Mr. Anstey.) You had been in Parliament before that ?—No, I had not.

46,910. (Mr. Price.) Did you communicate, if you did not to Sir William Hayter, to any London agent, Mr. Coppock, or anybody who had any management, or Sir William Drake, or anybody in that position with the party in London ?—No, none. I am saying these things to the best of my recollection, and I am pretty sure I did not.

46,911. In consequence of the arrangement you made with Colonel Tynte you determined to stand for Bridgwater ?—Yes ; I cannot say quite in consequence of the arrangement I made.

46,912. Was any arrangement made with Colonel Tynte as to expenditure at all before you came down? —None, whatever.

46,913. Tell us when you went down what happened ?—I went down and paid several visits to the borough. I found a body there called the Liberal Association, who appeared to be ready to espouse my cause, and I accepted their assistance ; and then it was determined I should stand, and I found there was to be no sort of coalition between myself and Colonel Tynte, that I was not to stand as his friend and colleague, but alone.

46,914. (Mr. Anstey.) None of the lawyers of Bridgwater were members of that Liberal Association, were they ?—I think not.

46,915. All the Liberal lawyers were with Colonel Tynte, were not they, and Mr. Kinglake ?—The only Liberal lawyer I had anything to do with was Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

46,916. And he was Colonel Tynte's agent ?—Yes.

46,917. (Mr. Anstey.) He was hostile to you ?—No, he was not hostile, he was friendly ; but he was a sort of unpaid agent, looking after my interests at the same time as he espoused thoroughly those of Colonel Tynte, as I understood.

46,918. (Mr. Price.) The contest resulted in the return of Mr. Follett and Colonel Tynte ?—Yes, Mr. Follett and Colonel Tynte.

46,919. Did you find in the result, in point of fact, Colonel Tynte's influence as to second votes, to a great extent, was given to Mr. Follett in preference to yourself ?—That I cannot tell. I do not know.

46,920. (Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence there was this secret communication between Colonel Tynte's party, represented by Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Follett, either in person or as represented by some one else, and the result was the return of one and one, Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett, and your losing the election Did anything transpire in the course of your contest which is inconsistent with that ?—Nothing inconsistent with that. It may have happened, but until this moment I had no idea it was so.

46,921. (Mr. Price.) At any time during your candidature was it announced that you would spend no money ? Would that account for it ?—I think it very probable. I constantly put forward that idea.

46,922. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you beat Mr. Kinglake on that occasion ?—I think I was a few votes ahead of Mr. Kinglake.

46,923. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever understand that your defeat was attributable in any way whatever to any declaration which you had made, that you would not be a party to spending money illegally ?—I think that, no doubt.

46,924. It is due to you to say that it is in evidence before us that you did distinctly say so more than once, and that you stood upon what were called purity principles, which were not much approved of ?—No ; and I was of course met with some ridicule on account of my supposed niggardliness in those matters.

46,925. Tell us what the election cost you ?—The election cost me, with my own personal expenses, as well as I could make out, 304*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*

46,926. Were you applied to at any time afterwards for more money, or during the election ?—It was proposed to me to sign a cheque for 200*l.*, which they said if I would do would make the election perfectly safe.

46,927. When was that proposed ?—On the morning of the election just as the poll was beginning, to the best of my recollection.

46,928. Who was it proposed by ?—I would rather not say, unless you press it. It was said in a sort of confidential manner to me, and I feel some difficulty, but if you say I must——

46,929. I think so ; we have allowed no witness to shelter himself, and we have been in one or two cases obliged to enforce it ?—It was by a young man named Foster, a clerk to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

46,930. He is dead now, but he was very notorious in his lifetime.

46,931. (Mr. Anstey.) We have had it also in evidence that your supporters there were distinguished from the other sections of the Liberals who supported the two other candidates in this, that you alone were the independent Liberal candidate, that is to say, that you were the only one who was not under the patronage of the Liberal lawyers ; is that so ?—I was not aware that I was under their patronage in any way.

46,932. Were you aware that you were not under their patronage, namely, that they regarded you as a kind of interloper ?—No, I was not aware of that.

46,933. (Mr. Price.) Did not you become aware while you were there that in point of fact the attorneys on both sides were the persons who governed the elections, generally speaking ?—It was not brought to my notice specially.

46,934. (Mr. Anstey.) You are not aware that your supporters represented you as opposing generally the lawyer interest in the borough ?—No.

46,935. (Mr. Price.) You were brought forward by the Liberal Association, but it is represented to us that they had formed themselves or had determined, if possible, to secure the borough from the influence of the lawyers, and it was with that view that you went down. Does that accord with your recollection ?—No, not quite. I think not entirely. My notion is that Colonel Tynte thought it possible to bring in two Liberal members for the borough, and that hearing of me as a probable candidate from Sir William Hayter, he thought I might be a proper person to fill the second seat, and that the commencement of my candidature was owing to that idea on his part. That was the beginning of my going down there. But then, as soon as I got down there, I was asked my opinions by the Liberal Association, and I satisfied them as to my opinions. They then espoused my cause, and it then became an understood thing that I was going to spend no money, and the fight was to be on purity principles, and that they were to do all they could for me. I do not recollect having heard that they were opposed or setting themselves and me up in any way in opposition to the lawyer interest in the borough. I never heard of that.

46,936. Did you come to any conclusion at all as to the result of that contest, disappointed particularly as you were, supposing that you were standing with Colonel Tynte's interest ; did it result in its coming to your knowledge, or did it suggest itself to you, that they had not been loyal ?—No, because I saw it before the poll took place. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond told me that I should poll 149 or 150, within one of those two numbers, and I polled within one of the numbers that he told me I should poll; so I had no reason to be disappointed with the result.

46,937. (Mr. Coleridge.) What position were you in with regard to Mr. Kinglake on this occasion—antagonistic?—Somewhat antagonistic. We were rather as it were standing against each other.

46,938. Was Colonel Tynte supposed to be favoring you as against Mr. Kinglake?—He withdrew his favor as soon as the election began, and dropped all sort of coalition.

46,939. (Mr. Anstey.) With you?—With me.

46,940. (Mr. Coleridge.) When he withdrew his favor from you, did he transfer it to Mr. Kinglake, or to the Conservative side?—I never understood that he transferred it to Mr. Kinglake at all.

46,941. Or the Conservative side?—I did not understand that either.

46,942. (Mr. Price.) Who was at the head of the poll? It is put on this paper which I have, Follett and Tynte. If it was the other way, Tynte and Follett, probably Mr. Follett got the benefit, because there was another Conservative candidate, Mr. Mansell, who was unsuccessful. Probably it was either Mr. Follett returned Colonel Tynte, or Colonel Tynte returned Mr. Follett by the half votes?—These are inferences which you are drawing which I have had no opportunity of looking into.

46,943. (Mr. Anstey.) To make this quite clear, do I understand you as saying or meaning more than this, that you had not heard until to-day that you were in fact considered both by the independent electors who were called the Liberal Association, and also the Liberal attorneys' followers, as antagonistic to every local influence, coming forward upon your own foundation. Do you mean to say more than that? do you mean to say you know anything or remember anything which is inconsistent with that?—No; the feeling may have existed amongst them for anything which I can say that I saw at the time; it may have existed.

46,944. (Mr. Price.) But you had no encouragement to go and stand again in 1857?—No, I had not.

46,945. Had you got into Parliament in the meantime?—No, I had not; I did not get in until 1859, and I think the reason for not standing then was that a meeting of the Liberal electors called on the subject preferred Mr. Kinglake to me by some majority.

46,946. (Mr. Anstey.) We have that in evidence. Have you any recollection what the 200*l.* was wanted for by Foster?—I understand he wanted it for bribery.

46,947. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you were first brought down, were you put into communication with Mr. Bate or Mr. Ford?—I was staying at Mr. Ford's house.

46,948. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Ford, the attorney's house?—He was a merchant, I imagine.

46,949. The father of the attorney—Capt. Thomas Ford?—Yes, Captain Ford.

46,950. Were you brought into communication with Mr. Bate, the conveyancer, there?—I do not recollect.

46,951. Do you recollect hearing Mr. Ford at any time say they were dissatisfied with the dictation which Mr. Lovibond had exercised over the borough, therefore, they wished you to come down in an entirely independent character?—My notion is they were rather glad to have an independent candidate who would attempt to fight the thing upon purity principles, but Mr. Ford's exertions, now that my mind is called to the matter, were to try and produce a kind of compromise between Mr. Kinglake and myself by which one of us might retire, pointing out the impossibility of either of us being elected if both of us went to the poll; that is the chief line he took.

46,952. What we have heard is, that you were brought down to counteract the influence of Mr. Lovibond, who seemed to be ruling the borough on the Liberal side, so that you were antagonistic to him, and standing on your own bottom as it were?—No, I was not antagonistic to him; on the contrary, he assisted me in every way in his power as much as he could without hurting Colonel Tynte; I think that was his position.

46,953. Did he assist you after Colonel Tynte had withdrawn his protection from you, as to speak. After Colonel Tynte had declined to give any assistance did Mr. Lovibond do what he could for you after that?—I imagine he did.

46,954. (Mr. Anstey.). If you were told at the election immediately preceding, that is the election of 1847, he held out some encouragement to a candidate standing exactly in your position, and then having voted for that candidate used all his influence with the electors to induce them to vote against that candidate, would that qualify the opinion you had formed as to his loyalty towards you?—Yes, that fact would qualify it, but I have no circumstance which I can recollect.

46,955. (Mr. Price.) You thought, judging from your letter to the "Times," that something had been said before us leading to the conclusion that you had spent money illegally; therefore, I wish to give you an opportunity now of explaining it. You wrote?—Yes, I did.

46,956. We did not communicate with you because we intended to call you, and give you the fullest opportunity, but I think I stated openly in court that there was not the slightest imputation upon you as far as the evidence went; but if you like to state anything to go on the notes you are at liberty?—I should just like to state that that statement made by one of the witnesses that I was standing in coalition with Colonel Tynte was not the case, because I think I have described the relation between myself and Colonel Tynte on the occasion of that election, that he did first mention the borough to me, but immediately on my going down there broke off all sort of coalition or partnership between us. It was afterwards mentioned in the evidence that I had expended a considerable sum of money at that election, which of course would lead any to infer that I had joined—from the statement that I had been in coalition with him—joined in the expenditure of that sum; that is the reason of my writing the letter to the "Times," in which the sum I stated I had spent was 260*l.* odd.

46,957. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before you went down you did anticipate you would stand in conjunction with Colonel Tynte, and with his assistance?—I think so.

46,958. It was only on getting there that you were undeceived, or else probably you would not have gone?—Those are probabilities I can hardly speak to, but certainly I expected I should have to stand with Colonel Tynte. I think I said 264*l.* was the sum I spent on the election; that I think did not include my own personal expenses. I have now some accounts, extracts made at the time, which put down the whole of the expenses at the election and my personal expenses together.

46,959. Will you read out the various sums?—In 1852, February 16th, 17th, and 18th, journey to Bridgwater and back, inns, &c., 5*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.*

46,960. Give us your personal expenditure in a lump sum—that will be quite enough?—There are only two or three items here: March 16th, 17th, 18th, and 19th, expenses to and from and at Bridgwater, 8*l.* 10*s.*; April 1st, journey to Bridgwater and back, inns, &c., 5*l.* 15*s.*; May 8th, Bridgwater, 1*l.* 10*s.*; 17th, inn at Bridgwater and servants, 8*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.*; July 2nd, fare to Bridgwater, 1*l.* 14*s.*; 3rd, Hodge, "Railway Hotel," 7*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.* Then come the expenses at the election 6th of January: Flinde, printing, &c., 13*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.*; Whitby, ditto, 12*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*; Wood, ditto, 12*l.* 9*s.* 0*d.*; Foster, for election expenses, 74*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.*; Sutton, "Clarence Hotel," 9*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*; 7th of July, return to London, 1*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.*; 19th, J. W. Sully and Francis Thompson, for election expenses, two cheques, 70*l.* and 73*l.* 6*s.* 0*d.*

46,961. (Mr. Price.) What difference is there between them and the expenses which Mr. Foister paid; they are both election expenses?—Well, I was told we had a meeting at one of the inns, and Mr. Lovibond said I could not have a meeting entirely without refreshments, and there was about 30*l.* spent in drink. I recollect his saying something to that effect, and the total of those amounts is 304*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*

46,962. (Mr. Anstey.) Then there was 30*l.* spent in treating?—So I understood; that was told me afterwards.

46,963. There is an inn mentioned without name, the "Railway" hotel by name, and the "Clarence" hotel mentioned by name; how many inns had you bills with committees?—I think the "Railway" and the "Clarence;" I do not recollect any other.

46,964. How happened it that you had to incur bills at two hotels?—Because I stayed at one time at the "Railway" hotel, and afterwards it was thought advisable that I should go more into the middle of the town.

46,965. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything else you have to state to us about that election; was any application made to you afterwards?—I paid afterwards I think a few pounds for registration. I think not in the same year. 5*l.* I think I recollect paying. I did not put that into this election account.

46,966. Did you pay any agent any fee?—I think not.

46,967. (Mr. Anstey.) Neither then nor afterwards?—Neither then nor afterwards. I think I should say, perhaps, as I am saying everything on this subject, that I had some difficulty in saying it as it was a matter rather confidential, but as the man is dead, and I am bound to say all I can during the election, I said to Foster, "Oh, then you are bribing?" He said, "Of course we are," or words to that effect.

46,968. When he asked you for the 200*l.*?—I think it must have been about that time.

46,969. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever give Foster anything afterwards, a present or fee, or anything?—I do not recollect; it may be possibly charged in these expenses.

46,970. Or Mr. Lovibond?—No, I never gave Mr. Lovibond anything.

46,971. (Mr. Anstey.) How came you and Foster in communication?—He was Mr. Lovibond's clerk. I kept up my communication with him. The first place I went to in the town was Mr. Lovibond's place.

46,972. Did Mr. Lovibond tell you that Foster managed these things, and that you had better communicate with him?—I think he did.

46,973. (Mr. Price.) Managed what things?—These election affairs. You meant election affairs?

(Mr. Anstey.) I meant election matters.

46,974. (Mr. Price.) The election generally, or the persons with whom you were in communication on election matters?—Yes, that was it.

46,975. Anything else?—No.

46,976. (Mr. Coleridge.) Some overtures were made to you about the next election in 1857, were there not?—No. I think since the Liberal party had rejected me and preferred Mr. Kinglake, I do not think I heard anything more of the matter.

46,977. You had nothing more to do with any idea of standing for Bridgwater?—No actual correspondence or interviews about it.

46,978. Did you go down there before 1857, or see anyone about it?—No.

46,979. (Mr. Anstey.) According to Mr. Henry Lovibond's evidence it appears that the meeting which you mentioned just now of the Liberal electors took place on the invitation of Liberal attorneys, and on that occasion it was determined that Mr. Kinglake should be accepted to stand at the contest of 1857. Had you been told before that that they were going to hold such a meeting, or was your first knowledge of it derived from the same information which told you you had been passed over in Mr. Kinglake's favour?—I think that was the first knowledge I had of it. I was told at that meeting, I having been in a minority they chose him in preference.

Mr. Serjeant S. Gaselee.

Mr. Serjeant Stephen Gaselee sworn.

46,980. (Mr. Price.) We are informed that you went down to Bridgwater to stand a contest in July 1847?—Yes.

46,981. And that you arrived there only on the day of the nomination?—Yes.

46,982. Tell us how it was you were induced to go to Bridgwater?—Some gentlemen waited on me a few nights before to ask me if I could recommend a candidate, and I did recommend them someone, but, however, it ended in my going.

46,983. Do you recollect who they were?—I cannot recollect now more than the name of one gentleman, my solicitor at that time, Mr. Bishop, of London.

46,984. Were the other gentlemen Bridgwater gentlemen? Did he introduce them to you?—I think they were; I have no doubt they were if they came, but it is so long ago I cannot say how many came.

46,985. Can you tell us whether they were lawyers?—No. I will tell you the people at the bottom of it were, as I understood, Mr. Ford and Mr. Bate.

46,986. (Mr. Anstey.) But they were both of them in Bridgwater, not in London, at that time, I think?—I cannot say whether they came up to me or not.

46,987. You remember that you went down in the company of gentlemen who introduced you at Bridgwater to Mr. Henry Lovibond, in whose company you arrived on the nomination day?—Oh, did I?

46,988. It is in evidence; he states it?—I daresay, then.

46,989. Was he one of those who waited on you with Mr. Bishop?—My impression is that he was, but I could not be certain, I could not undertake to say.

46,990. (Mr. Price.) But when you got there you were under the impression the two most anxious to get you down were Mr. Ford and Mr. Bate?—Yes.

46,991. Did you understand why?—Yes, I understood this, that there was a walk over, one and one, and they did not like it; that is my understanding.

46,992. They wanted a contest. There was a little soreness, I believe, on the Liberal side at being one and one?—I do not mean that their motives were not quite pure, because I did not believe that they wanted any money.

46,993. Was anything said to you about money before you went down, what you would have to spend?—Distinctly that I was not to pay anything. I was not to pay money, I should have said, when I say nothing.

46,994. Did you know anything of Bridgwater at that time, what sort of place it was?—Yes, I did, and I thought therefore I should not be inclined to go if I thought I was going to pay.

46,995. And you made that stipulation, that you should not be called upon for any illegal expenditure?—Illegal?

46,996. Yes?—It was never proposed to me.

46,997. Was any sum named?—No, it was not proposed to me that anything illegal should be paid.

46,998. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you tell them that you would not be drawn into any illegal expenses?—Decidedly.

46,999. (Mr. Price.) You announced that down there?—Over and over again.

47,000. What did they say?—They all agreed.

47,001. And the result was that you were very much behind on the poll?—Not very much; I think 60.

47,002. (Mr. Anstey.) You got the show of hands?—I got the show of hands.

47,003. (Mr. Price.) What did they say?—The party wanted to pay everything for me. I do not know who. I objected to that. I said, "No, I do "not wish you to pay for me; and I paid the hustings, and I think just those expenses, and to the best of my belief it cost me 26*l.* and no more.

47,004. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know what the cost of getting the show of hands was ?—I am quite sure that there was no money spent for getting the show of hands.

47,005. (Mr. Price.) You were the popular candidate ?—Well, I came just at the end, and the other men proposed to me—they were very glad to see me, of course I knew what that meant—and proposed to me that there should be no speeches. "Speeches ?" said I; "I am a stranger, and going to get the show of hands by my speech ;" and so it turned out.

47,006. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know that it is stated that Mr. Lovibond voted for you to preserve his character as a Liberal in the borough, but kept his promise with the coalition between his nominee, Colonel Tynte, and Mr. Broadwood, by doing all he could with the bribable voters to get them to vote against you ?—I do not know that personally.

47,007. (Mr. Price.) Were you not surprised on being brought down there to find Mr. Broadwood and Colonel Tynte returned and yourself, although coming near, not ?—Was I surprised ?

47,008. Yes ?—No, I was not surprised, because I knew if I did not pay money I could not get in ; I mean I thought it almost an impossibility.

47,009. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you go down ?—Well, I went down just on the mere chance. It cost me nothing ; the lawyers, or whoever they were, came and said, "If you come down we will not charge you anything," and I thought I might go and see.

47,010. Supposing a sum of 1,500*l.* raised by themselves to be spent in bribing voters, would you under what they call your sense of honour have paid that or not; what should you have done?—On my honour I cannot say what I should have done in a particular case. I think the best answer I have seen to that question is what Mr. Kinglake said, that he should have left it to some man of honour to say what he ought to do ; but my impression is that I should have been so perfectly disgusted that I should have said, "You "told me nothing was to be spent, certainly nothing "illegal ; I am not inclined to pay it ;" but I do not know what I should have done under the circumstances.

47,011. (Mr. Price.) You never thought of standing again for Bridgwater ?—No, I did not ; they were so kind as to mention it, but I thoroughly believed I could not get in there.

47,012. It was a hopeless thing without spending money ?—It was a hopeless thing without spending money.

47,013. That is the result you arrived at ?—That is the result I arrived at.

47,014. (Mr. Anstey.) You were never proposed again by the Liberals as their candidate ?—No.

47,015. Neither in 1852 nor in 1857 ?—No.

Mr. Robert Spencer Follett sworn.

Mr. R. S. Follett.

47,016. (Mr. Price.) You are one of Her Majesty's counsel ?—I am.

47,017. And have been for some years ?—I have been for some years, I am sorry to say.

47,018. In 1852 it appears that you stood for the first time, as a candidate for the first time, at Bridgwater ?—Yes.

47,019. You were returned on that occasion with Mr. Tynte ?—Yes.

47,020. Give us the history of your introduction to the borough of Bridgwater ?—It is a long time ago, and one's recollection is not quite distinct.

47,021. Was it through your brother, Sir William Follett ?—No ; I think my name was well known in the West of England at that time, and some gentlemen I think connected with Bridgwater. I do not recollect the names of all of them, but a Mr. Smith and Mr. Trevor to the best of my recollection were two of them, who came to me and said there was a chance or a very great probability of the Conservatives returning a member for Bridgwater, that there was a split they thought on the Liberal side, that the borough was as they believe Conservative if polled fairly, and they asked me to stand ; they thought my name would be a good name.

47,022. Are you aware, as they said there was a split, that besides the old member, Colonel Tynte, Lord Henley and Mr. Kinglake were in the field ?—I think I was aware that Mr. Kinglake was ; he had been a friend of mine, and I think I knew, and one fact against going down was the disinclination to oppose Mr. Kinglake.

47,023. I think Mr. Mansell stood in conjunction with you ?—Mr. Mansell stood in conjunction with me.

47,024. Do you know who introduced him ?—I do not know, but I fancy he was introduced through Mr. Gabriel Poole, a gentlemen of great influence, and who I think was solicitor to the family ; his family were resident there and connected with the borough.

47,025. (Mr. Anstey.) If you are not aware, it is right to tell you that Mr. Poole says he never took any part in elections beyond giving his vote ?—Then I had better not answer those questions.

47,026. (Mr. Price.) Was anything said to you about the expenditure of money ?—Oh yes, certainly. I asked them upon what terms the election was to be conducted, because I was so fully impressed, not to use a stronger word, with the folly of a gentleman in my position spending money in illegal expenses of that kind. I said I would not have anything to do with it unless it was clearly understood there were no illegal expenses incurred, for I would not spend a farthing ; and I think on more than one occasion I pressed that so fully on Mr. Smith, who was the chief person I communicated with.

47,027. Was that Mr. Smith, the lawyer ?—Mr. Smith, the lawyer. I impressed it on his mind so very strongly that I recollect on more than one occasion telling him if the election was won by illegal means I would not keep the seat.

47,028. Did you come to any understanding with Mr. Mansell about any expenses ?—No. I think the first time I saw Mr. Mansell was at Bath. They told me that Mr. Mansell, who I believe lived in Dorsetshire, would meet me at Bath, and I met him at the hotel there, and he told me. It is some time ago, and I have some difficulty in telling you ; but the impression on my mind was that he would not spend any money.

47,029. He was of the same mind as yourself about spending money ?—But he would not spend any money at all as I understood.

47,030. (Mr. Anstey.) Legal or illegal ?—Legal or illegal ; but if any at all a very small sum ; and I was to furnish the great amount of the money for the legal expenses.

47,031. Yes, and to have the first chance ?—Yes, to have the first chance. I recollect putting that to him, that I was to have the first chance of coming in, and that was acceded to.

47,032. On your coming down do you recollect any overtures made to you on the part of Colonel Tynte or his friends, showing a disposition to split the votes between you and him so as to secure his election and yours ?—Positively not.

47,033. Nothing of the kind ?—Nothing of the kind. I give it the most positive contradiction; nothing of the sort.

47,034. It is only suggested, because you see you were returned with Colonel Tynte. We have had Lord Henley, who went down at the invitation of Colonel Tynte, and who seems not to have been well treated, and the result was that you and not he came in. Who was at the head of the poll ?—Colonel Tynte.

47,035. You probably secured a great number of his half votes ?—My belief is that he took my votes. If he polled without bribery Mr. Mansell and myself would have come in.

47,036. That is your belief?—That is my belief.

47,037. That was the result of the canvass?—That was the result of the canvass and the polling at 12 o'clock. At 12 o'clock we were both at the head of the poll, and I was running ahead very fast. Excuse my saying I was the popular candidate on our side, and was running some votes ahead of Mr. Mansell, and at 12 Mr. Mansell and I thought our election secure. Then the thing suddenly turned in that mysterious way which one sees sometimes in boroughs.

47,038. (Mr. Anstey.) Nothing can be more clear and satisfactory than your disclosure of the coalition on your part. I need scarcely ask the question, you do not mean to disclaim it, I presume, in the same positive manner on behalf of those who represented you—Mr. Richard Smith?—So far as my knowledge goes I do.

47,039. But what you mean to say is, if there were such a compact it was behind your back, against your will, and you never heard of it until it came out in evidence?—I never heard of it until this moment; I never had an opportunity of reading all the evidence given in the papers.

47,040. (Mr. Price.) It was a suggestion?—My belief is—the impression on my mind was at the time when I saw the way the election was going that Colonel Tynte—at least the persons who managed the election brought me in because they were afraid if I was kept out I should petition. That was the impression left on my mind.

47,041. (Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps you have not seen very full reports?—No, I have not. I have been abroad a great part of the time, and have not seen it at all.

47,042. It is fair to tell you in connexion with what you have just said that we have had it in evidence that one person got a number of half votes of Colonel Tynte for you by telling a tally or several tallies, "I know you have taken bribes to vote for Tynte, "and therefore if you plump for him and do not give "half your vote to Mr. Follett there shall be a peti-"tion to a certainty"?—Yes.

47,043. Upon which they all went up and voted for you and Tynte?—Yes, I think I saw some reference to that in the newspapers. I think my late friend, Mr. Hennett, who was a strenuous supporter of mine—he was a popular person there, and I had no doubt if there had been no bribery Mr. Mansell and I should have come in.

47,044. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what it cost you?—That election cost me altogether 1,150*l.*

47,045. I should like to know how it is made up?—I have no papers connected with it. I occupied chambers in Lincoln's Inn up to 1862, when I left the professon. All papers there—a great mass of them—I had collected together, some relating to this election, and other matters. Those I thought of no importance I burnt, and amongst them these matters of the election, it being 10 years past, and there is nothing left but my bankers' book. Some time during March I went there, I think, and during March to July there was a continual canvass, and agents were employed, and there was a great deal of writing and printing. I recollect we showed various handbills upon political matters which were then interesting. There was a great deal paid for printing I recollect, and several public meetings were held which cost money, and I recollect at the end I see I paid on the 23rd July 1852, 400*l.*, on the 17th August 100*l.*, 13th December 450*l.*——

47,046. Who was it paid to?—All to Mr. Smith.

47,047. Did he render you an account?—He rendered me an account at the time, no doubt.

47,048. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he give you any reason why those large sums appearing to have been demanded from you at various periods, from August down to December following, were kept back so long?—No; he told me they were getting the bills in and paying them from time to time.

47,049. Did he tell you what bills they were?—Oh, yes, I think I saw all the bills.

47,050. Did they appear to be for goods supplied, or what?—Well, they appeared to be chiefly for agency and printing; for the employment of individuals and printing.

47,051. Did you observe any large items coming under etceteras, such as "miscellaneous"?—No; I should not have allowed it if I had.

47,052. (Mr. Price.) Did not it strike you as a large sum for legal expenses for a small borough of 500 voters?—I thought I was very well out of it considering the election lasted for five months; we were down there canvassing.

47,053. I suppose you had a large army of paid canvassers?—No doubt.

47,054. And public-houses open all that time?—I do not recollect that I paid any bill under that name, but in point of fact, as you must know well enough, one has not the control of all this expenditure; matters are returned to you under very different heads from what the money has been expended upon. I do not know that there was any money spent upon houses being opened; I should not have allowed it if I had seen it.

47,055. And the bills were prepared so as not to suggest on the face of them any question?—Certainly not.

47,056. (Mr. Price.) Agency, how much?—I am not quite sure about that, but I think the solicitors and local agents fees were 50*l.*

47,057. Apiece?—Yes.

47,058. Retaining fees?—Retaining fees. Mr. Smith, Mr. Trevor; I do not recollect the other names.

47,059. Mr. Ruddock?—Mr. Ruddock probably was one.

47,060. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Symes?—I do not recollect the name there. I think he must have been dead.

47,061. Mr. Richard Smith being the principal agent there, we have it in evidence, obtained a larger fee than the rest?—My impression is that he did not, but I do not recollect that. I do not think he did.

47,062. We have it in evidence that this was the first election at which he took what Mr. Trevor calls the lead of the lawyers, Mr. Trevor having ceased to be active in that capacity, you do not recollect whether he got more?—I should say not, according to my recollection; but I cannot take on myself to recollect that.

47,063. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us at that election?—That is all.

47,064. From 1852 to 1857 were you called on to spend any money in the borough?—I think I paid to Mr. Smith on behalf of the solicitors, I do not exactly recollect their names, 50*l.* a year for the expenses of the registration.

47,065. In that sum of 1,150*l.*, if Mr. Mansell carried out his resolution, did you pay his legal expenses?—Well, I paid the whole.

47,066. Including hustings and his share of the sheriff's expenses?—I am not quite positive, but I believe I did.

47,067. And including his agents also?—Yes.

47,068. He got the benefit, then?—Yes. As I understood it at the time—I have had no communication with Mr. Mansell since—the impression on my mind at the time was that I was paying all the legal expenses.

47,069. (Mr. Anstey.) You began to answer the question about any expenditure between 1852 and 1857, 50*l.* a year. Was there anything else?—I do not recollect anything else.

47,070. Any gifts or loans?—No. At times there was a paper sent up that a man had lost his horse, and I gave him 10*s.*, and that sort of thing.

47,071. Subscriptions to charitable institutions, or races?—No. I think there were no races when I was there; I think they had been abandoned.

47,072. How much a year do you think you spent in various ways in that interval?—I do not think anything but this sum of 50*l.*

47,073. And the sums you mention?—Yes. It was nothing beyond mere pocket expenses.

47,074. (Mr. Price.) Was it ever represented to you in any way as a necessary thing for you to keep up an expenditure in the borough with a view of becoming candidate?—No; nor would I have acceded to it.

47,075. No pressure was put on you?—Not the slightest. I must say this for the gentlemen of Bridgwater, that they behaved exceedingly well in all those matters. I never had any pressure put on me. I am bound to state that.

47,076. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it true that you expressed yourself disgusted in 1857 at the expenses you had been put to in 1852, or perhaps after 1852?—No, I never expressed any disgust.

47,077. (Mr. Price.) In 1857 you were candidate again?—Yes.

47,078. And on that occasion Tynte and Kinglake were your opponents, and were returned?—Yes.

47,079. How much behind were you at that time?—I forget the state of the poll, but I was very well beaten I recollect.

47,080. Did you spend any money at that election?—My election at that time cost 433*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*

47,081. Before the election, when it was known there was to be a contest, was anything said to you by Mr. Smith that it was necessary to spend more money than you had before, or anything of the kind?—No. I think Mr. Smith gave me to understand—— No, I do not think that there was. I should say with regard to that election, the particular feature in it which had existed before the division in the Liberal party had continued a short time, and the result of that was that there was no second candidate brought against me, and Colonel Tynte and I were alone in the field, and so we continued, I think, up to a very few days before the election commenced, and I at the canvass on that occasion felt myself so entirely without a chance of success that I should not have gone to the poll if any gentleman on the other side had come forward more promptly; but having gone on up to a day or two before the nomination——

47,082. Your canvass was not successful?—My canvass was not successful.

47,083. How came it that having been the popular candidate the time before, and being at the head of the poll at one time and returned, you had so gone down?—Popularities all are so.

47,084. Had it anything to do with your want of spending money?—No, I do not think so. I think one reason they made use of was my voting against Lord Palmerston on the Chinese war.

47,085. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to say that Mr. Richard Smith just before your contest gave you to understand something?—He gave me to understand that if money was spent on the other side I should not come in.

47,086. And did he propose to you that money should be spent on your side to counteract that influence?—Certainly not; he knew it would be no use.

47,087. (Mr. Price.) He never made that proposition to you?—He never made that proposition to me. In conversation with me he gave me to understand that I might come in if I spent money. That was the conversation which constantly took place with anyone talking about Bridgwater—"If there is any "difficulty about your canvass, if you spend money "you may come in."

47,088. (Mr. Anstey.) That was constantly said to you?—Oh yes.

47,089. At both elections?—At both elections.

47,090. (Mr. Price.) That election cost you very much less than the former one. You went to the poll?—I went to the poll.

48,091. You had not had so long a canvass?—No, only a few days I think, and no public meeting and no writing. The other was a very active canvass indeed. I think it was when free trade was very much discussed, and they wrote articles and stuck them about the public walls to try and enlighten the public mind. I have no doubt printing cost a good deal at that election.

47,092. That was the whole expenditure at that election?—My personal expenditure in bills and so on. I do not know what they were; they were paid out of my pocket money.

47,093. Did your agents get anything on that occasion?—Yes, I think they got 200*l.* on that occasion.

47,094. (Mr. Anstey.) Each of them?—No; out of the 433*l.* there was 200*l.* I think I paid them at that election.

47,095. Until a few days before the election you did not expect a contest?—I did not.

47,096. And when you did find a contest coming on you thought it hopeless?—I thought it hopeless if the other side spent money.

47,097. Was that the reason you contracted your expenditure to those narrow dimensions?—No, I spent what I thought necessary, just as I did before; I do not think there was any difference at all. I think some Act had passed in the meantime, making illegal flags and drums. That small expenditure of a few pounds was in the first one which I desired should not be in the second, because in the meantime it had been made illegal.

47,098. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything else you have to tell us with respect to your knowledge of Bridgwater elections?—No, I think I have told everything.

Mr. Alexander William Kinglake recalled.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

47,099. (Mr. Price.) You were to present some accounts?—Yes, the Commissioners desired me to hand them in to the secretary, and I have done so.

47,100. Some of these are letters from Mr. John Smith to you?—Yes.

47,101. One letter of June 9th, 1865, from Mr. Smith. Have you anything to say upon that; I do not say that it is very material?—No, but I considered my duty was to lay all papers before the Commission, whether I thought them material or not. There is one in which he says it was not his intention to take an active part in the election, and alleges the state of his health and the circumstance of his having found it expensive to interest himself in the elections.

47,102. We had better have it on the notes, if you will read it?—"My dear sir,—The moment I had "your telegram I had the poster as sent posted all "over the town, and otherwise distributed. I hope "I have done right. Mr. B. "Tuesday is now the day they give for a decisive "answer from the colonel." It was a question whether Colonel Tynte would stand or not.

47,103. This is a more important letter from Mr. John Smith, of July 14th, 1865:—

"A. W. Kinglake, Esqre., M.P.

47,104. (Mr. Anstey.) "S. J. V. S." means Sir John Villiers Shelley?—Yes, I took the liberty of sending my answer.

47,105. It is July 15th, 1865. Alexander Kinglake to John Smith (handing it) ?—" My dear sir,—Your " letter expresses all that I knew you must be feeling. " I do not wonder that you and a great many more " should be anxious to understand the true reason of " the apparent defeat which our cause has sustained, " and I hope you speak freely on this subject with the " chiefs, but I may say to you that, so far as I know, the " conduct of all on our side has been quite straight- " forward. The calculation, I believe, was that Mr. " Westropp could not give himself a chance of success " without undertaking an audacious, extravagant " operation, which must render it easy to unseat him " upon petition ; and, from all I hear, that calculation " has been verified, as far as is possible, in this shape ; " for, unless I am wrongly informed, the Liberal " party at Bridgwater have it now in their power to " annul the election of Mr. Westropp. Assuming " (what I do not for a moment doubt) that the party " will have the spirit to use their opportunity in this " respect there will probably be a fresh election for " the seat held by Mr. Westropp, and with a view to " that you will no doubt be holding yourselves in " readiness.

" Meantime of course Mr. Westropp is ostensibly " at the head of the poll, and one of the members for " Bridgwater, and so he will remain until two or three " weeks after the meeting of Parliament ; but if you " ask which of the two after that time, Westropp or " Shelley, is more likely to be my colleague, I say " Shelley ; for remember that if Mr. Westropp is un- " seated he will be declared incapable of again " standing for Bridgwater during the whole existence " of the Parliament, now in course of formation. I do " not doubt, my dear sir, that the sound and honest " portion of the Liberal party at Bridgwater is un- " swerving in that attachment to me of which I have " always been so proud, and indeed I ventured to " believe that I strengthened the tie which binds me " to my Bridgwater friends by the cordial way in " which I acted with Sir John Shelley. Still you can " well understand that for the time it is painful to me " to contemplate the ostensible state of the poll, for " Bridgwater is represented to England, and I may " say to Europe, as vastly preferring Mr. Westropp to " Shelley and myself. I intend to be at Bridgwater " soon, and I shall then be glad to have an opportunity " of talking over all these things with you."

47,106. (Mr. Price.) What did you understand by that, " If I had known at five in the morning what I " knew at half-past nine things would have been very " very different " ?—Well, I hardly formed any idea what was meant. I regarded it as expressing a senti- ment very constantly expressed, jealousy between the lawyers and the tradesmen.

47,107. (Mr. Anstey.) The words that strike me as requiring explanation are, " for we would have taken " things in our own hands afterwards, chancing " results. That is the only thing we now grieve at." The words, " things in our hands afterwards," are underlined?—I did not observe that.

47,108. Have you any doubt that they meant bribery?—I should doubt that, for I think those ex- pressions in general imply what was continually stated to me, an inherent power of carrying the elections supposed to exist in non-lawyers. There was a jealousy between the lawyers and non-lawyers, and the tradesmen were always saying if they had everything in their own hands everything would go smoothly.

47,109. (Mr. Price.) How about that—" more bene- " ficial at five in the morning than at nine in the " morning " ?—Quite possibly.

(Mr. Anstey.) And what results would there be to chance ?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Chancing a petition, was not it ?

47,110. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you not see the danger in the course, which danger one would chance ?—I do not think one ought to put a construction on the letters of energetic tradesmen, but I quite agree that it is open to the interpretation.

47,111. We have Mr. Smith here.

(Mr. Smith.) I think I can explain that.

47,112. (Mr. Price.) Well, you shall have an op- portunity. Then there is this letter with regard to the election of 1859, on which we examined you at Bridgwater, which was the second election for which you were returned, Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp being unsuccessful ?—Yes.

47,113. There was a petition ?—Yes.

47,114. Against your return as well as Colonel Tynte's, I presume. Now this is a letter which I am going to read to you, which you have handed in ; that is from Mr. Lovibond to you :—" 29th July. My " dear sir,—I met by accident Colonel Kemys Tynte " and Benjamin Lovibond at Taunton this afternoon ; " the former appeared to me, as you may suppose, " very nervous about the petition, and he expressed a " wish that Mr. Geo. Reed should be seen and pre- " vailed upon to withdraw his proceedings against " Heard for the libel. Since then I have had a con- " versation with Mr. B. Lovibond, and I find that he " is of the same opinion as myself with regard to the " object of the petition ; we have decided on remain- " ing quiet for the present, believing that the over- " ture for a compromise may be again renewed through " me. The following persons have been served with " the Speaker's warrant, viz., Lady Cooper, Jenkins, " Newton, H. Faun, Searle, and Manchip, but no " money has been paid for travelling expenses. My " impression is that Geo. Reed will accede to any " reasonable request that might be made to him for " stopping the progress of this petition, but it will not " do to be too precipitate in this delicate business." That letter therefore hints at a compromise being effected against the petition being presented to you upon the terms of this prosecution for libel, which Mr. Heard had had brought against him by a man named Jenkins ?— Yes ; my impression is the action was anterior to the petition.

47,115. Can you tell us whether, in point of fact, the petition having been eventually withdrawn, and Colonel Tynte, who was very nervous, having got up and declared that it was frivolous and vexatious in the House of Commons, when you stated that you stayed away, was the result of a compromise ?—I should imagine it was. The action was stayed and the peti- tion was dropped. I think it may be inferred that it was so.

47,116. Jenkins was examined after you left Bridg- water, I think, and was strongly impressed with a notion, to use a vulgar expression, that he was sold. That was his expression, and it was in consequence of these overtures which had been made about your petition ?—Quite possibly.

47,117. But you cannot give us any more informa- tion ?—No.

47,118. Except that you know there was a sugges- tion or promise, or something of the kind ?—Yes.

47,119. Eventually the petition was withdrawn ?— Yes, and the action stayed.

47,120. (Mr. Anstey.) Here is a letter, first of all, with reference to the election of 1866. I suppose he refers to the second election of 1866, in which Mr.

Vanderbyl was returned, and in anticipation of the election; did you receive that letter from Sir William Drake (handing it)?—This is one I have handed in?

47,121. Yes?—No doubt I received this if I handed it in.

47,122. Read it, if you please?—It is dated 8th July 1866. "On my return this evening from Oat-"lands I found your note; I am sorry the candidate "I suggested has declined, as your friends appeared "bent on fighting, but I do not anticipate finding "another for them on this occasion, having regard to "the shortness of time which will elapse before the "election, and the general opinion that the Parlia-"ment will not last long. If, however, I can find "anyone willing to go down on the present occasion "I will not fail to write to Mr. Lovibond."

47,123. Do you recollect under what circumstances that letter was written to you?—Yes, extremely well. Mr. Lovibond and, I think, Mr. Barham came up to town to seek a candidate, and I think I have already stated in answer to that, they had first gone to Mr. Travers Smith, who did not give them what they thought a very warm reception, I believe, and then they came to me, and I took them to Mr. Drake in the evening, and found Mr. Drake at dinner, withdrew him from his dinner table and asked him if he could suggest a candidate. He did not give much encouragement, but I think he gave one address to Mr. Lovibond, and there, so far as I know, ended all the part I took in it, and all the part Mr. Drake took, so far as I am acquainted with.

47,124. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you, notwithstanding that letter of Mr. Smith's, in which he expressed his regret that he did not chance results, and take the matter in his own hands, which you have lately read to us, put yourself in communication with him previous to the contest of 1868, and request him to do what he could for your interests in the borough?—No, I do not recollect ever making any such request as that of him.

47,125. Then how came that letter which you handed in to have been written to you by Mr. John Smith previous to the last election, and in contemplation of it?—He very frequently wrote to me. I thought the question of the Commissioner was as to whether I had asked him to act for me. He was very active, he did not require any request of that kind.

47,126. Will you read out that letter which you received?—It is dated 15th October 1868. "A meet-"ing is to be holden this, Thursday, night at the "Town Hall. G. B. Sully has consented to take the "chair. I think it will be a success; the heading of "poster, 'The working men of Bridgwater are par-"'ticularly requested to attend a meeting of the "'Liberal electors at the Town Hall to-night. Chair "'½ past 7.' I will send you report as I promised. "I am almost sorry that the worry of an election is "now coming once more. I find that it will be nearly "impossible for me to take my old form; lately I have "been so unwell. To-day I am nearly besieged with "persons asking questions, besides it becomes with "me so expensive, they all fly to me, and what with "one thing and the other, in a pecuniary way, it is "disheartening to me to face it; they quite make my "house their home to eat and drink, discussing ar-"rangements, and for committees." I should think I answered that; I have not a copy of the answer I sent, but I should think no doubt it would be to the effect that I hoped his health would improve, and when the election came on he would find himself as good a friend as ever.

47,127. He complains that he is put to a great expense?—Yes, the expense of associating with people connected with elections.

47,128. Treating them in fact. Have you no other remark to make upon that letter of Mr. Smith's?—No, it does not occur to me. I think the impression of the Commissioner with regard to what is called treating would not be an accurate one. What I gather from it is, that he had groups of men talking about the election, and was obliged to be more or less entertaining them, and found in the long run that it became an expense.

47,129. Making his house their home?—Making his house their home; exactly.

47,130. Could that be described by any other word?—Well, I should think he thought so. I do not think I should imagine they would be men above the class who could be influenced in that sort of way; fellow-tradesmen calling to chat about the election.

47,131. After that election, when the petition was pending against your return, did you receive from Sir William Drake or any of your friends the original letter which is in your hand and the two copies of letters endorsed (handing them)?—Yes, I recollect.

47,132. Will you read the original first of all? Before reading it, what period did you first receive those or become acquainted with the existence of those papers which you have in your hand?—I suppose a few days after they were written.

47,133. Did you receive that particular document from Sir William Drake?—No.

47,134. Who gave you that document, or handed it, or sent it to you?—I think I had better perhaps give a narrative of the transaction, then the Commissioners will judge. I think it will make it more clear.

47,135. Certainly.—What occurred in the matter was this, I was asked to name an agent in order to comply with the exigency of the Act of Parliament; a person to receive notices, and I sent an authority for Mr. Hoskins to act, who was recommended to me by Mr. Drake. When the petition made progress, Mr. Hoskins, without consulting the agents in the country, suddenly took a step of his own motion without having consulted me or anybody else; it was a step that was disapproved of by the agents in the country and myself. I then wrote on the subject, and required that Mr. Hoskins should be in a position of receiving instructions from the agents in the country on the ground of my being to a great extent personally ignorant of these things. I took that step before this correspondence was sent to me, but the correspondence at length came, and this is it. Mr. Hoskins on the 22nd December says, "I have taken out a summons for "particulars of bribery, treating, and undue influence, "which will be heard to-morrow, the result of which "I will communicate to you." That is his letter on the 22nd December. Then on the 23rd, there is one from Mr. Lovibond to Mr. Hoskins expressing surprise at his taking that step:—"I was much surprised "to find this morning you had without any instruc-"tions taken out a summons for particulars of bribery, "treating, and undue influence. If these should be "delivered the object we have in view, I am afraid, "will be frustrated. I presume you have forgotten "that I told you we were very friendly with the "solicitors for the petitioners, and that they were not "anxious to proceed with the petition. I shall be "much obliged with any suggestion you have to make, "but I trust no step may be taken without first ac-"quainting me with the nature of it. On the receipt "of your letter this morning I sent you a telegram "to withdraw the summons,"—then on the 24th, there is a letter from Mr. Hoskins to Mr. Lovibond:—"I do not understand your letter of yesterday's date. "Mr. Kinglake did not inform me that I was to "receive instructions from you,"—that is what it all turned upon, whether there were to be instructions direct from me, or from the local agents—"but simply "gave me your name as the gentleman at Bridgwater "with whom I was to communicate. Acting for Mr. "Kinglake, I thought it well for his interests to make "an early application for particulars, and this could "in no way interfere with any negotiations for the "withdrawal of the petition. If it would have been "at all likely to do so I should not have taken out "the summons, as I recollected perfectly well what "you told me as to your position with the other side. "I should wish to hear from you more definitely as to "your reasons for desiring that no application for "particulars should be made in this case as has been "done in so many others. I am sure Mr. Vanderbyl's

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

6 Nov. 1869.

" agent, who at my request has postponed his applica" tion, will not wait longer than a day or two. Of " course, if Mr. Kinglake desires me not to make any " such application I will not do so, and I have written
" him for instructions."

47,136. (Mr. Anstey.) That is expressive of the writer's alarm of Mr. Hoskins asking for information in the usual way, the form of particulars of the acts of bribery led to the charge of yourself and Mr. Vandebyl first, and your agents?—On the ground that it would interfere with what he supposed would be the hopes of a compromise.

47,137. If the other side were favourable?—Yes.

47,138. Then I will ask you, at the period of that portion of the correspondence, had it been proposed on one side and accepted on the other side as the basis of a compromise, that the corrupt practices on your side and Mr. Vanderbyl's side at the election should be suppressed and concealed from the knowledge of Parliament?—No, not at that period. There were from a very early period before the actual presentation of the petition, or very soon afterwards, hopes of a compromise always going on, as I stated to the Commissioners in my former examination, but I do not think that it had ripened so far as it afterwards did at that time.

47,139. You see there is a letter with regard to that; have the kindness to read that letter from Mr. Lovibond?—Yes, it seems to be of the same date, the 24th December; so, I suppose, the letters crossed. " Yesterday morning I received a letter from Mr.
" Hoskins similar to the one he sent you, on the " receipt of which I immediately sent him a telegram
" 'to withdraw the summons and wait for further
" instructions.' I also wrote him last evening, ex-
" pressing my great surprise at the step he had taken
" without first consulting me, reminding him of the " friendly terms I was on with the attorneys on the " other side, and that such a step might entirely
" frustrate a settlement. This morning I received
" another letter from Mr. Hoskins, stating that on " receipt of my telegram he got the summons to " stand over generally. Barham thinks with me, the " best way of getting rid of the petition will be by
" stating a special case for the court, under the 16th
" paragraph of the 11th section of the Parliamentary
" Elections Act, in which we can raise the point as to
" the Provident Place electors having been duly
" rated, so as to entitle them to be put upon the " register. If the court should decide they were not " properly rated, then one seat would be lost, and Mr.
" Westropp declared elected. Of course, the allega" tions of bribery and treating will have to be first
" withdrawn. This proposition has been made to the " solicitors on the other side, and they were consider-
" ing how effect can be given to it. The Taunton
" petition against Cox has been arranged; he is to " retire in a short time."

47,140. That also you received with reference to the same point on the 28th of December (handing it)?—" I am pleased to find you confirm my view with " regard to Mr. Hoskins' position, and I have no " doubt in future he will not take any important step
" in the defence without instructions. Trevor came " to me on Saturday with a letter he had received
" from Westropp relative to the suggested 'special
" case,' from which I gleaned the mind of the latter
" had undergone considerable improvement, and I " think it not improbable he may have during the " week 'a lucid interval,' as Trevor is going to London
" this evening for the purpose of seeing him to-morrow
" to obtain his consent to the 'special case.' Should
" Trevor succeed he will telegraph for me or Barham
" to come up. I have no doubt we shall want to " consult Mr. James as to the best mode of carrying " out the object we have in view. Barham and
" myself freely discussed the expediency of pre" senting the counter petition, and found we could " not do so with any sense of propriety whilst the
" negociation was going on with Trevor, as it formed
" the basis upon which it was opened, i.e., prevented
" an inquiry made or commission; your views, there-
" fore, have been anticipated. Mr. Vanderbyl's agent
" took the summons for particulars, and without
" instructions from Messrs. Reed and Cook."

47,141. The special case spoken of there is that referred to in your oral examination before us at Bridgwater?—I do not remember; it is, possibly. It was one of the res gestæ.

47,142. Now, Mr. Hoskins had been acting under the instructions of Sir William Drake, I believe, with reference to this petition and the defence to it?—Not, I think, quite so. Mr. Hoskins was introduced to me.

47,143. Just read that letter?—This is from Mr. Drake, now Sir William Drake, of the 29th December 1868:—" My dear Kinglake,—I only this morning
" received your note, as I was not in London yester-
" day. I will also at once see Mr. Hoskins, and put
" straight the little matter you refer to. He misap-
" prehended my instructions." So that he does use the word " instructions."

47,144. The " little matter " he refers to there means the step he had taken in taking out the summons for particulars of bribery and corrupt practices?—Yes, the step he had taken without communication with the local agents.

47,145. Now, on the 29th January I believe you received from Mr. Lovibond that letter (handing it)?—" 29 January 1869. I am much afraid our oppo" nents will not abandon the allegation of bribery,
" and rely upon the scrutiny. It seems they are goaded
" on to 'blow up the ship' rather than incur the pos" sibility of a failure in the scrutiny. I do not see
" what can be done here more than has been. You
" are doubtless aware the 23rd February is fixed for
" the trial?"

47,146. The " blowing up of the ship," I presume, means running the risk of an inquiry which would end in the disfranchisement of the borough of Bridgwater?—Very much that.

47,147. That is, I believe, the last letter on the subject, and it is written by Sir William Drake (handing it)?—Yes, " 30th January 1869. (Confidential.)" I suppose " confidential " does not prevail here?

47,148. No?—" My dear Kinglake,—I have reason " to believe that the scrutiny will alone be proceeded
" with."

47,149. That ends the negociations which had been commenced at an early period for the compromise. Now, taking you back to the beginning of that, I must ask you to what does this letter refer, which you will please to read out first?—Coming down to Bridg-water. " (Private.) Bridgwater, August 30th, 1868. (That is before the election.) " My dear sir,—How" ever you may be advised, will you please put in
" an appearance as soon as possible.—Yours sincerely,
" J. Smith."

47,150. What is the meaning of that?—To come down to Bridgwater.

47,151. What advice?—The advice of the lawyers; that was always going on, that sort of rivalry; they thought the lawyers would keep us away, because our coming down would give them trouble. The putting in an appearance means coming down and having a reception.

47,152. Nothing particular?—No more than that.

47,153. Then I will go on to this of the 26th of September, from Mr. Lovibond (handing it to the witness)?—" My dear sir,—Westropp approves of my " last suggestion, but he does not see how it is to " be carried out——"

47,154. What is that?—I declare I do not know; something, I suppose, in the approaching special case; " but he does not see how it is to be carried out; he " will not take the written undertaking of the gentle-
" man, and, so far as I can see, nothing will satisfy
" him except an undertaking by yourself to vacate in " case the other gentleman should fail to do so. Will " you kindly turn your attention to this ?"

47,155. Is the undertaking mentioned in this letter the one to which he refers (handing it) ? Havethe goodness to read it first. Is it the 25th or the 28th ?—It looks like the 25th; the 25th or 28th November 1868. " My dear sir,—I am happy to state Mr. Vanderbyl " called upon me yesterday, and in the presence of " Messrs. Reed & Cook ratified the arrangement made " in town. We have now to consider the best way of " carrying it out. Trevor thinks it will not be done " unless he and myself again go to town. I have " assented to this, and we propose going up on " Wednesday evening ; but if you in the meantime " can suggest a mode of giving effect to the arrange- " ment without my running up, I shall be much obliged. " Mr. Sealy is perfectly satisfied with the terms agreed " upon.—Yours very truly, HENRY LOVIBOND." I think it must be ; the dates seem to be right.

47,156. Then a few days after you received this letter, also from Mr. Lovibond (handing it) ?—This is the 30th November 1868. " My dear sir,—I have " been much surprised and annoyed this morning " at receiving a communication from Mr. John " Trevor, that the Tory party will not consent to " the terms agreed upon by his brother and myself, " and that the petition must be filed. This is the " more extraordinary as it was only on Saturday " afternoon that I informed James Trevor of Van- " derbyl's ratification of the terms, when he (James " Trevor) stated they had been accepted by his party, " and we then agreed to go to London on Wednesday " next, to carry them out. The only course I can " conceive for us now to pursue is to resent the gross " breach of faith, and bid the Tory party defiance."

47,157. Upon that you received also this letter from Mr. Sealy the banker, I think (handing it) ?—Yes.

47,158. Read it ?—It begins with the words, " A lady."

47,159. Read the date and the whole of it ?—" 2nd March 1868. My dear Kinglake,—A lady " passing in the dark last evening overheard Mr. " John Trevor"—(the Commissioners will under- stand that I do not hand in these things as conceiv- ing them to be important, but because of the exigency of the subpœna; I am not responsible for this—" a lady passing in the dark last evening overheard " Mr. John Trevor say to Mr. Brice, 'the petition " has gone up, but it will not be presented.' That " this remark was made I have not the slightest " doubt, and I communicate it to you for the purpose " of strengthening Lovibond's hands. Take care that " he knows this remark was made. Circumstances " may have arisen since, and have altered its value ; " of this I am unable to speak, but think it well to " communicate the information to you."

47,160. Now the postscript ?—" Since writing this " H. Lovibond has come in, and has asked me to say " that he will call on you to-morrow morning. He " knows the contents of this."

47,161. Did anything come of the conversation on the following morning between you and Mr. Lovibond ? —No ; I doubt whether it was ever referred to. I may have, as a bit of gossip, giving us some little hope.

47,162. But it was not verified ?—I do not recollect.

47,163. You remember there was a meeting of working-men who would not submit to it, and some person was sent up to town and protested on their behalf ?—It was broken off.

47,164. It appears from that letter Mr. Sealy was active during the whole or some portion of this, and in promoting the compromise, and that his presence in London at the meeting of the " Tavistock" was there- fore not accidental ?—I think that his coming to London was, to my impression, quite accidental, but as he was in London, the circumstance of his going to the " Tavistock" was not. He no doubt came out of personal friendship to me.

47,165. Does not it appear by that letter that he was a party to that transaction, or privy to it ?—Privy to it. The word used by the Commissioner exactly represents it.

47,166. Then in a letter of the 16th October 1868, from Mr. Lovibond, the only part I need ask you about is where he says, " Dr. Kinglake has just been with me." That is the last sentence in the letter. I wish to ask you, was Dr. Kinglake, your brother, acting on your behalf personally, as well as we know what part he had besides—personally acting on your behalf in canvassing or seeing your friends in Bridg- water during the month of October preceding the election ?—Oh no ; he was deeply interested in my election, and from time to time communicated with Mr. Lovibond and one or two others, Mr. Charles Bate probably, but he knew much less than I did of the electors there, and had nothing to do with the electors there directly.

47,167. There is one more letter with reference to this negotiation. Mr. Vanderbyl, I presume, was the gentleman here mentioned as " Mr. V." Will you read it and see whether it is so ?—" 13 Jan. 1869. " My object in writing my last letter was to take " advantage of our position, which I am pleased to " find you concur in. There is no doubt but that " Mr. V. promised to write to the gentleman that " called upon him, and that he has not done so. I " have written Hoskins to give V. a spur. I have " again renewed my visit to Mr. Trevor, but I fear " not with much result; he appears to be powerless. " Unless, therefore, some kind friends will intercede " in town, the present opportunity will be thrown " away."

47,168. (Mr. Coleridge.) As far as I am concerned, it seems that although you have perfectly cleared it up, there was some sort of notion at one time that you were not acting bonâ fide in your returning to London at the time when you left Bridgwater. I believe that is the telegram you sent to your landlady (handing it to the witness) ?—Yes; I am much obliged to you for stating that. This was the telegram I sent :—" Bridgwater, 17/11." (It is from Kinglake, Bridg- water, to Mrs. Rope, 28, Hyde Park Place, Marble Arch, London.) " Defeated. I return to-day by the train which reaches London at 6 o'clock."

47,169. After you got back to London, did you find then this awaiting you in London, or did it reach you after ?—I found it after I came back. On reaching London I was told a telegram was awaiting me. I was not told for the first few minutes, but " There is a telegram that has come for you ;" and it was to this effect :—" Bridgwater November 17th. Charles Robert Bate,"—that I told the Commissioners gave me the clue—" A. W. Kinglake, 28, Hyde Park Place, " Marble Arch London. Come back. You are at " the head of the poll."

47,170. And by the following morning's post you received that letter (handing it) ?—I received that letter.

47,171. (Mr. Price.) The time does not appear in the one you sent ?—No ; but the time of the one I sent I can identify, must have been a few minutes before the train started at 1.30.

47,172. (Mr. Coleridge.) The reason I put it to you is that it seems to dispose entirely of any doubt as to your bona fides in leaving Bridgwater, and you thought the whole thing at an end when you went away ?—I did indeed.

41,173. So you stated before ; but that seems to make it quite conclusive.—Then I said, I do not think I mentioned it to the Commissioners, after receiving this surprising telegram, I did not feel inclined to act upon it and go back, as I might have done, imme- diately, but I sent for the evening papers, and found from them great changes had taken place in the state of the poll, but they did not give the close of the poll, and I finally determined that I would not obey the telegram. I thought it so far a questionable affair until the next morning.

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

6 Nov. 1869.

47,174. You could have got back that night?—I could have got back that night, but the next morning I received this:—"Bridgwater, 17th November 1868. "My dear sir,—Mr. C. R. Bate promised to send you "a telegram at four o'clock this afternoon, to state "you were elected not only a member, but at the "head of the poll, as he was not then in a position "to send you the final close of the poll." This shows the time he sent it. "I have now the pleasing "duty of doing so: Kinglake, 732; Vanderbyl, 724; "Westropp, 681; Gray 650. I write you with this "information, thinking you may scarcely credit the "telegram, seeing the news so startling.—Yours very "truly, HENRY LOVIBOND. There is no absolute "necessity of your coming down for a day or two "should you be otherwise engaged."

47,175. (Mr. Price.) I think you told us at Bridgwater, when asked what you should do about paying this 500*l.* drawn out of the bank, and spent on your behalf, that you should like to place the matter in the hands of a man of honour, to say what you should do. I think we are right in telling you, before you take any step about it, that you ought to consider the Act of Parliament, which says if any sum of money is paid after an election, except that returned as proper legal expenses through the proper representative of the candidate, he is liable to be indicted for misdemeanor?—I think it would be my duty to call the attention of the gentleman I refer to at the time to that.

47,176. I think no gentleman ought to advise you without knowing that there is that stringent clause of the Act of Parliament, which makes it a positive misdemeanor for a candidate, or anybody on his behalf, to pay any sum of money which has not been returned through his election agent?—I am obliged to the Commissioners for making that suggestion.

47,177. (Mr. Anstey.) You will also see that in such a payment on your behalf, being a deliberate payment, you would not have the same excuse as was offered by Mr. Prior, that it was drawn and paid in the hurry of the moment?—Quite so; it would be done very deliberately, no doubt.

47,178. Do you wish to say anything more?—In justice to Mr. Vanderbyl, there is one matter I wish to mention to the Commissioners. I should like the Commissioners to know accurately the time of that attempt of his to retain Mr. Henry Lovibond. My impression is, that whilst the evidence was being given, the period when that became known was most prominently brought forward, and not the time when the attempt to retain took place. The attempt to retain took place, supposing the thing to be true at all, as Parliament was sitting, and when there was an apprehension that Bridgwater would probably lose one member. It was when apparently the belief that that would be the case existed, that Mr. Vanderbyl took the step by endeavouring to retain Mr. Henry Lovibond as his agent. The Commissioners see that there would be a difference in the aspect of the case, between an act done at that time and an act done when the two fellow-candidates were actually running their race.

(Mr. Price.) Quite so.

(The witness.) I ought also to say that the endeavours, on which I laid so much stress, to have separate action instead of joint actions were all endeavours addressed to Mr. Henry Lovibond, and not addressed to Mr. Vanderbyl. I made no attempt to bring him to my view. I suppose he believed after that retainer that I should not be successful.

47,179. (Mr. Anstey.) Your bankers' books which you have placed in the hands of our secretary have been examined by him, and I presume you are aware that they fully correspond with your oral evidence?—I was not aware that it was considered so. I shall be glad to have them back. I do not know whether the Commissioners would like it; the pass-book ends some time ago, but I made a memorandum about all subsequent payments.

47,180. (Mr. Price.) I think you told us all about your payments, I mean your annual payments, if you mean that?—Yes; there is no subsequent payment, except the payment of the petition. Those two payments are shown.

47,181. We do not care about it. No doubt it was a great expense. The taxed costs were 1,200*l.*, I believe?—Yes, to pay to the opponents, and then there were our own costs; but perhaps I may take this opportunity of mentioning that my late constituents, or at least a large portion of them, insist on my not paying those. I had paid them as a matter of fact, but they insist on carrying a sum equal to that to my credit at my bankers.

Colonel MOUNTJOY MARTIN sworn.

Colonel M. Martin.

47,182. (Mr. Price.) You were originally a colonel in the Life Guards?—Yes.

47,183. And not at all connected with Bridgwater or the county?—Not the least.

47,184. But a gentleman of fortune?—Yes.

47,185. Known to be a gentleman of large fortune before you came to Bridgwater?—Supposed to be.

47,186. And you went down to Bridgwater and stood in conjunction with Mr. Broadwood, so long ago as 1835?—Yes.

47,187. What we want to know from you is to give us the best of your recollection the sum of money it cost you at that election?—I think I paid 3,000*l.*

47,188. Did you pay anything after the election?—It was after the election, after Parliament had sat for some months; I think weeks or months; I forget which now.

47,189. (Mr. Anstey.) Whom did you pay it to?—Messrs. Lyon and Ellis.

47,190. Who were they?—The solicitors employed by Mr. Broadwood.

47,191. (Mr. Price.) They were the London attorneys of Mr. Broadwood?—Yes.

47,192. Lyon, Barnes, and Ellis, of Spring Gardens?—Yes.

47,193. Is that the whole expenditure you had with respect to Bridgwater?—That is the whole.

47,194. (Mr. Anstey.) Was any sum named to you before you went down as the probable limit?—Well, they thought 3,000*l.* would be the limit.

47,195. And that identical sum you handed over?—I handed over that sum. At least I think it was as near as possible 3,000*l.*

47,196. Was that more or less, do you think?—It was 3,000*l.* I should say, if you ask me.

47,197. Had you spent any money before that?—Never.

47,198. Only your own personal expenses?—I had been down only, I think, at that time a fortnight. I think two days the elections lasted.

47,199. In 1835 two days?—Yes.

47,200. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any conversation with Mr. Richard Smith?—I do not remember.

47,201. Or the pawnbroker, the old man?—No, I do not remember Mr. Smith.

47,202. Who told you it was necessary that money should be spent among the electors?—I think it was Mr. Lyon who said a certain sum would be required.

47,203. (Mr. Price.) Before you went down?—Not before I went down.

47,204. Was any sum named to you before you went down?

47,205. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes, he says 3,000*l.* Who told you 3,000*l.* would be wanted?—I think it was Mr. Lyon.

47,206. (Mr. Price.) Was that mentioned before you went?—No, not before I went.

47,207. (Mr. Anstey.) I asked you whether any sum was mentioned before you went down?—I should think not.

47,208. (Mr. Price.) Did you pay that afterwards, or send any money down?—No, I paid it in to Mr. Lyon or Mr. Ellis; I forget which.

47,209. In one cheque?—In one cheque.

47,210. (Mr. Coleridge.) You never tried again, I think?—No.

Sir William Drake sworn.

(The witness.) Before my examination is proceeded with I have to ask the indulgence of the Commissioners to allow me to refer to a matter of some personal interest. My attention has been called to some remarks which have appeared in the public papers, which may probably lead to the inference that I either went abroad or remained abroad for the purpose of avoiding examination.

(Mr. Price.) No, not a word has fallen from us as to that. We only wanted to know how it was that our letters did not seem to have reached you, and we found afterwards that you were travelling about, and were at Venice.

(Mr. Anstey.) The only remarks I have heard made were some by myself, and others by my colleagues, that we did not think we were treated with very great courtesy.

(The witness.) In order that there may be no misapprehension on this subject hereafter, I ask the indulgence of the Commissioners to allow the correspondence which passed on that subject between the secretary and myself to appear on the minutes.

(Mr. Price.) If you wish it, but is it not enough to say that we had not the least idea that you were out of the way, nor did the idea strike us. We only expected a letter to say where you were and when you were going to return.

(Mr. Coleridge.) A letter addressed to Wiesbaden has been returned through the dead letter office.

(The witness.) I am entirely in the hands of the Commission on the subject.

47,211. (Mr. Price.) Now we wish to have the history of your connexion with Bridgwater. Are you a member of the firm of Bircham, Dalrymple, and Drake?—Yes, I am.

47,212. And were at one time the acting parliamentary agent?—I was the acting parliamentary agent of the party from the year 1859 to 1864.

47,213. Was that on Mr. Coppock's death?—No. Mr. Coppock died, I think, in 1857. I knew very little of him. The application that was made to me to be the parliamentary agent was made in the year 1859, after the general election of 1857.

47,214. (Mr. Coleridge.) Through the late Mr. Phinn, I believe, was not it?—Yes, he was the first person, and I held that position from that time up to 1864.

47,215. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember the election of 1865; I am going to this because that is the time you are first supposed to have been connected?—No. There is no reference made with regard to me in 1865.

47,216. Now, Mr. Travers Smith tells us that he certainly did speak to Sir John Shelley, or was in communication with the party about Sir John Shelley, but I did not quite gather from him whether you had any communication with Sir John Shelley?—None whatever.

47,217. Nor did you see any of the gentlemen who came up as a deputation, or to look out for a candidate at that time?—None.

47,218. (Mr Anstey.) There is a paper undated, but which appears to have been written clearly before the election of 1865, and in contemplation of it, by a deceased clerk of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond at Bridgwater, and we have had some evidence before us to the effect that it was prepared on information received in London. Mr. Travers Smith says that he thinks he gave some portion of the information, but he does not know where the rest was obtained. It is a paper which gives a choice to the managers of the Bridgwater party amongst five possible candidates; one is Mr. Bagehot, another Sir John Villiers Shelley, another the late Governor of Bengal, Sir F. Halliday, and another Lord Milton; the other I forget. Did you afford any part of that information?—None. I had no communication. I do not think I knew a single individual in Bridgwater until July 1866.

47,219. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Travers Smith tells us that he was acting in a somewhat analogous position to yours, and therefore he would be the person to whom they would go?—He was acting in precisely a similar position to that which I held up to 1864.

47,220. Then in 1865 he would be so?—He was parliamentary agent for the party.

47,221. You had then retired from it?—I had retired from it. In the middle of 1864 I found the call on my time was so seriously interfering with my other professional avocations that I asked to be relieved from it.

47,222. I do not know whether you saw what was read out to a gentleman who holds an analogous position with regard to the Tory party, Mr. Spofforth, by one of my colleagues, the extract from the "Law Times," as to the honour and profits of the position, and whether you agree with that?—No.

47,223. As a matter of profit Mr. Spofforth entirely repudiates it?—With reference to that I saw the question put by the Commissioners, and thereupon referred to the article, which to a certain extent is not otherwise than accurate. But I made this note upon it: "The duties of parliamentary agent for the "Liberal party—I speak, of course, only for the "Liberal party—involved advising the leaders of the "party, members of parliament, and candidates on "matters connected with election law, and com-"munications with candidates seeking seats in "Parliament, and with constituencies seeking candi-"dates, and the placing the former in communication "with the latter through the local parties."

47,224. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is very much what the article stated?—Yes; only it speaks about keeping a register of members of boroughs.

47,225. (Mr. Price.) Yes. I wish to ask you is there anything of that sort?—No.

47,226. Is there any such system on the Liberal side of having a register kept of those men who are to be bought at so much?—No.

47,227. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or as to the general expenses of contesting the borough?—To my knowledge no such thing ever existed.

47,228. Because that article would refer to a column to which so much was put down?—To my knowledge there is no such thing. I do not believe in the existence of it.

47,229. (Mr. Price.) If we had been told by some one we should not have thought so much of it, but as it comes forth to the world in a legal publication, that those duties are undertaken by gentlemen in your position, we attached some importance to it, but that is not so, you say?—Clearly not.

47,230. (Mr. Anstey.) There is no office I suppose in London to which an inexperienced person, supposed to be a wealthy man, who was invited down to a borough like Bridgwater, when assured that the election will cost him nothing or next to nothing, may go to inquire what is the experience of previous unfortunate candidates who have been brought forward by similar promises?—Of course a gentleman so circumstanced might apply to the gentleman who held my position, or to Mr. Travers Smith afterwards, and I should have told those gentlemen anything that I knew with regard to the borough; but as to a register being kept of anything of that sort at hand, it is quite wrong.

47,231. No book to turn to?—No.

47,232. (Mr. Coleridge.) That very much tallies with what Mr. Spofforth says. That is the part he takes objection to, and also to the county court treasurerships?—Yes; I speak feelingly.

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

Sir W. Drake.

6 Nov. 1869.

47,233. You will not say it is without honour?—Cela va sans dire. But as regards the position I made this note: "I observe from the newspaper reports of the "proceedings of this Commission, the position of agent "has been referred to as one highly remunerative." This is a misapprehension. No salary or payment whatever is made to the agent by the party. The only pecuniary remuneration attaching to it arises from the usual professional charges as parliamentary agent in the conduct or defence of petitions placed in the agent's hands. I may mention this fact as regards myself on the subject, during the time I acted as agent there was no single election, and I believe that the petitions in which I acted were limited to three, therefore the remuneration I got for all those years' service was not very much.

47,234–5. Not very much according to the reputation which your office has?—No.

47,236. Now tell us with regard to Bridgwater?—Yes; I have made a memorandum which I will read.

47,237. But I must put in the way of question to you. What was the first period at which you had any communication with respect to a contested election for Bridgwater, and with whom?—In answer to that, I beg to state that as to the elections for Bridgwater I have at no time had any communication or any knowledge of the proceeding at that time as to the mode in which it was conducted. The only direct information I have at any time received about Bridgwater arises from applications having been made to me on two occasions by my personal friend, Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

47,238. Was that so, that Mr. Kinglake spoke to you about first standing for Bridgwater?—No, this is long after. I was going to say it arose from applications being made on two occasions; then I was going on to say that the first occasion was in July 1866, when Mr. Kinglake called at my house one evening whilst I was at dinner. I left the dinner table to see him, he was accompanied I think by three gentlemen, to whom he introduced me. I caught the name, I think, of Lovibond, but I did not catch the names of the other gentlemen. I, however, saw from a report of the evidence that has been taken on this Commission that they were Mr. Reed and Mr. Barham. Until I saw that statement I was not really aware who they were.

47,239. Had you known Mr. Lovibond before?—I had not; he may have been in correspondence very likely with our firm, but personally I did not know him. Mr. Kinglake stated that his friends had come to London to seek a candidate to oppose Mr. Patton, and asked me if I could assist them. I said I had ceased some time to act as agent for the Liberal party, and referred them to Mr. Travers Smith, who at that time held that position. There was a short general conversation directed so far as I recollect.

47,240. (Mr. Price.) I think I must ask you on that, because my impression is that it was distinctly said there was some question arose as to whether Mr. Patton should be opposed on going down for re-election after taking office, and we were given to understand that there was some gentleman who objected to it, and thought it was not a proper thing, was that you?—I thought it was not fair.

47,241. I thought the evidence was that you thought it was not?—No; I expressed my surprise, and said, "The course you are taking is a very unusual one. "The election has so recently taken place that I do "not think it is fair to put a man to the expense of "a contest;" but they said, "Oh, we have quite "determined upon that, and what we want to ask you "for is a candidate." I then went into a little discussion with them, still urging the point that there should be no contest, by saying, "But what are your reasonable chances of success?" Because before one suggests the name of any gentleman of course one ought to know whether there is a reasonable hope of his succeeding before he goes down.

47,242. You were aware of course at that time that Mr. Bagehot, who had some connexion with the place, had been beaten by Mr. Patton a month before?—Yes, that was so; and therefore it appeared to me I could not understand what possible chance another contest would have.

47,243. Mr. Bagehot had taken the same view as yourself as one objection to going down, and the other was that he did not choose to spend any more money?—I asked the question, "Why does not Mr. Bagehot go?" and the answer was, "Oh, Mr. Bagehot refuses."

47,244. He took his objection first that it was hardly fair to Mr. Patton, and secondly, that he was digusted with the money which he had had to pay?—I can quite understand. Then there has been a letter read to-day, the existence of which I had entirely forgotten, that was from me to Mr. Kinglake, from which it appears that at that interview I mentioned to them the name of some candidate. It had entirely gone out of my memory, and the gentleman I had mentioned happened to be a personal friend of mine, who a few days before had asked me whether I could not find him a seat; it was Mr. Campbell of Bostock Park. I mentioned his name, and said, "I really do "not know what his feeling in the matter would be; "he merely mentioned to me his wish to go into Par-"liament as a Liberal, and there is no reason why you "should not go and see him, and mention that I gave "you the introduction." Their reply was this, they asked whether he was in town. I said I believed he was at Bostock, they said that was too far to go, they wanted the candidate immediately; and then I said, "Your better plan is to go and see Mr. Travers Smith." I think from the evidence it appears that they did really go to Mr. Campbell.

47,245. Yes, on their way down, they left London without a candidate; their first shot was Mr. Brogden?—Yes.

47,246. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you mention Mr. Brogden?—I never knew Mr. Brogden in my life.

47,247. (Mr. Coleridge.) They stopped at Farringdon Road, and went on to Bostock?—I never heard from Mr. Campbell about it, and in fact it passed out of my memory until this morning.

47,248. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever mention Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

47,249. Nor Mr. Brogden?—No. Mr. Vanderbyl was unknown to me then. I never heard from them again, nor did I know that they had a candidate until I saw in the papers that Mr. Vanderbyl had gone down. I was not aware till then that they had found a candidate. From that time down to the next period which I am going to mention to you I can give you no information of any sort or kind. I know nothing of Bridgwater or its proceedings. The second occasion on which Mr. Kinglake applied to me was early in December 1868, shortly before the presentation of the petition against his and Mr. Vanderbyl's return. He then called on me and stated that he was informed that both parties at Bridgwater were desirous of avoiding the presentation of the petition by coming to an arrangement, and asked me to do him the favour of seeing Mr. Lovibond if he called. At that time the petition was not presented. I believe it was presented a few days afterwards.

47,250. (Mr. Price.) You were doing this, as I understand, quite as a matter of friendship for Mr. Kinglake?—Entirely; he came to me as a friend.

47,251. Not as a professional thing?—Not the least in the world; he is an old friend of mine of 25 years' standing, and came to me at the time on that footing.

47,252. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr Hoskins I suppose was professionally concerned?—I will mention that to you presently in reference to some letters that have been read.

47,253. I only ask whether you had the conveying of instructions of sitting members to Mr. Hoskins or the solicitors?—Permit me to explain it. Perhaps it would be convenient that I should not answer the learned Commissioner's question for a moment, but answer now that when Mr. Kinglake saw me, and told me that the petition was going to be presented, he asked me, "What must I do when the petition is presented?" I said, "What you must do is to appoint an "agent under the Act of Parliament to receive service "of the different matters." He said, "Who shall I appoint?" I said, "Mr. Hoskins acts now as the "parliamentary agent of the Liberal party; you can "not do better than go to him." He said, "Will you tell Mr. Hoskins?" I sent for Mr. Hoskins, and told him that Mr. Kinglake wished him to act as his agent.

47,254. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is Wyatt and Hoskins?—Wyatt and Hoskins. I believe I sent the form which Mr. Hoskins gave me of the appointment of himself as agent to Mr. Kinglake for signature, but beyond that I gave no instructions to Mr. Hoskins at all. There was subsequently a squabble, and poor Mr. Kinglake applied to me to ask me what to do. Mr. Hoskins and Mr. Lovibond had been squabbling as to how the thing was to be conducted. I told him, "I will send for Mr. Hoskins and explain to him that "all he was to do was to take the formal part of the "work here, and that the real evidence would rest "with Mr. Lovibond." That is my answer to the Commissioner's question. I may mention that Mr. Kinglake asked me if I would see Mr. Lovibond if he called. I asked Mr. Kinglake if he was in any manner personally compromised. I said, "Now, tell "me, Kinglake, are you in this matter at all personally "compromised?" He assured me he was not, and that he left Bridgwater believing the election lost, and on his arrival at his residence in London he, to his surprise, found a telegram requesting his immediate return; that he was at the head of the poll.

47,255. You mean by "personally," was he privy to it?—I think the words meant privy to any illegal expenditure.

47,256. You mean personally as distinguished from agents, not from Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, my feeling was anxiety in the first instance for him, and I said, "Tell me are you personally compromised in the matter?" By that I meant was he personally cognizant of illegal expenditure in any way.

47,257. (Mr. Price.) If called on to give evidence would he be able to go into the box and say, "I know "nothing whatever of any illegal expenditure, and "am perfectly ignorant of it?"—That is the first question that suggested itself to my mind, to ask a man who came as Mr. Kinglake did, and he answered me in the frankest manner. He told me the story I have heard him tell here to-day, that he went away from Bridgwater thinking the election was lost. Then Mr. Lovibond called on me, I think it was the day after my interview, but I am unable to fix the precise day; at all events, immediately after that interview, and then represented to me that all persons were desirous of coming to an arrangement, but that it could only be effected by Mr. Vanderbyl agreeing to resign his seat, and he asked me to see that gentleman, and I expressed my willingness to do so if he called on me, but as he was personally unknown to me I could not otherwise communicate with him. At that time I had not seen Mr. Vanderbyl or known him personally at all. Here I may state that the impression left on my mind from that interview with Mr. Lovibond—I cannot refer to any particular expression which he used—but the impression he left on my mind was that bribery had been resorted to by Mr. Vanderbyl and his friends, but that Mr. Kinglake and his friends were no party to it, but that inasmuch as Mr. Kinglake's agents and Mr. Vanderbyl's agents were the same that was the way in which Mr. Vanderbyl's interests were affected. I can understand now why he should have left that impression on my mind, because he knew Mr. Kinglake came to me as his personal friend, and therefore if I had known it was only Mr. Vanderbyl who was personally compromised in the matter, I should have said, "Well, let the matter go on, I am not going to interfere further;" but he was interested in saying in point of fact Mr. Kinglake's friends were concerned in the matter, inasmuch as they were the same agents.

47,258. (Mr. Anstey.) At all events, Mr. Lovibond concealed from you his knowledge, if he had any, of corrupt practices having been dealt in on both sides; that is to say, for both candidates?—Yes, he did. I will mention to you afterwards when I had a different impression. At that time it was clearly the impression on my mind.

47,259. (Mr. Price.) Therefore that left you free to act as a friend of Mr. Kinglake without in any way compromising him, on the understanding that he was guiltless of any bribery?—Yes, entirely so. You will see the point at which I arrived at a different conclusion was much later in the affair. Then Mr. Vanderbyl, I presume at Mr. Lovibond's instance, a few days afterwards called on me. Up to that time Mr. Vanderbyl was a perfect stranger to me, and I then stated to him that he called on me with reference to an arrangement which had been proposed by a compromise which involved his giving up the seat. He appeared quite aware, of course, as he was, of the object with which he had called on me, and I asked him distinctly if he knew of any circumstance connected with the election, or with the illegal expenditure of money at the election, which should lead to the idea that he or his friends were in any manner compromised. He answered me most distinctly and most positively that neither he, nor to the best of his knowledge any of his friends were aware of any such expenditure; and he then stated that under those circumstances he, of course, was unwilling to give up his seat, and, in fact, refused to give up his seat. I replied, "You, Mr. Vanderbyl, of course, know best;" and there the interview ended. That was my sole interview with Mr. Vanderbyl.

47,260. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you fix what period this was?—Yes, I can fix Mr. Vanderbyl, because I find curiously enough there is a note of his calling by my clerk. He seemed to have called. It was on the 7th December. The petition was presented on the 8th. At the time Mr. Vanderbyl communicated with me there was no petition presented. I think the petition was presented on the 8th, and Mr. Vanderbyl called on me on the 7th December. Then Mr. Lovibond subsequently—I cannot quite fix the date, but some days afterwards; I should think somewhere about the 15th December—called on me to learn the result of my interview with Mr. Vanderbyl; whether it was quite to learn the result of my interview with Mr. Vanderbyl or to talk the matter over I do not know, because I rather gathered from what took place that he knew the position Mr. Vanderbyl was in.

47,261. (Mr. Price.) You did not think right to mention to Mr. Vanderbyl what Mr. Lovibond had told you?—If Mr. Lovibond had told me anything which I could have laid hold of, and said, "Now Mr. Lovibond tells me so-and-so," I should have done it, because I frankly tell you, when I asked Mr. Vanderbyl the question I expected a different answer; but it is merely the impression I have from conversation. I could put nothing to him; that was my difficulty. Then the next interview I had on the subject seems to have been about the 11th January, when Mr. Kinglake called, and he then told me that he feared that some of the professional men, he did not mention any names, were compromised, and rather than that they should suffer he was willing to give up his seat. I replied that I had understood from Mr. Lovibond that his (Mr. Kinglake's) retirement would not be accepted by the Tory party, and as Mr. Vanderbyl had absolutely refused there was no alternative but to fight out the petition. Now it is due to Mr. Kinglake that I should state that neither at that interview nor on any other occasion did Mr. Kinglake say or imply anything which led me to think that he was in any manner a party to any illegal expenditure. I believed then, as I believe now, that although he had grave suspicions that money had been spent by Mr. Vanderbyl's party, he believed his friends had not been any party to it.

47,262. (Mr. Anstey.) Even down to the month of January?—This was the month of January. I am convinced, as I am of my own existence, that Mr. Kinglake knew nothing of it.

47,263. At all events he said nothing to you on that occasion which led you to suppose that he suspected his friend, Mr. Lovibond, or his friend, Mr. Barham, being in any way parties to an arrangement issuing or likely to issue in corrupt practices?—I do not know whether I quite take the Commissioner's question accurately.

47,264. The words he used conveyed to your mind the impression that out of pity or compassion for professional gentlemen down at Bridgwater he was prepared to give up his seat?—Yes, that was so.

47,265. Do I understand you to qualify that statement by what you have afterwards said, which seems to imply, though it does not express, that Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham were not friends?—I beg pardon. I have no doubt what I said conveyed that impression, but what I meant by friends was, not professional friends. Mr. Kinglake's impression at that time as conveyed by him was that there had been expenditure on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl's agents, and Mr. Vanderbyl's agents and his agents were the same, and that the professional men were compromised, and that therefore he, Mr. Kinglake——

(Mr. Price.) It might be understood in that way.

47,266. (Mr. Anstey.) I wanted merely to make it clear that you did understand him to mean Mr. Lovibond as much as the rest?—Certainly.

47,267. (Mr. Coleridge.) All the agents, as I understand?—All the agents.

47,268. (Mr. Anstey.) My reason for dwelling upon it is that (perhaps you are not aware of the fact) they are said to appear by different agents at the election—Mr. Vanderbyl by Messrs. Reed and Cook, and he by Mr. Lovibond?—There is no doubt they were agents of the two.

47,269. (Mr. Price.) I have no doubt they would have been held so if any question had arisen about it?—My impression is that they had the same agents.

47,270. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Kinglake drew no distinction?—No, certainly not.

47,271. Allow me to ask, for you have passed it over, and I did not interrupt you at the time; you see this is January, and early or some time in the month of December (I suppose in the first week in December) all chance of a compromise had been knocked in the head, partly by the refusal of the local politicians to approve of it, and partly, as we understand—as I understand—from correspondence that has been read to-day, partly because of the untoward action of this Mr. Hoskins in demanding, whilst the negociation for a compromise was going on, particulars of the acts of bribery and treating charged?—I think that must have been afterwards.

47,272. No; the dates are all November except your last letter?—I think the learned Commissioner is in error there, because——

47,273. (Mr. Price.) It must have been after the petition the particulars were applied for?—The petition was not presented until the 8th of December. Perhaps you meant to say "December."

47,274. (Mr. Anstey.) I said "December." Your last letter was in December. I was going to say when you stopped me that it appears from that correspondence ending with your last letter, which is in December, that this untoward action on the part of Mr. Hoskins was one of the contributing causes to that result. That is what appears to me. Is that so?—I have not the least notion.

47,275. You have no knowledge?—I have no knowledge whatever on the subject; not the least.

47,276. I wanted you to explain that about Mr. Hoskins. What induced Mr. Hoskins to take out that summons if the negociation was likely to end?—Mr. Hoskins, I take it, was no party to the negociation. He would have been a very unwise man if he had been, because he was the agent upon the record, and if there had been any withdrawal of the petition it would have been his duty to go before the judge and swear that he knew nothing about the compromise. Therefore he would have been the last man who would have been a party to the compromise.

47,277. No; but you remember they had a very good case, or they thought they had a very good case, to go to the judge with, namely, the special case about the Wembdon voters?—I was just coming to that, and I was going to mention it. I had put it in order according to date. You will find that this is in January. You will find that this goes up to the 30th of January.

47,278. Oh, very well?—Well, there it ended as it appeared to me. To the best of my recollection I did not see Mr. Kinglake any further on the subject of the proposed arrangement, and I considered the question of compromise at an end, and dismissed the matter from my mind. The petition was presented, and I had no more to do with it; but it is evident that there must have been a continuation of the proposal, as the learned Commissioner mentioned, because Mr. Lovibond about the 20th of January, or on the 20th of January, called upon me again, and informed me that a suggestion had been made that a special case for the decision of the court as to the right of a certain class of voters to vote should be agreed to, and that the result of the petition should be dependent upon the course of the decision on the point. I did not clearly understand the proposition, and in fact I paid very little attention to it.

47,279. (Mr. Coleridge.) And without the withdrawal of the allegations of bribery it would have been no good?—The allegation of bribery was to be withdrawn. The real fact is that the man appeared to me so——

47,280. (Mr. Price.) It might have affected the scrutiny, on a scrutiny, you know, and that only?—Well, I could not refuse to see the man. He came to me, and he appeared so excessively anxious that the thing should be withdrawn, and really it seemed that he came to unbosom his mind, and to get a little consolation.

47,281. (Mr. Anstey.) Who did?—Mr. Lovibond.

47,282. Then you saw somebody about that immediately?—Yes, I did. This relates to a letter which has been read to-day. I wrote a letter to Mr. Kinglake, which arose from this circumstance on the 20th of January. I do not know what the date of that letter is, but I have no doubt it was written on the same day. However, on the 30th of January Mr. Brice, who I had not previously known, called upon me (Mr. Brice, as you are aware, was the Conservative agent; I presume he called upon me at Mr. Mr. Lovibond's request) and intimated that that was so; and then I asked him whether there was anything in the suggestion about a special case, because I may mention that there seemed to be a great want of confidence between the parties, and I really could not be quite sure that Mr. Lovibond's representations to me upon the matter were quite accurate. I do not mean that he intended wilfully to misrepresent.

47,283. (Mr. Price.) You probably saw there was a feeling?—There was a feeling. I then asked Mr. Brice if there was anything in the suggestion, and he said that he did not think it could be carried out; but he intimated, as I understood him, that on the petition the scrutiny would be alone proceeded with, and he having given me that intimation, I naturally wrote a line to Mr. Kinglake, and said, "I have reason to believe that the scrutiny alone will be proceeded with."

47,284. (Mr. Anstey.) In fact, that is the letter that has been read to-day?—Just so. But I may mention that I understood subsequently that Mr. Brice had said that he misunderstood me. It is not very important, but still——

(Mr. Price.) No, it is not important.

(The witness.) Well, then, sir, it was either the 12th or the 17th of February. I see Mr. Lovibond's name is down on my call book for both days, though as far as I can make out I did not see him except on one of the occasions, and therefore I think it must have been on the 17th, he called upon me, and I then told him what had passed between me and Mr. Brice, and I said that Mr. Brice had misunderstood me on the subject at that interview. I then for the first time gathered that some of Mr. Kinglake's friends were implicated in the illegal expenditure of money. That was the first time that I had the slightest notion of Mr. Kinglake's friends—I am speaking now of his friends apart from professional men—that any of Mr. Kinglake's friends were implicated.

47,285. (Mr. Anstey.) What date was that? Can you fix it?—Yes, I fix it to be either the 12th or the 17th of February.

47,286. About a fortnight before the trial?—The trial, I think, was on the 23rd.

47,287. The 24th I think; it may have been the 23rd?—Well, this made me very anxious for Mr. Kinglake, and I at once put it to Mr. Lovibond in the most serious manner that I could, to know whether Mr. Kinglake was aware of it, and Mr. Lovibond assured me most positively and most distinctly—he reiterated it several times—that Mr. Kinglake did not know anything about it.

47,288. And did Mr. Lovibond mention the friends to you?—He mentioned none, sir; and it was not any definite statement. There were no words that I could lay hold of as being a distinct statement to that effect, but he was speaking of the petition, and he said, "It must be withdrawn"—most emphatically it must be withdrawn, otherwise people would be implicated; and it is very difficult to say how I got the impression, but the impression was upon my mind.

47,289. (Mr. Price.) His anxiety, I suppose, caused it?—Well, his anxiety had a good deal to do with it—his manner and way. At all events I came to the conclusion in my mind that Mr. Kinglake's friends had been in some way mixed up.

47,290. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had Mr. Kinglake at this time mentioned to you what has been called his point of law? He had got the notion that all his authority to the agents was withdrawn by leaving the place, and that therefore he was not implicated?—No.

47,291. He never mentioned that to you?—No.

47,292. (Mr. Price.) That would be afterwards, I suppose, when he began to be acquainted with the fact that corrupt practices had taken place?—I should think that that proposition would be a point of agency. Would not it have been a point which would have been discussed on the question of agency about the petition?

(Mr. Price.) No doubt he thought the point might be taken in his favour.

47,293. (Mr. Coleridge.) I thought he might have mentioned it to you?—No, he did not.

47,294. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on?—That, sir, I am afraid is the finis, as far as I am concerned.

47,295. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the result of that conversation?—The result of the last conversation?

47,296. Yes; you did not finish it?—The result of the last conversation was that Mr. Lovibond assured me that Mr. Kinglake knew nothing about the illegal expenditure.

47,297. (Mr. Price.) Then you took no further steps?—None, sir; the thing was at an end. I had nothing to do with the petition; nothing to do with the conduct or with the evidence, nor was I consulted upon it in any way. In fact, my experience in the matter was small, and simply a matter of personal friendship with Mr. Kinglake.

47,298. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything to do with the election of 1859? You say you came in in 1857?—No, nothing at all.

47,299. Nothing to do with the Bridgwater election of 1859?—Nothing whatever.

47,300. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood you to say at the beginning of your examination that you had nothing to do with any Bridgwater election before you were consulted, and only to the extent of being consulted, in 1866?—That is quite true, sir; absolutely true.

(Mr. Price.) Very well, Sir William, we have nothing more to ask you.

JOHN SMITH recalled.

J. Smith.

47,301. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Smith, you know we declined to give you a certificate when you applied for it at Bridgwater, but we have some questions to put to you now, and upon the manner in which you answer those questions will depend whether we shall not reconsider our decision, and grant you a certificate. And first and foremost we want to ask you about this letter which you wrote to Mr. Kinglake. We had better have the actual document before us; you have heard it read?—I did.

47,302. You have heard it read; you recognize it as your letter?—There is only one letter there I can recognize, that is, the memorandum.

47,303. What we wanted you to explain was this. There are expressions of regret at the beginning of the letter which we need not trouble you with. Then you say, "If I had only have known at 5 in the "morning what I knew at half-past 9 things would "have been very, very different, for we would have "taken things in our own hands afterwards, chancing "results." Now, then, what do you mean when you say that if you had known at 5 in the morning what you had known at half-past 9 things would have been very, very different?—On the evening before the election of Sir John Shelley, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond sent for myself and Bussell at 11 o'clock at night, and told us to take down a list of the names of every man that had to be bribed, and then he told me that at 5 in the morning Mr. Fletcher, who is his clerk, would come down to our house with money.

47,304. (Mr. Coleridge.) You never told us this at Bridgwater?—No, it quite slipped my memory.

47,305. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on?—And he never came. About half-past 7 in the morning a letter was sent down to me to go up to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, and then he told me that Sir John Shelley would spend no money.

47,306. You mean, had you known at 5 that Sir John Shelley would spend no money?—Yes; then I should have sent round to the men I had intrusted the lists to to pay the men—to tell them there would be no money coming, and there is no doubt in my mind that they would have polled.

47,307. (Mr. Coleridge.) If they got no money?—Without money.

47,308. (Mr. Anstey.) How would they have done that, when you go on to say, "We should have taken "things into our own hands afterwards, chancing "results;" that means, daring the consequences?—Oh no, of course we should not have found the money ourselves. It would have been a large item.

47,309. Of course. Therefore, I say, it is entirely inconsistent with the explanation?—No; what I intended to do was to go round to the men who had the lists, and tell them there would be no money.

47,310. And "afterwards chancing results." What do you mean by "chancing results?" You say first of all that you very much lament the result that has taken place of the policy pursued, namely, the defeat of Sir John Shelley and the comparative defeat of Mr. Kinglake, because he is not at the head of the poll. Then you go on to say that if you had known at 5 o'clock what you knew at half-past 9 you would have taken the matter into your own hands afterwards, chancing results, thereby plainly implying, as it appears to me (and does it not appear to you?) that you would have taken a different course from that taken by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond; you would have taken a course which would have exposed you and your friends to some peril, but which could not have had a worse effect than had been produced already, and which might have resulted in the return of Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake. Is not that the plain meaning of that letter?—No, we could not have raised the money.

47,311. (Mr. Price.) Give us your interpretation of

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

J. Smith.

6 Nov. 1869.

chancing the results. What did you mean by that? Do you mean the chance of how the election terminated, how it ended?—No; my meaning was this, that I should have gone round with other friends of mine and seen the men we had given the lists to, and told them to work without money; but we never knew it before the election was won. It was won by half-past nine in the morning.

47,312. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us that your experience of Bridgwater was, that nothing could be done without money?—I think it was proved that at the last election there was a lot of work done without a shilling of money.

47,313. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that you think the result might possibly have been different if at five o'clock, or as early after five as you could, you had sent round to say that Sir John Shelley would not spend money? Do you think that would have had a better effect upon the chances?—Mr. Westropp would not have had such a large majority.

47,314. Why?—Because the election was won by half-past 9 o'clock.

47,315. But it was won by bribery?—I am aware of that.

47,316. Then if the other side bribed, and if your bribable men knew there was no money, of course they would have gone to the other side and increased the majority?—They did do it.

47,317. You say there would have been a different result, as I understand?—Not the word "result."

47,318. No, no; but you say in your letter "things would have been very, very different." Do you mean by that, that if you had gone and let it be known that Sir John Shelley would spend no money it would have given him a better chance?—It would decrease the majority of Westropp in my mind.

47,319. How?—Because I think a large number of men went with the stream when they found it was equal.

47,320. But these were all men who were determined to get money one side or the other?—There is always a large class of them.

47,321. (Mr. Anstey.) You say there was no bribery on your side?—Yes.

47,322. Then if you had told the men at five o'clock that they were not to bribe there would still have been no bribery?—Just so.

47,323. Then how would that have changed the condition of things?—We should have tried to induce the men to have voted for Shelley.

47,324. Then what danger could you possibly have incurred, or what would you have had afterwards to "chance" in that case? You would have had no danger to chance. What do you mean by that, by "chancing results"?—I cannot explain those two words.

47,325. Just follow me. I do not think you have read this letter since you have sent it to Mr. Kinglake?—I have quite forgotten it.

47,326. I will just refresh your memory. I will read to you a few passages before those that the Chief Commissioner read: "I have hardly the heart to do so," that is, to write; "and you can understand for what reason." Well, then, after an expression of grief, you go on to say, "I should like very much to know, "and numbers beside myself, whose fault it was that "placed us in the position we are. Yours and Sir "John Shelley's return was unmistakeable"?

(The witness.) That is according to the poll book.

47,327. (Mr. Price.) According to the poll book?—According to the canvass book I mean.

47,328. (Mr. Anstey, reading.) "And why such an "error of judgment should have been made to me is "very curious." What is the error of judgment?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, up to 2 o'clock in the morning, told us there would be money.

47,329. And you had been telling the electors so?—I have, no doubt.

47,330. Then why did you not tell us that before, at Bridgwater; because you were asked the question distinctly whether any promise had been made to the voters at all. Your answer was, none to your knowledge?—If I did say so I made a mistake.

47,331. Now, it appears that you had been promising them up to 5 o'clock?—No, not up to 5 o'clock, 2 o'clock.

(Mr. Price.) Up to that time they had gone to bed with the promises?

47,332. (Mr. Anstey, reading.) "If I had only have "known at five in the morning what I knew at half-"past nine;"—that is, half-past nine in the morning?—Yes.

47,333. Well, then you say if you had known at half-past nine. Now I will stop you there. What time did you yourself rise that morning, the polling day?—About 5 o'clock.

47,334. Then between five and half-past nine you were still under the impression which you have signified, namely, that money would be spent?—No doubt of it.

47,335. And you were communicating that fact during those four hours and half to everybody you met?—No; I had the day before, because I anticipated that Fletcher, Mr. Lovibond's clerk, would come down with it.

47,336. Had you told anybody that morning?—No.

47,337. Then you go on, "Things would have been "very, very different, for we would have taken things "in our hands afterwards, chancing results." Now I again ask you to put these lines in connexion with the part I had previously read to you, and tell me whether "afterwards chancing results" does not mean this, afterwards facing the danger?—No; chancing the result was, as I have told you before, that we should have gone round to the men and tried if the men would poll without being paid.

47,338. But what is the meaning of "afterwards?" Something is to happen afterwards, not running the risk of the present loss of the election, but running some risk, which is to declare itself afterwards. What can that be but penalties for bribery, or perhaps an election petition? Do not you see that yourself?—It is an unfortunate two words, no doubt of it. I cannot explain it.

47,339. You cannot explain it?—No.

47,340. You go on to say, "That is the only thing "we now grieve at; they, the other side, as we were "organized, had not the skeleton of a chance. Why "you and ourselves should be so pained over this "matter is so difficult to understand by us. I hope "you will bear up against it. We hold a meeting to-"night at Mr. Phelps's"?—There was no meeting at Mr. Phelps's.

47,341. "Of that of course you will be advised of "by Mr. Henry Lovibond. I wish once more to "express to you our sorrow." There is not a syllable in the rest of the letter which bears even remotely the construction which you wish us to put upon the part that has been read, namely, that you would have told the voters there was to be no money?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond told us from time to time, and day by day, that the men would have money, and that the money would be paid to the men.

47,342. You cannot explain this?—The two words I cannot explain.

(Mr. Price.) Well, I think, Mr. Smith, we must take time to consider, because we must look at the rest of your evidence, you know, as compared with the evidence you have given to-day. Certainly some of it is very different, and some of it entirely new, although there was a full opportunity for you telling us about it before at Bridgwater. We were there eight weeks, and you had plenty of opportunity. However, we must now consider, in looking back at your former evidence, and comparing it with what you have told us to-day, what we must do about the certificate.

47,343. (Mr. Anstey.) Who did Mr. Benjamin Lovibond tell you was to be the person to provide money for Sir John Shelley's and Mr. Kinglake's election?—I took it that Mr. Benamin Lovibond was entirely the agent of Sir John Shelley, and he told me that he would pay the money his own self.

47,344. He said so?—Oh yes.

47,345. That he (Benjamin Lovibond) his own self would pay it?—Yes.

47,346. Did he ask you what sum would be paid?—No.

47,347. Did he ask you what sum would be necessary?—No, but he told us on the evening before, myself and Bussell, that the men would have 10*l.* each.

47,348. Are you sure Bussell was present?—He was with me.

47,349. Were you present when Henry Bussell was examined before us?—I was.

47,350. Do you remember Henry Bussell stating to us that some days before the election he had been assured by Mr. Lovibond that Sir John Shelley did not intend to spend money?—No.

47,351. But if he did say so; if Mr. Bussell told us that some days before the election Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had already informed him that Sir John Shelley was not going to spend any money, would not that qualify your recollection when you state that he was present at the conversation the very night before the election?—Bussell must have made a mistake if he mentioned it.

47,352. You are quite clear about that?—Quite clear.

47,353. And how many persons had you communicated that fact to, if it were a fact, what Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had told you? You see you had made a list of the bribery people, and to how many people did you speak on the subject and tell this to?—I went round the table and across his dining room and asked him what he thought the probability of the amount of money we should give the men, and he said "As usual, 10*l.*;" and then myself and Bussell made out the lists with perhaps 100 men or something of that kind; and it was conveyed to us that money should be had on the forthcoming morning.

47,354. How many men, I want to know?—I think about 100.

47,355. To how many persons did you communicate that fact, that there were to be about 100 paid 10*l.* a head?—I should think five besides myself.

47,356. (Mr. Coleridge.) The men that were to distribute the money?—Yes.

47,357. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were they?—The regular men. What I said was this, "We shall give 10*l.*"

47,358. Were the five persons to whom you communicated that people who were bribable, or were they people who were sub-bribers?—Sub-bribers.

47,359. Bussell could not have been one, for you say he was present?—He was present.

47,360. Who were the persons?—I believe the people I told were such men as Pollard.

47,361. Well, who else?—I forget for the moment.

47,362. Did you tell Pollard?—I did.

47,363. He is one?—We made a list out. A list was given to him, a sub-list.

47,364. Allan was out of the case, for he was not then a bribery agent in 1865?—I believe not.

47,365. Bussell could not have been one, for he was present and did not need to be informed; and you have only named one. There were five altogether. Was Jarman one?—Henry Jarman?

47,366. The Liberal Jarman. There were two of them bribers?—I think one was Hill, in John Street. I am not sure whether he was there or not.

47,367. There is only one thing more that I want to ask you, that is with reference to this last election, 1868. When did the county election fall? Do you recollect whether it was the same day as the Bridgwater election?—Afterwards.

47,368. Afterwards? Well, did you go out either before the county election, or during the county election, in order to bribe one or two county voters?—I think not.

47,369. Now, recollect. To Highbridge?—I did.

47,370. Did you not tell what you had done to Mr. Bubbage, the landlord of the hotel there?—I did not to Mr. Bubbage; it might be some one there.

47,371. And did you bribe those two persons?—I did. I will tell you the reason. A part of my premises that I had at Highbridge, the committee room——

47,372. Now, I wish to know, had those persons, whoever they were, used the example of Bridgwater and of the Bridgwater electors with you as a reason why they should have money for their votes?—They did.

47,373. What did they say?—They said that money was paid in Bridgwater; they did not see why it should not be in the county.

47,374. I will ask you, generally did you find that feeling pretty general, or is it rare in the hundreds or districts (or whatever you call them) surrounding Bridgwater?—Very rare. They never think of it.

47,375. But in this case they did think of it?—In this case they did.

47,376. (Mr. Price.) What rank of life were they in?—One was a master of a small vessel. The bribery amounted to this: he owed me about 2*s.* 9*d.* on the book, and he said, "If I poll for so-and-so you will have to put 'paid' to my account."

47,377 What did you pay?—Four or five shillings altogether.

47,378. (Mr. Coleridge.) Between the two?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) They did not come up to the tariff in the borough at all.

47,379. (Mr. Coleridge.) One question I want to ask you about 1865. It was thought at one time that Tynte would come forward then, was it not?—I do not recollect. I think not.

47,380. Do you recollect any compromise with him about his withdrawing?—I have heard a great deal about it, but I know nothing about it.

47,381. What have you heard?—About Mr. Heard and some libel that was in the paper.

47,382. About his getting a sum of money to withdraw in 1865.?—I never heard of that. There was a letter which was referred to about Mr. Kinglake coming to Bridgwater. I should like to explain that, that he had better put in an appearance.

47,383. (Mr. Anstey.) A letter from you?—Yes. At the last election it was considered amongst a lot of Bridgwater people that they should canvass. I myself was not against canvassing. I believe the professional gentlemen of Bridgwater kept the members back. People came to me, and then I wrote that letter to say that he had better put in an appearance.

47,384. Were you present when Mr. Westropp was examined before us at Bridgwater?—Part of the time.

47,385. Did you hear that part of Mr. Westropp's evidence which related to yourself and your application to him for assistance, and your promising him that you would not be active against him at the election?—I was not present.

47,386. Well, I should like to have that read to you?—I have read it in the paper. It was a masonic communication between myself and Mr. Westropp.

47,387. I do not know what "masonic" means. Masonry is not recognized by law to that extent?—No; perfectly right.

47,388. I want to ask you (you say you have read it or become acquainted with it in some way since), do you wish to be understood as contradicting Mr. Westropp's account of that correspondence, or those communications between him and you, or do you confirm his statement?—What I contend is this, that when I saw Mr. Westropp in London I promised him that so far as voting for him——

47,389. Will you answer my question? It is a very simple one; if you say that you do not contradict it, I shall not have it read; if you say you do contradict

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

J. Smith.

6 Nov. 1869.

it, I shall have it read, and ask you what part you contradict?—I can contradict nothing except about voting for him. That I never undertook to do.

47,390. (Mr. Price.) He did not say that. He said no more than what everybody thought was the meaning of your letter. You say in your letter that you would take no part against him. He judged, as everybody would judge, that a man who said that certainly would not vote against him?—I think I can explain.

47,391. (Mr. Anstey.) You had seen him?—Once or twice.

47,392. Well, it was in the conversations with him that that is said to have taken place?—But Mr. Westropp will never tell you that I promised to vote for him.

47,393. (Mr. Price.) I do not think he said so, but he said that he understood you to mean that you would not vote against him. If you used expressions of that kind, either in a letter or by word of mouth, that you would take no part against him, he naturally thought you would not vote against him?—The day Mr. Westropp called in my shop I was taking out the old shop front and putting in a new one, and the two men who were there were men who had voted for him and heard his conversation, and also Mr. Lilly's.

47,394. (Mr. Anstey.) It is not a question of what took place there, but what took place in London?—I did not tell him I would vote for him.

47,395. He says that you promised you would not vote against him, and that you gave him to understand so in London?—Oh no, I did not.

47,396. Your letter to him fully bears that out, because you say that you would take no part against him. With that exception you say you confirm his statement?—Yes.

Mr. A. W. Kinglake.

Mr. Alexander William Kinglake recalled.

47,397. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the election of 1865, when Sir John Shelley and you stood, had Colonel Tynte definitely retired at that time?—Yes.

47,398. Was not he somewhat hovering about in the field, and was not some inducement brought to bear upon him to get him to retire?—No, none. His retiring was extremely reluctant, but the actual cause of it, as I always understood, was that there were claimants in Bridgwater whose outstanding claims made it quite impossible that he could stand unless they were satisfied.

47,399. Judgments out against him?—Yes.

47,400. Well, then, do you know of a sum of something like a thousand pounds being paid to satisfy those judgments, on condition that he retired?—Oh no, I never heard a breath of it at all.

47,401. Did you ever hear of Colonel Tynte receiving any sum of money in consideration of his not coming forward at that election?—No, nothing. I always understood that he considered himself aggrieved at being driven from the place, merely because there was that difficulty about the local debts.

47,402. Then you know nothing whatever about any sum of money being paid to him to persuade him to go out?—No, I never heard of it.

47,403. Do you know whether those debts were paid amongst the debts that were afterwards paid out of the monies provided at that election or the following one of Vanderbyl's?—No, I never heard that they were paid at all.

47,404. (Mr. Anstey.) Something was said to-day, I forget by whom, (not by yourself, I think,) about a list being made by Mr. Lovibond of Colonel Tynte's debts before one of those elections. We have among the papers that were laid before us by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's executor, Mr. Sully the mayor, a list of such debts which was amongst the election papers either for 1857 or 1859. Can you throw any light upon that?—No, none whatever.

47,405. You do not confirm or contradict the statement that that list was prepared with reference to one of those coming elections?—No, I have no knowledge whatever.

Mr. Redfern.

Mr. Redfern recalled.

47,406. (Mr. Price.) You have brought a book here?—Yes; it is not the journal. I find there is nothing in the journal about the matter.

47,407. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understood you to say that you have not brought the journal?—No, there is nothing in it.

47,408. I particularly requested it?—There is nothing in it.

47,409. But you were asked to bring it?—But I thought you wanted to see an entry, but there is no entry.

47,410. (Mr. Price.) Still it would have been more satisfactory, Mr. Redfern?—We will send for it now.

(Mr. Price.) It is past two, and we must rise soon.

(Mr. Anstey.) You see, Mr. Redfern, that is no explanation at all, because at this moment it is perfectly true with regard to another of your books, that certain entries are not now in it, but it is equally true that in that book there were two entries once which are no longer there; and I should like to satisfy myself by ocular inspection of your journal, that in folio 121, referred to in that book, there not only is not now but that there never was any entry which we should like to see, and that I can only do by my own inspection.

(The witness.) Oh yes.

47,411. (Mr Price.) If it ought to appear in that book as we understood the other day by the reference made, by the number put down (121), if in the ordinary course of business it ought to appear in that book, and I understood you to say so——?—Well, the journal is usually where all these things are.

47,412. The object of those figures, 121, is to give the reference to the folio in the journal?—Yes; you must understand one thing; I am not perfectly acquainted with book-keeping myself.

47,413. If it ought to appear there, we shall have the fact when the book is produced before us, that there again there is another irregularity with regard to those entries?—I think you will be able to understand that better by seeing the books.

47,414. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you a person who could bring the journal by 4 o'clock?—It is here. (A book was passed to Mr. Anstey.)

47,415. I thought you said it was not here?—I did not think it was.

47,416. Now where is the book, first of all, which contains the reference?—This is one of them. (Producing a locked book.)

47,417. (Mr. Price.) That is the book you showed us the other day?—Yes.

47,418. (Mr. Anstey, referring to the book whcih had been handed to him.) This is the cash book; this is not the journal?—That is the only one we use.

47,419. Have you any journal for the year 1868?—I do not know.

(Mr. Price.) Had not we better have Mr. Walter?

(The witness.) I think you had better have him.

47,420. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know of any journal yourself?—I do not know much about the books.

47,421. But you can answer that question. Do you know of any journal?—No, I do not. You had better have Mr. Walter.

47,422. Let me look at the reference?—What reference?

47,423. The reference in the column. There was an entry there in the book you showed us before. (The book was passed to the learned Commissioner.)

Mr. JOHN WALTER sworn.

47,424. (Mr. Price.) Are you a book-keeper to Messrs. Fennelly, Redfern, & Co. ?—I am.

47,425. What books are these that you produce here ?—This is the duplicate book.

47,426. The duplicate of the banker's pass book ?—Yes. Here is the journalized cash book, and that is the private ledger.

47,427. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you a journal in your firm ?—Properly so called we have not, because every book is journalized.

47,428. Which is the book called "journal" by Mr. Redfern in his last examination, and which is referred to here, as he says, in a column containing figures, 121, 120, and so on, in which Mr. Fennelly's capital account for 1868 is referred to ?—He refers to that book.

47,429. The book now before me, called what ?—The cash book.

47,430. The journalized cash book ?—The journalized cash book.

47,431. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you explain how it is that whereas against the item which has been interpolated out of its date, "November 18th" coming in before "November 9th," and entered thus, "Cash 245*l.*," there is a reference to page 121 of some book ?—This is the book.

47,432. And there neither appears such an entry nor such a sum nor anything whatever to explain it. That it may appear on the shorthand writer's notes again I will first of all give you the particulars: First of all the book stood thus, the private account of Mr. Fennelly, "1868, November 9th," and so on. Then afterwards there has been inserted "November 18th, to cash, folio or page 121, 245*l.*" That reference you say, 121, is to this book. I turn to this book. I find the date November 18th, but no such sum as 245*l.*, nor anything said about cash ?—That is the wrong side of the book.

47,433. Oh, you mean it is on the other ? Oh, I see, here is an alteration again. When was this alteraion made?—It was made in the month of April this year.

47,434. I see in this book this alteration: "P. Vanderbyl," as it stood originally, "245*l.*" Then, instead of that, "R. Fennelly" is written. In whose handwriting is the original entry, and in whose the alteration ?—My own.

47,435. (Mr. Price.) By whose direction did you make that alteration ?—Mr. Fennelly's.

47,436. In the regular course of business of your firm and the keeping your books you had carried the thing properly showing Mr. Vanderbyl to be the person to be debited with the 245*l.* ?—Yes.

47,437. That was the proper way of keeping your books ?—Yes.

47,438. Then Mr. Fennelly comes and orders you to make it altogether an irregular entry by an alteration, as it appears there and in the other book ?—This duplicate book is kept by Mr. Redfern, or in Mr. Redfern's absence generally by Mr. Fennelly, lately by myself; and I copy all the entries in the cash book from this book. As it was entered in this book "P. Vanderbyl," I had nothing to do with it but to enter it under the same name.

47,439. Exactly. I say, the thing being regularly done from book to book, it ought to have appeared as it did originally in that book, in that book, and in this book (referring to account books) ?—Yes.

47,440. And the irregularity is caused by Mr. Fennelly's instructions to you to alter the whole series of entries ?—Just so. My duty is simply to copy.

47,441. You found it a proper entry there, at least an entry there ?—Yes.

47,442. You copied it properly into the next book; you copied properly into that book; and then finally it is altered by Mr. Fennelly so as to make Mr. Fennelly debited with the 245*l.* instead of Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Just so.

47,443. (Mr. Anstey.) Now I see here, still referring to Mr. Vanderbyl's private account with the firm, against the item 245*l.*, as it stood to his debit at first, on the 18th of November 1868, two references to some book or books, and not one as in the case of Fennelly. In Fennelly's case there is one only, 121; but in this entry in the account of Vanderbyl there are two references, one to folio 121, and one to folio 43. Why are two references instead of one ?—43 is the page of Mr. Fennelly's account, I presume.

47,444. No, Fennelly's is 35. "Forty-three," therefore, is the page in this book, is it ?—I do not know.

47,445. (After looking). No; 43 is a blank page. I will show you what I mean, the item which has been struck out in red ink ?—"Forty-three" is the number of days from that date to the end of the year.

47,446. Then why is there no such entry made in the case of Fennelly's ? You see that is left blank, the number of days. I wish to ask you whether it is the intention that he should not be charged interest ?—No, it was not the intention.

47,447. Then why was the 43 days specified when it stood to Vanderbyl's debit, and omitted when the alteration was made putting it to Fennelly's debit ?—In the first instance the entry was made last year, the transfer to Fennelly was this year, and at the end of this year I should place the debits to the account of Fennelly.

47,448. You shall do so ?—Yes.

47,449. What day in April did you make the alteration ?—I do not know, but I can prove it was in April.

47,450. How ?—Because I have papers here which are trial balances taken every month. At the end of March it appears in the account entered to Mr. Vanderbyl. At the end of April it appears entered to Mr. Fennelly.

47,451. Who desired you to make the alteration ?—Mr. Fennelly.

47,452. Did he give you any reason for it ?—No; he simply told me it was a wrong entry.

47,453. There appeared no alteration in the books before that ?—None whatever.

47,454. Nor even in the bank book where he made the alteration ?—This was made at the same time.

47,455. By him at the same time ?—By him at the same time.

47,456. How do you know that the alteration in the bank book was made at the same time ?—Because I had my attention called to it.

47,457. Did you see him do it ?—I cannot say I did.

47,458. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly had taken any legal advice between February and April as to the probable result of an enquiry before the Commission ?—I have no knowledge whatever.

47,459. You do not know ?—No.

47,460. I suppose you are aware that the trial was then over, the election trial ?—Yes.

47,461. And that a commission like this was considered imminent ?—Well, I cannot say that I had that fact before my mind at the time.

47,462. (Mr. Price.) Nothing was said to you about it at all ?—No, nothing was said.

47,463. (Mr. Anstey.) One thing more as to Mr. Vanderbyl. When was he last at your office, your counting house ?—A few days ago.

47,464. Had you any conversation with him about this ?—He told me that I should have to appear. That was the day of the last inquiry here, before I had my subpœna.

47,465. Oh, he had heard of it before you had got your subpœna ?—He called in the evening, and Mr. Redfern had just returned I think at that time.

47,466. Well, how often are you in the habit of seeing Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Very seldom indeed.

47,467. Then this visit of his last Tuesday was a rare visit ?—Well, of late he has been oftener.

47,468. Of late he has been oftener ?—Yes, he has,

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Walter.

6 Nov. 1869.

47,469. How often? Once a week?—Perhaps once a week.

47,470. Oftener than that?—No, I should not think it would be oftener than that.

47,471. Did he look at the books on this last occasion?—No.

47,472. When did he last look at the books?—I do not ever remember him.

47,473. (Mr. Price.) What does he do when he comes there?—He goes into the private office.

47,474. And that book is kept there, is not it?—No, Mr. Redfern has it. Mr. Redfern sits in the clerk's office. His desk is in our office, and the book is always with him.

47,475. Does not Mr. Redfern go in to him and talk with him, and take the books in?—No, I believe the books are never gone into. I keep the accounts.

47,476. Do you mean to say that when the profits are struck at the end of theyear Mr. Vanderbyl is so perfectly indifferent that he does not come down to see what profit is to be credited to him?—I do not know whether Mr. Fennelly informs him from time to time, but he does not look into the books.

47,477. If he looked at the books at the end of 1868 he would have found he was debited with 240*l.*?—Yes, he would.

47,478. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Fennelly, to inform Mr. Vanderbyl, must have looked at the book himself in December 1868?—Yes, but I do not know that he did inform him.

47,479. You say that Mr. Vanderbyl either does it himself or is informed by Mr. Fennelly. In that case the entry of 245*l.* would appear either to Fennelly or Vanderbyl?—I think you mistake. I say Mr. Vanderbyl does not see the books. I presume only Mr. Fennelly told him.

47,480. (Mr. Price.) You presume Mr. Fennelly gives him the result of the books; but he does not go into the items?—No.

47,481. (Mr. Anstey.) Either Mr. Vanderbyl saw the book, or Mr. Fennelly did, or both?—Well, at the time that the balance was struck Mr. Fennelly was away, and I closed the books, as I thought right in all particulars, and I am not sure that Mr. Fennelly ever had his attention drawn to this.

47,482. Are you quite sure of that? We have the date of his going away, to Rome you mean?—Yes.

47,483. Well, the books are balanced, Mr. Redfern himself told us, on the 31st of December every year?—Yes.

47,484. Well, had he gone away by that time?—He was away.

47,485. We have it in evidence that he returned before the trial of the election petition, which was on the 24th of February following, and then went away again—Mr. Fennelly?—Yes.

47,486. And then we have it in evidence that he came back soon after the election petition; and it is not till the month of April that the alteration is made. Is not that so?—Yes.

47,487. Very well. Now will you take upon yourself to swear that during the whole intervening period between the striking of the balance of those accounts (Mr. Vanderbyl's account and Mr. Fennelly's account) and the making of the alteration in April, or rather between those dates and the 1st of April, neither Mr. Fennelly nor Mr. Vanderbyl had seen the books?—I will not say that Mr. Fennelly had not seen the books. All the books were of course open in the office, and Mr. Fennelly may refer to any of them at any time, and I could not say for a moment whether he had seen any particular account or not.

47,488. Then you are aware, are you not, of the fact that Mr. Fennelly was there between that 31st of December and the end of February, not often, but he was there backwards and forwards?—Oh yes.

47,489. And Mr. Vanderbyl too, I suppose, was he not, subsequently to the striking of the balance?—So far as Mr. Vanderbyl is concerned I do not know what was the nature of his visits then, or how frequent they were.

47,490. No, no; but the fact of his visits. He was backwards and forwards?—From January?

47,491. From the 1st of January to the 1st of March we will say?—I believe Mr. Vanderbyl called in during that time.

47,492. How often?—Not often I am sure.

47,493. Then again, in the month of March how often was he there?—I could not speak of any particular month.

47,494. Well now, if the books are open to Mr. Fennelly they are open to Mr. Vanderbyl, are they not, he being a partner?—Certainly they are open to him.

47,495. And Mr. Vanderbyl is not a sleeping partner, is he?—He is not an active partner.

47,496. No, but he is not what is called a sleeping partner? He comes and goes as you say?—But I have never known him to make any reference to——

47,497. But do you mean to say that he or any other man who derives his income or any portion of his income from trading profits would go on, as the Chief Commissioner pointed out to you just now, receiving what his partners are pleased to say is his share without once verifying the fact for himself? Do you mean to say that Mr. Vanderbyl is in the habit of doing that, he being a man of business?—I believe Mr. Vanderbyl has never looked at the books.

47,498. (Mr. Price.) But if Mr. Vanderbyl does not look at the books is not it the duty of the partners, or is not it the practice (and I should say the duty too) of the partners to send him at the end of the year a statement showing the state of his account, in writing, showing what he is debited in, and the receipts, and then showing the profit that he is to have? Do not you render such an account as that?—Yes, I do; but in this year I think that account was not rendered until about May or June.

47,499. Will you undertake to say so?—I am sure it was not until quite late in the year.

47,500. (Mr. Anstey.) Why not?—Well, Mr. Fennelly was away at the close of the year. This is only the second year that I have been with Messrs. Fennelly, and the first year I sent such a statement as that when I was asked for it by Mr. Fennelly; but when he was away I had no one to tell me to do so, nor did I think it necessary until I had been told to.

47,501. But Mr. Fennelly's absence, as you have stated just now, was not continuous even till the end of February?—But I was not told to furnish this account, for all that.

47,502. You say, being away, it is a different thing?—If Mr. Fennelly had been at home at the 31st of December in all probability he would have said when he saw the balances, "Make up Mr. Vanderbyl's account and send it to him;" but Mr. Fennelly was not at home then.

47,503. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that you wait for the direction of one of the partners to do that, and that you do not as a matter of course let each partner have a statement, particularly one who does not come very often to the office, without the direction of the other partners, that he may know how he stands?—I am sure I should not do so unless I was told to do so.

37,504. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that each of the partners does the same thing, namely, leave the question what sum his share of the profits for the past year will amount to remain in dubio until the account is handed to him, and that he never thinks of looking into the books himself?—There is no account sent in to either of the partners.

47,505. Do you mean to say that neither of them looks at the books himself to ascertain the fact what amount his share is?—Certainly they do it.

47,506. Every one of them?—No doubt.

47,507. Then at the same time I wish to ask you in connexion with this whether the period at which you say this account was made out and furnished to Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly was in May or June?—Well, it was some months ago, but I really could not state what month.

47,508. Was it as late as June, or was it earlier than May? Yes or no?—Well, I should think it was even later than June.

47,509. You think it was in July or August?—I should think perhaps about the end of June, but I am quite at a loss to tell.

47,510. Then, with the interest which some members of your firm had in it, it can scarcely have escaped your notice, do you recollect whether this paper, the account or whatever you call it—— ?—The "account current."

47,511. Whether the account current was furnished for the first time to Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl, after it was notorious that the address from the House of Commons and the House of Parliament had gone up the Queen praying that this Commission might issue for Bridgwater?—My impression is that the account was rendered not long before the Commission.

47,512. Yes; but will you pay attention to my question. The Commission did not issue till July?—I mean the sitting of the Commission.

47,513. The Commission did not sit till the 23rd of August. Was it just before the Commission sat?—Yes, I think it was just before the Commission sat.

47,514. And after it issued. It issued in July; it sat in August?—I am sure I could not tell you.

47,515. It was moved for in May or June; the address went up in July; the Commission issued in July and sat on the 23rd of August. Now, it was just before the sitting of the Commission, you think, that this account current was made out and furnished to these two partners, Fennelly and Vanderbyl?—It was not furnished to Mr. Fennelly at all.

47,516. Well, to Mr. Vanderbyl?—I think it was just before the sitting of the Commission.

47,517. Do you know what was said when it was being made out; do you remember that. Was anything said about the 245*l.*?—I do not remember a word in reference to that 245*l.* My impression is that the account was made up without the 245*l.*

47,518. No doubt it was. There would be nothing appearing in it about the 245*l.* Can you recollect when Mr. Vanderbyl's account was being made out anything being said about omitting to debit him with that 245*l.*?—There was not a word spoken about it.

47,519. Who made it out?—I did myself.

47,520. Who gave you instructions?—Mr. Fennelly told me to make out the account.

47,521. And did he tell you to be very careful not to insert again the 245*l.* which appeared in the first entry?—No, I am sure he did not.

47,522. But at all events you had before you the books as altered, and by which you were to abide. Well, just look again at that account current of Fennelly and Vanderbyl. Now, looking at the balance there you see in each place where it is written "balance" and an amount (you cannot mistake it) there has been an erasure with the penknife?—Yes, there has.

47,523. Well, now look at this corresponding one of Fennelly's. You see that has also been altered?—Yes.

47,524. And there are the remains of the tail of a long figure?—Oh yes, it has been altered.

47,525. Well, were these alterations made in order to make it correspond with the whole account as altered in April. First of all, were those erasures made in April and the new figures written over them?—Yes.

47,526. And before that there had been no erasure?—No.

47,527. And the alterations made by way of erasure and the insertion of new numerals were such as to make it correspond with the account as altered by the interpolation or omission?—Yes, I may say that these will plainly prove, if you will take this as bonâ fide, that the alteration was made in the month of April (handing in papers).

47,528. (Mr. Price.) These are what make you able to say that the alteration was made in April?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Then the secretary can have them.

47,529. (Mr. Anstey.) The alteration was made in April and the account current was made out before the sitting of the Commission?—Yes.

Adjourned to No. 6, Pump Court, Temple, Friday the 12th inst., at 3 o'clock.

FORTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Thursday, 25th November 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

The Commissioners met to examine Cornelius Satterthwaite, against whom an attachment had been moved for non-attendance at Bridgwater, the rule having then been enlarged by the court on his submission and promise to attend before the Commissioners when required.

Mr. HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL sworn.

47,530. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first summon Satterthwaite?—He was summoned first for the 18th September at Bridgwater.

47,531. And you had notice of his having been served at Doncaster races?—Yes.

47,532–3. Did you subsequently write to him about attending?—The letters had been written previously to his being called formally; after that there were no letters written.

47,534. (Mr. Anstey.) He never made any communication to you?—No.

47,535. And in consequence of that you, by the direction of the Commissioners, wrote a letter to the Home Office, and reported the circumstances?—Yes.

47,536. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then do you know an application was made by the Solicitor-General for an attachment against him?—Yes, I know it by public report.

FORTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Purcell.

25 Nov. 1869.

47,537. (Mr. Anstey.) On your affidavit ?—On my affidavit.

47,538. (Mr. Coleridge.) Subsequently, do you know the rule was enlarged to next term ?—Yes.

47,539. On an undertaking that Satterthwaite would appear before us ?—Yes.

47,540. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he ever present himself to you or report himself to you ?—Not since that submission on his part.

47,541. Did he then report himself to you as being ready to attend any appointment ?—He did not.

47,542. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you summon him last Tuesday by registered letter, which he had requested to be directed to Manchester, to appear to-day ?—Yes.

47,543. (Mr. Anstey.) He, having left an address at the office of the Treasury Solicitors, you concluded he had gone to Manchester ?—Yes, and sent him a new summons by registered letter.

47,544. Have you received any communication since ?—No, no answer.

47,545. And he has not appeared ?—He has not appeared.

47,546. The summons was to appear at two o'clock ?—Yes, and it is now a quarter to three.

47,547. (Mr. Coleridge.) He would have got your letter yesterday morning, and might have been here with great ease ?—No doubt.

47,548. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you or, to your belief, the Commissioners in any way consent to the rule being enlarged ?—No, certainly not.
